

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

DEPOSITION

"A 'deposition' is testimony taken out of court under authority which will enable it to be read as evidence in court and has no relation to oral testimony taken in court or before a master." In re Harrison Bros., 197 Fed. 320, 322 (quoting 13 Cyc. p. 832).

"Depositions are a species of evidence of a secondary character, admissible where the viva voce testimony of the deponent is not attainable." Under Rev. St. 1898, § 4096, as amended, providing that, where a corporation is a party, the president, managing agent, or agent, or employé of the corporation may be examined before trial, depositions of mere employes of a defendant corporation, taken before trial, are not admissible, where deponents are present at the trial, subject to be called and examined as witnesses. Hughes v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. R. Co., 99 N. W. 897, 902, 122 Wis. 258 (quoting Weeks, Depositions, §§ 4-6).

By B. & C. Comp. § 816, a "deposition" is defined to be a written declaration under oath, made upon notice to the adverse party, for the purpose of enabling him to attend and cross-examine. State v. Woolridge, 78 Pac. 333, 336, 45 Or. 389.

The word "deposition," as used in Pen. Code, § 872, prior to its amendment in 1905, providing that if it appeared from the examination of accused that a public offense had been committed, and there was sufficient cause to believe him guilty thereof, the magistrate should indorse on the deposition an order for his commitment, was synonymous with the word "complaint," to which it was changed by the amendment. People v. Lapique, 108 Pac. 164, 165, 10 Cal. App. 669.

Testimony given before an examiner may be treated as a "deposition" within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 824, providing for solicitor's fees for each deposition taken and admitted in evidence. State of Missouri v. State of Illinois, 28 Sup. Ct. 713, 714, 202 U. S. 598, 50 L. Ed. 1160.

Depositions taken before a trial judge to be used as evidence on defendant's motion to dismiss were not depositions taken "to be used on the trial of the merits" within Kirby's Dig. § 3157, permitting depositions to be used on the trial of all the issues in certain cases named, as where the witness is absent from the state, etc. Ferguson & Wheeler Land, Lumber & Handle Co. v. Good, 133 S. W. 183, 184, 97 Ark. 106.

The transcript of the testimony of a party, relating to transactions with the adverse party, given at a trial occurring during the lifetime of the adverse party, is not a "deposition," within Code, § 4605, providing that a party may have his own deposition read in evidence, where his evidence would be incompetent by section 4604, providing that no party shall be examined as a witness in regard to personal transactions with a decedent, etc., though Acts 27th Gen. Assem. p. 16, c. 9, provides that a transcript of the testimony of a witness at a trial shall, when material and competent, be admissible in evidence at any subsequent trial. Greenlee v. Mosnat, 111 N. W. 996-999, 136 Iowa, 639, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 488.

Affidavit

"Deposition," as used in Comp. Laws 1909, § 2182, relating to perjury, providing that the making of a deposition is deemed to be complete from its delivery by the accused with the intent that it be uttered or published as true, includes "affidavit," since section 2965 provides that every mode of written instrument under oath or affirmation is embraced by the term "depose." Town of Checotah v. Town of Eufaula, 119 Pac. 1014, 1017, 31 Okl. 85.

Under Practice Act, § 228, authorizing a Supreme Court examiner to take any "affidavit" that may be taken before a Supreme Court commissioner, a Supreme Court examiner may take the deposition of a judgment defendant under an order directing him to make discovery in proceedings supplemental to execution, though technically an "affidavit" is taken ex parte, and though a "deposition" is technically taken on notice, so that the testimony taken under an order for discovery is technically a "deposition," but the words "deposition" and "affidavit" may be synonymous. Herschenstein v. Hahn, 71 Atl. 105, 106, 77 N. J. Law, 39.

Code Cr. Proc. § 148, provided that, when an information was laid before a magistrate, he should examine on oath the informant and prosecutor and any witnesses he might produce, take their depositions, and cause them to be subscribed by the parties. Section 149 provided that the depositions must set forth the facts stated by the prosecutor and his witnesses tending to establish accused's guilt. Plaintiff was charged with false registration, which could be established only by proof of the residence, which he had stated to the board of election officers, and of the falsity of such statement, and upon application of a deputy state superintendent of elections to a magistrate for a warrant for plaintiff's arrest, and an information verified by such deputy, on a day in November, 1905, which was left blank and based entirely upon information and belief, the sources of which were not given, amounting to no more than a statement of his conclusion that a crime had been committed, and the affidavit of a person, whose residence was by mistake of election officials substituted for that given by plaintiff when he registered, that plaintiff did not live at such address, were presented. The affidavit of the deputy did not even recite that in making his charge he relied upon a copy of the original registration book. Held, that there was before the magistrate no "deposition," within the meaning of the Code, and, the magistrate having also failed to examine the deputy and his witnesses as required by the Code, the warrant issued for plaintiff's arrest was a nullity; the magistrate having no jurisdiction. Tanzer v. Morgan, 123 N. Y. Supp. 497, 500, 130 App. Div. 10.

DEPOSITOR

In a bank

See Savings Depositor.

"A 'depositor' is not the owner of any specific money in the bank. He is simply the owner of a right and credit against the bank." Wright v. Holmes, 62 Atl. 507, 508, 100 Me. 508, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 769, 4 Ann. Cas. 583.

A "depositor" is one who delivers to or leaves with a bank money subject to his order, either upon time deposit or subject to check. State v. Corning State Sav. Bank, 113 N. W. 500, 502, 136 Iowa, 79.

The holders of certificates of deposit are "depositors" in the bank within the Constitution providing that stockholders of banks shall be liable to depositors in a sum equal to the amount of their stock over and above its face value. J. H. Wilkes & Co. v. Arthur, 74 S. E. 361, 362, 91 S. C. 163.

A holder of a bank's certificate of deposit, payable on a fixed date with interest, is not a "depositor," within the Constitution, giving depositors, who have not stipulated for interest, a preference in case of the bank's insolvency. Taylor v. Hutchinson, 40 South. 108, 110, 145 Ala. 202.

The word "depositor" is used in its ordinary meaning in the business of banking in Comp. Laws, §§ 6102, 6116, 6135, 6141, authorizing a bank to declare a dividend after providing for expenses and surplus, providing for a reserve, making stockholders liable to the "depositors" to the amount of the stock in addition to the stock, and limiting loans which may be made by the bank, and stockholders of a bank are not "depositors" to the amount of the surplus; for, until a division thereof, the surplus is owned by the shareholders collectively, and is by them collectively embarked as the capital of the bank in the banking business, and stockholders sued on their statutory liability may not defend on the ground that they are creditors of the bank to the amount of a proportional share of the surplus. Wedemeyer v. Hindelang, 126 N. W. 708, 709, 161 Mich. 600.

On the insolvency of a bank, the court defined the terms "depositors" and "general creditors" as follows: "The following claims which have been filed and allowed herein shall be classed as depositors, to wit: 'All the claims of persons whose claims are based upon the balance due them, as depositors, in their respective general checking deposit accounts with said bank. All persons whose claims are based upon sums due them as depositors, upon certificates of deposit issued by said bank, as such, for deposits, of money in the usual course of business. All persons whose claims have been established and allowed by this court, and expressly designated as depositors' in the judgments and orders heretofore entered in this cause. And the court further finds that the claims of all other creditors which have been allowed and established against said bank, which are not included in the above, are general creditors." State ex rel. Carroll v. Corning State Sav. Bank, 103 N. W. 97, 98, 127 Iowa, 198.

DEPOSITORY

See County Depositories; Depositary; Special Depository.

One who received an article of merchandise for the sole purpose of doing work upon it is not a "depository," such as a warehouseman or wharfinger, within Pen. Code, §§ 629, 633, penalizing any warehouseman, wharfinger, or other depository, who, after giving a receipt or voucher for merchandise, shall deliver it without surrender of the receipt or voucher for cancellation. Manny v. Wilson, 122 N. Y. Supp. 16, 20, 137 App. Div. 140.

DEPOT

See Oil Depot; Passenger Depot.
See, also, Station.

As freight or passenger station

In the United States the words "depot" and "station," as used in connection with railroads, are synonymous. In re Atlantic & St. L. R. Co., 62 Atl. 141, 143, 100 Me. 430.

The word "depot" means a building for the accommodation and protection of passengers or freight. Midland Valley R. Co. v. State, 119 Pac. 413, 414, 29 Okl. 777.

"The term 'depot' * * * may mean a house for the storage of freight and the accommodation of passengers, or it may mean a place where railroad trains regularly come to a stop for the convenience of passengers and for the purpose of receiving and discharging freight, or it may include all these things." The maintenance of a freight depot, passenger traffic being transferred to the depot of another company in the same town, was a sufficient compliance with a stipulation in a railway bonus note that a depot should be maintained in the town. Fayetteville Wagon, Wood & Lumber Co. v. Keneflick Const. Co., 88 S. W. 1031, 1032, 78 Ark. 615 (quoting and adopting the definition in Arkansas Cent. R. Co. v. Smith, 71 S. W. 947, 71 Ark. 189).

A place is not a "depot" where it is shown that railroad ground on which a switch was laid was not open for use by the public; passengers were permitted to get on and off trains at that point but could not procure tickets there for any station on the road or by one for this point; packages of freight were sometimes thrown off there for the accommodation of the consignees but there was no agent to take charge of such freight when thrown off; it was not a regular stopping place for trains for any purpose, especially for taking on and discharging either freight or passengers. Duncan v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 85 S. W. 661, 663, 111 Mo. App. 193 (citing Webster's Dict.; Bouv. Law Dict. [Lawe's Ed.] 1081).

A freight car placed on a side track, and at which freight was received and cars stopped when flagged, is not a "depot," within the stipulation in a deed that, in consideration of the grant of a right of way, the company would put a "depot on the land," as the word "depot" in the stipulation was intended to mean a permanent structure to be used as a receptacle for freight and passengers, and to be of a kind in keeping with its other depots. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Berry, 110 S. W. 1049, 1051, 86 Ark. 309.

Same—Surrounding grounds

The word "depot," in a statute requiring railroads, under penalty, to keep their "depots" or passenger houses lighted and open to ingress and egress of passengers, like "passenger house," as used in the statute, means some character of house or building that can be warm and open as well as lighted, and does not apply to depot platforms or other places where passengers are expected to get on or off trains. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Barrett, 47 S. W. 1039, 1040, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 626.

The word "depot," as used in an ordinance making it unlawful for any person to drum or solicit business for a hotel on the trains or "depots" of any railroads, includes, not only the depot building, but the platform and grounds connected therewith, and used by the company for its business with the public. Moore v. Campbell, 109 S. W. 544, 545, 85 Ark. 581.

Of a brewery

An ordinance, after providing for a license fee for each brewery, distillery, "depot," or agency established or maintained in the city, provided that any structure within the city used for the storage of liquors brewed by any brewery outside the city and shipped in for sale or distribution shall be considered a "depot of a brewery" under the provisions of the ordinance, whether the liquors be stored by the owner of the brewery, or an agent, or a purchaser. Schmidt v. City of Indianapolis, 80 N. E. 632, 636, 168 Ind. 631, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 787, 120 Am. St. Rep. 385.

DEPOT GROUNDS

"Depot grounds" of a railroad company prima facie include all that part of the right of way which is left unfenced between the switches and cattle guards, on either side of the platform, including the switches and side tracks, and, in the absence of evidence showing that they are unreasonable in extent, will be deemed the true limits. Mills & Le Clair Lumber Co. v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. R. Co., 68 N. W. 996, 997, 94 Wis. 336.

A place where a railroad received and discharged passengers or signal, and where it maintained a switch track, but at which it had no building, was not a depot, within the rule permitting railroads to leave their tracks unfenced at "depot grounds." Acord v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co., 87 S. W. 537, 543, 113 Mo. App. 84.

Station grounds, or "depot grounds," at convenient points along the line of railroads, embrace not only the land of the right of way but additional land of such extent as existing and prospective conditions seem to require, but the land originally appropriated should not be arbitrarily held to limit railroads or the public, and in every case, in determining what are station and depot grounds, three conditions must concur: The grounds must be necessary, convenient, and be actually used by the railroad in transacting business. They therefore include sufficient land for safe and convenient approaches and exits for passenger and freight transportation, for the location of depot buildings, warehouses, etc., and an important criterion as to what land is necessary and convenient is the amount and character of business done at the station. In re Atlantic & St. L. R. Co., 62 Atl. 141-143, 100 Me. 430 (citing Davis v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 26 Iowa, 549; Smith v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 15 N. W. 303, 60 Iowa, 512).

"Depot grounds," such as are required to be fenced within the statute, may exist in the absence of either a depot building or station agent. Welch v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 109 S. W. 1074, 1076, 131 Mo. App. 464.

The "depot or station grounds" of a railroad company is the place where passengers get on or off the train, and where freight is loaded and unloaded, including all grounds reasonably necessary or convenient to that purpose, together with the necessary tracks, switches, and turnouts thereon, or adjacent thereto, necessary for handling and making up trains, storage of cars, etc., and so much of the main track outside the switches as is necessary for the proper handling of trains at the station. Wilmot v. Oregon R. Co., 87 Pac. 528, 530, 48 Or. 494, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 202, 120 Am. St. Rep. 840, 11 Ann. Cas. 18; (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 1005 et seq.; Grosse v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 65 N. W. 185, 91 Wis. 482; Grondin v. Duluth, S. S. & A. Ry. Co., 59 N. W. 229, 100 Mich. 598).

DEPOT POLICE

Men employed by a railroad depot company to direct passengers what trains to take and to make reports of trains coming into and going out of the depot were known as "depot police." Brown v. Southern Pac. Co., 88 Pac. 7, 8, 81 Utah, 318.

DEPRAVED

A person is "depraved" when he is generally bad, is wicked in mind and heart, loves evil rather than good, and, though a single act of adultery may be considered strong evidence of depravity, it is not conclusive. Knepper v. Knepper, 122 S. W. 1117, 1118, 139 Mo. App. 493.

DEPRECIATE

"Depreciation" is the loss in value of some destructible property over and above current repairs. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Louisville, 187 Fed. 637, 653.

DEPREDATOR

As robber, see Robber.

DEPRIVE

Laws 1907, c. 197, regulating the width of certain entries in bituminous mines, and exempting block coal mines from its provisions, is a proper exercise of police power, and is not unconstitutional as a deprivation of property without due process of law. Barrett v. State, 93 N. E. 543, 545, 175 Ind. 112.

The owner of Philippine silver coin is not "deprived" of his property therein without due process of law, contrary to Act July 1, 1902, c. 1369, by the prohibition against the exportation of such coin from the Philippine Islands, under penalty of forfeiture and fine or imprisonment, which is made by Philippine law No. 1411, enacted by the Philippine Commission in the exercise of the power under Act Cong. March 2, 1903, c. 980, § 6, to adopt such measures as are deemed proper, not inconsistent with the organic act, to maintain the parity between gold and silver pesos, but such statute is within the limits of the police power. Ling Su Fan v. United States, 81 Sup. Ct. 21, 22, 218 U. S. 302, 54 L. Ed. 1049, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1176.

"The constitutional guaranty that no person shall be 'deprived of his property' without due process of law may be violated without the physical taking of property for public or private use. Property may be destroyed, or its value annihilated. It is owned and kept for some useful purpose, and it has no value unless it can be used. Its capability for enjoyment and adaptability to some use are essential characteristics and attributes, without which property cannot be conceived; and hence any law which destroys it or its value, or takes away any of its essential attributes, deprives the owner of his property." MacMullen v. City of Middletown, 98 N. Y. Supp. 145, 150, 112 App. Div. 81.

DEPRIVE ANIMALS OF SUSTENANCE

A person renting a field to another on which to pasture cattle, but who has not agreed to care for the cattle, does not, by leaving them in the field in which their owner placed them, without providing food or shelter, deprive them of food and shelter within Code Supp. 1907, § 4969, providing that any person depriving any animals of necessary sustenance shall be punished accordingly. Pieper v. Krutzfeldt (Iowa) 136 N. W. 904, 905.

DEPRIVE OF EMPLOYMENT

A teacher employed in both day and night schools, whose night employment was terminated by discontinuance of the school in which he was employed, but whose employment in day school continued, was not "deprived of employment," so as to be entitled to preference in appointment, under Greater New York Charter, § 1090, providing that, in case of the discontinuance of any school, teachers who may be thereby deprived of employment shall be preferred in appointments to be made. Cusack v. Board of Education of City of New York, 85 N. Y. Supp. 991, 993, 89 App. Div. 355.

DEPRIVED OF LIBERTY

See Chief Deputy.

The "deputy" is but the officer's shadow and doth all things in the name of the officer himself, and nothing in his own name. Wilkerson v. Dennison, 80 S. W. 765, 767, 113 Tenn. 237, 106 Am. St. Rep. 821, 3 Ann. Cas. 297 (citing Talbott v. Hooser, 12 Bush. [75 Ky.] 414).

"Deputies," being appointed in the language of the Constitution "to perform the duties of the office," are not mere servants or agents of the clerk of the court; they are agents and officers of the court. State, to Use of Smith, v. Turner, 61 Atl. 334, 337, 101 Md. 534.

A "deputy" is one who by appointment exercises an office in another's right, having no interest therein, and doing all things in his principal's name, for whose misconduct the principal is answerable. Halter v. Leonard, 122 S. W. 706, 708, 223 Mo. 286.

A "deputy" is a subordinate officer authorized to act in place of the principal officer in his absence. Civil Service Law (Consol. Laws, c. 7) § 22, providing that a veteran shall not be removed except for incompetency or misconduct, but that the section shall not apply to the position of "deputy" of any official or department, does not prevent the removal of a veteran from the position of superintendent of streets, where, by the city charter, it is provided that the commissioner of public works shall be the head of the department of public works, and that he shall appoint, to hold during his pleasure, a superintendent of streets, and that in case of the absence or disability of the commissioner, or a vacancy in office, the superintendent of streets shall discharge the duties of the office until the commissioner returns or his disability ceases, or the vacancy is filled; the duty of the superintendent being to supervise the making and repairing of streets under the direction of the commissioner of public works. Williams v. Darling, 122 N. Y. Supp. 534, 539, 67 Misc. Rep. 205.

As assistant

See Assistant.

As officer

See Officer.

DERAIL SWITCH

A "derail switch" is a device which when set will cause a car running loose on the side track to run off its rails to the ground before reaching the main track. Jones v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co., 77 S. W. 890, 892, 178 Mo. 528, 77 S. W. 890, 101 Am. St. Rep. 434.

DERECHO

"Derecho," in Spanish law, is the impost laid upon goods or provisions, persons or lands, by way of tax or contribution. Noe v. Card, 14 Cal. 576, 608.

DERELICT

A vessel is "derelict," in the maritime sense, when she is abandoned without hope of recovery or without intention of returning. It is sufficient if there has been an abandonment at sea by the master and crew without hope of recovery; but the mere quitting of the ship to procure assistance from shore, or with the intention of returning is insufficient. Merrill v. Fisher, 91 N. E. 132, 133, 204 Mass. 600, 134 Am. St. Rep. 706, 17 Ann. Cas. 937.

An essential element of a "derelict" vessel is that the boat must be abandoned. The word is derived from "de linquere," and the definition given in the dictionaries indicates the same meaning: To leave, to abandon; a ship abandoned at sea. A vessel which, although disabled, has not been abandoned by her officers and crew is not a "derelict", and salvage for her rescue cannot be awarded on that basis. The Launberga, 154 Fed. 959, 966.

The abandonment must be complete, and so a vessel anchored a mile or two from shore in comparatively calm weather, and left by her crew with the intention to return, is not a "derelict." The Minnie E. Kelton, 181 Fed. 237, 242.

A "derelict" is "a boat or vessel found deserted on the seas, whether it arose from accident or necessity or voluntary dereliction." A large schooner became stranded on Frying Pan Shoals off the North Carolina coast in March. A contract was made with the owner of tugs to float the schooner and deliver her at a port, but the effort was unsuccessful. Ten days after the stranding, and after she had been abandoned by the master and crew, she was moved off the shoal by a high wind, and one of the tugs attempted to tow her to port, but was unable and abandoned her. Her hull was under water and her masts and rudder gone. Subsequently a tug from Savannah went in search of and found her, about 100 miles from Charleston, which was the nearest port she could enter, owing to her draft. After going to Charleston and obtaining the assistance of two other tugs, she was again found, and the three tugs towed her to that port nearly 10 days after she had gone adrift. Meantime the insurer had sent out a tug, which made a search for her, but not in the locality where she could have been found. She was sold with her cargo for $24,000. The salvage service was performed with skill, and at considerable trouble and risk, owing to her condition. Held, that she was a "derelict," and that the salvors were entitled for their services to one-half the proceeds of vessel and cargo after payment of the expenses and costs. The Myrtle Tunnel, 146 Fed. 324, 329 (quoting and adopting definition of Mr. Justice Story).

Prima facie a vessel found at sea in a situation of peril, with no one on board, is a "derelict," but where the master and crew have left temporarily for the purpose of obtaining assistance, and with intent to return and resume possession, she is not technically a "derelict," although another vessel finding her in such condition and rescuing her is entitled to salvage compensation as in case of a derelict. The Shawmut, 155 Fed. 476, 478.

The term "derelict" imports a certain condition of things introducing elements which tend, on the general principles of salvage, to raise the amount of salvage reward. There are three conditions which a derelict generally fulfills: The first by the risk to which the salvaged ship is exposed; the second is that she has no men on board her and has to be approached without such aid as they could afford; and the third is that the position of the men put on board the vessel was not without risk, and the labor cast on the remainder of the crew of the salving vessel left on board their own vessel is very considerably increased. The Theta, 135 Fed. 129, 133.

DERIVE

The word "derivative" is defined as coming from another or as acquired from another; hence a fraudulent conveyance, while valid as between the parties, is void as against creditors, and a judgment creditor may maintain a creditors' suit to set aside the conveyance as against the objection that his action is derived from the grantor, since his action is a remedy given to a judgment creditor. Hubbard v. United Wireless Tel. Co., 115 N. Y. Supp. 1016, 1017, 62 Misc. Rep. 588.

The word "derive" is not limited to descent or transmission; hence, under Code 1873, §§ 2241, 2243, declaring parents the natural guardians of their children, and providing that where a minor has property not "derived" from either parent, a guardian must be appointed to manage the same, a parent may manage the property of an infant son where the property is derived from the parent, who directs that deeds thereto shall be executed in the son's name. Ringstad v. Hanson, 180 N. W. 145, 146, 150 Iowa, 324.

The word "derives," as used in Code, § 4604, providing that no person from whom any party derives any title by assignment or otherwise shall be a witness, etc., is defined as meaning "to receive, as from a source or origin, to obtain by descent or transmission"; and the statute does not disqualify an agent as a witness, since an agent is not interested in the result of the action or bound by the judgment. Stiles v. Breed, 130 N. W. 378, 380, 151 Iowa, 86.

Act April 15, 1905 (Sess. Acts 1905, p. 292), created a state sanatorium, and section 24 made laws governing other eleemosynary institutions applicable to it. Rev. St. 1899, § 7808, requires moneys received by such institutions to be paid to the state treasurer, and by him placed in respective funds created by such sections. Section 7809 provides that moneys in the state treasury to the credit of any such fund shall be appropriated for the support of the institution to which the fund belongs. Act April 15, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 37) § 27a, appropriated out of the state treasury chargeable to the "Missouri state sanatorium fund" a specified sum; "the same being 'derived' from the payment into the state treasury by the treasurer or other financial officer of said institution." Act March 19, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 309) § 15, requires the superintendent of the sanatorium to furnish the state treasurer sufficient data to enable him to collect from the various counties, etc., of patients. Section 16 (page 310) gives indigent patients the preference over private patients. Moneys received by the state treasurer under such section 15 (Laws 1907, p. 309) from the different counties are moneys "derived from the payment into the state treasury by the treasurer or other financial officer of said institution," within such section 27a (Laws 1907, p. 37), since by section 15 the state treasurer has been made a financial officer of the institution, and as such falls within the term "other financial officer." State ex rel. Eaton v. Gmelich, 106 S. W. 618, 620, 208 Mo. 152.

DERNIERE VOLONTE

"Volonte" and "derniere volonte" are used as equivalents of "will" and "last will." In re Billis' Will, 47 South. 884, 885, 122 La. 339, 129 Am. St. Rep. 355.

DESCEND

The use of the term "descend" in Act Cong. May 27, 1902, c. 888, 32 Stat. 245, and the Original and Supplemental Agreements between the United States and the Creek Nation, where descent, technically speaking, could not take place, creates an uncertainty and ambiguity calling for construction. Shulthis v. MacDougal, 162 Fed. 331, 339.

As go to

In a will devising land to testator's widow for life and providing that at her death it should descend to their children, the word "descend" is used in the sense of "go to." Case v. Haggarty, 137 N. W. 979, 980, 91 Neb. 746 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, pp. 2012-2014).

As pass by operation of law

The legal and technical meaning of "descend" is to pass by inheritance by operation of law. Harvey v. Ballard, 96 N. E. 558, 561, 252 Ill. 57.

As a word of inheritance

"Descend," where used in a will giving one a life estate with the remainder to descend to those who otherwise would take the property as his heirs, signifies an intention of the testator that the property shall follow the same channel into which the law would direct it, and so pass the devisee a fee simple. Hayes v. Martz (Ind.) 84 N. E. 546, 547.

Under a devise of land by a testator to his daughter, to "descend" at her death to her children and at their death to "revert to my son, whom I appoint my lawful attorney, and I cause him to be interested for the valuable consideration of $1 to cause to be made and kept in possession of my daughter, and at her death to descend to her children," the children of the daughter upon her death took the fee in remainder, which upon their death passed to their heirs and to the heirs of the testator's son. Calmes v. Kubank (Ky.) 40 S. W. 669, 670.

A bequest of property to the testator's daughter for life to "descend" to her bodily heirs vests only a life estate in the first taker, with a remainder over; the Code having abolished the rule in Shelley's Case. Mason v. Pate's Ex'r, 34 Ala. 379, 380.

The word "descend" has always had a well-known, certain, technical, legal meaning. Descent or hereditary succession is the title whereby a man, on the death of his ancestor, acquires the ancestor's estate by right of representation as his heir at law. The homestead statute being chiefly to provide an abiding place for the family so long as it continues as such, and not for the purpose of defining the character of estates or the general qualities of ownership, it should be construed to mean that, on the death of one spouse, the land descends to the other, and in that respect it is a statute of descent. The statute (Civ. Code. 1872, § 1265) originally provided that on the death of either spouse the homestead descended to and the title at once vested in the survivor. Hannon v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 107 Pac. 335, 338, 12 Cal. App. 308.

Testator gave to his widow all his property for life, and directed that after her death the same should be equally divided between his children, provided that the portion that should go to his unmarried daughter should "descend to her bodily heirs." Held to create an estate tail in the daughter, converted into an estate in fee by Ky. St. 1903, § 2343; the words quoted being words of inheritance, and not of purchase. Edwards v. Walesby (Ky.) 98 S. W. 306, 307.

In the original Creek Agreement, ratified by Act March 1, 1901, c. 676, § 28, 31 Stat. 869, which provided that, in case of the death of the person entitled to enrollment as a member of the tribe, his distributive share of its lands and money, to which he would have been entitled if living, should descend to his heirs according to the laws of descent and distribution of the Creek Nation, and to be allotted and distributed to them accordingly, the word "descend" is not used in its strict legal sense, but as meaning that the lands and property of the deceased member shall be allotted to the same persons who would have inherited if such member had survived to receive the allotment, and such person took no vested interest before allotment. Hence, where such deceased member had not been enrolled and no allotment had been made at the time of taking effect of the Supplemental Agreement, ratified by Act June 30, 1902, c. 1323, 32 Stat. 500, which by section 6 repeals such provisions "in so far as they provide for descent and distribution according to the laws of the Creek Nation," and provides that such descent and distribution shall be in accordance with chapter 49 of Mansfield's Digest of the Statutes of Arkansas, the later provision governs, and title to the allotment, when made, passes to those who would inherit under the Arkansas statute. Brann v. Bell, 192 Fed. 427, 428; Armstrong v. Wood, 195 Fed. 137, 139.

Section 7 of the supplemental agreement with the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians (Act June 30, 1902, c. 1323, 32 Stat. 501), promulgated August 8, 1902, provides that "all children born to those citizens who are entitled to enrollment under previous acts, subsequent to July 1, 1900, and up to and including May 25, 1901, and living upon the latter date, shall be placed on the rolls made by said commission." Also, "if any such child has died since May 25, 1901, or may hereafter die before receiving his allotment of lands, and distributive share of the funds of the tribe, the lands and moneys to which he would be entitled if living shall descend to his heirs as herein provided to be allotted and distributed to them." Held, that the word "descend," which was technically inapplicable to the situation described, since the decedent would never be seised of the property, was used to indicate the character of the title or estate which passed to the heirs, it not being intended that they should take the property as an additional bounty from the tribe but by virtue of their heirship, their title being one of inheritance rather than of purchase, the situation being made the same by such provision as though the title had become vested in the decedent before his death. Shulthis v. McDougal, 170 Fed. 529, 531, 95 C. C. A. 615.

As a word of purchase

The word "descend" was used in the sense of to "go to," under a will giving a vested remainder to the testator's children expectant on the death of testator's widow, and providing that, in case of the decease of any of said children, his or her shares to "descend" to the heirs of their bodies. Taylor v. Stephens, 74 N. E. 980, 982, 165 Ind. 200.

The term "descend to them" in the will should be construed to mean "go to them," and not to evidence an intention that upon the grandson's death the estate given him should vest in his children or descend in them by operation of law. Hays v. Martz, 89 N. E. 303, 307, 173 Ind. 279.

A deed of gift conveying property to a trustee in trust for the grantor's wife during her life and at her death to "descend" to her children creates a life estate in the wife, with remainder to her children. Greenwood v. Coleman, 34 Ala. 150.

Where a deed of gift gave property to the grantor's daughter to enjoy during her life and to descend to the natural heirs of her body, the word "descend" means that the property should go to her bodily heirs as succeeding the parent. McVay's Adm'r v. Ijams, 27 Ala. 238, 244.

Where a deed conveyed land to the grantor's son, the land to "descend" to the son's children, if he shall have any, but, if not, to revert to the grantor and his heirs, the word "descend" was not used in its technical legal sense, for the fee could not descend from the son, because it was not vested in him, and could not descend from the grantor because it was to pass by the deed, and not by his death, and as the law favors the vesting of estates unless a contrary intention appears, there is nothing in the deed inconsistent with the vesting of the remainder in the first child born to the grantor's son, subject to open and let in after-born children. Lewis v. Butts, 128 N. Y. Supp. 842, 844.

Testator, by the third clause of his will, without an introductory clause, devised to his daughter one-half of a farm, to her heirs if she should have any children, and if she should have none to descend to the oldest son of J., if he should have any lawfully begotten, at her death; if he should have no male heirs to descend to all her heirs alike, except to J. himself, but not to prohibit his heirs from receiving his part. Held, that the word "descend" indicated that testator intended that a fee should not pass, and that the oldest son of J. took a life estate only in his interest in the land so devised, and not a fee, under the rule that obtained prior to Rev. Code 1852, amended to 1893, p. 640, c. 84, § 24, declaring that a devise of real estate without words of limitation shall pass a fee, that such devise gives to the devisee a life estate only unless an intention to give a greater estate is sufficiently expressed in the will. In re Reed's Estate (Del.) 76 Atl. 617, 619, 7 Pennewill, 30.

DESCENDANT

See Direct Descendants; Lineal Descendants.

The Century Dictionary defines the word "descendant" as "an individual proceeding from an ancestor in any degree; issue; offspring, near or remote"; and Worcester defines "descendant" as "the offspring of an ancestor; progeny." In re Cook's Estate, 100 N. Y. Supp. 628, 629, 50 Misc. Rep. 487.

The word "descendants," used in the creation of a separate estate of a married woman, will not, at her death, exclude the marital rights of the husband, except as to the children. Wood v. Reamer, 82 S. W. 572, 574, 118 Ky. 841.

S. bequeathed to her grandsons J. and W. an amount of money; her will providing that, if either of them died leaving no child or descendant surviving him, the share he received under this will is to go to his surviving brother, and if both should die, leaving no child or descendants, then to be equally divided between testatrix's children. Held, that the word "descendants," in the connection in which it occurs is not a word of purchase creating an estate in a class designated, but is a word of limitation which limits or describes the estate given. Daniel v. Lipscomb, 66 S. E. 850, 852, 110 Va. 568.

As children

Child as including, see Child—Children.

While the words "children" and "descendants" are not synonymous, "descendants" includes "children"—comprises issue in every degree. French v. Logan's Adm'r, 60 S. E. 622, 623, 108 Va. 67 (citing Nelson v. Brett, 40 S. E. 32, 99 Va. 673).

The word "descendants," in a will which provides for the payment to a son of testator of a part of the son's share of the estate and directs that the remaining part shall be held in trust by the executors for the benefit of the son and his direct descendants, means children, and the will does not create an estate tail which entitles the son to receive the remaining portion at once, but a trust is created for the benefit of any children the son may leave at his death. Ballantine v. Ballantine, 152 Fed. 775, 785.

Code, art. 46, § 19, provides that the reality of an intestate who leaves no child or descendant shall descend to his brothers and sisters and their "descendants" in equal degree, equally. Section 21 provides that, if no brother or sister or any "descendant" from such brother or sister be living, then it shall descend to the father, and if no father living, then to the mother, and, if no mother living, then to the grandfather on the part of the father, and, if no such grandfather living, then to the descendants of such grandfather in equal degree, equally. Section 27 provides that, if in the descending or collateral line any parent shall be dead, the child or children of such parent shall by representation be considered in the same degree as the parent would have been in if living, and shall have the same share of the estate as the parent would have been entitled to if living; "provided that there be no representation admitted among collaterals after brothers' and sisters' children." Held, in a contest between first cousins and grandnieces of an intestate who left no nearer relatives, the former claiming as descendants of his grandfather and the latter as descendants of his sister, that the word "descendants," as used in section 19, was not limited to "children" by the proviso in section 27 limiting the right to take "by representation," which only applies to one seeking to be considered in the same degree as a deceased parent would have been in if living; and the grandnieces took as "descendants," under section 19, to the exclusion of the cousins, because the latter, who could only inherit by virtue of section 21, could only take in default of the persons mentioned in section 19. Hoffman v. Watson, 72 Atl. 479, 481, 109 Md. 532.

As heirs or next of kin

Heirs as including, see Heirs.

Where a will, after providing for the testator's wife and daughter and their issue, if any, provided that, if at the decease of the survivor of the wife and daughter there should be no living descendants of the testator, then the principal should be distributed among the testator's own right heirs, unless his adopted son or his issue be then living, in which event he, if living, or his issue, if he be not living, should receive one-half of the principal, it was held that the word "descendant" was used, in its ordinary sense, as meaning those who can trace their origin to testator as ancestor, and that the interests of testator's "own right heirs" were contingent and vested in those who answered that description at the happening of the contingency. Boston Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Blanchard, 81 N. E. 654, 655, 196 Mass. 35.

"Descendants" includes the issue of the body of every degree, no matter how remote, and it does not mean the next of kin or heirs generally. Twaites v. Waller, 110 N. W. 279, 280, 133 Iowa, 84.

Lawful issue as including, see Lawful Issue.

A will, providing for the payment to the testator's son of a stated portion of the estate, provided that "the remaining one-fifth part of his share shall be held in trust by my executors for the benefit of my said son * * * and his direct descendants." Held, that such provision did not create an estate tail which entitled the son to receive such portion at once. The word "descendants" is not used in the sense of "issue." Ballantine v. Ballantine, 152 Fed. 775, 785.

It is well settled in this state that the words "legal issue," when used in a will and unexplained by the context, have the meaning of "descendants." Schmidt v. Jewett, 88 N. E. 1110, 1111, 195 N. Y. 486, 133 Am. St. Rep. 815.

"Descendants," as used in a will to limit a devise after termination of a particular estate, may be synonymous with "issue." In re Tenney, 93 N. Y. Supp. 811, 818, 104 App. Div. 290.

The term "descendants," as used in a will, includes all who proceed from the body of one named, as children, grandchildren, and great grandchildren. Lich v. Lich, 138 S. W. 558, 564, 158 Mo. App. 400.

The words "descendants" and "issue," in their primary and usual sense, comprehend more than immediate issue. A testamentary gift over to the lawful issue and descendants of a beneficiary and to her descendants forever violates the statute of perpetuities in force in 1883, since the descendants can only be ascertained on the death of the beneficiary, and may include children of persons not in being at testator's death. Pease v. Cornell, 80 Atl. 86, 88, 84 Conn. 391.

"Ordinarily the word 'descendants' includes the issue of the body of every degree, no matter how remote, and it does not mean the next of kin or heirs generally." Where a will provided that the income from property should be distributed quarterly to testator's children and, upon each of their deaths, to their children or descendants, a granddaughter, whose parent was dead, took only a contingent interest, which, being divested by her death, could not be willed to her husband. Twaites v. Waller, 110 N. W. 279, 280, 133 Iowa, 84.

While the word "issue" in a strictly technical meaning is equivalent to the word "descendants," and when used in a will, in the absence of other words or extrinsic circumstances requiring a different meaning, entitles remaindermen to take per capita and not per stirpes, it will not be given that meaning where the language of the will

shows a different intention, and hence where a will provided for a per capita taking in equal portions by all living grandchildren, "including the issue of any grandchild or grandchildren then deceased leaving issue then alive who shall take the same share together, if more than one, which such deceased parent or parents would have taken if living," thus clearly showing the testator's intention to apply the term only to descendants of a particular class at a particular time and to treat the child or children of each grandchild as one class, the remainder will be equally divided among the different classes. Kernochan v. Whitney, 109 N. Y. Supp. 721, 722, 125 App. Div. 371.

A testator having at the time of the execution of his will a wife, two sons, W. and G., the latter of whom had three children, and two daughters without children, made a bequest in trust to pay the income to a daughter for life, and on her death to divide the corpus and pay the same to her lawful issue and their descendants or to her descendants forever. He had made an advancement to the daughter, so that, with the bequest, her share in the estate would equal the sum given the other children. Held, that the bequest violated the statute of perpetuities in force at the time of testator's death in 1883, since issue and descendants comprehended more than immediate issue, and since the descendants could only be ascertained on the death of the daughter, and might include children of persons not in being at testator's death. Pease v. Cornell, 80 Atl. 86, 88, 84 Conn. 391.

Where a testator in one paragraph devised certain real estate to his son, to have and to hold the same to him for life, and, in case he should die leaving lawful male issue, then to such male issue his or their heirs and assigns forever, and in another paragraph directed his executors to pay the legacies to his children within three years and to release all claims and demands which he had against any of his children, the word "issue" was used in its legal sense as synonymous with "descendant" and not as synonymous with "children," and therefore included children of a deceased child of the devisee. Wilson v. Wilson, 78 N. Y. Supp. 408, 409, 76 App. Div. 232.

In a will in which the residue of testator's estate was left "to all my children and the descendants of such as may be dead (they to receive the parts respectively which their parents would have received if alive) to be distributed equally among them," the testator intended to regard each deceased child as a stock of descent, and the meaning of the word "descendants" is restrained, so "that grandchildren whose parents were living could not take with their parents. This construction lets in children to equal shares, and grandchildren to the share their parents would have taken if living." "The broad import of the word 'descendants' is sometimes narrowed, where there is a ground for judging that it was intended in a restricted sense. Thus the word 'issue,' which is coextensive with 'descendants' and includes every degree, has been restrained to the sense of 'children.' Snyder v. Greendale Land Co., 91 N. E. 819, 822, 48 Ind. App. 178.

As issue of living person

The word "descendant," according to its accurate lexicographical and legal meaning, designates the issue of a deceased person and does not describe the child of a parent who is still living. The word is the correlative of ancestor. The word "issue" is a word of broader import and may include the children of a living parent as well as the children or descendants of one who is dead. But in an accurate sense one cannot have a living ancestor, nor can a living person, although he may have children, have descendants. A trust deed conveying property to trustees during their lives and the life of the survivor of them recited that the grantor wished to provide for the maintenance of the beneficiaries named, directed the trustees to distribute the proceeds among the beneficiaries, provided for the distribution thereof on the death of one or more of the beneficiaries with or without "lineal descendants," and that, on the termination of the trust estate by the death of the last surviving trustee, the "lineal descendants" of the beneficiaries named should take the body of the fund, and further provided that the beneficiaries should not take any other interest in the grantor's property in the state than that therein granted. Held, that the phrase "lineal descendants" must be taken in its technical sense, and the contingencies on which the corpus of the fund devolved on the issue of the beneficiaries were that all the beneficiaries, as well as all the trustees, should be dead. Parrish v. Mills, 106 S. W. 882, 886, 101 Tex. 276.

See Legal Representative.

As lineal descendant

"Descendants" includes both lineal and collateral relations, all who would take under the statute of descents. Dungan v. Kline, 90 N. E. 938, 940, 81 Ohio St. 371 (citing Turley v. Turley, 11 Ohio St. 178).

The word "descendants," as used in a clause in a will providing that, on the death of any of the beneficiaries, his or her share should go to their descendants, means children or grandchildren in the direct line. Dozier v. Dozier (Mo.) 81 S. W. 891, 894.

In the absence of anything in the will indicating the contrary, "descendants," in a gift of the remainder to children reared by testator, to be divided equally between them and their descendants, does not have other than its ordinary meaning, so as to include brothers and sisters of one of them dying without issue. Romjue v. Randolph, 148 S. W. 185, 188, 166 Mo. App. 87.

Where a testator left to one daughter $2,000 for life, and gave the balance of his estate to his two daughters equally, then to his legal descendants, if any, but, if none, the balance was bequeathed to strangers to the blood, the "descendants" are those who survive testator's daughters, and where, at the execution of the will and death of testator, he had two grandchildren, the interest of one, since deceased, does not pass to his father, who is a stranger to the blood of the testator. Hadcox v. Cody, 135 N. Y. Supp. 861, 863, 75 Misc. Rep. 569.

DESCENDIBLE

An executory devise to one dependent upon the death of the preceding owner in fee, without children or issue surviving, becomes a "descendible" estate; "descendible" and "devisable," in relation to such interests, being convertible terms. King v. Guild, 2 Tenn. Ch. App. 190, 195.

A will provided: "Lastly, I give, bequeath and devise to my son all the residue of my property, both real and personal, to be held in trust, nevertheless, by my said executors, and managed and cared for by them for my son's benefit until he shall arrive at the age of fifty years, when said trust shall continue in the discretion of said executors, and if my son shall die while it is in force he may dispose of said property by will, and if he dies intestate then this property I bequeath to my heirs at law." Held, that the son took a "descendible, devisable, and alienable" estate in expectancy within Real Estate Law (Laws 1896, p. 587, c. 547) § 49, to which the lien of the son's judgment creditor would attach under Code Civ. Proc. § 1251. Higgins v. Downs, 91 N. Y. Supp. 987, 939, 101 App. Div. 119.

DESCENT

See African Descent; Gift, Devise, or Descent; Indians by Descent; Line of Descent.

The purpose of the act of approved August 13, 1910 (Acts 1910, p. 90), regulating the use of automobiles, is to protect pedestrians and others lawfully on the highways of this state against the consequences of the negligent and improper operation of automobiles. Construing the word "descent," as used in section 5 of this act, in the light of its context and the declared purpose of the act, it will be held to mean a declivity in the highway over which, from ordinary human experience and observation, it would be deemed more dangerous to operate an automobile at an excessive rate of speed than upon level ground. Such a construction of the word "descent" does not make it so indefinite and uncertain in meaning as to render this provision of the act incapable of enforcement as a penal law. Elsbery v. State (Ga.) 76 S. E. 779, 781.

Where a will provided that the income from property should be distributed quarterly to testator's children and, upon each of their deaths, to their children or descendants, a granddaughter, whose parent was dead, took only a contingent interest, which, being divested by her death, could not be willed to her husband. Twaites v. Waller, 110 N. W. 279, 280, 133 Iowa, 84.

While the word "issue" in a strictly technical meaning is equivalent to the word "descendants," and when used in a will, in the absence of other words or extrinsic circumstances requiring a different meaning, entitles remaindermen to take per capita and not per stirpes, it will not be given that meaning where the language of the will

shows a different intention, and hence where a will provided for a per capita taking in equal portions by all living grandchildren, "including the issue of any grandchild or grandchildren then deceased leaving issue then alive who shall take the same share together, if more than one, which such deceased parent or parents would have taken if living," thus clearly showing the testator's intention to apply the term only to descendants of a particular class at a particular time and to treat the child or children of each grandchild as one class, the remainder will be equally divided among the different classes. Kernochan v. Whitney, 109 N. Y. Supp. 721, 722, 125 App. Div. 371.

A testator having at the time of the execution of his will a wife, two sons, W. and G., the latter of whom had three children, and two daughters without children, made a bequest in trust to pay the income to a daughter for life, and on her death to divide the corpus and pay the same to her lawful issue and their descendants or to her descendants forever. He had made an advancement to the daughter, so that, with the bequest, her share in the estate would equal the sum given the other children. Held, that the bequest violated the statute of perpetuities in force at the time of testator's death in 1883, since issue and descendants comprehended more than immediate issue, and since the descendants could only be ascertained on the death of the daughter, and might include children of persons not in being at testator's death. Pease v. Cornell, 80 Atl. 86, 88, 84 Conn. 391.

Where a testator in one paragraph devised certain real estate to his son, to have and to hold the same to him for life, and, in case he should die leaving lawful male issue, then to such male issue his or their heirs and assigns forever, and in another paragraph directed his executors to pay the legacies to his children within three years and to release all claims and demands which he had against any of his children, the word "issue" was used in its legal sense as synonymous with "descendant" and not as synonymous with "children," and therefore included children of a deceased child of the devisee. Wilson v. Wilson, 78 N. Y. Supp. 408, 409, 76 App. Div. 232.

In a will in which the residue of testator's estate was left "to all my children and the descendants of such as may be dead (they to receive the parts respectively which their parents would have received if alive) to be distributed equally among them," the testator intended to regard each deceased child as a stock of descent, and the meaning of the word "descendants" is restrained, so "that grandchildren whose parents were living could not take with their parents. This construction lets in children to equal shares, and grandchildren to the share their parents would have taken if living." "The broad import of the word 'descendants' is sometimes narrowed, where there is a ground for judging that it was intended in a restricted sense. Thus the word 'issue,' which is coextensive with 'descendants' and includes every degree, has been restrained to the sense of 'children.'" Snyder v. Greendale Land Co., 91 N. E. 819, 822, 48 Ind. App. 178.

As issue of living person

The word "descendant," according to its accurate lexicographical and legal meaning, designates the issue of a deceased person and does not describe the child of a parent who is still living. The word is the correlative of ancestor. The word "issue" is a word of broader import and may include the children of a living parent as well as the children or descendants of one who is dead. But in an accurate sense one cannot have a living ancestor, nor can a living person, although he may have children, have descendants. A trust deed conveying property to trustees during their lives and the life of the survivor of them recited that the grantor wished to provide for the maintenance of the beneficiaries named, directed the trustees to distribute the proceeds among the beneficiaries, provided for the distribution thereof on the death of one or more of the beneficiaries with or without "lineal descendants," and that, on the termination of the trust estate by the death of the last surviving trustee, the "lineal descendants" of the beneficiaries named should take the body of the fund, and further provided that the beneficiaries should not take any other interest in the grantor's property in the state than that therein granted. Held, that the phrase "lineal descendants" must be taken in its technical sense, and the contingencies on which the corpus of the fund devolved on the issue of the beneficiaries were that all the beneficiaries, as well as all the trustees, should be dead. Parrish v. Mills, 106 S. W. 882, 886, 101 Tex. 276.

As lineal descendant

"Descendants" includes both lineal and collateral relations, all who would take under the statute of descents. Dungan v. Kline, 90 N. E. 938, 940, 81 Ohio St. 371 (citing Turley v. Turley, 11 Ohio St. 173).

The word "descendants," as used in a clause in a will providing that, on the death of any of the beneficiaries, his or her share should go to their descendants, means children or grandchildren in the direct line. Dozier v. Dozier (Mo.) 81 S. W. 891, 894.

In the absence of anything in the will indicating the contrary, "descendants," in a gift of the remainder to children reared by testator, to be divided equally between them and their descendants, does not have other than its ordinary meaning, so as to include brothers and sisters of one of them dying without issue. Romjue v. Randolph, 148 S. W. 185, 188, 166 Mo. App. 87.

Where a testator left to one daughter $2,000 for life, and gave the balance of his estate to his two daughters equally, then to his legal descendants, if any, but, if none, the balance was bequeathed to strangers to the blood, the "descendants" are those who survive testator's daughters, and where, at the execution of the will and death of testator, he had two grandchildren, the interest of one, since deceased, does not pass to his father, who is a stranger to the blood of the testator. Hadcox v. Cody, 135 N. Y. Supp. 861, 863, 75 Misc. Rep. 569.

DESCENDIBLE

An executory devise to one dependent upon the death of the preceding owner in fee, without children or issue surviving, becomes a "descendible" estate; "descendible" and "devisable," in relation to such interests, being convertible terms. King v. Guild, 2 Tenn. Ch. App. 190, 195.

A will provided: "Lastly, I give, bequeath and devise to my son all the residue of my property, both real and personal, to be held in trust, nevertheless, by my said executors, and managed and cared for by them for my son's benefit until he shall arrive at the age of fifty years, when said trust shall continue in the discretion of said executors, and if my son shall die while it is in force he may dispose of said property by will, and if he dies intestate then this property I bequeath to my heirs at law." Held, that the son took a "descendible, devisable, and alienable" estate in expectancy within Real Estate Law (Laws 1896, p. 567, c. 547) § 49, to which the lien of the son's judgment creditor would attach under Code Civ. Proc. § 1251. Higgins v. Downs, 91 N. Y. Supp. 937, 939, 101 App. Div. 119.

DESCENT

See African Descent; Gift, Devise, or Descent; Indians by Descent; Line of Descent.

The purpose of the act of approved August 13, 1910 (Acts 1910, p. 90), regulating the use of automobiles, is to protect pedestrians and others lawfully on the highways of this state against the consequences of the negligent and improper operation of automobiles. Construing the word "descent," as used in section 5 of this act, in the light of its context and the declared purpose of the act, it will be held to mean a declivity in the highway over which, from ordinary human experience and observation, it would be deemed more dangerous to operate an automobile at an excessive rate of speed than upon level ground. Such a construction of the word "descent" does not make it so indefinite and uncertain in meaning as to render this provision of the act incapable of enforcement as a penal law. Elsbery v. State (Ga.) 76 S. E. 779, 781.

"Descent" or "hereditary succession" is the title whereby a man, on the death of his ancestor, acquires his ancestor's estate by right of representation as his heir at law. Hannon v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 107 Pac. 335, 338, 12 Cal. App. 350; Parrish v. Mills, 106 S. W. 882, 883, 101 Tex. 276 (quoting and adopting Barclay v. Cameron, 25 Tex. 233).

"There are two modes only, regarded as classes, of acquiring a title to land, viz., 'descent' and 'purchase,' 'purchase' including every mode of acquisition known to law, except that by which an heir, on the death of an ancestor, becomes substituted in his place as owner by act of the law;" and where a Creek Indian died before enrollment, to which he was entitled, and before selection and patent of his allotment, under the act of Congress, his heirs took by purchase, as donees of the nation, and not by descent. Shulthis v. MacDougal, 162 Fed. 331, 338 (citing 3 Washb. Real Prop. p. 4).

Code, c. 28, § 1281, rule 10, provides that illegitimate children shall be considered legitimate as between themselves and their representatives, and in case of the death of such child or his issue, without leaving issue, his estate shall descend to such person as would inherit if all the children had been born in wedlock. Held, that the "descent" so referred to was between brothers and sisters, and had no application to collaterals. Bettis v. Avery, 52 S. E. 584, 586, 140 N. C. 184.

The word "descent," as used in a statute providing that an alien can take by descent lands in the same manner as a citizen of the state, applies to the tenancy by the curtesy, which is a tenancy by descent, and not by purchase. Cooke v. Doron, 64 Atl. 595, 596, 215 Pa. 393, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 659, 7 Ann. Cas. 502.

Act of Congress approved March 3, 1885 (23 Stat. 340, c. 139), providing for the allotment of lands to the Indians residing on the Umatilla reservation, declares that the law of alienation and descent in force in the state of Oregon shall apply after patents have been executed. Held, that the word "descent" was intended to render the transmission of an estate by inheritance applicable to the land allotted to an Indian from the time a certificate was issued. Kalyton v. Kalyton, 78 Pac. 332, 333, 45 Or. 118.

The phrase "right and interest by descent," in a statute providing that a conveyance by the wife without the joinder or assent of her husband shall not bar his right and interest by descent in the estate conveyed, is to be limited to conveyances of real estate, and designates a right which a surviving husband has in the real estate of a deceased wife in place of curtesy and has no reference to the interest in the personal estate which comes through distribution. Wright v. Holmes, 62 Atl. 507, 509, 100 Me. 508, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 769, 4 Ann. Cas. 588.

DESCRIBE—DESCRIPTION

See As Above Described; Correct Description; Defect in Description; Last Described; Substantially as Described; Sufficient Description.

Any and every description, see Any.

Any description, see Any.

Similar description, see Similar.

The word "description," in its ordinary and legal signification, means a description which has a legal susceptibility of being aided by testimony so as to identify the subject-matter. Casey v. Luken, 88 N. E. 347, 348, 43 Ind. App. 682 (citing Lowe v. Harris, 17 S. E. 539, 112 N. C. 472, 22 L. R. A. 379).

Usually general "description" in a grant, such as "all the estate, both real and personal of the grantor," and "all my lands" in the town, county, or state, "all my lands wherever situated," "all my right, title, and interest in and to my father's estate at law," and the like, are held sufficient. Holley's Ex'r v. Curry, 51 S. E. 135, 136, 58 W. Va. 70, 112 Am. St. Rep. 944 (citing Brewster, Conv. § 81; Pettigrew v. Bobbelaar, 63 Cal. 396; Frey v. Clifford, 44 Cal. 335; Austin v. Dolbee, 59 N. W. 608, 101 Mich. 292; Huron Land Co. v. Robarge, 87 N. W. 1032, 128 Mich. 686; Warren v. Syme, 7 W. Va. 474).

Under a statute concerning street improvements, providing that the council shall pass a resolution of intention "describing the work," a resolution declaring it to be the intention of the council that a described street be graded, graveled, and guttered in accordance with the plans and profiles on file in the office of the city engineer and specifications in the office of the city clerk, that a cement curb be constructed along each line of the roadway of a street in accordance with the specifications, and that a cement sidewalk, five feet in width, be constructed along each side of the street in accordance with the specifications, contains a sufficient "description" of the work where the plans and specifications supply all the information required to make the character of the work and materials absolutely certain. Chase v. Trout, 80 Pac. 81, 87, 146 Cal. 350.

A "description" in a mortgage is sufficient which enables a third party, aided by the inquiry which the instrument itself suggests, to identify the property covered by it. If it directs the mind of the inquirer to facts or evidence from which he may ascertain the mortgaged property with certainty, it is sufficient. When a mortgage contains a description, part of which is true and part false and erroneous, that which is false or erroneous may be stricken out as redundant or superfluous, and the description will be sufficient if enough remains to lead a third party, by the inquiries it suggests, to the identification of the property covered by it. Livingston & Schaller v. Stevens, 94 N. W. 925, 928, 122 Iowa, 62.

DESCRIPTIVE

The allegations which are not necessary to the complete statement of the cause of action, but which the pleader must prove because of their being of the kind designated as "descriptive," are ordinarily those which limit more general statements, and which so advise the opposing party of the precise claim relied upon that to treat them as mere surplusage would be to require him to meet evidence of a state of facts substantially different from what he had occasion to anticipate. Stevens v. Sheriff, 80 Pac. 936, 937, 71 Kan. 434.

DESERTER

The crew of a sailing vessel are not "deserters" where they objected to going to sea short-handed, and were given the option by the master to so make the voyage or be discharged without pay; but, as they persisted, he obtained another crew and made no objection when the old crew left the vessel, neither discharging them nor logging them as "deserters." The Amazon, 144 Fed. 153, 154.

DESERTION (As a Felony)

"By some early English statutes, which appear to have been in force down to the Revolution of 1688, desertion was made felony, punishable in the civil courts. * * * But those statutes fell into disuse after Parliament by the Mutiny Acts, beginning with the statute of 1 W. & M. c. 5, and re-enacted almost every year since, for the first time authorized mutiny and desertion to be punished at the sentence of a court martial in time of peace." Kurtz v. Moffitt, 6 Sup. Ct. 148, 152, 115 U. S. 490, 29 L. Ed. 458.

"Desertion," as used in Pub. Acts Mich. 1907, p. 182, No. 144, making one who deserts and abandons his wife guilty of a felony, "abandonment or desertion" means a separation from, wrongfully, without intention of again resuming marital relations. People v. Stickle, 121 N. W. 497, 498, 156 Mich. 557.

Where, after his wife obtained a divorce and they were living apart, accused failed to comply with the provisions of the decree requiring him to pay her a weekly allowance for the children's support, he was not guilty of the crime of desertion and abandonment of his minor children, denounced by Pub. Laws 1907, No. 144, where the decree of divorce absolutely deprived him of all custody or right over his children, and imposed upon the wife the duty of furnishing them support, subject to his contribution; so there could be no "desertion," which is the act of a consort leaving his wife and children with intent to cause a perpetual separation, or "abandonment," which is the act by which a man deserts and abandons his minor children. People v. Dunston, 138 N. W. 1047, 1048, 173 Mich. 868, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1066.

In order to warrant a conviction of desertion under Cr. Code, § 212a (Laws 1908, p. 642, c. 137), both the "abandonment" and "failure to support" must have occurred since the taking effect of the statute. State v. Hoon, 111 N. W. 462, 463, 78 Neb. 618.

Code Supp. 1907, §§ 4775a-4775f, defining desertion, describes three criminal acts—refusal of a husband to provide for his wife; abandonment of a legitimate child under the age of 16 years; and neglect to provide for such child—and any one of such acts is desertion, and as to the child there may be an abandonment, constituting a crime, without a neglect to provide for it. State v. Stout, 117 N. W. 958, 960, 139 Iowa, 557.

DESERTION (In Divorce Law)

See Constructive Desertion; Continued Desertion; Obstinate Desertion; Willful Desertion.

"Desertion," when applied to the relation of husband and wife, has a well-defined legal meaning, and signifies the act by which a man quits the society of his wife and children, or either of them, and renounces his duties towards them. State ex rel. Milton v. Baker, 86 South. 703, 704, 112 La. 801 (citing Black, Law Dict.).

"Desertion" in divorce law is the voluntary separation of one of the married parties from the other, or the voluntary refusal to renew a suspended cohabitation, without justification either in the consent or the wrongful conduct of the other. Bacon v. Bacon, 70 S. E. 762, 763, 68 W. Va. 747 (citing Alkire v. Alkire, 11 S. E. 11, 83 W. Va. 517; Martin v. Martin, 11 S. E. 12, 33 W. Va. 695; 14 Cyc. p. 811); Ault v. Ault, 68 Pac. 231, 29 Colo. 149 (quoting and adopting definition in Johnson v. Johnson, 43 Pac. 180, 181, 22 Colo. 20, 55 Am. St. Rep. 112); Crounse v. Crounse, 60 S. E. 627, 629, 108 Va. 108; Kupka v. Kupka, 109 N. W. 610, 611, 132 Iowa, 191; Luper v. Luper, 96 Pac. 1090, 1101, 61 Or. 418; Todd v. Todd, 80 Atl. 717, 84 Conn. 591 (citing Bennett v. Bennett, 48 Conn. 813, 318; Tirrell v. Tirrell, 45 Atl. 153, 72 Conn. 567, 570, 47 L. R. A. 750); Rector v. Rector, 79 Atl. 295, 78 N. J. Eq. 386; Patterson v. Patterson, 88 Pac. 196, 197, 45 Wash. 296.

Desertion is an actual abandonment of matrimonial cohabitation, with an intent to desert willfully, and maliciously persisted in without cause for two years. Olson v. Olson, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 123, 131.

A physical departure from a spouse is not essential to "desertion." Rector v. Rector, 79 Atl. 295, 302, 78 N. J. Eq. 386.

That a wife is maintaining an action against her husband for separate maintenance or divorce will not prevent her absence from him amounting to "desertion." The action must have been begun in good faith; and there is no presumption that she acted in good faith where there was no foundation for her action. Kusel v. Kusel, 81 Pac. 297, 298, 147 Cal. 52.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 370, providing that a wife, when living separate from her husband by means of his "desertion" of her, may sue alone, the "desertion" need not have continued for the statutory period entitling a wife to a divorce, but the desertion must be such as is given as a cause for divorce by Code Civ. Proc. § 95, to wit, a voluntary separation with intent to desert. Humphrey v. Pope, 54 Pac. 847, 848, 122 Cal. 253.

Desertion, however willful and without reasonable cause, is no ground for divorce, unless continued for the statutory period. Luper v. Luper, 96 Pac. 1099, 1101, 61 Or. 418.

A husband's wrongful abandonment of his wife does not constitute desertion, if within one year thereafter she showed by her words or conduct that she acquiesced in the separation. Creasey v. Creasey, 151 S. W. 219, 226, 168 Mo. App. 68.

"Desertion" is a marital offense, consisting in the voluntary separation of one of the married parties from the other, or the refusal to renew suspended cohabitation without justification either in the consent or the wrongful conduct of the other party. Buckner v. Buckner, 84 Atl. 156, 160, 118 Md. 101.

"Desertion," warranting a divorce, is a breach of matrimonial duty accompanied by an intent to desert, concurrently existing in uninterrupted combination during at least the entire statutory period of one year and until the entry of a decree; it not being proper to join two periods of desertion to make the statutory period, however brief the period of cohabitation separating the two periods of desertion. Luper v. Luper, 96 Pac. 1099, 1101, 61 Or. 418.

"Desertion" is a continuing offense, but it continues only so long as there is a want of consent to the separation on the part of the deserted party. The original offense is not destroyed by the fact that, after the desertion has continued for the period necessary to make it ground for divorce, the status of the separation changes and it becomes, in every way, agreeable to the deserted party. McMullen v. McMullen, 73 Pac. 808, 809, 140 Cal. 112.

Where a husband deserted his wife, and without intending to resume the marital relation, induced her to cohabit with him, under the belief that the marital union had been restored, and again deserted her, the period of desertion was not interrupted, and the wife was entitled to a divorce for desertion continuing for three years from the beginning of the first abandonment. Womble v. Womble (Tex.) 152 S. W. 473, 474.

Where the meaning of the word "desertion" is not controlled by the wording of the statute, matrimonial desertion occurs whenever either spouse, without good reason or just cause, consecutively and persistently refuses to have intercourse with the other; but under Rev. St. 1899, § 2921, allowing a divorce where either party has absented himself or herself for a year, without a reasonable cause, there must not only be a cessation of copulation, but the husband and wife must not live together under the same roof. Hence where they do so live the wife's refusal of sexual intercourse, continued for more than a year, is not "desertion" justifying a divorce. Williams v. Williams, 99 S. W. 42, 44, 121 Mo. App. 349 (citing and adopting Hall v. Hall, 77 Mo. App. 600).

For the wife of one who emigrates to America to better his condition to refuse to accompany or follow him, without other excuse than disinclination to leave her native land, is "desertion," entitling the husband to divorce. Franklin v. Franklin, 77 N. E. 48, 49, 190 Mass. 349, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 145, 5 Ann. Cas. 851.

Where the husband establishes a new home, and requests his wife to follow him to the new domicile, and furnishes her the means with which to travel, and she declines to take up her residence with him, the husband is not thereby guilty of deserting the wife. Roby v. Roby, 77 Pac. 213, 214, 10 Idaho, 139.

"Desertion" is not made out by a showing that when the husband returned from work at noon on a day named, he found that most of the furniture of his house had been taken away; that he had seen his wife but twice since that time; that she gave no reason for leaving him, and that he knew of none; that he said nothing of previous disagreements and it did not appear that he made any effort to find out why she left him, or to invite her back; on the contrary, it appeared that he voluntarily paid her a certain sum per week during a portion of the period of alleged desertion. He gave no explanation of why he made this payment. Olson v. Olson, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 128, 131.

Desertion justifying a divorce is the voluntary separation of one spouse from the other, or the voluntary refusal to renew a suspended cohabitation, without justification either in the consent or wrongful conduct of the other, and though there must be a simultaneous separation and an intent to desert and though desertion does not exist without the presence of, both, the two need not begin together, and desertion begins whenever to either one the other is added. A separation of husband and wife caused by the wife leaving her home and living separately and apart from her husband without justification establishes the termination of cohabitation, essential to desertion. Taylor v. Taylor, 77 Atl. 133, 136, 112 Md. 666.

In an action by a wife for divorce on the ground of desertion, complainant must prove that defendant willfully deserted or absented himself from her, without any reasonable cause, for the space of two years. Trimmer v. Trimmer, 74 N. E. 96, 97, 215 Ill. 121.

Where a husband fits up a home for his wife, is able to provide for her in a manner suitable to their station of life, and writes her to come to him, and she refuses to do so, for reasons not sufficient to entitle her to a decree of divorce, and for such reasons lives separate and apart from her husband for more than the statutory period preceding the filing of the bill by him, the husband is entitled to a decree of divorce. Walton v. Walton, 114 Ill. App. 116, 118.

As affecting "desertion" it is the husband's right to fix the family domicile. Patterson v. Patterson, 88 Pac. 196, 197, 45 Wash. 296 (citing 14 Cyc. pp. 611, 612).

To constitute "desertion willful, continued, and obstinate" as a ground for divorce, three elements must concur: First, cessation of cohabitation; second, intent in the mind of defendant to desert; and, third, separation against the will of complainant. Taylor v. Taylor, 70 Atl. 323, 326, 78 N. J. Eq. 745 (citing Taylor v. Taylor, 28 N. J. Eq. 207).

Absence

Mere absence of one spouse from the other, though voluntary, does not constitute "desertion"; but cohabitation must cease, and there must be intent in the mind of the offending party to desert or abandon the other. Hall v. Hall, 71 S. E. 103, 69 W. Va. 175, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 758.

Under P. L. 1902, p. 502, authorizing a divorce for "two years willful, continued, and obstinate desertion," the two-year term contemplated by the statute is that immediately preceding the filing of the petition for divorce and not the first two years of the period of separation. Myles v. Myles, 76 Atl. 1037, 77 N. J. Eq. 265.

The term of "two years' willful, continued, and obstinate desertion" described in divorce act (P. L. 1902, p. 502) as entitling the injured party to a divorce of vinculo, is that next preceding the filing of the petition for divorce. Myles v. Myles, 76 Atl. 1037, 77 N. J. Eq. 265.

Refusal of sexual intercourse

"Desertion" by a husband or wife need not be a total abnegation of all marital rights. A spouse's willful refusal to engage in sexual intercourse is desertion under the statute, making desertion ground for divorce, and hence, where a husband refused to consummate the marriage by sexual intercourse, he deserted his wife, even though he supported her and they lived under the same roof. Raymond v. Raymond (N. J.) 79 Atl. 430, 431.

Unjustified refusal of one spouse for the statutory desertion period to have sexual intercourse with the other, and withdrawal from other marital duties against the other's will, constitutes "desertion," though they continue to reside in the same house. Rector v. Rector, 79 Atl. 295, 304, 78 N. J. Eq. 386.

A husband without the wife's consent has the right to establish the family domicile, and it is her duty to live with him at his domicile if it is reasonably possible for her to do so. But if a husband by his own acts, intentionally brings the cohabitation to an end, and by his own acts keeps it at an end for the statutory period, showing no evidence of a reasonable purpose to renew his marital relations, he is guilty of desertion, and she is entitled to a divorce on that ground. Walker v. Walker, 59 South. 898, 899, 64 Fla. 536.

Separation

"Desertion," to justify a divorce, is a voluntary separation of one spouse from the other for a statutory time without the latter's consent, without justification, and with the intention of not returning; but mere separation is not desertion, and a spouse, suing for desertion, must show that he has not acquiesced in the separation and accepted it as satisfactory. Andrade v. Andrade (Arix) 128 Pac. 813, 817.

"Desertion" of a husband or wife means more than merely going away, and more than separation. It negatives the idea of a friendly separation or a separation for a just cause. As defined by 1 Bouv. L. Dict., p. 561, "desertion" is the "act by which a man abandons his wife and children or either of them." People v. Stickle, 121 N. W. 497, 498, 156 Mich. 557.

Although a husband, after separating himself from his wife and children without lawful excuse still provides for their support, his conduct may constitute the matrimonial offense of desertion. Power v. Power, 58 Atl. 192, 194, 66 N. J. Eq. 320, 105 Am. St. Rep. 653.

Same—Compulsory

A husband who so treats his wife as to render it impossible for her to live with him in safety is guilty of desertion as if he himself had left the home with intent never to return. Davenport v. Davenport, 56 S. E. 562, 565, 106 Va. 736.

A wife who left her husband, who was drinking heavily, could not procure a divorce from her husband on the theory of constructive desertion, where the separation was not forced upon the wife by the husband's drunkenness, but was brought about by consent, and in order to relieve the husband, who was in financial straits, until he should be able to procure employment and provide a suitable home. Foote v. Foote (N. J.) 61 Atl. 90, 92.

A wife cannot establish "desertion" by showing that the husband refused to comply with her demands relative to his habits and manner of supporting her, since she is bound to accept the position which her husband is able to maintain for her. Provost v. Provost (N. J.) 63 Atl. 619.

It is only such conduct upon the part of the husband as will entitle the wife to a decree of divorce as will justify a desertion by her. Walton v. Walton, 114 Ill. App. 116, 118.

In a suit for divorce for willful and continued desertion, it is immaterial which of the married parties leaves the marital home, and the one intending to bring the marriage relation to an end commits the desertion, and a wife who drove her husband away is the deserter. Hudson v. Hudson, 51 South. 857, 858, 59 Fla. 529, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 614, 138 Am. St. Rep. 141, 21 Ann. Cas. 278.

Same—By mutual consent

Desertion by the spouse implies want of consent and unwillingness by the other spouse, and there can be no desertion where the separation is upon mutual consent. Summers v. Summers (Ind.) 100 N. E. 71, 72.

"Desertion" is the willful separation of one of the married parties from the other, without legal cause. A separation by mutual consent is not desertion on the part of either, unless one of the parties offers to resume cohabitation and the offer is refused. Burnett v. State, 81 S. W. 382, 383, 72 Ark. 398.

What may have been desertion in its inception, but has become a separation with mutual consent within two years, is not ground for divorce. The mutual consent that will prevent a divorce upon the ground of desertion may be inferred from the conduct of the parties, and need not be put in the form of a solemn written agreement. Olson v. Olson, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 128, 131.

DESERTION (In Maritime Law)

"From the year of the Declaration of Independence, Congress has dealt with desertion as exclusively a military crime, triable and punishable in time of peace, as well as in time of war, by court-martial only, and not by the civil tribunals; the only qualification being that since 1830 the punishment of death cannot be awarded in time of peace." Kurtz v. Moffitt, 6 Sup. Ct. 148, 153, 115 U. S. 501, 29 L. Ed. 458.

"Desertion" is the unlawful and willful abandonment of a vessel during a voyage with an intention not to return to duty, a quitting of the ship and her service, not only without leave and against the duty of the party, but with an intent not to return. Where a seaman left a vessel by permission, got drunk, and was imprisoned, which prevented his return to his home port with the vessel, but there was nothing to indicate that he had an intention, when he went ashore, not to return, he was not guilty of desertion. The Charles K. Schull, 166 Fed. 374, 375.

DESIGN

See Premeditated Design.

As intend

"Design" is the conceived plan or system by which an intent is to be carried out or attained. Crosby v. Wells, 67 Atl. 235, 302, 73 N. J. Law, 790 (citing Wigm. Ev. §§ 237, 300).

With reference to evidence of other offenses to show design or system, a "design" implies a preconceived plan or preparation, while "system" may be established by any facts showing a general intent coupled with similarity of method or arrangement. People v. Harben, 91 Pac. 398, 400, 5 Cal. App. 29.

A "design" to commit murder may be indicated by the deliberate selection and use of a deadly weapon, by previous quarrels or grudges, or by prior menaces or threats, and it is not necessary that such design should have existed in accused's mind for any considerable time before the killing if it existed when the mortal wound was inflicted. State v. Adams (Del.) 65 Atl. 510, 511, 6 Pennewill, 178.

The word "design," in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 2167, defining murder as "homicide when perpetrated without authority of law and with a premeditated 'design' to effect the death of the person killed," means intention, purpose, aim, scheme, or plan in the mind. Walcher v. Territory, 90 P. 887, 888, 18 Okl. 528.

"Intent to kill" means just what the ordinary signification of the words suggest. Whether it be described by the words "actual intent," "design," or "premeditated design" makes no difference. When we leave entirely out of view those subtleties, often indulged in in discoursing on the meaning of "premeditated design," and giving words the meaning ordinarily attributed to them, the person who effects the death of another by design does so intentionally, and the design or intent is understood to necessarily precede the act by which the purpose is accomplished. In other words, the intent is understood to be premeditated or thought of, because without mental action the purpose could not be formed. So when it is said that the slayer intentionally caused the death of his victim, it is at the same time said that he caused it by design or premeditated design. That the word "premeditated," as used in the statutes on the subject of felonious homicide, has no other significance than that the design must precede the homicidal act, is indicated from the evident purpose of the statute makers to give the same meaning to the term "premeditated design," where used inclusively in murder in the first degree, as to "design," where that word alone is used exclusively in murder in the third, and manslaughter in the first, second, and third, degrees. Cupps v. State, 98 N. W. 546, 549, 120 Wis. 504, 102 Am. St. Rep. 996, 1 Ann. Cas. 85.

That a payment was made in contemplation of insolvency and with a "design" to prefer a creditor within Ky. St. § 1910, is not shown where a creditor attacking a payment by a debtor to another creditor as made in contemplation of insolvency and with a design to prefer the creditor, showed that the debtor was worth about $5,000 less than his liabilities, but he had a large credit by reason of the confidence of the people in his integrity, and the payment attacked was a payment of $1,500 on a debt of $3,250 made to preserve his credit and save his business, and shortly thereafter the debtor lost his mind, while if he had been able to manage his business he would have succeeded in continuing in business. Cecil v. Citizens' Nat. Bank of Danville, 141 S. W. 416, 419, 145 Ky. 842.

DESIGN (In Copyright)

See Useful Design.

"We are in the habit of regarding a 'design' as a thing of distinct and fixed individuality of appearance—a representation, a picture, a delineation, a device." N. Y. Belting & Packing Co. v. New Jersey Car Spring & Rubber Co., 11 Sup. Ct. 193, 195, 187 U. S. 450, 34 L. Ed. 741.

"A 'design' or pattern in ornamentation or shape appeals only to the taste through the eye, and is often a matter of evanescent caprice." Dobson v. Hartford Carpet Co., 5 Sup. Ct. 945, 948, 114 U. S. 445, 29 L. Ed. 177.

The word "design" covers the invention of any new machine or improvement thereof, where an employé tendered his services to a sawmill manufacturer, and stated that he had designed machines which were in successful operation, and the employer accepted the proposal of the employé with the understanding that drawings, patterns, or "designs" of machinery made by the employé should be the property of the employer. Portland Iron Works v. Willett, 89 Pac. 421, 423, 49 Or. 245.

"Designed" indicates a bad purpose with evil intent. State v. Fairbanks, 39 South. 443, 444, 115 La. 457 (citing 12 Cyc. p. 151).

The term "designed" is equivalent to adapted, where, in a proceeding for a mechanic's lien, the boundaries of the land upon which the building is built have not been designated previous to the commencement of the building, Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 63, § 7, provides that the court may order a surveyor to designate the limits and extent of grounds necessary for the convenient use of the building for the purpose for which it was designed. Flinston Farm Co. of Baltimore County v. Henderson & Co., 67 Atl. 228, 234, 106 Md. 335.

The term "designed," under P. L. 1906, p. 157, authorizing a city having a plant "designed" for furnishing a water supply, means a plant for water supply already in use, and does not refer to a plant which is merely planned and not installed. Lighthipe v. City of Orange, 68 Atl. 120, 122, 75 N. J. Law, 365.

The words "devised" and "designed" are not synonymous. Where both words are employed in a criminal statute in the description of an offense, both must be used in the indictment. State v. Sherman, 119 S. W. 479, 480, 137 Mo. App. 70 (citing State v. Etchmann, 83 S. W. 978, 184 Mo. 193).

An allegation in an indictment that defendant set up a device adapted and devised for gaming was not sufficient under Rev. St. 1899, § 2194, making it a felony to set up a device adapted, devised, or designed for gaming. State v. Etchman, 83 S. W. 978, 980, 184 Mo. 193.

DESIGNATE

The word "designate," as used in a constitutional provision directing the Legislature to enact a law whereby any county, justice precinct, town, city, or such subdivision of the county as may be designated by the commissioners' court of the county may determine from time to time whether the sale of intoxicants shall be prohibited within the prescribed limits, has not the same meaning as the word "create," and the Legislature is not authorized to empower the commissioners' court to combine two or more political subdivisions of a county into a local option district, thus creating a new subdivision. Ex parte Heymen, 78 S. W. 349, 352, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 532.

The word "designate," as used in Or. Code, § 563 (Dispensary Act 1896, § 7; 22 Stat. 125), which provides that where the county board of control designates a locality for a dispensary (of intoxicants), on 20 days' public notice a majority of voters can prevent its location by petition, does not mean that the board shall name a place where they have determined to establish a dispensary, but that it must indicate that it has under consideration the establishment of a dispensary at a designated place, so as to give opportunity for petition against it; and a notice of application for a "dispensary at Scranton, in Lee township, and one at Lake City, in Lee township both in the county of Williamsburg, state of South Carolina," is sufficient. Severance v. Murphy, 46 S. E. 35, 37, 67 S. C. 409.

As mark or point out

The word "designate" means to point out or specify. State v. Noah, 124 N. W. 1121, 1126, 20 N. D. 281.

The word "designate" means "to mark out and make known; to point out; to name; to indicate; to show; to distinguish by mark or description; specify; to call by a distinctive title; to indicate or set apart for a purpose or duty." State ex rel. Rocky Mountain Bell Tel. Co. v. City of Red Lodge, 83 Pac. 642, 643, 33 Mont. 345 (quoting and adopting definition in Webst. Int. Dict.).

"The word 'designate' is defined by the Standard Dictionary to mean: To mention by distinctive name, identify by name. By Webster: To point out, to name. By 9 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) 405 as: To designate is to point out or mark by some particular token, to show or point out, to indicate by description or by something known or determinate. From this it appears that to designate a beneficiary, within the meaning of the Constitution, a positive and affirmative act expressly naming or pointing out of the person was required on the part of the assured." St. Louis Police Relief Ass'n v. Tierney, 91 S. W. 968, 974, 116 Mo. App. 447.

The word "designate" means to mark out and make known; to point out; to name; to show. Ky. St. § 1453 (Russell's St. § 4012), provides that the county clerk shall print on the respective ballots the names of any candidates for office when petitioned by electors qualified to vote for such candidates as follows: For an officer of any division less than a county 20 petitioners, but no petitioner shall be counted unless his residence and post-office address be designated, etc. Held, that of the sufficiency of the petition the clerk is the judge; hence where a petition failed to comply with the statute literally in not giving the post-office address of some of the signers, the omission would not invalidate the election in the absence of any charge of fraud or wrongdoing, where the clerk possessed this information to his entire satisfaction. Blackburn v. Welch, 127 S. W. 991, 992, 138 Ky. 267.

In Comp. St. 1905, c. 77, art. 9, § 7, providing that the county commissioner shall designate the newspaper in which certain notices shall be published, the word "designate" means to point out or select, and when the board awarded "the printing of a list" to a certain paper it clearly pointed out or selected such paper to do the work, and, so long as it did that, whether it used one word or another is immaterial in the eyes of the law. State ex rel. Cronin v. Cronin, 106 N. W. 986, 987, 75 Neb. 738.

DESIGNATED

The effect and meaning of the word "designated," as used in Const. art. 3, § 25, providing that a special session shall not legislate on a subject not "designated" in the proclamation of the Governor convening it, does not require as clear and comprehensive an expression of the subject of the legislation as is required in the title of an act. In re Likins, 72 Atl. 858, 862, 223 Pa. 456.

The word "designated," as used in a declaration of trust giving to testatrix $250 a year from the principal of the trust fund, together with interest thereon, and authorizing her to dispose of the balance by will, and by the seventh clause of her will giving the remainder of the money, securities, and deposits belonging to her estate in trust for G., etc., and by the eighth clause directing that all articles of personal property belonging to her not specifically bequeathed or "designated to be held in trust" and all interest, if any, she had in any real estate, she gave to C., meant "given in trust," and did not require that money, securities, and deposits should be excluded in all cases from the personal property covered by the eighth clause of the will, which therefore included all personal property not passing under previous provisions and constituted a valid exercise of the power, so that the remainder of the trust funds passed to testatrix's executrix, and did not revert to the creator of the trust. Howland v. Parker, 86 N. E. 287, 288, 200 Mass. 204, 16 Ann. Cas. 201.

"When the Code of Criminal Procedure undertook to define an information and to require that it should allege 'that a person had been guilty of some designated crime,' it used the word 'designated' in its well-settled legal sense, which is 'to call by a distinctive title; to point out by distinguishing from others; to express or declare; to indicate by description, or something known and determinate; to point out or mark by some particular token; to show; to point out; to specify.'" People v. Dunning, 98 N. Y. Supp. 1067, 1070 (citing 14 Cyc. p. 229).

The word "designated," as used in section 3 of the Act of 1868, granting lands to the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company "at the time of the line of said road is 'designated' by a plat thereof filed in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office," means no more nor less than the words "definitely located" mean. Southern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 18 Sup. Ct. 18, 29, 168 U. S. 1, 42 L. Ed. 355.

DESIGNATION

The term "designation" means "selection and appointment for a purpose; allotment; the act of designating or pointing out." Kimball v. Salisbury, 56 Pac. 973, 975, 19 Utah, 161 (citing Kimball v. Salisbury, 53 Pac. 1040, 17 Utah, 381; Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 488).

DESIRE

As word of intention

See If Desired by Creditors; Wish and Desire.

Where all the parties interested in certain real estate, which had been converted into personalty, joined in a petition for the discharge of the executor under the decedent's will, in whom legal title to the land was then vested, on the ground that they "desired" to hold the property as real estate, and the heirs subsequently joined in a conveyance of part of the land, such acts constituted a reconversion, regardless of the fact that they used the word "desire" instead of "intend." Lincoln v. Wakefield, 85 Atl. 133, 135, 237 Pa. 97.

While there may be some question as to whether the expression, "It is my desire," amounts to a positive restriction, there can be no question that the phrase, "It is my will," does amount to a restriction and is equivalent to the expression, "I direct." Testator devised certain property absolutely to certain of his sons, with a provision that it was his will and "desire" that none of the real estate so devised should be sold until the oldest son was 35, etc., and that the word will in such connection amounted to a restriction equivalent to the expression, "I direct," and that the devisees were therefore incompetent to convey the property prior to the time specified, though their interest was subject to their debts as expressly provided by St. 1903, §§ 1681, 2355. Girdler v. Girdler (Ky.) 113 S. W. 835, 836.

A will provided, "I desire" that a certain sum invested in the Lord's work in care of a certain person shall not be withdrawn from such work at testatrix's decease, because of the importance of such work, and testatrix's belief that it should not be embarrassed. Held, that the word "desire" was equivalent to "direct." In re Compton's Will, 131 N. Y. Supp. 183, 185, 72 Misc. Rep. 289.

Where a testatrix devised all the rest of her real estate to her husband, and provided that, if the husband should not expend the whole of the estate, then it was her desire that at his death so much as remained to her sisters and brothers, the husband had only the power to consume the estate in good faith, and, if he did not expend or consume it, then what remained at his death should go to her sisters and brothers; the word "desire" being mandatory and not precatory. In re Dickinson's Estate, 58 Atl. 120, 122, 209 Pa. 59.

The word "desired," in a devise stating that the testatrix's son "is desired by his mother" to pay a certain sum to her grandniece, shows an intention to make such sum a gift and entitles the grandniece to such gift. In re Copeland, 77 N. Y. Supp. 931, 932, 88 Misc. Rep. 402.

The word "desire," in Bankruptcy General Order 21, cl. 6 (89 Fed. x, 32 C. C. A. xxiii), providing that, when the trustee or any creditor shall "desire" the re-examination of any claim, he may apply by petition to the referee for an order for re-examination, and thereon the referee shall make an order fixing a time for hearing the petition, is used in the sense of "intend." In re Lewensohn, 121 Fed. 538, 540, 57 C. C. A. 600.

The words "I desire" that my real estate shall be sold are the equivalent of the words "I will" that it be sold. In re Pforr's Estate, 77 Pac. 825, 827, 144 Cal. 121.

The expression of testator's "desire," as used in a will by which testator devised his residuary estate to his son one undivided half part, "and I desire that my real estate in N. * * * shall be held by my son * * * in the division of my estate, together with the farm stock, utensils and other personal property on said estate in N., to" each of my daughters "one undivided quarter part," was an operative disposition of the designated property to his son, and vested the interests of the three children at the death of the testator, giving to the son the designated property and to him and the two daughters, as tenants in common, the rest of the property in such proportions that, taking into account the value of the designated property, the son's share should be one-half and the share of each of the daughters one-quarter of the whole. Mosely v. Bolster, 87 N. E. 606, 607, 201 Mass. 135.

As creating trust

"The mere use in a will of the precatory word 'desire' will not be sufficient to create an enforceable trust or a power in the nature of a trust, when the context clearly shows that the testator's intention was contrary." A testator made a devise to an educational institution, and provided that in case the devise should fail for any cause the same should go to the children of his two brothers. In a codicil he authorized, empowered, and requested his daughter, his only lineal descendant, to ratify and confirm the devise to the institution, declaring that in case she complied with the request the gifts over should be revoked. The daughter executed the power by a deed to the institution, and the gift over was thereby revoked. Thomas v. Board of Trustees of Ohio State University, 70 N. E. 896, 899, 70 Ohio St. 92.

The word "desire," used by testator in a will to express his desire that the executor will conduct a fund in a specified manner, testator having power to command, will not be construed as precatory only, but as commands clothed in the language of civility, and to impose on the executor an enforceable duty, sufficient to create a trust. Trustees of Pembroke Academy v. Epsom School Dist., 75 Atl. 100, 101, 75 N. H. 408, 87 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646.

The word "desire" does not import a trust where testatrix devised certain real estate to her husband, and stated that it was her desire and request that he should convey the same to a lodge, so as to impose on it the duty to properly care for the cemetery lot in which she might be buried. They should be understood in their usual sense, in the absence of anything in the will to indicate that they were used in any other than their ordinary sense. Kauffman v. Gries, 74 Pac. 846, 848, 141 Cal. 295.

DESTINATION

See Point of Destination; Property Immovable by Destination.

The words "place of destination" as used in a stipulation in a shipping contract, requiring the giving of notice of injuries to stock before its removal from the place of destination, refer to the town, village, or city to which the shipment is made. Hatch v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 107 N. W. 1087, 15 N. D. 490.

Rev. St. c. 93, § 53, gives a lien for certain services upon spool timber and spool bars manufactured therefrom, which continues for 60 days after such timber or spool bars arrive at the "place of destination for sale or manufacture." Held, that in the case of spool bars the "place of destination for sale or manufacture" is the place where such spool bars are actually intended to be sold or manufactured into spools. Chamberlain v. Wood, 60 Atl. 703, 707, 100 Me. 73.

The "destination" of goods is the place of delivery, and a carrier has no right, without authority from the consignee, to deliver them to another for him; but if it is the custom for the carrier to forward goods by boat from their destination on its line, and the consignee knew this when he ordered goods shipped, and the owner of a boat has previously received goods for him from the carrier and delivered them, the carrier is authorized to deliver the goods to such owner for transportation by boat to the consignee. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Lavin, 124 S. W. 274, 276, 186 Ky. 205.

To construe a provision in a contract of carriage that the carrier should not be liable for injuries to a shipment of sheep unless the shipper gives notice in writing of any damages claimed before the sheep should be removed from the place of destination, etc., so that the word "destination" would mean the premises of the carrier where the sheep were unloaded, would be too strict. Where the notice was given before the sheep were removed from the town to which they were shipped, the provision is complied with. Welch v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 103 N. W. 393, 397, 14 N. D. 19.

The word "destination," as used in Pen. Code 1895, § 420 (2), providing that the prohibition of a statute as to running freight trains on Sunday shall not extend to a train running over a road on Sunday night if the time of its arrival at destination, according to schedule, be not later than 8 o'clock Sunday morning, means the state line and not the ultimate stopping place of the train. Seale v. State, 49 S. E. 740, 741, 121 Ga. 741.

DESTINATION DU PERE DE FAMILLE

The "destination du pere de famille" is the use which the owner has intentionally established on a particular part of his property in favor of another part, and which is equal to a title with respect to perpetual and apparent servitudes thereon; and by this "destination du pere de famille" is meant the disposition which the owner of two or more estates has made for their respective use. Woodcock v. Baldwin, 28 South. 43, 51 La. Ann. 989.

DESTITUTE

A deserted wife is "destitute" within Code Supp. 1907, § 4775a, punishing one who without good cause abandons his wife or child under 16 years of age, leaving either in a destitute condition, when she is left in a condition of great need or has no money on which she can rely for support, though she is not left unhoused or in a condition of actual starvation. State v. Weyant, 128 N. W. 839, 840, 149 Iowa, 457.

Where the constitution and laws of a mutual benefit association provide that one-half the amount of the face of the certificate may be paid to a member who shall become permanently disabled from attending to his business or gaining a livelihood, and be "destitute of means of support," when he arrives at the age of expectancy, a member whose only income was a pension of $29.65 a month from the relief department of a railroad, which was a mere gratuity and might at any time be discontinued, and of which he paid at least $15 each month in assessments to the benefit association, and who had no property, and at the age of 71 years was disabled from labor at his trade, was destitute of means of support, though his wife owned some productive real estate, since by Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7852, no lands of a married woman are liable for the debts of her husband, and by section 7853 a married woman may hold property, real or personal, under her own control the same as if unmarried, and a wife is not bound either at common law or by statute to support her husband. Supreme Council Catholic Benev. Legion v. Grove, 96 N. E. 159, 163, 176 Ind. 356, 86 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913.

DESTROY—DESTRUCTION

See Break and Destroy; Thoroughly Destroyed; Wholly Destroyed; Self-destruction; Total Destruction.

Where there was evidence that plaintiff's nervous system was seriously injured, an instruction that if the jury found a permanent impairment and destruction of his nervous system and the functions thereof, etc., was not erroneous; the word "destruction" being used not in the sense of a total loss of nerve force, but as meaning an enfeeblement or impairment which would mark plaintiff's condition through life. Fishburn v. Burlington & N. W. R. Co., 103 N. W. 481-487, 127 Iowa, 483.

Under Crimes Act, § 170, which makes it an offense to maliciously break, destroy, or injure the door of any shop or building, the property of another, the word "destroy" means to destroy the completeness of anything; and defendant, who forced open the back door fastened by a bolt upon the door and a socket which held the bolt in the casing of the door frame, the socket coming out and the door opening without injury to it, was guilty of no offense under the statute. State v. McBeth, 31 Pac. 145, 49 Kan. 584.

Removal from a dwelling house of doors and windows by a cotenant in the absence of good faith and without the purpose to make repairs is such "destruction" of the common property as to make him a trespasser. Davis v. Poland, 66 Atl. 380, 382, 102 Me. 192, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 212, 120 Am. St. Rep. 480.

Destruction by fire

A building was not "destroyed" by fire under a lease providing that plaintiff lessor was to keep the premises in good habitable condition, and that if the building should be destroyed by fire or other casualty, so that it could not be occupied without rebuilding, either party might cancel the lease, where the building caught fire, which burned the roof and ceiling of the third story, except in one corner, the rear wall was slightly damaged, and a great quantity of water was thrown in the building, damaging defendant's stock, which was removed, and plaintiff at once set to making repairs, erected two brick pliers in the first story at the rear, and putting plaster on the north, south, and west sides of the building and putting on a new roof, etc., all of which was completed in 63 days. Tedstrom v. Puddephat, 137 S. W. 816, 819, 99 Ark. 193, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1092.

The provision in a lease of a store that if the premises be "destroyed by fire" the lease shall cease unless the lessor at once rebuilds or places the store in a tenable condition within a reasonable time contemplates not only a case of total destruction of the building, but also one of such damage thereto as to render it unfit or incapable of being used for the purposes for which it was rented. Tyson v. Weil, 53 South. 912, 914, 169 Ala. 558, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 350.

DESTRUCTION BY ABATEMENT

"Destruction by abatement" occurs when one permits a thing to become a nuisance which another abates without appeal to the court. If a man so uses his property that it becomes a nuisance, the nuisance is liable to be abated to the destruction, if necessary, of the property. Daniels v. Homer, 51 S. E. 992, 997, 139 N. C. 219, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 997 (quoting and adopting language of Bish. Crim. Law, vol. 1).

DETAIL

"The word 'detail' means a minute portion; one of the small parts; a particular; an item. The word is used chiefly in the plural, as the details of a scheme or a transaction." State ex rel. Van Deusen v. Williams, 39 South. 276, 277, 143 Ala. 501.

As set apart to particular service

The words "detail one or more of their judges," used in Const. art. 5, § 8, authorizing courts in the counties of Philadelphia and Allegheny to detail one or more of their judges to hold the courts of oyer and terminer and court of quarter sessions of the peace, include judges called in from other districts to specially preside. Commonwealth v. Johnson, 84 Atl. 824, 825, 236 Pa. 412.

DETAILED ACCOUNT

See Full, True, and Detailed Account.

DETAILED DRAWING

The phrase "detailed drawings," as used in a contract under which a party furnished steelwork for a building, meant a plan showing the position of each column, beam, etc., and not "punching sheets" or "shop drawings." New York Architectural Terra-Cotta Co. v. Williams, 92 N. Y. Supp. 808, 809, 102 N. Y. App. Div. 1.

DETAIN

The word "detain," as defined by Webster's International Dictionary, means to hold or keep in custody. A petition in replevin which alleges a delivery of the property in controversy to a person named, who claims the same, alleges that the person named detained the property at the commencement of the suit and wrongfully held and kept the same in his custody. Walls v. Farrington, 116 Pac. 428, 429, 27 Okl. 754, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1174.

To take the crutch of a cripple girl, or to hold her by the hand, while pleading with her for carnal knowledge, is a "detaining," within the meaning of Ky. St. § 1158, creating the offense of detaining a woman against her will with intent to have carnal knowledge with her. Paynter v. Commonwealth, 55 S. W. 687, 688.

In order to constitute the offense of detaining a female against her will with intent to have carnal knowledge of her, it is sufficient if defendant willfully and intentionally, and for the purpose of having sexual intercourse with the female against her will, apply such force as to prevent to any extent the exercise by her of the power of free locomotion so as to prevent her from going to or being wherever she wishes. Robb v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 101 S. W. 918, 919.

Whether prosecutrix was "detained" held a jury question, where she testified that, as she was returning home along a railroad, she noticed a negro, and from his actions became suspicious and alarmed; that she slackened her steps, but, when he noticed that she had done so, he did likewise, and frequently turned and looked at her; and that she then became thoroughly frightened. The negro finally sat down on the railroad track until she had advanced to within 20 feet from him. About this time she attempted to pass him. A freight train came along and he left the track, and climbed through a barb wire fence, and said to her: "Come over here. You are going to come over here. You had better come over here." With that, she started and ran screaming down the track, and the negro also ran in the same direction on the inside of the wire fence which separated the railroad right of way from the adjoining pasture, until they came in sight of some men at work on the railroad, when he desisted. McKey v. Commonwealth, 140 S. W. 658, 659, 145 Ky. 450.

An accused was guilty of "detaining" a woman, where, while drunk and riding along a highway near a railroad, he asked a woman walking on the railroad if she were married or single, and when she said she was single and started to run, offered her money, which she declined, and then followed her as she ran to her aunt's house, but was not admitted; and where he called to a woman on the other side of a railroad cut 12 or 15 feet deep and asked where she was going, and when told that it was none of his business, drew a pistol and said: "Don't be so damned smart, I'll blow your brains out; I've got some money for you." Riley v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 55 S. W. 547.

DETAINER

See Forcible Detainer; Forcible Entry and Detainer; Unlawful Detainer.

DETECT

To "detect" is to uncover; to discover; to bring to light; as to "detect" a crime, or a criminal (Web. Dict.). It means to uncover; lay bare, show (Cent. Dict.). Cullinan v. Furthman, 79 N. E. 989, 990, 187 N. Y. 160.

DETECTIVE

See Private Detective; Public Detective.

The word "detective," as commonly understood, is defined as one of a body of police officers, usually dressed in plain clothes, to whom is intrusted the detection of crimes and the apprehension of the offenders, or a policeman whose business is to detect wrongs by adroitly investigating their haunts and habits. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co. v. King, 83 N. E. 778, 780, 41 Ind. App. 701 (citing Am. Dict. and Webst. Dict.).

Post-office inspectors are not what is known as "detectives," but are men occupying responsible positions, who make no concealment of their duties and purposes; and, in a criminal prosecution depending in part on their testimony, it is not error for the trial court to refuse to grant instructions, asked by the defense, cautioning the jury against the testimony of detectives or of persons engaged to procure evidence against the accused, especially where the jury, in the charge of the court, are instructed that they are to determine the weight of the evidence and to pass on the credibility of witnesses. Lorenz v. United States, 24 App. D. C. 337, 388.

Liquor Tax Law (Laws 1896, p. 50, c. 112) § 10, provides that "special agents" shall be deemed confidential agents of the state commissioner of excise, and shall, under his direction, investigate all matters in relation to the collection of liquor taxes and penalties, and that the agents may investigate any other matters in connection with the liquor traffic, and shall, under the direction of the commissioner, make verified complaints of criminal violations of the act, which, if approved by the commissioner, are to be by him forwarded to the district attorney for prosecution. Special agents are appointed by the state commissioner of excise at a fixed salary, and are subject to removal by him. Held that, it being the duty of the "special agents" to investigate violations of the liquor tax law, he is required to "detect" or uncover such violations, and, according to the definition of the word "detect" contained in Webster's Dictionary and the Century Dictionary, such "special agents" are "detectives" within the meaning of the requirement that the testimony of a "detective" must be scrutinized with great care by the jury. Cullinan v. Furthman, 79 N. E. 989, 990, 187 N. Y. 160.

DETENTION

Code Civ. Proc. § 283, provides that in an action for recovery of specific property the jury may assess the value of the property and assess damages, if any claimed, which the prevailing party has sustained by reason of the withholding of the same. Section 299 provides that in an action to recover personalty judgment may be for possession, or recovery of possession or the value thereof if delivery cannot be had, and damages for "detention." Held not to authorize punitive damages in an action for claim and delivery. By a well-known rule of construction, for the sake of consistency the word "detention," used in section 283, is to be interpreted and applied as in section 299. To be consistent with 299 the provision of 283 as to damages to the prevailing party "sustained by reason of the 'detention or taking and withholding' such property" must be held to mean that, when the prevailing party is the plaintiff, the jury must assess the damages for the detention; but when the prevailing party is the defendant, and the property has been taken in the claim and delivery proceedings, the jury may assess for such taking and for the withholding. Tittle v. Kennedy, 50 S. E. 544, 546, 71 S. C. 1, 4 Ann. Cas. 68.

A sale of a vessel on which a wireless apparatus was installed, by a receiver, without special reference to such apparatus, did not constitute a "detention" thereof, so as to entitle the lessor to an allowance out of the proceeds of the steamer of the $1,000 and $50 per month under a lease of a wireless telegraph outfit, which provided that when once installed it should not be removed to any other vessel or place without the lessor's consent, and gave the lessor the right to resume possession; also gave the lessor, in case of the lessee's abandonment, or any use otherwise than as provided in the contract, special remedies by injunction, etc. The lease also provided for payment by the lessee of the reasonable value of any instrument, or parts, lost or destroyed, not exceeding $1,000 for total loss or destruction, otherwise than by unavoidable accident or detention, and $50 per month in case of the unauthorized removal or detention of any instrument, until their destruction or loss without the lessee's fault was satisfactorily proved. Massie Wireless Tel. Co. v. Enterprise Transp. Co., 175 Fed. 6, 9, 99 C. C. A. 146.

Custody synonymous

See Custody.

DETERIORATION

To furnish sewer connection would be to furnish a new improvement or an addition of an original character, and not repairing a building, and would not be included in the meaning of the word "deterioration" as used in the lease. Torreson v. Walla, 92 N. W. 834, 836, 11 N. D. 481.

DETERMINABLE FEE

See, also, Base Fee; Qualified Fee.

A title in fee, which may be divested by the happening of some future event and by possibility revert to the grantor, is a "fee-simple determinable." North v. Graham, 85 N. E. 267, 269, 235 Ill. 178, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 624, 126 Am. St. Rep. 189 (citing 1 Preston, Estates, 441, 484).

An "estate in fee" may not be an estate in fee simple properly speaking, which is a pure inheritance, free from any and every qualification or condition. Estates in fee are not thus restricted in their nature. Every estate which may pass to heirs general by descent and continue forever is a fee; the owner having the entire property in himself. Such an estate may be a pure fee simple, or it may be a "determinable fee." The latter is an estate which may continue forever, and is liable to be determined, without the aid of a conveyance, by some act or event circumscribing its continuance or extent. Though the object on which it rests for perpetuity may be transitory or perishable, yet such an estate is deemed a fee, because, as is said, it has a possibility of enduring forever. A limitation to a man and his heirs, so long as A. shall have heirs of his body; or to a man and his heirs, tenants of the manor of Dale; or till the marriage of B.; or so long as St. Paul's church shall stand, or a tree shall stand—are a few of the many instances given in the books of this species of fee. The material difference between a fee simple and other fees is "that the former estate will, the latter may, continue forever." Waldron v. Gianini (N. Y.) 6 Hill, 601, 604, 605 (citing 4 Kent's Comm. 5, 9 [5th Ed.]; 2 Black. Comm. 104, 106, 109; 1 Cruise's Dig. 68, §§ 42-86; 1 Preston, Estates, 429, 431; Moss Point Lumber Co. v. Harrison County, 42 South. 290, 314, 89 Miss. 448 (citing Anderson's Law Dict.; 2 Black. Comm. 109).

A "determinable fee" is an estate limited to a person and his heirs with the qualification annexed to it by which it is provided that it must determine whenever the qualification is at an end. Lyford v. City of Laconia, 72 Atl. 1085, 1089, 75 N. H. 220, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062, 139 Am. St. Rep. 680 (citing Weed v. Woods, 53 Atl. 1024, 71 N. H. 581, 584, 585; 2 Bl. Comm. *109; 4 Kent, Comm. *9; 1 Cruise's Dig. *73; Gray, Perp. § 32).

An estate which may revert on the happening of some contingency or which may endure forever is a determinable fee. Mendenhall v. First New Church Soc. of Indianapolis, 98 N. E. 57, 60, 177 Ind. 338.

An estate which may end on the happening of an event is usually called a "determinable fee." The estate taken by a church to continue in such organization as long as devoted to specified uses was such a fee. North v. Graham, 85 N. E. 267, 268, 235 Ill. 178, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 624, 126 Am. St. Rep. 189 (citing First Universalist Soc. of North Adams v. Boland, 29 N. E. 524, 155 Mass. 171, 15 L. R. A. 231).

"Whenever a fee is so qualified as to be made to determine, or liable to be determined, at the happening of some contingent event, or act, the fee is said to be base, determinable. There are four classes of such fees, viz.: Fee upon condition, fee upon limitation, a conditional limitation, and a fee conditional at common law." Testator first devised to his wife and her heirs one half of all his property to hold, use, and manage during her life, remainder to testator's son, if he survived her. Testator then devised to the son and his heirs the other half of the property, to have, hold, use, and manage in his discretion "during his natural life," and in case the wife survived the son at his death the property so devised to him should belong to her. Held, that under Rev. St. 1879, § 4008, requiring all courts concerned in the execution of wills to have due regard to the directions of the will and the true intent of the testator, the will should be construed as giving to the widow and son each a freehold estate for the life of the one who might first die, with cross-determinable fees in remainder; the one to be enlarged into a fee simple in the survivor. Tebow v. Dougherty, 103 S. W. 985, 988, 205 Mo. 315 (quoting and adopting the definition in Tiedeman, Real Prop. p. 28, §§ 44, 271).

An instrument called a "lease" whereby the owner in consideration of "rents" and covenants demised and leased to an individual for the benefit of a church society to have and to hold during the time the society might use and occupy the premises as a church and pay as rent all assessments against the premises, etc., created an estate in fee determinable on the church society which was placed in the possession by the owner ceasing to occupy the premises as a church. Mendenhall v. First New Church Soc. of Indianapolis, 98 N. E. 57, 60, 177 Ind. 336.

The homestead has been called a "determinable fee"; but as no new estate has been conferred upon the owner, and no limitation upon his old estate imposed, it is obvious that it would be more correct to say that there is conferred upon him a determinable exemption from the payment of his debts in respect to the particular property allotted to him. Joyner v. Sugg, 44 S. E. 122, 126, 132 N. C. 580 (quoting Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Green, 78 N. C. 252).

A "determinable fee" is distinguished from a life estate, in that such fee may last forever in case the first taker dies leaving a child or children entitled to take under the will, but is liable to be terminated by the death of such first taker without leaving a child or children, while a life estate terminates absolutely on the death of the life tenant. Ahlfield v. Curtis, 82 N. E. 276, 277, 229 Ill. 139.

E. died in 1798, having by his last will and testament devised a farm to his son M., his heirs and assigns forever, and another farm to his son J., in like manner. The will contained this clause: "It is my will, and I do order and appoint, that if either of my sons should depart this life without lawful issue, his share or part shall go to the survivor." In 1801, the sheriff sold all the estate which M. then had in his share, by virtue of a fi. fa. against him; and J. died in 1813, leaving M. surviving. Held, that the estate devised to M. was a "determinable fee," which became a fee simple on the death of J., and belonged to W. Waldron v. Gianini (N. Y.) 6 Hill, 601, 604, 605 (citing 4 Kent's Comm. [5th Ed.] 5, 9; 2 Black. Comm. 104, 106, 109; 1 Cruise's Dig. 68, §§ 42-86; 1 Preston, Estates, 429-431).

DETERMINABLE FUTURE TIME

A "determinable future time" as used in clause 2 of section 3060—a4 of Code 1907, declaring an instrument to be payable at a "determinable future time" when expressed to be payable on or before a fixed or determinable future time specified therein, meant a time that could be certainly determined after the execution of the note. State Bank of Halstad v. Bilstad (Iowa) 136 N. W. 204, 207.

The certificate of a physician, under Laws 1899, p. 1071, c. 520, § 9, authorizing a transfer to be made whenever the physician of either of the state prison reformatories or penitentiaries shall certify to the warden or superintendent thereof that a male prisoner confined therein for a felony is in his opinion insane, is not a "determination of incompetency" within either the spirit or letter of Code Civ. Proc. tit. 6, c. 17, relating to proceedings for the appointment of a committee of an incompetent. Trust Co. of America v. State Safe Deposit Co., 96 N. Y. Supp. 585, 588, 109 App. Div. 665.

There was no "determination of the supervisors" within St. 1898, § 1283, providing that the determination of the supervisors shall be final for a year, and the proceedings did not bar a new application within a year, where, in proceedings to establish a highway on a town line, the boards of supervisors of the towns adjourned the hearing until a designated date after receiving affidavits of service and posting of notices, but no further proceedings were taken. *State ex rel. DETERMINE

See Hear and Determine.

"To determine" involves the possibility of framing an issue to determine. Hoffman v. Newell, 20 N. Y. Supp. 432, 433 (quoting and adopting definition in Brown, Jur. § 41).

"To determine" is defined as meaning to ascertain definitely or to settle, and it is used in that sense in Rev. St. 1892, § 591, as amended by Acts 1899, p. 105, c. 4711, providing that a resolution submitted to voters relating to the issue of bonds shall "determine" the rate of interest to be paid on the bonds. Hillsborough County v. Henderson, 33 South. 997, 998, 45 Fla. 356.

In an instruction in a prosecution for homicide that the jury are not only to find and determine the physical facts, but also the intention, the word "determine" means to find out or ascertain the truth about the occurrence. Irvin v. State, 72 S. E. 440, 441, 9 Ga. App. 865.

The word "determine," in an instruction in an action for injuries from a defective walk, that it was not negligence for plaintiff to pass over a crosswalk, known to him to be dangerous, but in doing so he must use care and caution reasonably commensurate with the known danger, and that the jury should consider carefully his knowledge of the condition of the walk, the nature of the defect, whether easily visible or apparent, or not, the nature and manner of the accident, and then "determine," in the light of all the circumstances, whether the plaintiff on his part exercised the care and caution that a person of reasonable prudence would have exercised in the light of such knowledge, means to consider the elements stated and everything else in evidence. Ottawa v. Green, 83 Pac. 616, 618, 72 Kan. 214.

The word "determined," in Laws 1901, c. 106, § 3, providing that on proof of certain facts to the county court it shall be "determined" whether the territory should be disconnected from a city, and that the court shall decree accordingly, does not give the court discretionary powers, but the statute is mandatory and is not unconstitutional as a delegation of legislative power. Town of Edgewater v. Liebhardt, 76 Pac. 366, 377, 32 Colo. 307.

The word "determine," as used in Laws 1895, c. 1406, § 2, providing that the city engineer shall proceed to mark out and define the street line adjacent to a proposed structure if such line can be accurately determined, is equivalent to "ascertained" or "limited," and does not mean "establish." Laws 1895, c. 1406, § 1, requires every person intending to erect a building within 10 feet of any street to file with the city engineer a written notice of such intention; section 2 provides that the city engineer shall "proceed to mark out and define the street line adjacent to the proposed structure, if such line can be accurately determined," and mark the grade of the adjacent street, if such grade has been duly established, and make return of said marking of line and grade to the inspector of buildings; and section 3 prohibits the inspector from issuing a building permit until he is satisfied that applicant has complied with section 2. Held, that a street line, not correctly marked by the city engineer, was not binding on an adjacent property owner, and could be questioned in a proceeding to enjoin the maintenance of a building within such line, marked by the engineer. Greenough v. Industrial Trust Co., 82 Atl. 266, 267, 33 R. I. 470.

The word "determined," as used in Acts 32d Gen. Assem. p. 10, c. 12, providing that if it has been or shall be found or "determined" by the district court in any county that a lawfully constituted grand jury has not or cannot be obtained by drawing from the names returned, the court may order the board of supervisors to prepare lists of names, etc., enacted after it has been brought to the attention of the Legislature that in some counties grand jurors for a certain year had been illegally selected, will not be given a technical meaning, but should be so construed as to carry out the plain intent of the act. State v. Carter, 121 N. W. 801, 802, 144 Iowa, 371.

As try

Gen. St. 1863, c. 88, § 2, providing that "the Supreme and county courts may grant new trials in all cases 'determined' in such courts," etc., applies to those cases where a trial has been had, but does not reach the case of a default. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 52 Vt. 405, 467.

The word "determined," in the statute providing that "the Supreme and county courts may grant new trials in all cases determined in such courts," etc., does not mean more than tried, so that the statute does not apply to judgments by default. Goddard v. Kullam, 38 Vt. 75, 76.

DETERMINED RIGHTS

The phrase "determined rights," in Seas. Laws 1909, p. 819, relating to the duties of the board of control and providing that the division superintendent shall have control over the water masters of the several districts within his division, with power to make regulations for fair distribution of water in accordance with the "determined rights" as may be needed, and that on petition to the board of control by water users requesting determination of the relative rights the board may make a determination of the rights, etc., refer only to such rights as are determined and established by the action of the board pursuant to the statute and to decrees made under its provision, and the board of control does not have jurisdiction to supervise the distribution of irrigation water taken from a stream before the rights and priorities of the parties have been determined under the statute, and the water master is not entitled to compensation for acting in an unauthorized distribution. Wattles v. Baker County, 117 Pac. 417, 419, 59 Or. 255.

DETHRONEMENT OF REASON

"Obscurement of reason" is not synonymous with "dethronement of reason" as a definition of "heat of passion." Dillon v. State, 119 N. W. 352, 356, 137 Wia. 655, 16 Ann. Cas. 913.

DETINUE

See Non Detinet.

Detinue is a personal action, the gist of which is the wrongful detention of personal property. Morrow v. Norvell-Shapleigh Hardware Co., 51 South. 766, 165 Ala. 331.

"Detinue" is an action to recover property, and the defendant can only show facts that would destroy title and defeat recovery, but cannot recover a judgment against the plaintiff. McDaniel v. Sullivan & Bramlett, 39 South. 355, 144 Ala. 583.

Trover distinguished

"Trover" and "detinue" are concurrent remedies, either of which the plaintiff may pursue at his election; trover being an action for damages for the conversion of the property, and detinue being an action for the recovery of the property in specie, or for damages for its unlawful detention. Brocking v. O'Bryan, 112 S. W. 631, 632, 129 Ky. 543.

Trover is an action to recover damages sufficient to cover the value of personal property wrongfully held by another, while replevin or detinue is primarily an action to recover the property, and a judgment is given only in the absence of ability to secure the specific articles claimed. Leeper, Graves & Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 110 Pac. 655, 660, 26 Okl. 707, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 747, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 302.

DETRIMENT

To bind the party who breached the contract, it was a sufficient consideration for a contract to leave two adjoining strips vacant for light that the other parties to the contract constructed a building in accordance with it in such manner as to render valueless the strip left by them; this being a detriment which they were not "lawfully bound to suffer," within the meaning of Civ. Code, § 1605, providing what shall be a good consideration. Knoch v. Haizlip, 124 Pac. 998, 1001, 168 Cal. 146.

The term "detriment," as used in the rule that a detriment to the promisee is a sufficient consideration for a contract, includes every act or forbearance which may be of legal value. Frye v. Hubbell, 68 Atl. 325, 332, 74 N. H. 358, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1197.

Civ. Code, § 3336, provides that the "detriment caused by the wrongful conversion of property" is presumed to be the value of the property at the time of the conversion with interest from that time, or, where the action has been prosecuted with reasonable diligence, the highest market value of the property at any time between the conversion and the verdict without interest at the option of the injured party and a fair compensation for the time and money properly expended in pursuit of the property." The interest on the value of the property is the allowance provided by the statute in lieu of the value of the use of the property, and not in addition thereto. Lynch v. McGhan, 93 Pac. 1044, 7 Cal. App. 132.

See Fully Developed Mine.

To "develop" is defined by Webster to be: "To free from that which enfolds or envelops; to lay open by degrees or in detail, to disclose, to produce or give forth." And, by the Standard Dictionary: "To uncover or unfold; to bring to light by degree, work out in detail." Thus to develop a mining claim is to uncover or bring forth that which it produces or can produce. Blewett v. Hoyt, 103 N. Y. Supp. 451, 457, 118 App. Div. 227.

The word "develop" in a contract giving to a gas company the right to purchase a gas well should the other party, an oil prospector, in his operations for oil "develop" a gas well, and to the prospector the right to purchase an oil well, should the company in its operations for gas "develop" an oil well, is used in its ordinary acceptation as applied to oil and gas well operations, and means on the development of oil or gas in paying quantities, and does not permit the prospector, on drilling a well which produces gas, to refuse to deliver to the gas company, in order that he may carry it deeper in a search for oil. Carnegie Natural Gas Co. v. South Penn Oil Co., 49 S. E. 548, 552, 56 W. Va. 402.

DEVELOPMENT

See Further Development; Improved and Under Development; Standard Development of Stream.

Civ. Code Alaska, § 262, gives a lien for labor or material furnished in the "development" of a mine, but that does not include the ordinary work of a miner in the operation of a placer claim, having no relation to the development or improvement of the mine. Pioneer Min. Co. v. Delamotte, 185 Fed. 752, 755, 108 C. C. A. 90.

An instruction that, to constitute a discovery of gold sufficient to support a location of a gold placer mining claim as against an adverse mineral locator, the gold found must be of such character and quantity and found under such circumstances as to justify a man of ordinary prudence in the expenditure of time and money in the development of the property, is not erroneous; the word "development," as so used, being the equivalent of "exploration." Charlton v. Kelly, 156 Fed. 433, 436, 84 C. C. A. 295, 13 Ann. Cas. 518.

Defendant granted to plaintiff the full, uninterrupted, and perpetual flow of 30 inches of water from the former's ranch, but did not warrant a flow of that quantity; but the contract provided that the defendants would not by any act diminish the flow, but stated that they intended to continue developing the flow, and reserved the privilege of doing so by boring, driving tunnels, and such other means as were necessary, and that if the water thereafter decreased because of any unforeseen agency, so as to be insufficient to supply the 30 inches, defendant would do any further work towards restoring the flow which any competent engineer selected by plaintiff should direct, the expense of such work by developing to be advanced by plaintiff. The flow of water subsequently decreased below 30 inches, but there was more than sufficient water under the surface to supply that quantity, and plaintiff selected an engineer, who reported that it was necessary to install a pumping plant in one of the wells to restore the flow. Held that, even if the means of restoring the water must be of the same general character as "boring wells or driving tunnels," which defendant reserved the privilege to do, the use of pumps as recommended by the engineer was "development work" within the contract and a proper means of restoring the flow, and the fact that pumps had never been used on the ranch or in the county for that purpose was immaterial. Garvey Water Co. v. Huntington Land & Improvement Co., 97 Pac. 428, 432, 154 Cal. 232.

DEVIATION

DEVIATION (In Law of Shipping)

"Deviation," in contracts of affreightment, as in marine insurance, means a departure from the usual course of the voyage, or from the usual manner of prosecuting it, thereby changing the risk. Globe Nav. Co. v. Russ Lumber & Mill Co., 167 Fed. 228, 230.

"Deviation," in the law of shipping, has a varied meaning and wide significance, and the placing of a vessel in dry dock after receiving cargo on board for a voyage, for the purpose of painting her bottom, not a maritime necessity, constitutes a deviation. The Indrapura, 171 Fed. 929, 931.

Any "deviation" from the course of navigation which experience and usage have prescribed as the safest and most expeditious mode of proceeding from one voyage terminus to the other will cast subsequent loss of or injury to either ship or cargo on the shipowner, and delay of a vessel even on the route prescribed by a policy or bill of lading, may amount to a "deviation." The Citta Di Messina, 160 Fed. 472, 474.

"Deviation," generally speaking, is a voluntary departure, without necessity or reasonable cause, from the regular course of the voyage. A provision of bills of lading giving the vessel the right to "deviate" does not authorize her, after arriving at the port of delivery, to return to the port of shipment with the goods on board, and thence make a second voyage to the port of delivery, which is not a "deviation," but an abandonment of the voyage so far as relates to such shipment. Pacific Coast Co. v. Yukon Independent Transp. Co., 155 Fed. 29, 84, 83 C. C. A. 625 (citing 14 Cyc. p. 282; Hostetter v. Park, 11 Sup. Ct. 1, 137 U. S. 80, 34 L. Ed. 568; Constable v. National S. S. Co., 14 Sup. Ct. 1062, 154 U. S. 51, 38 L. Ed. 908).

DEVIATION (In Marine Insurance)

"In the law maritime a 'deviation' is defined as a voluntary departure, without necessity or any reasonable cause, from the regular and usual course of the ship insured." Empire State Cattle Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 28 Sup. Ct. 607, 614, 210 U. S. 1, 52 L. Ed. 931, 15 Ann. Cas. 70; Thebauld v. Great Western Ins. Co., 50 N. E. 284, 286, 155 N. Y. 516.

DEVICE

See By Any Device Whatever; Dangerous Device; Gambling Device; Safety Device; Same Device.

Any device, see Any.

Keeping gambling device, see Keep.

A "device" is a thing devised or formed by design; a contrivance; an invention. Collins v. State, 78 N. E. 851, 852, 38 Ind. App. 625; Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 28 Sup. Ct. 428, 431, 209 U. S. 56, 52 L. Ed. 681 (quoting and adopting definition in Webst. Dict.).

The term "device," within the meaning of the Elkins Act of Feb. 19, 1903 (32 Stat. 847, c. 708), making discrimination in transportation charges "by any device whatever" a criminal offense, includes anything which is a plan or contrivance and need not be necessarily fraudulent. Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 28 Sup. Ct. 428, 431, 209 U. S. 56, 52 L. Ed. 681 (quoting and adopting the definition in Webst. Dict.).

Within the meaning of Banking Law which provides that no person or corporation, other than those incorporated under article 10, by any device or pretense of charging for his services or otherwise, shall directly or indirectly charge or receive interest in excess of the legal rate upon a loan where household goods are taken as security, a transaction, wherein the borrower paid $10 for the lender's regular attorney as a pretended fee, according to the lender's custom of making loans, and gave as security a mortgage upon her household furniture for $65, covering the amount received by her and the fee paid, was a device of charging for services or otherwise. London Realty Co. v. Riordan, 133 N. Y. Supp. 595, 598, 148 App. Div. 854.

The sale of prohibited liquor either openly or secretly, under the guise of a deceptive name is a sale by a "device," within Kirby's Dig. § 5140, prohibiting the sale of liquor by any device. Brownson v. State, 123 S. W. 762, 763, 93 Ark. 20.

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7283b, declaring that no "devices" for amusements or music of any kind shall be permitted in any saloon, does not prohibit the keeping of a musical device so long as it is not operated or used as a source of amusement, and hence an indictment charging merely the keeping of a musical box in defendant's saloon did not charge an offense. Collins v. State, 78 N. E. 851, 852, 38 Ind. App. 625 (citing Cent. Dict. and Webst. Dict.).

A "device" is a permanent material thing. The crossing of a belt to produce a reversal of motion in parts of a machine is not a "device," within a claim covering a combination of devices for that purpose, but merely a method of using the devices. Heap v. Greene, 91 Fed. 792, 794, 34 C. C. A. 86.

The words "device, print, or impression or anything whatsoever," as used in Act Cong. Feb. 10, 1891, c. 127, § 3, 26 Stat. 742, providing that every person who makes, or causes or procures to be made, or shall bring into the United States from any other country, or shall have in possession with intent to sell, give away, or in any other manner use the same, any business or professional card, notice, placard, token, "device, print, or impression, or any other thing whatsoever," in likeness or similitude as to design, color, or the inscription of any of the coins of the United States or of any foreign country that have been or hereafter may be issued as money "either under the authority of the United States or of any foreign government," shall on conviction be punished by a fine not to exceed $100, must be read in connection with and construed as being of the same general nature as their companion words, "business or professional card, notice, placard, token," and not to cover counterfeit coins, the making of which is punishable under section 1 as a felony. Kaye v. United States, 177 Fed. 147, 150, 100 C. C. A. 567.

As distinguishing mark on ballot

Under Priv. Laws 1909, c. 290, § 25, relating to an election in a city, and providing that ballots cast which contain any device shall be void, ballots used at an election which were one inch and a half by three inches in size, when the board of aldermen under the law had regulated their size to one inch by three inches, are not void as containing a "device," since it was a matter over which the electors had no control. State v. Spires, 67 S. E. 41, 152 N. C. 4.

DEVISABLE

An executory devisee to one dependent upon the death of the preceding owner in fee, without children or issue surviving, becomes a "devisable" estate; "devisable" and "descendible" in relation to such interest being convertible terms. King v. Guild, 2 Tenn. Ch. App. 190, 195.

"A 'devise of the income of lands' is in effect a devise of the lands." Merrill v. American Baptist Missionary Union, 62 Atl. 847, 648, 73 N. H. 414, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1143, 111 Am. St. Rep. 632, 6 Ann. Cas. 646 (quoting statement in Reed v. Reed, 9 Mass. 872); Mettler v. Warner, 90 N. E. 1099, 1103, 243 Ill. 600, 134 Am. St. Rep. 888.

Bequeath or bequest synonymous

"Bequeath" is synonymous with devise when used with reference to a gift of real estate. Gannon v. Albright, 81 S. W. 1162, 1163, 183 Mo. 238, 67 L. R. A. 97, 105 Am. St. Rep. 471.

The word "bequeath," when expressly applied to real estate, is equivalent to the word "devise"; words of inheritance being unnecessary by 3 Ven. St. p. 3763, § 35. Centenary Fund and Preachers' Aid Soc. of New Jersey Annual Conference of Methodist Episcopal Church v. Lake, 66 Atl. 601, 72 N. J. Eq. 808.

In a strictly modern legal sense, the words "bequest" and "bequeath" are the appropriate terms for making a gift by will of personalty, and the word "devise" for a gift of realty; but as it is evident that the testator used the former words in their popular sense, and as applicable alike to a gift by will of property of any kind, they cannot be limited to gifts of personalty. Baldwin v. Zien, 134 N. W. 498, 500, 117 Minn. 178.

Although the word "devise" properly and technically applies only to real estate and "bequeath" only to personal property, they have been made interchangeable by Ky. St. 1903, § 467. Roberts v. Chenoweth (Ky.) 112 S. W. 625, 627.

Where circumstances indicated that a sale of testator's property would be necessary, and the entire will showed that he probably contemplated that there should be a sale, a provision that he did "give," "devise," and "bequeath" to his two sons each $500 and $500 to three daughters who should share equally of his estate both real and personal with the two sons, the word "devise" was not used in its technical or legal sense but as synonymous with "give" and "bequeath." Schwengel v. Anthes, 101 N. W. 335, 336, 72 Neb. 650.

The words "give and bequeath" in a will disposing of personalty and realty are the equivalent of "devise." Hoefliger v. Hoefliger, 107 N. W. 312, 313, 132 Iowa, 575.

The word "bequest" was not meant to be used in a technical sense, and referred to a devise of the family residence and a legacy of $400 to the grandchild under a will providing that after the payment of debts the testator's wife should have the family residence for life, remainder to his three daughters, and directing his executor to convert into money any property real or personal of which he might die possessed, and providing that one-fifth of a life policy should go to his granddaughter, the amount to be paid out of the estate, and the household and kitchen furniture to his wife, and further provided that "it is my desire that my wife and three daughters shall share equally in the distribution of the estate after the 'bequests' already made are complied with." Thomas' Ex'r v. Thomas' Guardian (Ky.) 110 S. W. 853.

While the word "devise" is usually employed to denote a gift of real estate or an interest therein, the word "bequest" may mean any gift by will, whether it consists of personal or real property, and the use of the word "bequeath" in a will instead of "devise" will not necessarily lead to the conclusion that the property which a testatrix thereby intended to dispose of was personalty; but where the word "bequeath" is coupled with the word "give," which is of the largest possible signification, "bequeath" is applicable as well to real as personal estate. Rickman v. Meier, 72 N. E. 1121, 1126, 213 Ill. 507.

"Legacy and devise" are often used as interchangeable phrases in wills and everyday conversation, and therefore courts would not feel fettered to any nice construction, where the subject-matter or context shows the words were used interchangeably and as of the same import. But such popular and loose construction is hardly permissible in view of the statutory rule of hermeneutics. Desloge v. Tucker, 94 S. W. 283, 286, 196 Mo. 587.

In common acceptation, "bequest" and "legacy" are synonymous terms, but "bequeath" is the term generally by which a gift of personalty is made in a will, and a legacy is the money or personal property bequeathed. The words "devise," "bequest," and "legacy" are not infrequently used in wills in a sense different from their strict legal meaning. It is stated in a recent work on wills that: "Of the verbs used to denote the act of making a will, 'devise' is properly used of realty, and 'bequeath' of personalty. Of the nouns used to name the various forms of gift, 'devise' is used of a gift of realty. 'Legacy' is used of a gift of personalty in general. None of these words have so fixed a legal meaning, however, that a gift will fail because testator does not use the words descriptive of the gift or the act of giving with technical accuracy. A devise is often miscalled a 'bequest,' or 'bequest' is often used to include both realty and personalty or is used of a gift of money alone. So the verb 'devise' is often used to refer to personalty alone." In re Campbell, 76 Pac. 851, 853, 27 Utah, 361 (citing Page, Wills, § 2).

As a testamentary disposition of land

A "devise" ordinarily passes real estate. Farney v. Weirich, 103 N. Y. Supp. 38, 44, 52 Misc. Rep. 245; Mills v. Tompkins, 97 N. Y. Supp. 9, 10, 110 App. Div. 212.

A "devise" is a gift of real property by a last will and testament. In re Dailey's Estate, 89 N. Y. Supp. 538, 541, 43 Misc. Rep. 552.

The words "convey" and "devise" are technical terms relating to the disposition of interests in real property. Vann v. Edwards, 47 S. E. 784, 787, 135 N. C. 661, 67 L. R. A. 461.

"Devise" means the gift of some land to some person denoted by the language used in the writing which purports to make the devise, and the Connecticut courts have never sanctioned any legal fiction by which a gift of land in a writing not attested can be made operative as a legal devise by reference to it in a duly attested will which does not contain in itself any gift of any land to any person. Hatheway v. Smith, 65 Atl. 1058, 1062, 79 Conn. 506, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 310, 9 Ann. Cas. 99.

DEVISE BY IMPLICATION

"The word 'devise' is the proper word to use in a testamentary disposition of real estate. * * * A devise exists, by implication, when the testator uses words manifesting an intention to give, by so strong a probability that the contrary intent cannot be supposed to have existed in his mind when he made the will." Metz v. Wright, 92 S. W. 1125, 1127, 116 Mo. App. 631.

DEVEISED

Designed distinguished, see Designed.

DEVISEE

The word "devisee" has a common-law meaning, and indicates a person obtaining real estate by will, and by the use of the term the Legislature will be presumed to have also adopted that meaning. Desloge v. Tucker, 94 S. W. 283, 286, 196 Mo. 587.

The word "devisee" is used to denote one to whom real estate passes by will; and the word "heirs" in its ordinary or customary sense means the kindred of the decedent upon whom the law casts the estate in real property in the absence of a devisee, and has reference to the law of succession. Hays v. Wyatt, 115 Pac. 13, 15, 19 Idaho, 634, 84 L. R. A. (N. S.) 397 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3241).

"Legatee and devisee" are often used as interchangeable phrases in wills and everyday conversation, and therefore courts would not feel fettered to any nice construction, where subject-matter or context shows the words were used interchangeably and as of the same import. But such popular and loose construction is hardly permissible in view of the statutory rule of hermeneutics. Desloge v. Tucker, 94 S. W. 283, 286, 196 Mo. 587.

Although the words "legacy" and "legatee," apply only to personal property, they have been made interchangeable by Ky. St. 1903, § 467, which provides that "the words

'legatee' and 'devisee' shall each be held to convey the same idea. Roberts v. Obenoweth (Ky.) 112 S. W. 625, 627.

The term "devisee," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 148, providing that on filing of a petition for the sale of real estate of a decedent the court shall order all persons interested in the estate to be notified thereof and that such notice be published, provided that where the heirs or devisees are residents of the county notice shall be served on each one, does not include legatees in view of section 4160, which provides that in construing statutes words and phrases shall be taken in their plain or ordinary and usual sense, but technical words and phrases having a peculiar and appropriate meaning in law shall be understood according to their technical import. Desloge v. Tucker, 94 S. W. 283, 286, 196 Mo. 587.

Where such is the intent of the will, the word "devisees" will be deemed to mean "legatees" when applied to gifts of personality, and hence where gifts to certain persons were gifts of personality or interests therein, but the gifts were given in terms "I give and devise," and the words "devise" and "devisees" were clearly used in the granting clauses of the will as intending to cover interests in personality and the recipient of such interest, the recipients thereof will be deemed "devisees" within a provision of the will that, if any of the devisees should aid or attempt to prevent the proof of the will, all the expenses of probating it should be taken by the executor from the share of each one so attempting. Kayhart v. Whitehead, 76 Atl. 241, 77 N. J. Eq. 12.

As one taking as heir

The word "heir" is technically distinguishable from "devisee," but is sometimes used "in its mere general sense, as indicating the person upon whom property devolves on the death of another"; and hence, when the intention is clear, the word may sometimes be treated as equivalent to "legatee" or "devisee." Taylor v. Perkins, 56 Atl. 741, 742, 72 N. H. 349 (citing Shapleigh v. Shapleigh, 44 Atl. 107, 108, 69 N. H. 577, 579).

While the word "heir" in a will may be construed to mean "devisee" when it refers to a relationship to the testator, it could not be so construed when used in a codicil and having reference to a relationship with another than the testator. Wells v. Fuchs, 125 S. W. 1187, 1140, 226 Mo. 97.

As remainderman

Code Civ. Proc. § 1452, providing that "devisees" may maintain an action for the recovery of real estate against any one except the administrator, means only those heirs and devisees who have a present right of possession and a present cause of action as against every one except the administrator, and has no application to a remainderman, although he may have acquired his estate through a devise. Pryor v. Winter, 82 Pac. 202, 208, 147 Cal. 554, 109 Am. St. Rep. 162.

DEVOLUTIVE APPEAL

A "devolutive appeal" is one which does not suspend the execution of a judgment appealed from. State ex rel. Schwan v. Allen, 26 South. 434, 436, 51 La. Ann. 1842.

DEVOLVE

An estate is said to "devolve" upon another when by operation of law, and without any voluntary act of the previous owner, it passes from one person to another; but it does not devolve from one person to another as the result of some positive act or agreement between them. The word is itself of intransitive signification, and does not include the result of an act which is intended to produce a particular effect. It implies a result without the intervention of any voluntary actor. Instances of its appropriate use are found when speaking of the succession of estates upon death, or upon a change of official incumbents; also in proceedings in bankruptcy or insolvency, where by the act or operation of law the estate of the bankrupt devolves upon his assignee. A transfer by a debtor of property not accompanied by change of possession is not void as against the assignee for the benefit of the debtor's creditors, under Civ. Code, § 4491, declaring such transfer void as against any one on whom the debtor's estate devolves in trust for the benefit of others, as the estate does not devolve by such assignment, but is granted by it. Babcock v. Maxwell, 74 Pac. 64, 66, 29 Mont. 81.

DEVOTE

A claim that property is exempt from taxation under P. S. 496, on the ground that the property is "devoted" to charitable uses, merely means that the property has been so set apart. Grand Lodge of Masons v. City of Burlington, 78 Atl. 973, 975, 84 Vt. 202.

Where an incorporated village was authorized by law to maintain an electric light plant for lighting its streets and public places, such property was devoted to public use within P. S. 496, subd. 6, declaring that property so devoted should be exempt from taxation. Village of Swanton v. Town of Highgate, 69 Atl. 667, 668, 81 Vt. 152, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 867.

DEXTRINE

White dextrine, produced by the chemical treatment of starch, while not a dextrine, technically speaking, is classifiable as "dextrine," because it is commercially so known, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 288, 30 Stat. 173. Charles Morningstar & Co. v. United States, 150 Fed. 287, 288.

DIA

The Greek word "dia" means through. State v. Williams, 61 S. E. 61, 68, 146 N. C. 618, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 299, 14 Ann. Cas. 562.

DIAGRAM

A "diagram" is simply an illustrative outline of a tract of land, or something else capable of linear projection, which is not necessarily intended to be perfectly correct and accurate. Shook v. Pate, 50 Ala. 91, 92; Burton v. State, 22 South. 585, 588, 115 Ala. 1.

It is proper to admit and exhibit to the jury a diagram, prepared by the attorney for the state, of the place of a crime, indicating the locality of objects to which there is much reference in the testimony, upon which can be traced the route that it is claimed defendant followed in going to and returning from the place of the homicide, in connection with the evidence of the draftsman as to its accuracy. It is proper to permit other witnesses to refer to it in explanation of their testimony, and the jury should be permitted to take it to the jury room. Burton v. State, 22 South. 585, 588, 115 Ala. 1.

A "diagram" is not a public or private writing, nor is it made by law primary or secondary, or prima facie evidence of any fact or object represented by it. When used on the trial of a case, it is not used as evidence, and does not prove, nor tend to prove, in the sense of evidence, any fact. It is simply a figure drawn to suggest to the minds of the jurors the relation between objects about which a witness is testifying, and may be drawn on paper or on a stationary blackboard which cannot be removed. Carman v. Montana Cent. Ry. Co., 79 Pac. 690, 692, 32 Mont. 137.

DIAMETER

The word "diameter" means primarily the measure through; a right line passing through the center of a body, as a circle, conic section, sphere, cube, etc., and terminated by the opposite boundaries; and as applied to a cylindrical body it means the thickness of such body as measured on a diameter of a cross-section made perpendicular to the axis. Strickland v. Richardson, 69 S. E. 871, 872, 135 Ga. 513.

DICE

As banking game, see Banking Game.

As gambling device, see Gambling Device.

"Dice," which are defined as "small cubes used in gaming, or in determining by chance," constitute a gambling device within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2181, providing punishment for keeping or exhibiting for gain "any gambling apparatus, device, table or machine of any kind or description under any denomination or name whatever." White v. State, 76 N. E. 554, 555, 37 Ind. App. 95 (citing Webst. Dict.; State v. Shaw, 39 N. W. 305, 39 Minn. 158).

DICTA

See Dictum.

DICTATE—DICTATION

Civ. Code, art. 1578, requiring that a non-cupative testament must be dictated by the testator and written by the notary as it is dictated, means to pronounce orally what is designed to be written. Where the testator simply handed the notary a piece of paper indicating that his will was to be "like that," and the notary embodied it in the will, it was not "dictated." Succession of Thériot, 88 South. 471, 473, 114 La. 611 (citing Prendergast v. Prendergast, 16 La. Ann. 220, 79 Am. Dec. 575).

DICTUM

A "dictum" is an opinion expressed by the court, which, not being necessarily involved in the action, lacks the force of an adjudication. Callahan v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 125 Pac. 863, 864 (quoting 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2051).

Where a judge expresses a view on any point or principle which he is not required to decide, his opinion as to such point or principle is "obiter dictum." Huston v. Scott, 94 Pac. 512, 517, 20 Okl. 142, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 721 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2051).

"A 'dictum' is an opinion expressed by the court, which, not being necessarily involved in a case, lacks the force of an adjudication." Moser v. Talman, 100 N. Y. Supp. 231, 233, 114 App. Div. 850 (citing Bouv. Dict.).

"Obiter dictum" is: "Made as argument or illustration, as pertinent to other cases as to the one on hand, and which may enlighten or convince, but which in no sense are a part of the judgment in the particular issue, not binding as a precedent, but entitled to receive the respect due to the opinion of the judge who utters them." Commonwealth v. Paine, 56 Atl. 317, 319, 207 Pa. 45.

"One of the best definitions of the term 'obiter dictum' is said to be that given by Folger, J., in Rohrbach v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 62 N. Y. 47, 58, 20 Am. Rep. 451. He said: 'Dicta are opinions of a judge which do not embody the resolution or determination of the court, and, made without argument or full consideration of the point, are not the professed deliberate determinations of the judge himself. Obiter dicta are such opinions uttered by the way, not upon the point or question pending, as if turning aside from the main topic of the case to collateral subjects." Newman v. Kay, 49 S. E. 926, 931, 57 W. Va. 98, 68 L. R. A. 908, 4 Ann. Cas. 39 (citing United States ex rel. Johnston v. Clark County Court, 96 U. S. 211, 24 L. Ed. 628).

"Obiter dictum" is a mere observation by a judge on a legal question suggested by the case before him, but not arising in such a manner as to require decision by him. It is therefore not binding as a precedent on the other judges, or the court, although it may be entitled to more or less respect. Lancaster County v. McDonald, 103 N. W. 78, 81, 73 Neb. 453.

"Dictum" is of two kinds, "obiter" and "judicial." "Obiter dictum" is an expression of opinion by the court or judge on a collateral question not directly involved or mere argument or illustration originating with him, while "judicial dictum" is an expression of opinion on a question directly involved, argued by counsel, and deliberately passed on by the court, though not necessary to a decision. While neither is binding as a decision, judicial dictum is entitled to much greater weight than the other and should not be lightly disregarded. In re Chadwick's Will, 82 Atl. 918, 919, 80 N. J. Eq. 168.

Whenever a question fairly arises in the course of a trial, and there is a distinct decision thereon, the court's ruling in respect thereto can in no sense be regarded as mere "dictum." New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Price, 159 Fed. 330, 332, 86 C. C. A. 502, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1103.

"According to the more rigid rule, an expression of opinion, however deliberate upon a question, however fully argued, if not essential to the disposition that was made of the case, may be regarded as a 'dictum'; but it is, on the other hand, said that it is difficult to see why, in a philosophical point of view, the opinion of the court is not as persuasive on all the points which were so involved in the cause that it was the duty of counsel to argue them, and which were deliberately passed over by the court, as if the decision had hung upon but one point." People's Lumber Co. v. Gillard, 90 Pac. 556, 557, 5 Cal. App. 435 (quoting Bouvier).

Where a question was not before the Supreme Court, any expression upon the subject would be "obiter dictum." Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. v. Wade (Tex.) 127 S. W. 1186, 1189.

Where several objections to the validity of a constitutional amendment are raised by the issues, and are held as valid grounds for denying its validity by the trial court, and its rulings thereon are assigned as error and are specifically considered and affirmed on appeal, the decision is authoritative, and not "dictum," as to each objection. State ex rel. Bailey v. Brookhart, 84 N. W. 1064, 1066, 113 Iowa, 250.

General expressions not essential to disposition of a cause on points not presented, nor argued, are obiter; but, when a question is directly involved and was determined below and is assigned as error and argued and distinctly decided the decision is not obiter, though the cause is disposed of on other grounds. Watson v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 169 Fed. 942, 944.

"Where there are two grounds, upon either of which the judgment of the trial court can be rested, and the appellate court sustains both, the ruling on neither is 'obiter'; but each is the judgment of the court, and of equal validity with the other. Whenever a question fairly arises in the course of a trial, and there is a distinct decision of that question, the ruling of the court in respect thereto can, in no just sense, be called mere dictum." Union Pac. R. Co. v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co., 26 Sup. Ct. 19, 20, 199 U. S. 160, 50 L. Ed. 134.

While it may be difficult to concisely define "obiter dictum," it is difficult to see why the court's opinion is not as persuasive on all the points involved in the case which it was the duty of counsel to argue, and which were deliberately passed upon by the court, as if a decision had hung upon one point. Carstairs v. Cochran, 52 Atl. 601, 95 Md. 488.

A mere declaration of the views of the writer of the opinion is known as "dicta" or "obiter dicta"; it is judicial dictum, for it is the expression of the views of at least a majority, if not of the entire court, upon a matter which, while possibly not essential to a decision, was presented, argued, and considered. Judicial dictum represents the views of the court upon questions deemed too clear to admit of discussion, and should accordingly not be disregarded without extraordinary reasons appearing therefor. Such declarations as to the law are, to say the least, very persuasive, and nisi prius courts and counsel, in absence of something to the contrary, usually act upon them. Zeuske v. Zeuske, 103 Pac. 648, 651, 55 Or. 65, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 556 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2051).

If an expression of opinion on a point argued by counsel and deliberately passed on by the court is a dictum, it is "a judicial dictum as distinguished from a mere obiter dictum; i. e., an expression originating alone with the judge who writes the opinion, as an argument or illustration." Where propositions of law stated by the court were necessarily involved in the determination of the case, they are of the doctrine of the case for which the decision is authority. Derosia v. Firland, 76 Atl. 153, 155, 83 Vt. 372, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 577, 188 Am. St. Rep. 1092.

DID AN ASSAULT

The words "did an assault" in an indictment are equivalent to the expression that the accused made an assault. Hase v. State, 105 N. W. 253, 254, 74 Neb. 493.

DID COMMIT FORNICATION

The phrase "did commit fornication," in an indictment for incest, is, in substance, an allegation of illicit intercourse, and a sufficient averment that he had carnal knowledge of the person of the particeps, and it is not necessary to allege that he knows of the relationship existing between them. State v. Dana, 10 Atl. 727, 731, 59 Vt. 614.

DID SHOOT

The term "did shoot," in an indictment alleging that accused "did * * * intentionally * * * and feloniously shoot" a person named with a shotgun, with intent to kill the person named, embraces the weapon, the load, the discharge, and the act of discharging, and, when it is said that one person "did shoot" another, every one of common understanding knows what is intended, without explanation. Heatley v. Territory, 78 Pac. 79, 80, 15 Okl. 72.

The phrase "did shoot," in an indictment alleging that accused with a revolver loaded with gunpowder and leaden bullets "did shoot" decedent, embraces the weapon, the load, the discharge, and the act of discharging, and an indictment alleging that accused feloniously murdered decedent, and did with a certain firearm, to wit, a pistol loaded with gunpowder and leaden bullets, shoot decedent, inflicting a fatal wound, is sufficient. McHugh v. Territory, 86 Pac. 433, 434, 17 Okl. 1.

DIE

See Previously Died.

When a devise or bequest to children is made with a provision over "if either of my children should die," the courts will assume that the testator had in mind something less than merely to provide for the case of the legatee dying at some time, and in such cases the courts will construe the bequest over as intended to take effect in case the death referred to should occur in the testator's lifetime or before some fixed period for the enjoyment of the estate or gift which is in such event to go over. McClellan v. MacKenzie, 126 Fed. 701, 704, 61 C. C. A. 619 (citing 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 1128; In re Hayward, 19 Ch. Div. 470).

DIE BEFORE

The phrase "die before," or a like expression, as used in a will making disposition of property if a beneficiary shall "die before" a certain time, is construed to provide against the inability of the legatee or beneficiary first named to take, either by reason of prior or simultaneous death. Supreme Council of Royal Arcanum v. Kacer, 69 S. W. 671, 675, 96 Mo. App. 93 (citing and adopting Balder v. Middeke, 92 Ill. App. 227; Paden v. Buscoe, 17 S. W. 42, 81 Tex. 563; Fuller v. Linzee, 135 Mass. 468).

DIE BY HIS OWN HAND

Self-destruction while insane

Though the clause of the Constitution and laws of a beneficial association providing that the death of a member "by his own hands, whether sane or insane at the time, whether the act be voluntary or involuntary," is a risk not assumed, may not exempt from liability in every case of death by accident, it does exempt from liability for involuntary suicide from causes other than those proceeding from the act of an insane mind. Campbell v. Order of Washington, 102 Pac. 410, 412, 53 Wash. 398.

Under a life insurance policy excepting self-destruction, sane or insane, assured "died by his own hand," though death resulted from an irresistible, insane impulse. Clarke v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, 118 Fed. 374, 378, 55 C. C. A. 200.

Suicide synonyms

The word "suicide" and the words "to die by his own hand" mean the same thing, and convey the idea of voluntary, intentional self-destruction. Dickerson v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 85 N. E. 694, 696, 200 Ill. 274.

"Die by his own hand" is synonymous with "voluntary suicide." Campbell v. Order of Washington, 102 Pac. 410, 412, 53 Wash. 398 (quoting and adopting definition in Grand Legion of Select Knights v. Korneiman, 63 Pac. 293, 10 Kan. App. 577).

A provision in a life policy rendering it void in case insured should die by his own hand, "sane or insane," covered every case of suicide, irrespective of the state of insured's mind. Moore v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 78 N. E. 488, 490, 192 Mass. 468, 7 Ann. Cas. 656.

A clause in a fraternal benefit certificate which reads "and shall not die by his own hand, whether sane or insane," will not relieve the association from payment, where death results from accidental drowning, although such drowning may be the direct result of the acts of the insured. Such clause will only relieve the association if the deceased purposely destroys his life. Where the insured was walking in water not to exceed three feet in depth and was seen to fall and remain apparently motionless until life was extinct, and the jury find that death resulted from drowning, but that such death was not caused by the intentional acts of the deceased, the association is liable. Grand Legion of Select Knights v. Korneman, 63 Pac. 292, 293, 10 Kan. App. 577.

DIE DURING SIXTY DAYS

The phrase "die during said 60 days 'before the expiration of term herein granted contemplated that the 60 days' notice of intention to renew should be or run during the last 60 days of the term, where the lease for a year provided for a renewal for a year by a further lease containing like agreements and covenants as in the first, on condition that the lessees should give 60 days' notice in writing of her desire to avail herself of the option of renewal, and that the lessor would sell the premises to the lessee for a specified price, except that, in case the lessee should give the 60 days' notice of her intention to renew and the lessor or her husband should 'die during said 60 days before expiration of the term herein granted,' then the lessor or her executors might, upon obtaining a bona fide purchaser for the premises, sell them, after having first given the lessee the opportunity to purchase them at the price offered by the prospective purchaser. Pfium v. Spencer, 108 N. Y. Supp. 344, 346, 123 App. Div. 742.

DIE IN CONSEQUENCE OF VIOLATION OF LAW

Death received while retreating from a personal difficulty, not for the purpose of gaining vantage ground to renew it, where the encounter is begun by an assault by the deceased upon his slayer with a weapon capable of inflicting great bodily harm, or death, according to its use, is not within the meaning of an insurance clause exempting against liability for death "in violation or attempted violation of any criminal law." Supreme Lodge, K. P., v. Bradley, 83 S. W. 1055, 1056, 73 Ark. 274, 67 L. R. A. 770, 108 Am. St. Rep. 38, 3 Ann. Cas. 872 (citing Harper v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 19 Mo. 506. Reiterated in Overton v. St. Louis Mut. Life Ins. Co., 39 Mo. 122, 90 Am. Dec. 455; Cluff v. Mut. Benefit Life Ins. Co., 13 Allen [95 Mass.] 308. Reaffirmed in the same case in 99 Mass. 318; Bradley v. Mut. Benefit Life Ins. Co., 45 N. Y. 422, 6 Am. Rep. 115).

A policy of life insurance contained the stipulation that, "if death is caused or superinduced at the hands of justice, or in violation of or attempt to violate any criminal law," the insurer would not be liable for the full amount of the policy. The insured was slain by a husband, either while he was attempting to have sexual intercourse with the wife, or immediately after the act of sexual intercourse. Held, that the death of the insured was not caused or superinduced in the violation of, or attempt to violate, any criminal law, within the meaning of the policy. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Crenshaw, 58 S. E. 628, 629, 129 Ga. 193, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 258, 121 Am. St. Rep. 216, 12 Ann. Cas. 307.

The phrase "die in consequence of the violation or attempted violation of the laws," in a beneficiary certificate stipulating that the same shall be void if the member shall die in consequence of a duel or in consequence of the violation or attempted violation of the laws of a state or the United States or any province or nation, means that the member must lose his life in the act of actually violating the law; and to defeat an action on the certificate it must be shown that the member came to his death while in the act and as the result of his violation of the law. Sovereign Camp of the Woodmen of the World v. Welch, 83 Pac. 547-549, 16 Okl. 188.

DIE IN PERFORMANCE OF DUTY

A fireman driving a hose wagon received a broken back and other injuries by the overturning of the wagon, and, as a result of the pain he suffered, became insane and committed suicide. Held that, as he was neither legally nor morally responsible for killing himself, his death was caused without the intervention of any outside or independent cause, and he died in the performance of his duty, so as to entitle his widow to the pension, within San Francisco Charter, c. 7, art. 9, § 5, requiring, as a condition to the duty of the board of fire pension fund commissioners to provide a pension for a widow, that her husband shall have died "in the performance of his duty." Baker v. Board of Fire Pension Fund Com'rs of City and County of San Francisco, 123 Pac. 344, 345, 18 Cal. App. 433.

DIE LEAVING CHILDREN

Where testator devised certain lands to his son and daughter in remainder, and certain other lands without the intervention of any particular estate, and then provided that the "lands given as above" to his daughter should be her separate estate; but, in the event she should marry and die without any children and leave a husband surviving her," the husband should have the lands for life; and at his death to go to testator's son, if living, or, if he be dead, then to his children, if any, or, if none, then to a certain grandson of testator; but if the daughter should "die leaving children," then the land to go to said children—it was held that the words "die leaving children" refer to the happening of that event at any time, and not to their happening within the testator's lifetime, or within a period of five years during which the lands were to be rented out for the purpose of raising money to pay debts; there being various recitals of the will indicating the expectation of testator's death in the near future, and a number of contingencies being provided for which might occur a long time after his death. Cooksey v. Hill, 50 S. W. 235, 237, 106 Ky. 297.

DIE LEAVING NO CHILDREN

Under a devise to M. for life, and at her death to J. and R., with provision that if either J. or R. "die at any time, leaving no child" his interest shall go at his death to the survivor, and, if both die leaving no child, the interest devised to them shall go to another, the death of J. or R. without issue, which will defeat his fee, is not limited to the lifetime of M., but may be any time thereafter. Walton v. Bohannon, 150 S. W. 648, 649, 150 Ky. 486.

Under a devise to testator's wife for life, remainder to his son, with a provision that, should he "die leaving no children" or descendants, the said estate must revert to my legal heirs, the son, having survived the widow, takes the fee, as the words "die leaving no children" refer to a dying before the death of the life tenant. Weakley v. Hanna (Ky.) 51 S. W. 570, 571.

Where a bequest is made to A. of a certain sum to be put out at interest until her child or children became of age, and if A. died "leaving no child or children" the legacy with the interest to be paid by testator's executors to the trustees of an orphan asylum for the use and benefit of the institution, the word "leaving" is to be taken as equivalent in meaning to the words "having had," and at birth each child of A. took an indefeasible interest which at death before payment would pass to a personal representative. Male v. Williams, 21 Atl. 854, 855, 48 N. J. Eq. 33.

DIE LEAVING NO ISSUE

The clause "die leaving no issue," when used in a will, has a fixed legal meaning, and, in the absence of language in the will disclosing a different intent, imports a general indefinite failure of issue, and not a failure at the death of the first taker. Arnold v. Muhlenberg College, 76 Atl. 30, 31, 227 Pa. 321; Burrough v. Foster, 6 R. I. 534, 540.

Where a testator bequeathes a certain sum of money to his daughter and over to sons and daughters on her death, "leaving no issue," such a gift is valid, and limitation over of real estate on the death of the first devisee, leaving no issue, would create an estate tail, but, as applied to personal estate, such limitation over imports not an indefinite, but a definite, failure of issue, and is good. Woodward v. Woodward, 16 N. J. Eq. 83, 86.

By one clause of a will property was devised in trust for testator's niece, for life, and her children, after her death, should she have any. In another clause the property was spoken of as devised to the niece and her heirs, and it was provided that if the niece should die leaving no children or lawful issue surviving her, or if such child or children should die leaving no lawful issue surviving them, the property should go to a trust company to be held in trust for a Bible society. Held, that the words "die leaving no lawful issue surviving them" did not import an indefinite failure of issue, but referred to the child's or children's death before the termination of the life estate, and the Bible society's trust was to arise upon the niece dying without leaving a child or grandchild, and hence did not suspend the power of alienation for longer than a life or lives in being at the creation of the estate, forbidden by the common-law rule against perpetuities, and Ky. St. 1903, § 2360, declaratory thereof. Kasey v. Fidelity Trust Co., 115 S. W. 739, 741, 131 Ky. 609.

DIE LEAVING NO LAWFUL ISSUE SURVIVING

By one clause of a will property was devised in trust for testator's niece for life and then to her children, if any. In another clause the property was spoken of as devised to the niece and her heirs, and it was provided that if the niece should die leaving no children or lawful issue surviving her, or if such child or children should die leaving no lawful issue surviving them, the property should go to a trust company to be held in trust for a Bible society. Held, that the words "die leaving no lawful issue surviving them" did not import an indefinite failure of issue, but referred to the child's or children's death before the termination of the life estate, and the Bible society's trust was to arise upon the niece's dying without leaving a child or grandchild, and hence did not suspend the power of alienation for longer than a life or lives in being at the creation of the estate, forbidden by the common-law rule against perpetuities, and Ky. St. 1903, § 2360, declaratory thereof. Kasey v. Fidelity Trust Co., 115 S. W. 739, 740, 131 Ky. 609.

DIE LEAVING NO LIVING ISSUE

The phrase "die leaving no living issue," when used in a will, is equivalent to the phrase "die leaving no surviving issue," and carries a plain implication in favor of any issue of the first taker who may survive him. Hull v. Holmes, 62 Atl. 705, 706, 78 Conn. 362.

DIE LEAVING NO SURVIVING ISSUE

The phrase "die leaving no living issue," when used in a will, is equivalent to the phrase "die leaving no surviving issue," and carries a plain implication in favor of any issue of the first taker who may survive him. Hull v. Holmes, 62 Atl. 705, 706, 78 Conn. 362; Burrough v. Foster, 6 R. I. 534, 540.

DIE WITHOUT CHILDREN

Die without children or issue, see Die Without Issue.

The phrase "die without children" means without having had children. Bond v. Moore, 86 N. E. 386, 393, 236 Ill. 576, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 540 (citing Field v. Peeples, 54 N. E. 304, 180 Ill. 376).

Where a devise limited to take effect after death "without issue" is construed as taking effect after death "without children," it does not depend on an indefinite failure of issue. Stisser v. Stisser, 85 N. E. 240, 235 Ill. 207.

Testator gave all his property to his wife for life, with full power of disposal, providing that on her death what remained should be equally divided among his children; he giving a fifth of it absolutely to each of his two sons, and a like amount to his unmarried daughter, with a provision that if she married her share should vest in his sons in trust for her use during life, with power to them, with her consent, to sell her share, the part of her share remaining at her death to go to her children, or, if she had none, then to her brothers and sisters, her husband, if any, being excluded from all right therein while for each of his two married daughters he gave a fifth to his sons as trustees, with like power of sale and like provisions as to the passing of any part of their shares remaining at their deaths. Held, that the provision in the codicil that if a son "dies without children" his share shall return back again to the family, as provided in case a daughter so dies, did not take away the power of the children to sell the property. Pennsylvania Land Co. v. Just, 90 S. W. 279, 280, 121 Ky. 765.

Revisal 1905, § 1581, provides as the rule of construction that a devise to one for life, with remainder over upon dying "without heirs," or "without issues," or "without children," shall be construed to mean dying without heirs, or children, or issues living at the time of his death (or born to him within ten lunar months thereafter), unless a contrary intent is expressly declared in the face of the deed or will. Staton v. Godard, 62 S. E. 519, 148 N. C. 434.

Where a will made certain devises to testator's two sons, and provided that if either should die without legal heirs then his portion should go to the other, or his children, if any, and that neither should have power to sell unless the proceeds should be invested in other real estate, it was held that, in view of the provision for sale, the phrase "if either should die without children" referred to the death of either son at any time before or after testator's death, and each son took a defeasible fee, which would be defeated by the death of the devisee at any time without issue then living. Rice v. Rice, 118 S. W. 270, 133 Ky. 406.

A will gave testatrix's husband her property for life, and provided that upon his death it should be divided equally among her daughters, and if any of them should die without children their part should be divided equally among the remaining children. Held, that the provision as to "death without children" referred to death before the life tenant died, when the property was to be divided, so that the share of a child dying without issue after the life tenant's death would not go to the other devisees. Garrard v. Kendall (Ky.) 121 S. W. 997, 998.

DIE WITHOUT HEIRS

Where testator devised property to his widow for life or widowhood, and then made specific devises to his children by his second wife, who were minors at the date the will was executed, providing that the land should be held intact until such children became of age or married, when the portion allotted to each should be turned over to him, but that should any of such children "die without heirs" the portion of those dying should be equally divided among the others, the testator by use of the quoted words had reference to their dying before he died, or before they reached their majority or married, if they should marry before reaching their majority or before he died, and left no child or children surviving them. He did not intend to limit the estate which he gave them; he was merely limiting the division of his landed estate to such of the four children as should be living when the period fixed for distribution should arrive. Deskins v. Williamson (Ky.) 106 S. W. 258, 259.

Revisal 1905, § 1581, provides as the rule of construction that a devise to one for life, with remainder over upon dying "without heirs," or "without issues," or "without children," shall be construed to mean dying without heirs, or children, or issues living at the time of his death (or born to him within ten lunar months thereafter), unless a contrary intent is expressly declared in the face of the deed or will. Staton v. Godard, 62 S. E. 519, 148 N. C. 434.

In a will giving to a son the remainder of the estate and providing that in the event of his death "during his minority, without heirs of his body," the property should go to persons designated. The words "without heirs of his body" refer to his dying during his minority, without leaving heirs of his body, and the son acquired the fee subject to a life estate in one-third given to the testator's wife, and subject to be defeated by dying before reaching majority. Allen v. Allen (Ky.) 108 S. W. 250, 251.

Under Code 1904, § 2422, which provides that limitations in a deed or will contingent upon a person "dying without heirs," etc., shall be construed a limitation to take effect when such person dies not having such heir living at the time of his death, or born within 10 months thereafter, unless the intention be otherwise plainly declared on the face of the deed or will creating it, the common-law construction of the phrase "dying without heirs," and similar expressions, has been changed, the purpose of the statute being to effectuate the intention of the testator by rendering valid a limitation otherwise invalid as a perpetuity, and words which under the common law were construed to mean an indefinite failure of issue are now construed to mean a definite failure of issue. Daniel v. Lipscomb, 66 S. E. 850, 852, 110 Va. 563.

DIE WITHOUT ISSUE

Where there is no intervening estate and no other period to which the words "dying without issue" can be reasonably referred, they are held, in the absence of something in the will evidencing a contrary intent, to create a defeasible fee which is defeated by the death of the devisee without issue then living. Deskins v. Williamson (Ky.) 106 S. W. 258, 260.

As indefinite failure of issue

The primary meaning of the word "issue" in a will is heirs of the body, and "dying without issue," standing alone, means an indefinite failure of issue; but this general rule does not apply where the devise over of land to take effect is expressly or impliedly for a period of a life or lives in being and 21 years thereafter. Todd v. Armstrong, 62 Atl. 1114, 1115, 213 Pa. 570 (citing Beckley v. Riegert, 61 Atl. 641, 212 Pa. 91).

"Dying without issue living at the time of his decease," as used in a will, means a definite failure of issue. Beckley v. Riegert, 61 Atl. 641, 642, 212 Pa. 91.

"It is said to be a rule of construction, that the words 'dying without issue' will be construed to mean 'an indefinite failure of issue' as to real estate; but, with regard to personalty, it shall be taken to mean 'a failure at the death.'" Abbott v. Essex Co., 18 How. (59 U. S.) 202, 216, 15 L. Ed. 352.

The words "heirs" or "issue" may be so used as to mean children. Where devise over is on death of B. without issue before a certain person dies, etc., or where it is if B. dies unmarried and without issue, the limitation is defeated even if B. marries and has issue, or where the devise is that on the death of the first taker, B., without "issue," the executors of deviser shall sell, etc., the failure meant is indefinite, and the limitation fails. Middlesex Banking Co. v. Field, 37 South. 139, 144, 84 Miss. 646.

In a will devising land for life with a limitation over upon the death of the life tenant without children, or if the children die unmarried and before the age of 21 "without children," were words of purchase and not of descent, and clearly imported a definite failure of issue. Ball v.

Where a devise limited to take effect after death "without issue" is construed as taking effect after death "without children," it does not depend on an indefinite failure of issue. Stisser v. Stisser, 85 N. E. 240, 242, 235 Ill. 207.

Where an estate was devised for life, with remainder over, with the further provision that, if the remainderman should die without children or issue, then to a third person, the words "dying without children or issue" had reference to the death of the remainderman before the termination of the particular estate, and where she survived the termination of that estate she thereupon took a fee-simple interest. Bradshaw v. Butler (Ky.) 110 S. W. 420, 422.

Where an estate is devised to one for life, with remainder to another, with gift over on the remainderman dying without issue, the words "dying without issue" are restricted to death before the termination of the particular estate; but where there is no intervening estate, or where there is a period fixed for distribution, the words, in the absence of a contrary intent, create a defeasible fee, defeated by death at any time without issue. Simpson v. Adams, 106 S. W. 819, 821, 127 Ky. 790.

Revisal 1905, § 1581, provides as the rule of construction that a devise to one for life, with remainder over upon dying "without heirs," or "without issues," or "without children," shall be construed to mean dying without heirs, or children, or issues living at the time of his death (or born to him within ten lunar months thereafter), unless a contrary intent is expressly declared in the face of the deed or will. Staton v. Godard, 62 S. E. 519, 148 N. C. 434.

The words "die without issue" import a general and indefinite failure of issue. The effect of Act July 9, 1897 (P. L. 213) was to change the previous ruling that the words "die without issue" in a will imported an indefinite failure of issue, so that thereafter, in the absence of a different intent shown in the will, such words would mean a failure of issue during the lifetime or at the death of the person named, and hence where testator devised land to his nieces, providing that should they die without lawful issue the real estate devised should descend to and vest in the heirs of a third person, the words "die without issue" must be construed to mean a failure of issue in the lifetime of the nieces. Smith v. Piper, 80 Atl. 877, 878, 231 Pa. 378.

The words "die without issue" are equivalent to die without leaving heirs of the body, contemplating what is known as an indefinite failure of issue. Where a testator gave to a niece and nephew in terms sufficient to constitute a fee-simple estate the residuum of any realty left after payment of any legacies, and directed that should the nephew die without issue his part should be divided among testator's heirs, the will created in favor of the nephew an estate in fee tail. Gilkie v. Marsh, 71 N. E. 703, 704, 186 Mass. 336.

A testator devised land to his son, with a proviso that "should my son die without issue then the said realty shall revert to my lawful heirs." In the same will he devised real estate to others of his children in language clearly signifying a definite failure of issue. The devise to the son imported an indefinite failure of issue, and he took an estate tail, which, by Act April 27, 1855 (P. L. 368), was enlarged into an estate in fee simple. Graham v. Abbott, 57 Atl. 178, 179, 208 Pa. 68.

Where a will gave land to testator's two sons, their heirs and assigns, forever, and stated it to be testator's will that the land should not be sold until the younger of the sons should become of age, and that, if either of them should die without issue, the testator's surviving heirs should take the property, as fee tails were abolished by statute in 1816, and Rev. St. 1899, §§ 4592, 4593, declare that, where by common law any person might become seised in fee tail such person shall have only a life estate, and that the words "dying without issue" should be construed to mean "dying without issue living at the death of the person," the sons took a fee; the word "heirs" not being used as "heirs of the body," and the statute, despite the abolition of estates tail, requiring that the words "dying without issue" be not construed as creating an estate tail. Gannon v. Albright, 81 S. W. 1162, 1165, 1166, 1167, 183 Mo. 238, 67 L. R. A. 97, 105 Am. St. Rep. 471.

Testator bequeathed his property to plaintiff, and provided that if plaintiff should "die without issue," then the property should go to a specified charitable institution. Held, that the will should be construed to mean that, if plaintiff died without issue prior to the death of the testator, the devise over should take effect, but that if plaintiff survived the testator, he acquired title to the property in fee, though he subsequently died without issue. St. Paul's Sanitarium v. Freeman (Tex.) 111 S. W. 443, 445.

Under a will giving to six of testator's children an equal portion of the estate, and charging them with legacies in favor of other children, unless they elected to share equally with the six, and providing that the six children and the others, if they elected to share, should make a payment of "$200 to be laid out in land for my grandchild * * * and the brothers and sisters which he has or may hereafter have, all to share equally. * * *

I also direct that the shares of my daughters, if they die without children, descend to their surviving sisters or their descendants, if they have any. If my grandson, * * * and his brothers and sisters which he has or may have, shall die without issue, then the said land to revert to the said children before named and their heirs." Held, that the words "shall die without issue" were not intended to mean without issue or children surviving the first takers at the time of their death, but meant if they should die without having had issue or children born to them, and hence birth of issue at any time vested the estate, and defeated the limitation over. Stafford v. Read, 91 N. E. 91, 93, 244 Ill. 138.

A will created in testator's wife and eldest son an estate for the wife's life in a farm constituting the bulk of his estate. It then provides that on the wife's death the farm "vests absolutely in and is the property of" the son, and in case said son "dies without issue his property herein specified becomes the property of" a second son, and at his death goes to a daughter. When the will was made, the eldest son was a bachelor 42 years old, while the daughter had three young children. Held, that testator intended to preserve the estate for his daughter, and hence the words "dies without issue" will be construed as meaning death at any time, and not death in the lifetime of the wife in order to effectuate that intent. In re Carothers' Estate, 119 Pac. 926, 927, 161 Cal. 588.

The language of the deed considered as a whole, plainly shows that the grantor did not use the words "dying without issue" as meaning so dying before the termination of the life estate, but that they had reference to the time of the death of the daughter. Sterling v. Huntley, 76 S. E. 375, 377, 139 Ga. 21.

As within lifetime of testator

Testator gave the residue of his estate to his daughter for her benefit forever. By a subsequent clause he directed that, if the daughter shall die before or after attaining the age of 21 years without issue, then over. He also in his will desired and requested his daughter to select and have appointed as her guardian a particular person named. The will was made when the daughter was 16 years of age. Held, that such provisions disclosed a manifest intention of the testator not to limit the meaning of the words "die without issue" to death of the daughter in his own lifetime. In re Daniel's Estate (Pa.) 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 358, 360.

Where a testator devised lands to his two sons and to their heirs and assigns forever, and provided that the same should not be sold before the younger of the two should become of age, and that, should either of them die without issue, the survivor, his heirs and assigns, should take the part bequeathed to the son so dying, and that, in the event both should die without issue, the land should pass to testator's surviving heirs, it was held that it does not create an estate tail by implication, because both by the language of the will, and especially by the positive command of the statute of 1845 (Rev. St. 1889, § 4593), the words "die without issue" mean dying without issue living at the death of the two sons, and therefore mean a definite failure of issue. Gannon v. Pauk, 98 S. W. 471, 473, 200 Mo. 75 (citing Gannon v. Albright, 81 S. W. 1162, 183 Mo. 238, 67 L. R. A. 97, 105 Am. St. Rep. 471).

Where an estate is devised to one for life, with remainder to another, and, if the remainderman die without children or issue, then to a third person, the general rule is that the words "dying without children or issue" are restricted to the death of the remainderman before the termination of the particular estate. Harvey v. Bell, 81 S. W. 671, 674, 118 Ky. 512.

Where an estate is devised to one for life with remainder to another, with the provision that, if the remainderman should die without child or issue, then to a third person, the words "dying without child or issue" are restricted to the death of the remainderman before the termination of the particular estate. Reuling's Ex'r v. Reuling, 126 S. W. 151, 152, 137 Ky. 637.

When the division of an estate is postponed by a will, a provision if one of the devisees "dies without issue" is construed to refer to his death before the time of division. Shropshire v. Gault (Ky.) 83 S. W. 590 (citing Duncan v. Kennedy, 72 Ky. [9 Bush.] 580; Webster's Trustee v. Webster, 21 S. W. 332, 93 Ky. 632; Dunlap v. Shreve's Ex'rs, 2 Duv. [63 Ky.] 834).

Where a testator devised and bequeathed the residue of his estate to his children and legal heirs absolutely and in fee simple and in equal shares, but in the concluding sentence of the will provided that, should any of his sons "die without issue, his or their share shall also revert" to the testator's children then living, the words "die without issue" mean death without issue during the life of the testator, though Acts 1851-52, p. 113, c. 91, § 3 (Shannon's Code, § 3675), provides that every contingent limitation made to depend upon the dying of any person without heir shall be a limitation to take effect when such person dies without heir, etc., as the case may be, living at the time of the death or born to him within 10 months thereafter, unless the intention of such limitation be otherwise expressly and plainly declared in the face of the deed or the will creating it. Frank v. Frank, 111 S. W. 1119, 1120, 120 Tenn. 569.

Though in many cases it has been held that "death without issue" may mean death without issue born, such construction has been excluded, except when clearly intended by Rev. St. 1898, § 2046 which provides that: "When a remainder shall be limited to take effect on the death of any person without heirs, or heirs of his body, or without issue, the words 'heirs' or 'issue' shall be construed to mean heirs or issue living at the death of the person named as ancestor." In re Korn's Will, 107 N. W. 659, 662, 128 Wis. 428.

Under Act July 9, 1897 (P. L. 213), providing that in any bequest or devise the words "die without issue," or "die without leaving issue," or "have no issue," or any words importing the failure of issue, shall be construed to mean a failure of issue in the lifetime or at the death of such person, unless a contrary intent appears, in a devise to a person for life, and then to his issue, "but in the event of the death of the devisee without issue" then over, the words "death without issue" mean a failure of issue in the lifetime of the devisee, and not an indefinite failure, and devisee takes a life estate, and not a fee, under the rule in Shelley's Case. Lewis v. Link-Belt Co., 70 Atl. 967, 222 Pa. 139.

The effect of the act of July 9, 1897 (P. L. 213), was to change the previous rule that the words "die without issue," in a will, imported an indefinite failure of issue, so that thereafter, in the absence of a different intent shown in the will, such words would mean a failure of issue during the lifetime or at the death of the person named; and hence, where testator devised land to his nieces, providing that, should they "die without lawful issue," the real estate so devised should descend to and vest in the heirs of a third party, the words, "die without lawful issue" must be construed to mean a failure of issue in the lifetime of the nieces. Smith v. Piper, 80 Atl. 877, 878, 231 Pa. 378.

Testatrix, after giving shares of her estate to two sons, directed that such shares should be held by her executor "in trust for my said sons, the income and clear annual profit arising from the interest or share hereby given is to be paid to my said sons for five years after my death, and then only when in the judgment of my executor they shall have proven themselves to be entirely competent and qualified to take proper care of same, at which time the said trustee shall pay the same over to my said sons, and in the event of the death of either of my said sons without issue, then their share or shares shall revert back to my estate, and shall go to and be divided among my remaining heirs." Held, that the words "death without issue" meant death in the lifetime of the testatrix, and that there is nothing in Act July 9, 1897 (P. L. 213), to prevent such a construction of the will. Siegwarth's Estate, 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 622, 625.

The rule that where real estate is devised in terms denoting an intention that the primary devisee shall take a fee on the death of the testator, coupled with a devise over in case of his dying without issue, the words "without issue" refer to a death without issue during testator's life, and the primary devisee surviving the testator takes an absolute estate in fee simple, does not apply where the language of the will indicates that the testator referred to a death either before or after his own, in which case the testator's intention will prevail. Fifer v. Allen, 81 N. E. 1105, 1106, 228 Ill. 507.

As without having had issue

The phrase "die without issue" means without having had issue. Bond v. Moore, 86 N. E. 386, 393, 236 Ill. 576, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 540 (citing Field v. Peeples, 54 N. E. 304, 180 Ill. 376).

In a will providing for testatrix's children and grandchildren, in which she directed that "if my grandson, * * * and his brothers and sisters which he has or may have, 'shall die without issue,' then the said land to revert to the said children before named and their heirs," the words "shall die without issue" were not intended to mean without issue or children surviving the first takers at the time of their death, but meant if they should die without having had issue or children born to them, and hence birth of issue at any time vested the estate and defeated the limitation over. Stafford v. Read, 91 N. E. 91, 93, 94, 244 Ill. 138.

Testator devised his estate to his two sons, share and share alike, and, in case of the death of either of them "without issue," then the estate devised to him to go to the survivor of them, and, in case both died without issue, or in case of the death of both prior to testator's death, then in either such case to others. Held, that the words "without issue" should be construed to mean "death without having had issue," and not "without living issue" at the time of the sons' death, and hence both having survived the testator, and having issue born to them, the sons took title to the property devised in fee. Kendall v. Taylor, 92 N. E. 562, 563, 245 Ill. 617, 87 L. R. A. (N. S.) 164.

DIE WITHOUT LAWFUL ISSUE SURVIVING

Where testator gave a life estate to his wife and sister-in-law and provided that after their death "I bequeath to my daughter her heirs and assigns all my property," but, in case of the death of the daughter without lawful issue surviving her, the property was to descend to testator's son-in-law, it was not evident from the will that testator intended the words "without lawful issue surviving her" to have any other meaning than their well-established meaning, and the daughter surviving her father took an estate tail which under Act April 27, 1855 (P. L. 368), was converted into estate in fee simple. Hannon v. Fliedner, 65 Atl. 944, 216 Pa. 470.

DIE WITHOUT LEAVING ISSUE

As indefinite failure of issue

Under Act July 9, 1897 (P. L. 213), providing (section 1) that in any bequest or devise the words "die without issue," or "die without leaving issue," or "have no issue," or any words importing the failure of issue, shall be construed to mean a failure of issue in the lifetime or at the death of such person unless a contrary intent appears, in a devise to a person for life, and then to his issue, "but in the event of the death of the devisee without issue" then over, the words "death without issue" mean a failure of issue in the lifetime of the devisee, and not an indefinite failure, and the devisee takes a life estate and not a fee under the rule in Shelley's Case. Lewis v. Link-Belt Co., 70 Atl. 967, 222 Pa. 139.

DIE WITHOUT LEGAL HEIRS

A limitation over on the death of a devisee "without legal heirs or heir" was precisely the same in principle as where the expression used in making the limitation over was simply "should one of them die," without any provision as to the failure of issue. Testator, who left a widow, five children, and several grandchildren, first gave absolutely to his widow his dwelling and its contents, and then gave her four-tenths of his entire estate for her life, with remainder to his children in equal shares, then gave absolutely, without limitation or qualification, to each of his children, by name, one-tenth of his estate, less what might be due him from the child, then gave one-twentieth of the estate to a grandchild, and the remaining twentieth to other grandchildren, to be held in trust for them till they come of age, and then provided: "In case of either of my children's death without leaving lawful issue then I will and direct that their portion or inheritance in my estate shall be equally divided between my wife and my surviving children." Held, that the limitation over was only in case of a child dying before testator, and applied as well to the children's shares in the remainder in the four-tenths of the estate given to the widow for life as to the gifts to the children directly. Lumpkin v. Lumpkin, 70 Atl. 238, 244, 108 Md. 470, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1063 (citing and adopting Gerting v. Wells, 59 Atl. 177, 100 Md. 97; Hammett v. Hammett, 43 Md. 311).

DIES NON

See Legal Holiday.

The words "legal holiday" and "dies non" are convertible terms. That they are so in the legislation of Louisiana "is demonstrated by the fact that they are so used in Act No. 110 of 1896, p. 158, making Decoration Day a legal holiday." State v. Duncan, 43 South. 283, 287, 118 Ga. 702.

DIES NON JURIDICUS

At the common law, a holiday was not, as in the case of Sunday, "dies non juridicus," and holidays have only the sanctity attached to them by statute. State v. Lewis, 72 Pac. 121, 123, 31 Wash. 516.

DIFFERENCE

See Question in Difference; Settling of Differences.

A stipulation in a contract provided that, if any difference should arise between the parties, it should be submitted to arbitration. Held, that the word "difference" meant "disagreement," requiring arbitration before suit brought. Fravert v. Fealer, 53 Pac. 288, 290, 11 Colo. App. 387.

A suit by a foreign seaman on a Swedish vessel against such vessel, based on the alleged negligence of the master by which libellant was injured in an American port and compelled to leave the vessel, comes within the term "differences," as used in the provisions of the treaty of July 4, 1827, between Sweden and Norway and the United States (8 Stat. 352, art. 13), and that of June 1, 1910, between Sweden and the United States, both of which vest in the consular officers of each country exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine "differences" which may arise between the officers and crews of merchant vessels of such country, either at sea or in port, without interference by the local authorities unless in case of breach of the peace, etc., and hence a court of admiralty of the United States is without jurisdiction. The Ester, 190 Fed. 216, 227.

DIFFERENT

In act of Congress June 29, 1906, prohibiting a carrier from receiving a greater or less or "different" compensation than the rates specified in the tariff filed and in effect, the word "different" was not without a distinct purpose, the purpose of curing a defect in the law, and of suppressing evil practices, and one which would prevent the railroad company from receiving compensation different in kind from that mentioned in its published schedule, which it could not be doubted was payable in money. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mottley, 31 Sup. Ct. 265, 268, 219 U. S. 487, 475, 55 L. Ed. 297, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 671.

It is not unfair to assume that Congress intended by the addition of the word "different," in such act, to the words "greater or less," to make the law more explicit and more difficult to evade. United States v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co., 163 Fed. 114, 117.

Where a carrier receives a note from a shipper in payment of freight on shipments in interstate commerce, it thereby receives a "different compensation" from that which only the law authorizes, to wit, money, in violation of the Elkins Act (32 Stat. 847), as amended in 1906 (34 Stat. 587), providing that a shipper who is permitted to settle his charges by paying a less or different compensation to the carrier than is required by other shippers operating under the same or similar circumstances accepts or receives a discrimination. United States v. Sunday Creek Co., 194 Fed. 252, 254.

DIFFERENT OFFENSES

"Different offenses," as the term is used in relation to the same indictment charging different offenses, carries the idea of separate, distinct, and independent action in the perpetration of each. An indictment charging shooting with intent to kill as an offense under one statute was not bad as stating different offenses, because it incidentally charged that the shooting was from ambush in a manner that would constitute an offense under a different statute. Collins v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 70 S. W. 187, 188.

An indictment charging that defendants conspired to rob and did rob another of a silver dollar and a warrant of arrest in his hands against them does not allege two distinct offenses. Lisle v. Commonwealth, 82 Ky. 250, 252.

DIFFERING IN PHASE

"Differing in phase," as used in the definition of multiphase system in the transmission of electric power, as consisting of the use of two or more alternating currents of equal period, but differing in phase, means that the two alternations or current waves do not come together, but one after or at a different time from the other. Harrison v. Detroit, Y., A. A. & J. Ry., 100 N. W. 451, 452, 137 Mich. 78.

DIFFICULT

The words "difficult" and "extraordinary," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 3253, authorizing the court to grant an additional allowance where the action is difficult, must be given its usual and accepted meaning. A general rule specifying the precise limitation that they impose upon the power of courts to grant an additional allowance may be difficult to formulate, but every application to the facts of a particular case when presented is not troublesome. The section does not authorize an additional allowance in an action for personal injuries where the only question for the court is the amount of the damages, and no difficult questions of law are involved. Standard Trust Co. v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 70 N. E. 925, 926, 178 N. Y. 407.

The right to make an extra allowance of costs does not depend on whether difficult questions of law have been litigated, since the case may be "difficult and extraordinary" though it involve only questions of fact. American Fruit Product Co. v. Ward, 99 N. Y. Supp. 717, 721, 113 App. Div. 319 (citing United Press Co. v. New York Press Co., 58 N. E. 527, 164 N. Y. 406, 53 L. R. A. 288).

The words "difficult and extraordinary" are words of limitation upon the power of the court, and the practice of making an additional allowance substantially in every case cannot be sanctioned. These words must be given their usual and accepted meaning. That defendant, in an action on contract for money only, was obliged to procure the record of a trial of the same action in the courts of a sister state, in the support of his plea of res judicata, did not justify the granting of an additional allowance to him on the ground that the case was "difficult and extraordinary." Campbell v. Emslie, 81 N. E. 458, 459, 188 N. Y. 509.

An action by a shipper against a carrier for breach of a contract, whereby the latter agreed to transport goods in time for shipment by a certain steamer, did not involve such a "difficult and extraordinary" question as to the true measure of damages, where the issues of fact were clearly defined, and the evidence procured in the ordinary way and without unusual expense, as to bring the case within Code Civ. Proc. § 3253, authorizing an extra allowance of costs in a difficult and extraordinary case. Frey v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 100 N. Y. Supp. 229, 231, 114 App. Div. 623.

An action for breach of marriage promise was not a "difficult and extraordinary action," within the statute, and the court was not authorized to grant an allowance in addition to costs. Horner v. Webendorfer, 126 N. Y. Supp. 475, 477, 141 App. Div. 759.

An action by executors to obtain the judgment of the Supreme Court whether they had the equitable right to set off a sum due the testator against the distributive share of a legatee was not a "difficult and extraordinary case" within Code Civ. Proc. § 3253, authorizing an extra allowance of costs in such cases. Leask v. McCarty, 132 N. Y. Supp. 92, 95, 147 App. Div. 796.

The following case was held to be a "difficult and extraordinary" one: Plaintiff signed a syndicate agreement to underwrite the bonds of a railroad company, the syndicate being managed by defendants S. & Co., and the agreement having been assigned to defendant trust company as security for a loan of $150,000 to S. & Co. for the benefit of the subscribers. The scheme proving unsuccessful, plaintiff sued in equity for the cancellation of the agreement, alleging that he had been induced to become a subscriber by false representations, and also on the ground of failure of consideration and abandonment of the enterprise. The trust company answered, pleading separate defenses, and alleging that it had loaned S. & Co., as the agents of the subscribers, $150,000, in good faith relying on plaintiff's subscription, etc. Pending the action, a receiver for S. & Co. had been appointed in bankruptcy, and also for the railroad company which had been organized, as contemplated, and in response to plaintiff's motion for leave to discontinue defendant trust company showed that it had expended $5,350 for counsel fees and disbursements in the defense and preparation for the trial of the action, and had incurred additional like obligations, probably over $4,000, and that it and the other defendants would be inconvenienced and put to extraordinary expense in the trial of the issues in another jurisdiction, and might be unable to obtain personal service. Jermyn v. Searing, 123 N. Y. Supp. 832, 834, 139 App. Div. 116.

DIFFICULTY

See Brought on the Difficulty; Provoking a Difficulty.

"Difficulty" means "controversy"; "a falling out." In a prosecution for shooting a person in sudden affray, an instruction that if accused sought the difficulty, and willingly engaged in it with intent to do the injured person great bodily harm or take his life, the jury could not acquit him on the ground of self-defense was erroneous, where the accused sought the injured person for the purpose of an explanation, since the jury might have misconstrued his seeking the injured person for an explanation as seeking the difficulty. Ward v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 103 S. W. 719, 720.

An instruction upon self-defense which used the word "difficulty" to refer to a "physical encounter," which resulted in one party being killed, was not erroneous. State v. Ferguson, 74 S. E. 502, 505, 91 S. C. 235.

DIG

Where a deed to land largely covered with limestone and granite, rising above the natural surface, reserved to the grantor all mines and minerals found on the land, with the right of entry to "dig" and carry the same away, it was held, in support of a construction of the deed as not giving the right to the grantor to open quarrying and blasting, that the word "dig" had a technical meaning, when the context was considered, and did not apply to open quarrying or blasting. Brady v. Smith, 73 N. E. 963, 964, 181 N. Y. 178, 106 Am. St. Rep. 531, 2 Ann. Cas. 636.

DIKE

The words "embankment" and "dike," when used to represent the means employed to prevent the inundation of land, are synonymous and mean a structure of earth or other material usually placed upon the bank of a stream, or near the shore of a lake, bay, etc., the ends of which extend across lowland to higher ground forming a continuous bulwark or obstruction to water, designed to keep it within the inclosure, thus formed. Morton v. Oregon Short Line Ry. Co., 87 Pac. 151, 153, 48 Or. 444, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 344, 120 Am. St. Rep. 827.

DILAPIDATION

To furnish sewer connection would be to furnish a new improvement or an addition of an original character, and not repairing a building and would not be included in the meaning of the word "dilapidation," as used in a lease. Torreson v. Walla, 92 N. W. 834, 836, 11 N. D. 481.

DILATORY

If a party plaintiff, instead of availing himself of a bar to an action on a counterclaim, prefers to risk a hearing on the merits, the bar is waived by not being interposed in time. Such a defense, not being on the merits, is called "dilatory," and its indulgence, except at the first favorable opportunity, is not favored. Ennor v. Raine, 74 Pac. 1, 3, 27 Nev. 178.

DILATORY CREDITOR

* He is a "dilatory creditor" who fails to comply with the surrogate's order as to the time of bringing in his claim against an estate or who, having complied therewith, does not begin suit within the time specified by statute when notified that the claim is disputed. Simons v. Forster, 63 Atl. 858, 859, 73 N. J. Law, 338.

DILATORY PLEA

See, also, Plea in Abatement.

"Dilatory pleas" are those which do not answer the general right of the plaintiff, either by denial or in confession and avoidance, but assert matter tending to defeat the particular action by resisting the plaintiff's present right of recovery. They are thus steps which, if taken, are preliminary to the substantial defense of the action and in no way affect the legal right of the plaintiff to recover, save by suspending it, if they prevail, so far as the present action is concerned. Walden v. Walden, 57 S. E. 323, 325, 128 Ga. 126 (citing Shipman's Com. Law Pl. p. 189, § 273; Andrews' Stephen's Pl. [2d Ed.] p. 186, § 100).

The test as to whether a plea is dilatory or goes to the merits is that if defendant, upon establishing the facts, can defeat plain-tiff's cause of action in whole or in part, or can obtain any substantial relief against plaintiff, the plea is not dilatory; but if the effect of sustaining the plea is not to deny or diminish defendant's liability on the cause of action asserted, or to obtain other substantial relief, against plaintiff, but merely to defeat his action as presently laid, and leave him an unimpaired right to sue again, the plea is dilatory. Southern Ry. Co. v. Ansley, 68 S. E. 1086, 1090, 8 Ga. App. 325.

DILIGENCE

See Due Care and Diligence; Due Diligence; Extraordinary Diligence; High Degree of Care and Diligence; Highest Possible Degree of Care and Diligence; Necessary Diligence; Ordinary Diligence; Reasonable Care and Diligence; Reasonable Diligence.

As a relative term

"Diligence" is a relative term. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Moore, 68 S. E. 875, 8 Ga. App. 185.

"Diligence" is comparative, depending largely upon the circumstances calling for its use. The courts do not require the same from parties who are apparently lured to their injury or destruction by the misleading conduct of the adversary party and for which they are not responsible. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Schneider, 80 N. E. 985, 988, 40 Ind. App. 38.

It is difficult to define the term "diligence," as applied to the time for instituting mandamus proceedings, or as applied to the bringing of a bill for equitable relief, since the question must be dependent upon the circumstances of each particular case. But it may be said that the mere lapse of time since the right of action accrued is important, but not absolutely decisive, although, if the equitable claim is analogous to a legal right which is controlled by a statute of limitations, equity will apply the same limit within which an action must be begun. A party removed from a public office did not lose his right to mandamus, for reinstatement by laches, by instituting an ineffective action at law, because both proceedings were not concurrently instituted, where it appeared that there was no intentional waiver or abandonment of the claim to the office. Hill v. Fitzgerald, 79 N. E. 825, 826, 193 Mass. 569 (citing Snow v. Boston Blank-Book Mfg. Co., 26 N. E. 1116, 153 Mass. 456, 458; H. H. Wentworth Co. v. French, 57 N. E. 789, 176 Mass. 442; Hayward v. Elliot Nat. Bank, 96 U. S. 611, 24 L. Ed. 855; Broadway Nat. Bank v. Baker, 57 N. E. 603, 176 Mass. 294; Sunter v. Sunter, 77 N. E. 497, 190 Mass. 449, 456; Pope v. Salamanca Oil & Refining Co., 115 Mass. 286, 291; Morse v. Hill, 136 Mass. 60, 66; Wood v. Westborough, 5 N. E. 613, 140 Mass. 403; Ransom v. City of Boston, 79 N. E. 823, 193 Mass. 537).

The word "diligence," as applied to the duty of an electric company to avoid injury to third persons in the distribution of its electric energy, is a relative term, and the diligence demanded must be commensurate with the danger. Perham v. Portland General Electric Co., 53 Pac. 14, 24, 33 Or. 451, 40 L. R. A. 799, 72 Am. St. Rep. 730.

DILIGENT CREDITOR

He is a "diligent creditor" of an estate who complies with the surrogate's order as to the time of bringing in his claim and who brings suit thereon within the time specified by statute when the claim is disputed. Simons v. Forster, 63 Atl. 858, 859, 73 N. J. Law, 338.

DIMENSIONS

"Dimensions" is "defined as including length, breadth, and thickness, implying the presence of three of these characteristics; a body having extent, size, and magnitude in at least two directions. In commercial transactions the word usually relates to capacity or bulk and implies cubic rather than superficial proportions. At least there must be measurement in more than one direction; mere length will not do; a straight line has no 'dimensions.'" The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 435, 30 Stat. 192, for imitation precious stones not exceeding an inch in "dimensions," does not exclude stones exceeding an inch in a single dimension. To be excluded they must exceed an inch in more than one direction. Albert Lorsch & Co. v. United States, 146 Fed. 879, 380, 76 C. C. A. 651.

DIMENSION STONE

The terms "dimension stone" and "footing stone" are synonymous, but neither is the synonym of "rubblestone." Nugent v. Armour Packing Co. (Mo.) 81 S. W. 506, 507.

DIMINISH

A mere classification of the capital stock of a corporation into preferred and common shares without an increase or decrease in the number is not an increasing or diminishing of its capital stock, within Civ. Code, § 362, providing the method of increasing or diminishing. California Telephone & Light Co. v. Jordan, 128 Pac. 598, 602, 19 Cal. App. 536.

DIMINISHED CAPACITY

"Diminished capacity to labor," as used in an instruction in a personal injury action, held to mean lessening, without totally destroying, the power to labor. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Maxwell (Tex.) 128 S. W. 160, 164.

Where, in an action for injuries to plaintiff's wife, the jury were confined to an allowance of the pecuniary loss to the husband from his wife's diminished capacity, the court's failure to further limit the words "diminished capacity" by confining them to labor or the earning of money was not error. Southern Pac. Co. v. Blake (Tex.) 128 S. W. 668, 669.

DINKEY CABOOSE

A "dinkey caboose" is one which is shorter and lighter than other cabooses and has a step which is a round bar of iron instead of being a plank step, the steps being hung down more like a ladder, while the steps of the old style caboose are boxed and set into the platform, like those on passenger cars. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Hemphill, 86 S. W. 350, 351, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 435.

DINKEY ENGINE

A "dinkey engine" is a locomotive of regular pattern, but small size. Howard v. Waterman Lumber & Supply Co. (Tex.) 134 S. W. 387, 388.

DIOCESE OF CENTRAL NEW YORK

The term "diocese of Central New York" is not used to designate a corporation but is used to designate a subdivision of territory in which the Protestant Episcopal Church operates in the state of New York. Kingsbury v. Brandegee, 100 N. Y. Supp. 353, 354, 113 App. Div. 606.

DIP

See Sheep Dip.

"Dip" is the turpentine which has dripped from the trees and been caught in boxes prepared for that purpose. Being severed from the reality, such turpentine is personal property. Floralta Sawmill Co. v. J. T. Parrish, 46 South. 461, 462, 155 Ala. 462; Knight v. Empire Land Co., 45 South. 1025, 1027, 55 Fla. 301.

The art of enameling metal is old. Many different formulas and substances are used to form the enamel, but the usual process is substantially as follows: Certain ingredients, usually a mixture of silica or sand, and of other substances having a fluxing property to produce glass when mixed with sand, and subjected to heat, are mixed together mechanically. This mixture is called by enamelers the "mix." The mix is then subjected to a high degree of heat and fused, resulting in a vitrified or glassy mass. This is called the "frit." The frit is then put in a mill and ground fine, with a mixture of clay and water, resulting in a liquid paste. This is called the "dip." The metal article to be enameled is then dipped in the paste, dried, and subjected to a very high temperature in an oven or muffle. In some cases more than one dipping and burning takes place. The result is, if the operation is successful, a metal article with its surface covered with an adherent coat of metal. National Enameling & Stamping Co. v. New England Enameling Co., 151 Fed. 19, 29, 80 C. C. A. 485.

DIPLOMA

Webster defines a "diploma" as "a document bearing record of a decree conferred by a literary society or educational institution." State ex rel. Crandall v. McIntosh, 103 S. W. 1078, 1084, 206 Mo. 589 (quoting and adopting the definition in State ex rel. Granville v. Gregory, 83 Mo., loc. cit. 180, 53 Am. Rep. 565).

DIRECT

See As Directed; Indirect—Indirectly.

As used in act approved February 18, 1897 (Acts 1896-97, p. 1465, § 11), providing that the board of revenue for Cullman county shall have authority to "direct and control" the property of the county, all the power in this direction that is best in the management of the county's property is conferred. This power necessarily includes the authority to change officers from one room to another whenever deemed expedient and proper. White v. Hewlett, 42 South. 78, 79, 143 Ala. 374.

The charter of a city authorizing the council to "direct and control" the location of railroad tracks does not include the power to authorize the construction of railroads and the exercise of the right to eminent domain. It merely vests in the council as part of the police power, to be exercised in providing for the public safety and convenience in the use of streets and alleys, a supervision over the location of railroad tracks, where the authority to construct the railroad already exists. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. v. Porter, 46 N. W. 75, 76, 43 Minn. 527, 529.

The words "control and direction," in Laws 1859, p. 359, c. 143, as amended by Laws 1889, p. 7, c. 7, providing that the free bridge over the Mohawk river between certain towns shall be under the control and direction of the commissioners of highways of the towns, were of no broader significance with reference to the duties and powers of the commissioners of highways of the two towns in question than the words "care and superintendence" in the highway law with reference to the duties and powers of commissioners of highways in the towns of the state. Town of Palatine v. Canajoharie Water Supply Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 412, 414, 90 App. Div. 548.

From the use of the word "direct," in Const. art. 6, § 15, providing that counties shall be laid off into civil districts, as the General Assembly may direct, it is not to be necessarily implied that the Legislature has no power to lay off the districts by its own immediate action. Grainger County v. State, 80 S. W. 750, 763, 111 Tenn. 234.

As command or order

The word "direct," as used in a statute, has been held in many cases to have imposed a mandatory duty. Acts 1898, c. 123, § 95, provides that the board of police commissioners of Baltimore City is "directed," at the request of the board of park commissioners, to detail from time to time such of the regular police force as the park commissioners may deem necessary to preserve order within the parks, which policemen shall be under the direction of the board of park commissioners and have the same power as conservators of the peace in Baltimore City. Other sections require the police commissioners to preserve the peace within the city limits, require policemen to report to the police board, authorize the police commissioners to employ a permanent police force, provide that the mayor and council shall have no control over the police commissioners, and that no officer of the city shall interfere with them. Held, that the word "directed," as used in section 95, was merely directory as respects detailing of policemen for the parks, so that the park commissioners, appointees of the mayor, could not compel the police commissioners to detail patrolmen for park service. Upshur v. City of Baltimore, 51 Atl. 953, 958, 94 Md. 743.

A provision in a will that "I hereby direct my executors to sell" and dispose of all my real estate gives no discretionary authority, but the direction is imperative, and the executors are absolutely obliged to make the conversion, and its proceeds are thereafter to be held and treated as personal property. Thissell v. Schillinger, 71 N. E. 300, 301, 186 Mass. 180.

In an action on an insurance policy, defendant requested an instruction that if, prior to October 10, 1906, insured had any serious illness or disease of an organic type, accompanied by circumstances which would naturally lead a reasonable man to suppose that he was afflicted with an illness or disease that might impair his health, and must thereby necessarily have been impressed on his memory, it was his duty to disclose the same to the insurer, and his failure to do so warrants the jury in finding, and "I direct you to find, a verdict for defendant." Held, that the quoted clause was an implied direction to the jury to make an affirmative finding as to the facts stated in the instruction, which was therefore properly refused. Kelper v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, 159 Fed. 206, 216.

As desire

See Desire.

As proximate

See Proximate.

As require

The word "direct," as used in a request for bids for coal for a city asking for coal to be delivered as fast as "required," will be construed as synonymous with "require," when the bids offered to deliver at such times and in such quantities as the city might direct, and the body of the contract stated in one place that the coal should be delivered promptly "as ordered," and in another, that on failure to make delivery "as ordered," the city might either forfeit the contract or buy coal at the contractor's expense in the open market. McLean County Coal Co. v. City of Bloomington, 84 N. E. 624, 627, 234 Ill. 90.

Where executors were empowered to sell the land at their discretion, but, if the land should be sold, they were then "directed" to pay over one-half of the proceeds in cash, the word "directed" would mean "required." Whitfield v. Thompson (Miss.) 38 South. 113, 118.

Where, in an action for injuries to a servant while painting a roof, the court instructed the jury that if the master was guilty of negligence "in requiring plaintiff to go upon said ladders on the roof," etc., and there was evidence that plaintiff was told to go upon the roof, etc., but there was nothing to show that he was compelled to do so, the word "requiring" was used by the court in the sense of "directed" and could not have misled the jury. Planters' Gin Co. v. Washington (Tex.) 132 S. W. 880, 881.

Natural and proximate synonyms

"Proximate," defined as lying or being in immediate relation with something else, is synonymous with "direct" or "immediate." "Direct" is defined as meaning free from intervening agencies or conditions; hence characterized by immediateness of relation or of action. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Coutourie, 135 Fed. 465, 473, 68 C. C. A. 177 (quoting Stand. Dict.).

The words "direct and proximate cause," as used in defining the liability arising from one's negligence, mean that cause which in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new cause, produces the injury. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas v. Lowe (Tex.) 86 S. W. 1059, 1060.

The word "direct," in a policy insuring against all "direct loss or damage by fire," read in the light of Civ. Code 1895, § 2094, providing that a loss or injury may be incurred from fire without the actual burning of the articles or property, means no more and no less than "proximate" or "immediate." The word "direct" means merely the "immediate" and "proximate," as distinguished from the "remote," cause. Insurance Co. of North America v. Leader, 48 S. E. 972, 974, 121 Ga. 260 (citing Ermentrout v. Girard Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 65 N. W. 635, 63 Minn. 305, 30 L. R. A. 346, 56 Am. St. Rep. 481; and quoting and adopting Elliott, Ins. § 221).

DIRECT ACTING ENGINE

The term "direct acting engine" is one which good usage warrants to exclude, engines with crank and flywheel and other rotative parts. Blake & Knowles Steam Pump Works v. Warran Steam Pump Co., 155 Fed. 285, 289.

DIRECT AND PROXIMATE CAUSE

See As the Direct and Proximate Cause.

DIRECT AND SPECIAL INTEREST

The "direct and special interest" of a private individual which entitles him to apply for mandamus to enforce his private right in the performance of a public duty must be independent of and distinguishable from that which obtains to him in common with the general public, though it may not be necessary that such particular interest should be different in kind from that of the general public or peculiar to the individual alone. Louisville Home Telephone Co. v. City of Louisville, 113 S. W. 855, 858, 130 Ky. 611.

DIRECT ATTACK

A "direct attack" on a judicial proceeding is an attempt to avoid or correct it in some manner provided by law. Continental Gin Co. v. De Bord, 123 Pac. 159, 161, 34 Okl. 66.

"A 'direct attack' on a judicial proceeding is an attempt to avoid or correct it in some manner provided by law. Or in other words, as is said by the Supreme Court in Crawford v. McDonald, 33 S. W. 327, 88 Tex. 630, 'a direct attack on a judgment is an attempt to amend, correct, reform, vacate, or enjoin the execution of same in a proceeding instituted for that purpose, such as a motion for a rehearing, an appeal, an injunction to restrain its execution, etc.'" Newman v. Mackey, 83 S. W. 31, 33, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 85 (citing Vanf. Col. At. § 2).

By "direct attack upon the judgment" is meant some proceeding in the action in which it was rendered, such as an attempt to impeach it on the ground of fraud. An appeal therefrom is a "direct attack." Parsons v. Wels, 77 Pac. 1007, 1009, 144 Cal. 410.

A "direct attack" on a judgment is an attempt to amend, correct, reform, vacate, or enjoin the execution of same in a proceeding instituted for that purpose, such as a motion for a rehearing and appeal, some form of writ of error, a bill of review, or an injunction to restrain its execution. Scudder v. Cox (Tex.) 80 S. W. 872, 873.

Where the main object of an appeal, writ of error, or motion, if taken or made in the original action, or in an independent action, is for the purpose of setting aside a judgment, such attack is "direct attack" on the judgment. O'Neill v. Potvin, 98 Pac. 20, 21, 41 Colo. 316 (citing 1 Black, Judg. § 252).

A judgment against defendant in an action for divorce upon a defective affidavit of service is not absolutely void and subject to attack in any court, but is subject only to direct attack, and an appeal is such a "direct attack." Belknap v. Belknap, 134 N. W. 734, 735, 154 Iowa, 213.

Collateral distinguished

Where a judgment set up in bar is directly assailed as procured by fraud, it is a "direct," and not a collateral, attack. Houser v. W. R. Bonsal & Co., 62 S. E. 776, 778, 149 N. C. 51.

In a proceeding to revive a judgment, an attack on the jurisdiction of the court by answer is a "direct attack" and not a "collateral attack." Waterman v. Bash, 89 Pac. 556, 558, 46 Wash. 212.

Where a petition, in a suit to quiet title to certain land, alleges that an order of court directing a guardian to sell land was procured by fraud, and prays to have the order of sale and subsequent orders approving the sale canceled, the suit is a "direct attack" on the orders and not a "collateral attack." Brown v. Trent (Ok.) 128 Pac. 895, 897.

Where certain claims were allowed against a decedent's estate, and the administrator was ordered to sell certain real estate for the payment thereof, a contest filed by plaintiff, objecting to the confirmation of a sale had under such order because the debts were barred by limitations and charging fraud on part of the husband of one of the heirs in procuring the administration to be opened for purpose of allowing such claims, constituted a "direct" and not a collateral attack on the proceedings allowing the claims. Smart v. Panther, 95 S. W. 679, 681, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 262.

A suit by a judgment debtor to vacate the judgment and to enjoin the execution of the same on the ground of its invalidity is a "direct" and not a collateral attack. Lane v. Moon (Tex.) 103 S. W. 211, 214.

A suit to redeem from a mortgage which has been foreclosed by a decree of the court on the ground that complainant, who was made a defendant in the foreclosure suit, was not legally served with process therein, and his right of redemption was therefore not cut off, is a "collateral" as distinguished from a "direct" attack in the foreclosure decree. Cohen v. Portland Lodge No. 142, B. P. O. E., 144 Fed. 266, 268.

DIRECT CAUSE

As proximate cause, see Proximate Cause.

DIRECT CONTEMPT

A direct contempt is a contempt committed in the face of the court, and may consist of noisy or tumultuous conduct in the presence of the court, or so near thereto as to interrupt its proceedings, or an open defiance of its just powers or authority, or in disrespectful behavior or language to the presiding judge, or any improper conduct tending to defeat or impair the administration of justice. Ex parte Clark, 106 S. W. 990, 996, 208 Mo. 121, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 389.

A direct contempt of court is the doing of any improper act in the presence of the court while in session, tending directly to disturb the proceedings, or to defeat, disturb, or impair the administration of justice, or the refusal to do any improper act required to be done in open court in the presence of the court, where such refusal directly tends to disturb the proceedings, or to defeat, disturb, or impair the administration of justice. Ferriman v. People, 128 Ill. App. 230, 234.

Criminal contempts are direct when committed in the face of the court, or when committed out of the view of the court, if they tend to impede, embarrass, or obstruct the court in administering justice. In re Clark, 103 S. W. 1105, 1107, 126 Mo. App. 391.

A "direct contempt" is such conduct or language as interferes with the orderly administration of justice, and may consist of an open insult in the presence of the court to the person of the presiding judge, or a resistance to or defiance of the power and authority of the court. Neely v. State, 54 South. 315, 316, 98 Miss. 816, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 138, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 281.

Contempts are either direct or indirect. They are "direct" when committed in the immediate view and presence of the court or of the judge at chambers. State ex rel. Breen v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist., 85 Pac. 870, 871, 34 Mont. 107; Smythe v. Smythe, 114 Pac. 257, 258, 28 Okl. 266.

Appearing in court and refusing to produce the body of a child pursuant to the requirements of a writ of habeas corpus, without a reasonable excuse, or willfully making an evasive or insufficient answer thereto, is a "direct contempt" committed in the presence of the court. Smythe v. Smythe, 114 Pac. 257, 258, 28 Okl. 266.

DIRECT DAMAGES

Damages are either "direct" or "consequential"; the former being such as result from an act without the intervention of any intermediate controlling or self-efficient cause. Loiseau v. Arp, 114 N. W. 701, 703, 21 S. D. 566, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 855, 130 Am. St. Rep. 741.

DIRECT DESCENDANTS

The words "direct descendants" as used in a will conveying certain property to be held in trust for the benefit of testator's son and his direct descendants, means his nearest or immediate descendants; in other words, "children." Ballantine v. Ballantine, 152 Fed. 775, 776, 786.

Where testator's father established by his will a certain permanent fund, with reference to which he gave testator a power of appointment to the father's "direct descendants," a will bequeathing a certain fund to "testator's children" was a valid exercise of the power; they being the direct descendants of testator's father. Stone v. Forbes, 75 N. E. 141, 144, 189 Mass. 163.

A testator directed that the remainder of his estate be held by his executor upon trust to pay the income to his wife until the youngest child then living reach the age of 21 years, and on the death of his wife to pay income to his four children, naming them, "or to the direct descendant or descendants of either of them in equal shares," or if the youngest child should reach the age of 21 years during the life of the wife, to pay one-third of the income to his wife and two-thirds to his said children, "or such of them as may then be living, or to their direct descendant or descendants share and share alike." Held, that the children took a vested interest in the income, subject to the trusts created, and that on the death of the widow, there being no gift over of the corpus, the children or the direct descendants of those deceased would take the trust fund absolutely, and that the words "direct descendants," as used by the testator, mean descendants of any child dying during the existence of the trust, and not descendants of those of the children living at the death of testator's wife and the termination of the trust. Frelinghuysen v. Frelinghuysen, 85 Atl. 171, 172, 80 N. J. Eq. 482.

DIRECT EVIDENCE

See, also, Direct Testimony.

"Direct evidence" is proof of the facts by witnesses who saw the acts done or heard the words spoken." Buckler v. Kneezell (Tex.) 91 S. W. 367, 370.

"Direct evidence" is that evidence which is given by eyewitnesses who have seen the things about which they testify. Knickerbocker v. Worthing, 101 N. W. 540, 544, 138 Mich. 224.

"Direct evidence" is defined to be that which proves the fact in dispute directly, without an inference or presumption, and which, in itself, if true, conclusively establishes that fact. Lake County v. Neilon, 74 Pac. 212, 214, 44 Or. 14.

"Direct evidence" is such as the confessions of the accused, or the testimony of persons who saw the crime committed." State v. Collins (Del.) 62 Atl. 224, 226, 5 Pennewill, 263.

"Direct evidence" is that which immediately points to the question at issue. It is positive in its character. It often depends upon the credibility and intelligence of the witnesses who testify to a knowledge of the facts. It may also be documentary in character. 'Direct' and 'circumstantial' evidence differ merely in their logical relations to the fact in issue. Evidence as to the existence of the fact is 'direct.' 'Circumstantial' evidence is composed of facts which raise a logical inference as to the existence of the fact in issue." United States v. Greene, 146 Fed. 803, 824.

"Circumstantial evidence" is a kind of evidence wholly different from evidence consisting of the direct and positive testimony of eyewitnesses. It is no stronger than the weakest link in the chain. It is inferior in cogency and effect to "direct evidence." The fallacy of the declaration that "circumstances cannot lie" lies in the fact that whether the facts constituting the chain of circumstances existed depends on the truthfulness of the witnesses deposing to the facts. There may be ten links in the chain of circumstantial evidence offered to convict a defendant. Each one of these links or circumstances is testified to by witnesses; and the difference, therefore, is, where the question is whether the defendant committed the homicide, that, if the testimony be direct, the killing may be established by the clear testimony of a single eyewitness, whereas, if the evidence be circumstantial, a number of witnesses necessarily must be examined to make out every link in the chain, every circumstance in the series, before the jury will be warranted in deducing from the circumstances the conclusion that the defendant did the killing. A statement by the court to the jury, therefore, that circumstantial evidence is as good as any other kind of evidence is tantamount to telling the jury that there is no difference between the nature of circumstantial evidence and the nature of direct testimony, and is therefore wholly misleading and erroneous. Haywood v. State, 43 South. 614, 615, 90 Miss. 461.

Where perjury was assigned on defendant's testimony that he had written certain telegrams while in a cell in Ogden, Utah, and immediately gave them to S., evidence of two police officers that before reaching the police station, after defendant was arrested at Ogden, S. took one of the telegrams from her hat and handed it to one of the officers, and that the other was found in defendant's grip, which the officer took charge of, when defendant was arrested, and searched immediately after reaching the police station, and before defendant was taken to his cell, constituted "direct" evidence of the falsity of defendant's testimony, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, defining "direct evidence" as that which proves the fact in dispute without inference or presumption, and which in itself, if true, conclusively establishes the fact. On a trial for perjury, "direct evidence" is not limited to a denial in ipsissimis verbis of the testimony given by the defendant, but includes any positive testimony of a contrary state of facts from that sworn to by him at the former trial or which is absolutely incompatible with his evidence, or physically inconsistent with the facts testified to by him. People v. Chadwick, 87 Pac. 384, 386, 4 Cal. App. 63 (citing People v. Green, 54 Cal. 592; People v. Barry, 63 Cal. 62; People v. Wells, 37 Pac. 529, 103 Cal. 631; People v. Porter, 38 Pac. 88, 104 Cal. 415).

An instruction that evidence is of two kinds, direct and circumstantial, and that "direct evidence" is when a witness testified directly of his own knowledge of the main fact or facts to be proven, and that circumstantial evidence is proof of certain facts and circumstances in a certain case from which the jury may infer other and connected facts which usually and reasonably follow according to the common experience of mankind, is correct. State v. Gatlin, 70 S. W. 885, 888, 170 Mo. 354; State v. Hillman, 127 S. W. 102, 103, 142 Mo. App. 510.

DIRECT INJURY

A "direct injury to property" is a taking thereof within the constitutional meaning of that word relating to the taking of property for public use. Leffmann v. Long Island Ry. Co., 93 N. Y. Supp. 647, 648, 47 Misc. Rep. 169.

"When soil is removed from its natural position by one owner and the soil of an adjoining owner is thereby permitted to fall, such result is not a consequential damage, but a direct injury. * * * It is true that the word 'damaged' has been held to mean such damages as were recoverable at common law between individuals, but, in view of the rule of the carrying away of land by its own weight is not consequential damage, but is an actual infringement and 'taking of property,' we think the same rule should apply where the land is carried away by means of water which is released in a public street by any means which would amount to an actual 'taking' and a resulting damage." And hence where land is carried away by means of water which is released, in a public street through the operations of certain railroads in constructing a tunnel under the street, the damage so occasioned is an actual infringement and "taking of property" within the Constitution, declaring that private property shall not be "damaged" for public use without just compensation. Farnandis v. Great Northern R. Co., 84 Pac. 18, 20, 21, 41 Wash. 486, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1086, 111 Am. St. Rep. 1027.

DIRECT INTEREST

If the legal effect of a judgment will be to establish a claim against the witness, he has a "direct interest" in the event of the suit, within Laws 1867, p. 183, removing the disqualification of witnesses on account of their interest in the event, except that a party interested shall not be allowed to testify of his own motion. A judgment against a street railway company for death caused by the alleged negligence of a motorman in an action to which the motorman was not a party would not be evidence against the motorman in a suit by the railway company to recover over against him, and hence such motorman was not interested in the suit against the railway company so as to be an incompetent witness for the defendant therein within such statute. Feltl v. Chicago City R. Co., 71 N. E. 991, 994, 211 Ill. 279.

DIRECT LEGAL INTEREST

The interest of the president of a bank as a stockholder is a "direct legal interest," within Code Civ. Proc. § 329, which prohibits a person having such an interest from testifying as to a contract or transaction had with a decedent. Dickenson v. Columbus State Bank, 98 N. W. 813, 814, 71 Neb. 260.

DIRECT LOSS

The word "direct," as used in a fire policy, insuring a stock of merchandise in a described building against "all direct loss or damage by fire," except as provided therein, means no more and no less than proximate and immediate. Insurance Co. of North America v. Leader, 48 S. E. 972, 974, 121 Ga. 260.

The word "direct," as used in a policy of insurance against direct loss or damage by fire, means the immediate or approximate, as distinguished from the remote, cause but the approximate results of fire may include other things than combustion, as the resulting fall of a building, injuries to insured property by water, loss of goods by theft, exposure of goods during the fire, etc. A fire in a furnace of material so highly inflammable in character as to cause such volumes of heat and smoke to escape through the registers into the rooms, damaging the house and furniture, though without ignition outside of the furnace, is a "fire," within a policy of insurance against "direct loss or damage by fire." O'Connor v. Queens Ins. Co. of America, 122 N. W. 1038, 1049, 140 Wis. 388, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 501, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1081, 17 Ann. Cas. 1118.

DIRECT PAYMENT

"Direct payment," as used in Rev. St. 1887, § 4303, requiring an affidavit for attachment to set forth that defendant is indebted to plaintiff, specifying the amount of such indebtedness and whether on a contract for the direct payment of money, means absolute, unconditional, free from intervening agencies or conditions. Ross v. Gold Ridge Min. Co., 95 Pac. 821, 14 Idaho, 687.

The word "direct," as defined by Webster, is immediate, express, absolute; and if it is to be given any meaning as used in the attachment statute referring to actions on contracts for the payment of money it must distinguish a particular class of contracts for the payment of money from all other contracts for the payment of money. In other words, that class of contracts which provide for the direct payment of money must differ somewhat from all other contracts for the payment of money, or the term "direct" has no meaning whatever. An action against sureties on a bond conditioned to be void if the principal performed his contract is not an action on a contract for the "direct payment of money," within Code Civ. Proc. § 890, authorizing an attachment in such an action. Ancient Order of Hibernians, Division No. 1, of Anaconda, v. Sparrow, 74 Pac. 197, 199, 29 Mont. 132, 64 L. R. A. 128, 101 Am. St. Rep. 563, 1 Ann. Cas. 144.

The contract of an indorser of a promissory note or guarantor of a bill of exchange is a contract for the "direct payment of money," and a judgment may issue against the property of such indorser or guarantor, when action is brought to enforce payment of the debt, the same as against the acceptor or maker, under the provisions of Rev. St. 1887, § 4302. Armstrong v. Slick, 93 Pac. 775, 14 Idaho, 208.

DIRECT PROCEEDINGS

There is some confusion and apparent conflict in the decisions as to the term "direct proceedings," frequently used in reference to the method by which a judgment may be attacked. It arises, to some extent, from the fact that under an old system, when courts, law, and equity were separate, legal and equitable relief were administered on different sides of the docket. Houser v. W. R. Bonsal & Co., 62 S. E. 776, 778, 149 N. C. 51.

Where it is sought to set aside a judgment for irregularity because of want of service of summons, a motion in the cause to correct the record and make it speak the truth, and show that there was no service of summons nor appearance by defendant, is a direct proceeding, and is the appropriate remedy. Simmons v. Defiance Box Co., 62 S. E. 435, 148 N. C. 344.

DIRECT SERVICE

"Direct service," as used in connection with furnishing telephone service, means the exclusive use of a pair of wires running into the telephone exchange through the local cables. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Kelly, 160 Fed. 316, 323, 87 C. O. A. 268, 15 Ann. Cas. 1210.

DIRECT SETTLEMENT

A "direct settlement," as used in designating a transaction on the board of trade, is effected at the close of business hours by a broker's offsetting such contracts in the day's transactions as are similar in amount and time of delivery to counter contracts made with other members of the association, ascertaining therefrom the difference of the aggregate prices of such similar contract and charging it over against the other party or to his credit, as the case may be. It is then placed as a debit or credit on the clearing house sheet of the respective parties to the contracts. Board of Trade of City of Chicago v. L. A. Kinsey Co., 130 Fed. 507, 509, 64 C. C. A. 669, 69 L. R. A. 59.

DIRECT TAX

A tax is "direct" if imposed upon property solely by reason of its ownership. The tax measured by the net annual income imposed by Act Aug. 5, 1909, § 38, upon the carrying on or doing of business in a corporate capacity, is an excise and not a "direct tax," and hence is not invalid because not apportioned among the several states according to population. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 342, 348, 220 U. S. 107, 55 L. Ed. 389 (quoting and adopting definition in Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 15 Sup. Ct. 912, 158 U. S. 601, 39 L. Ed. 1108).

DIRECT TESTIMONY

See, also, Direct Evidence.

Where the fact in controversy is proved by those who speak of their own actual and personal knowledge of its existence, the proof is established by "direct testimony." State v. Blackburn (Del.) 75 Atl. 536, 7 Pennewill, 479.

DIRECT TRUST

See Express Trust.

Trusts are classified into two general divisions, "direct or express trusts" (that is, those springing from agreement of the parties), and into 'constructive or implied trusts' (that is, those created by the rules and principles of equity). Under this latter class fall all of those trusts known distinctively as implied or constructive, as well as those called resultant; in short, all those that do not spring from the agreement of the parties. * * * A constructive trust is one not created by any words, either expressly or impliedly evincing a direct intention to create a trust, but only by the construction and operation of equity in order to satisfy the demands of justice." Newman v. Newman, 55 S. E. 377, 379, 60 W. Va. 371, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 870.

DIRECTED TO THE DEFENDANT

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 228, requiring that service made by mailing shall be "directed to the defendant," the mailing of process, addressed to the partnership, in the partnership name only, is not a mailing "directed to the defendant," since in the absence of statutes, a partnership cannot sue or be sued apart from its members. Yarbrough v. Pugh, 114 Pac. 918, 921, 63 Wash. 140, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 351.

DIRECTED VERDICT

See Request for Directed Verdict.

In a criminal case, the court may direct a verdict against the state if the evidence is insufficient to overcome the presumption of innocence, but a verdict cannot be directed against the defendant, though the court may charge the jury that if they believe the evidence they will find the defendant guilty; that not being a "directed verdict." Everett v. Williams, 67 S. E. 265, 152 N. C. 117.

There is no difference between "permitting" and "directing" a verdict so far as those terms relate to the action of the judge or the effect upon the parties. Brooks v. Boyd, 57 S. E. 1093, 1096, 1 Ga. App. 65.

There is a distinction between a demurrer to plaintiff's evidence and a "directed verdict" by the court in plaintiff's favor. In order to sustain a demurrer to plaintiff's evidence for failure to make out a prima facie case, it is not necessary for the court to pass on the credibility of plaintiff's witnesses; their credibility is not only assumed, but the probative facts are given every reasonable intendment in order to ascertain the plaintiff's right of recovery. But a verdict for the plaintiff, peremptorily directed by the court upon evidence mainly oral in cases where the burden of proof is on the plaintiff, occupies an entirely different relation to the established principles of law. It has often been held that uncontradicted oral evidence of a party holding the burden of proof is not sufficient to command a directed verdict where the inferences to be drawn from all the circumstances are open to different conclusions by reasonable men. Link v. Jackson, 139 S. W. 588, 596, 158 Mo. App. 63 (citing Anthony v. Association, 38 N. E. 973, 162 Mass. 354, 26 L. R. A. 406, 44 Am. St. Rep. 367).

DIRECTION

See By the Written Direction of the Court; Under the Direction of.

The reference in appellants' bill of exceptions, that within a certain time after the trial of the cause a motion for a new trial was filed, as shown by entry of record at the time as appears on certain pages of the abstract, to the overruling of which the appellants excepted, did not amount to such a "direction to the clerk to copy the motion" for a new trial as is contemplated by Rev. St. 1890, § 866 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 815), providing that, if the bill of exceptions shall contain a direction to the clerk to copy the motion, and the same is copied, into the record, the motion need not be copied or set forth in the bill of exceptions. State ex rel.

Waggoner v. Leichtman, 180 S. W. 94, 95, 146 Mo. App. 295.

As authority to control

One of the accepted meanings of the word "direction" is the act of governing, ordering, or ruling. Kellyville Coal Co. v. Bruzas, 79 N. E. 309, 311, 223 Ill. 595.

The terms "direction" and "control," in Laws 1906, c. 657, § 42a, providing that employes of a railroad company intrusted with superintendence or control of other persons in the same employ, or with the authority to control any other employé, or who have as a part of their duty physical control or direction of the movement of a signal, switch, locomotive engine, etc., shall be deemed "vice principals," mean that which proceeds from superior authority, and the mere fact that an engineer switching freight cars had to rely upon a rear brakeman to give signals would not give the brakeman authority to control the engineer within the meaning of the statute so as to make him a vice principal of the railroad company, so as to render the company liable for injuries to a station agent from the negligence of the brakeman who independently of the statute would be his fellow servant. Hallock v. New York, O. & W. Ry. Co., 90 N. E. 1124, 1126, 197 N. Y. 450.

The words "order or direction," in the Employers' Liability Act making a corporation liable for injuries to its employes caused by the negligence of a person in its service, to whose order or direction the injured employé was bound to conform, apply to special orders as distinguished from general orders, and the protection of the statute does not extend to an employé injured by the negligence of his foreman while working under general directions. Indianapolis St. Ry. Co. v. Kane, 80 N. E. 841, 843, 169 Ind. 25.

DIRECTLY

The word "directly," as used in a local option law, prohibiting sales made "directly" or indirectly, does not mean a sale by the accused himself, but an exchange for money, as distinguished by a sale by a device resorted to to evade the law, and a complaint, charging a violation of such local option law, which alleges that a sale was made directly, is supported by evidence of a sale by a barkeeper of accused. State v. O'Brien, 90 Pac. 514, 520, 35 Mont. 482, 10 Ann. Cas. 1006.

Under a quarantine resolution of a board of health that the chairman should quarantine all "directly" exposed persons, it was proper to keep members of the sick person's family secluded from the public, where he was confined to his home with them. Kirby v. Harker, 121 N. W. 1071, 1072, 143 Iowa, 478.

As proximately

In Laws 1907, p. 495, c. 254, making a railroad liable for injuries to employes caused in whole or in the greater part by the negligence of other employes, and requiring the court to submit to the jury whether the railroad or the person injured was guilty of "negligence directly contributing to the injury," the quoted words are used to convey the idea of negligence proximately contributing to the injury. Zeratsky v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 123 N. W. 904, 907, 141 Wis. 423.

Since the words "directly contributing" have been construed to mean "proximately contributing," the trial judge would have followed the better practice had he used the latter term instead of the former in his submission of questions to the jury under Laws 1907, c. 254, providing that in an action for injuries against a railroad company the question as to whether the person injured was guilty of any negligence which "directly contributed" to the injury should among others be given to the jury. Jensen v. Wisconsin Cent. Ry. Co., 128 N. W. 982, 985, 145 Wis. 326.

Reasonable time or as soon as possible

"In Duncan v. Topham, 8 C. B. 225, the declaration alleged an order for goods to be delivered to the defendant within a reasonable time, but the proof showed a written order for 'five tons, etc., but it must be put on board directly,' to which the plaintiff replied, 'I shall ship you the five tons, etc., tomorrow.' Held, that the proof did not support the declaration and that 'reasonable time' was a more protracted delay than 'directly.'" Henderson v. McFadden, 112 Fed. 389, 394, 50 C. C. A. 304.

DIRECTLY INTERESTED

Under Mills' Ann. St. § 4816, by which no party to any civil action or person directly interested is allowed to testify therein of his own motion, where the adverse party defends as an administrator, a stockholder of the plaintiff bank, who was also cashier and a director, is a "person directly interested" and is incompetent to testify in an action against an administratrix to recover money of the bank misappropriated by the deceased. Brown v. First Nat. Bank of Douglas County, 118 Pac. 483, 484, 49 Colo. 393.

DIRECTLY OR INDIRECTLY

"Directly or indirectly to or for the public," includes service whether to a municipality or its inhabitants, or both, or by a municipality for itself or its inhabitants. Calumet Service Co. v. City of Chilton, 135 N. W. 131, 138, 148 Wis. 334.

A fraud order inquiry pending before the Post Office Department is a proceeding in which the United States, although having no direct money or pecuniary interest in the result, is "directly or indirectly interested," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 1782, making it a misdemeanor for a United States Senator to receive or agree to receive compensation for services rendered before any department, in relation to any proceeding in which the United States is so interested. Burton v. United States, 26 Sup. Ct. 688, 695, 202 U. S. 344, 50 L. Ed. 1057, 6 Ann. Cas. 362.

A fire insurance policy provided that the company should "not be liable for loss caused, directly or indirectly, by invasion, * * * or by order of any civil authority, or for loss or damage occasioned by or through * * * earthquake." Held, that the words "directly or indirectly" did not apply to the provision respecting earthquake; that, construing such provision most strongly against the insurer, in accordance with the established rule, the word "occasioned" was equivalent to "caused," and related to the origin of the fire; and the provision exempted the company from liability for a loss only where an earthquake was the immediate, direct, and proximate cause of the fire which destroyed the property. Baker & Hamilton v. Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 157 Fed. 280, 282; Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. of Brooklyn v. Willard, 164 Fed. 404, 90 C. C. A. 392, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 103.

A policy insuring against all direct loss by fire, except as thereafter provided, and then declaring that insurer shall not be liable for loss caused "directly or indirectly" by earthquake, makes insurer liable for loss by fire where an earthquake broke the water mains causing the water to escape, so that the fire department of the city had no water with which to extinguish the fire occurring the next day; the earthquake not being, in legal contemplation, the cause of the fire, for none of the parties contemplated that earthquake might cut off the water supply. It was averred that the earthquake broke the water mains so that the fire department had no water with which to extinguish the fire occurring the next day. It was clear that the averments failed to show that the earthquake was in legal contemplation the cause of the fire. It was averred on the part of the insurance company that the words "directly or indirectly" meant "proximately" or "remotely," and that the company was not liable for loss of which an earthquake was the remote cause, but this contention the court would not decide. Pac. Union Club v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. (Cal.) 107 Pac. 728, 732.

DIRECTOR

See Board of Directors; Dummy Director.

The words "directors, trustees, or managers," as used in Pub. St. 1901, c. 219, § 13, providing that service of writs against corporations may be made upon one of the directors, trustees, or managers, have reference to the board of directors, board of trustees, or board of managers, in view of chapter 245, § 5, providing that a person doing business in this state and residing outside the state may be summoned upon trustee process by serving the writ upon his servant or agent having charge of such business, and chapter 2, § 9, providing that the word "person," as used in section 5, shall apply to "bodies corporate and politic as well as to individuals," and chapter 245, § 3, providing that a trustee writ, shall be served upon the defendant and trustee, like a writ of summons; and where a foreign corporation had no clerk, treasurer, cashier, or member of its executive board of control within the state, service of trustee process, in a suit commenced in M. county, was properly made on a person having charge of a timber lot in such county, though a vice president of the corporation and two superintendents of mills operated by it reside in C. county. Dinnin v. Hutchins, 76 Atl. 126, 127, 75 N. H. 470.

In Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1781, 1782, authorizing an action against one or more of the trustees, directors, or managers, or other officers of a corporation, to compel an accounting and payment to the corporation of any money or property which they have acquired themselves or transferred to others in violation of their duty, the word "director" is used in the same way that the words "trustee," "manager," or other officer of the corporation having a general superintendence of its concerns, so that a director of a foreign corporation, transacting business and having its principal office in the state, may sue former directors for an accounting and restoration of the moneys of the corporation alleged to have been misapplied by them, and such right of action is not restricted to domestic corporations only. Miller v. Quincy, 72 N. E. 116, 117, 179 N. Y. 294.

As agent or trustee

A "director" of a corporation is an agent thereof. Marsters v. Umpqua Valley Oil Co., 90 Pac. 151, 153, 49 Or. 374, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 825.

"Directors" are trustees and representatives of the common property and the entire interests of all the stockholders of every class and description. Jones v. Nassau Suburban Home Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 1080, 1091, 53 Misc. Rep. 63.

A "director" of a corporation is not a trustee in the strict sense, though his duties are in many respects similar to those of a trustee, and his relation to the corporation is, in general, essentially that of a trustee. Marr v. Marr, 66 Atl. 182, 183, 72 N. J. Eq. 797.

DIRECTORY STATUTE

A clause in a statute is directory where it contains mere matters of direction, and is not followed by words of positive prohibition. Gomez v. Timon (Tex.) 128 S. W. 656, 657.

While difficult to formulate an exact rule for determining when a statute is "mandatory" and when it is "directory," as a general rule that interpretation will be adopted which will best subserve justice and the true legislative intent. A statute is mandatory when, if not all its provisions are complied with according to their terms, the thing done in reference to it is void. A "directory statute" is one whose provisions or part of them operate merely to advise the official or person who is to do or omit something therein pointed out, leaving the act or omission not destructive of the legality of what is done in disregard of the direction. Ex parte St. Hilaire, 64 Atl. 882, 883, 101 Me. 522, 8 Ann. Cas. 385 (citing Bish. Cr. Law, § 25; End. Interp. St. § 431).

A mandatory provision of a statute is one the omission to perform which renders proceedings void; while a directory provision is one the observance of which is not necessary to the validity of proceedings. Bond v. City of Baltimore, 84 Atl. 258, 260, 118 Md. 159.

Whether a statutory requirement is mandatory or directory depends on its effect. If no substantial rights depend on it and no injury can result from ignoring it, and the purpose of the Legislature can be accomplished in a manner other than that prescribed and substantially the same results obtained, then the statute will generally be regarded as directory, but if not, it will be mandatory. Granite Bituminous Paving Co. v. McManus, 129 S. W. 448, 452, 144 Mo. App. 593.

"By 'directory provisions' is meant that they are to be considered as giving directions which ought to be followed, but not so limiting the power in respect to the directions given that it cannot be effectually exercised without observing them." Hubbert v. Campbellsville Lumber Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 28, 30, 191 U. S. 70, 48 L. Ed. 101 (quoting Cooley, Const. Lim. 74).

It is difficult to lay down a general rule to determine in all cases when the provisions of a statute are merely "directory" and when mandatory or imperative; but, of all the rules mentioned, the test most satisfactory and conclusive is whether the prescribed mode of action is of the essence of the thing to be accomplished, or, in other words, whether it relates to matter material or immaterial, to matter of convenience or of substance. In determining whether or not a statutory provision as to the proceedings of a public officer is mandatory, significance is to be attached to the nature of the act, and also the language and form in which it is couched, as, for instance, whether or not it is, on the one hand, affirmative and such as would naturally be chosen to prescribe directions for an orderly and proper dispatch of business, or, on the other, negative or prohibitive, or expressive of a condition precedent, or appropriate to the creation of a limitation of power. Appeal of Spencer, 61 Atl. 1010, 1011, 78 Conn. 301.

"Directory statutes" are such as are not of the substance of the thing provided for. Wisconsin Laws 1869, c. 68, requiring an officer or person making a service of summons to indorse on such copy, over his signature, the date of such service, and that the same is a true copy of the original, is mandatory and not directory. Wendell v. Durbin, 26 Wis. 390, 392.

Statutory requirements for the guide of officers in the conduct of business and designed to secure order and system are "directory." French v. Edwards, 13 Wall. (80 U. S.) 506, 511, 20 L. Ed. 702.

Where a statute specifies a time within which a public officer is to perform an official act regarding the rights of others, it is merely directory, unless from the nature of the act or the phraseology of the statute the designation of the time is a limitation on the power of the officer. Hudson v. Williams, 62 S. E. 1011, 1013, 5 Ga. App. 245.

"Words which in their ordinary acceptance, and when interpreted exclusive of the context and the subject-matter, imply a discretion of power, such as 'may,' 'it shall be lawful,' and the like, become, in the construction of statutes, mandatory, where such is the legislative intent. The general rule is stated as follows: 'Where a statute confers authority to do a judicial or, indeed, any other act, which the public interest or even individual right may demand, it is imperative on those so authorized to exercise the authority when the case arises, and its exercise is duly applied for by a party interested and having a right to make the application.' In giving one person the authority to do an act, the statute impliedly gives to others the right of requiring that the act be done; the power being given for the benefit, not of him who is invested with it, but of those for whom it is to be exercised. The Legislature in such cases imposes a positive and absolute duty, and not merely gives a discretionary power; and it must be exercised upon proof of the particular facts out of which the power arises. When, therefore, the language in which the authority is conferred is only 'directory,' permissive, or enabling (for instance, when it is enacted that the person authorized 'may' or 'shall if he deems it advisable,' or that 'it shall be lawful' for him to do the act), it has been so often decided as to have become an axiom that such expressions have a compulsory force, unless there are special grounds for a different construction." In re Owens' Estate, 85 Pac. 277, 279, 30 Utah, 351 (quoting and adopting definition in Clark v. City of Elizabeth, 40 Atl. 616, 737, 61 N. J. Law, 565, as quoted from Maxw. Interp. St. 213, 219).

See Pay Dirt.

Though Acts 1911, p. 605, c. 240, denouncing as unlawful the sale, keeping for sale, etc., of "milk containing visible dirt," fixed no standard by which visible dirt can be determined, it is not thereby rendered indefinite and incapable of enforcement, as the term "visible" has the common and specific meaning of being perceivable to the eye, and "dirt" contemplates any foul or filthy substance, or whatever, adhering to anything, renders it foul, unclean, or offensive. State v. Closser (Ind.) 99 N. E. 1057, 1060.

DIRTY SLUT

The words "dirty slut" spoken of a woman do not impute unchastity; the word "slut" meaning a careless, lazy woman, one uncleanly in her person. Cooper v. Seaverns, 105 Pac. 509, 510, 81 Kan. 267, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 517, 135 Am. St. Rep. 359 (quoting the definition in Cent. Dict.).

DISABILITY

See During Disability; Total Disability. Other disability, see Other.

The word "disability," as used in Ky. St. 1903, § 2525, providing that, if a person entitled to sue was, at the time the cause of action accrued, a married woman, the action may be brought within the number of years after the removal of the "disability of such person," does not mean, "disability to sue" but is merely descriptive of the condition of the person. Terrell v. Maupin (Ky.) 83 S. W. 591, 592.

"Disability to sue," as used in statutes of limitations, is used in the sense of a disability similar to minority, and refers to some characteristic of the person disqualifying him from acting freely in the protection of his rights, and not to an impediment to the suability of the particular cause of action. Wescott v. Upham, 107 N. W. 2, 3, 127 Wis. 590 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4060).

Where a statute enables married women who have property to pursue all remedies authorized by law in other cases, the mere social and marital influence of a husband over the wife cannot be regarded as a "disability." Brown v. Cousens, 51 Me. 301, 305.

Death

The word "disability" does not mean the same as the word "death," and is not ordinarily used to signify the same, and is defined as a want of competent power, strength, or physical ability, weakness, incapacity, impotence; and so a policy of insurance against loss on account of "temporary or permanent disability," without other words from which it was claimed liability for death was incurred, except a printed indorsement on the back stating it was a "limited health policy on the life" of insured, does not insure against death. Hill v. Travelers' Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., 124 N. W. 898, 146 Iowa, 133, 28, L. R. A. (N. S.) 742.

As physically disabled

The word "disability," as used in a statement in a benefit certificate, providing that it is also understood and agreed that the liability of the order to the said member or his beneficiary in case of his disability or death shall not exceed the amount of one assessment actually realized for the benefit fund from the membership in this division for the month in which the disability or death occurs, from which shall be deducted all accident and old age benefits previously paid hereunder, and not to exceed the principal sum named in this certificate, from which shall be deducted all accident and old age benefits previously paid hereunder, would cover any disability from accident, and not disability from old age. Hall v. Royal Fraternal Union, 61 S. E. 977, 979, 130 Ga. 820.

Under a contract for disability benefits to members, providing that the word "disability" should be held to mean physical inability to work, the term "disability" means inability to perform such labor as the injured party was engaged in at the time of his injury or similar work open and available to him whereby he could support and maintain himself as he was able to do before the accident, and not an inability to perform the ordinary duties in the employment in which he was engaged at the time of his injury. Keith v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 116 N. W. 957, 959, 82 Neb. 12, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 852, 130 Am. St. Rep. 655.

A regulation of an employer's relief department that "whenever used in this regulation the word 'disability' shall be held to mean physical inability to work by reason of sickness or accidental injury, and the word 'disabled' shall apply to members thus physically unable to work," refers to physical inability to work, whether by sickness or accidental injury, and in case of injury the right to relief is not limited to persons who can do no work of any kind. Sturgiss v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 60 S. E. 939, 941, 80 S. C. 167.

The contract of an employé with the relief department of a railroad provided for payment for each day of disability by reason of accident. The regulations of the department provided that the word "disability" should be held to mean physical inability to work. It is held that the decision of the medical examiner that the employé who had suffered amputation of a leg by reason of his injury was "able to work" will not be construed to mean that the employé has recovered from his disability, when it is shown by the evidence that the examiner at the same time declared plaintiff "able to do light work at present, * * * but he is still disabled." Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Olsen, 97 N. W. 831, 833, 70 Neb. 559.

A charge to allow compensation for bodily injuries and disabilities is not objectionable as allowing one recovery for bodily injuries and another for disabilities; the terms "injuries" and "disabilities" evidently referring to the same thing. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas v. Highnote (Tex.) 84 S. W. 365, 368.

Insolvency

Bankruptcy is not a "disability," as that term is used in Code Civ. Proc. § 40 (Gen. St. 1901, § 4468), providing that, in case of the death or disability of the party, the court may allow the action to continue by or against his representative or successor in interest. Buck Stove & Range Co. v. Vickers, 101 Pac. 668, 670, 80 Kan. 80, 84.

Resignation

Rev. St. § 953, as amended by Act June 5, 1900, c. 717, § 1, 31 Stat. 270, provides that a bill of exceptions shall be authenticated, if signed by the judge of the court in which the cause was tried, or by the presiding judge thereof, if more than one sat on the trial, and in case the judge before whom the cause was tried, by reason of death, sickness, or other disability, was unable to hear and pass on the motion for a new trial and allow and sign the bill of exceptions, then the judge who succeeds such trial judge, or any judge of the court, if the evidence in such case has been or is taken in stenographic notes, or if the judge is satisfied by any other means that he can pass on such motion and allow a true bill of exceptions, shall pass on the motion and allow and sign the bill; but, if he is satisfied that he cannot fairly pass on the motion and allow and sign the bill of exceptions, he may in his discretion grant a new trial. Held, that the term "disability," as so used, was not limited to physical or mental disability, arising either from death, sickness, insanity, or disorder of like character, by reason of which the trial judge was disabled from performing his judicial functions, but meant "incapacity to do a legal act," and hence included incapacity of the trial judge to sign and settle a bill of exceptions, due to his resignation from the bench, in which case, the evidence having been taken stenographically and transcribed, his successor had jurisdiction to sign and settle a bill of exceptions. McIntyre v. Modern Woodmen of America, 200 Fed. 1, 5, 121 C. C. A. 1.

The appointment of the District Judge before whom a cause was tried in a Circuit Court to be a Circuit Judge to serve in the Commerce Court and his acceptance of such appointment creates a "disability," which disqualifies him while so serving from allowing a bill of exceptions in such cause, and it may properly be allowed and signed by another judge appointed or designated temporarily to preside in such court, under Rev. St. § 953, as amended by Act June 5, 1900, c. 717, § 1, 31 Stat. 270, which provides that in case the judge before whom a cause is tried in a federal court is, "by reason of death, sickness or other disability," unable to hear and pass upon a motion for new trial and allow and sign a bill of exceptions, such bill may be allowed and signed by the judge who succeeds him or any other judge of the court in which the cause was tried holding such court thereafter. Sanborn v. Bay, 194 Fed. 37, 39, 114 C. C. A. 57.

DISABLE

See Wholly Disabled.

Immediately disabled, see Immediately.

A regulation of an employer's relief department that "whenever used in this regulation the word 'disability' shall be held to mean physical inability to work by reason of sickness or accidental injury, and the word 'disabled' shall apply to members thus physically unable to work," refers to physical inability to work, whether by sickness or accidental injury, and in case of injury the right to relief is not limited to persons who can do no work of any kind. Sturgiss v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 60 S. E. 939, 941, 80 S. C. 107.

Permanent injury

Where an instruction employed the expression, "will in the future disable him from earning money and making a support," the word "disable" is not modified by the adverb "totally," and evidently is used to describe the condition of permanency in the impairment of earning capacity rather than the complete destruction thereof. Goodloe v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 96 S. W. 482, 485, 120 Mo. App. 165.

DISAGREE—DISAGREEMENT

A stipulation in a contract provided that, if any difference should arise between the parties, it should be submitted to arbitration. Held, that the word "difference" meant "disagreement," requiring arbitration before suit brought. Fravert v. Fesler, 53 Pac. 288, 290, 11 Colo. App. 387.

There is a "disagreement" within the meaning of the term as used in the arbitration clause of an insurance policy, providing that in the event of disagreement as to the amount of loss the same shall be ascertained by two competent and disinterested appraisers, so as to necessitate arbitration, where insured and the insurer have in writing stated their disagreement as to the amount of the loss, and have each selected an arbitrator. Fowble v. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., 81 S. W. 485, 487, 106 Mo. App. 527.

The words "disagreement" and "inability to agree," in statutes authorizing condemnation proceedings in cases of disagreement or inability to agree, imply negotiations and an unsuccessful attempt to agree. In re City of New York, 91 N. Y. Supp. 987, 992, 45 Misc. Rep. 184.

Where the purchaser under an executory contract for the purchase of land assigns, without the joinder of his wife, his interest thereunder for a certain consideration, part of which is paid in cash, and by the terms of the assignment it is provided that, in case of "disagreement," the portion of the price so paid shall be returned to the assignee, a subsequent demand by the assignee upon the assignor for a perfect title by warranty deed from the assignor and his wife, and the refusal of such demand by reason of the wife's refusal to join in the deed, constitutes a "disagreement"; and hence specific performance cannot be had against the assignor upon his subsequent acquisition of the legal title from his vendor. Kasal v. Hlinka, 136 N. W. 569, 571, 118 Minn. 37.

DISALLOW—DISALLOWANCE

The word "disallow" is defined by Webster's Dictionary to mean to refuse to allow, to deny the validity of, to disown or reject; and a judgment reciting that, objections being filed "in the nature of a claim," it was ordered that they be "disallowed" was not a statement that the ordinary heard evidence and passed on the question of title. The word is often applied to a refusal to allow an amendment to pleadings as indicating holding, as a matter of law, that such offered amendment is improper and not that the judge heard evidence in regard to the allegations and passed on the merits of them. Dix v. Dix, 64 S. E. 790, 791, 132 Ga. 630.

An order of the board of county commissioners, allowing $50 "in full payment of the claim" for $300, is not a disallowance of a definite and certain part of the claim, within Mills' Ann. St. § 802, authorizing appeals where any claim against the county shall be disallowed in whole or in part. Washington County v. Murray, 100 Pac. 588, 590, 45 Colo. 115.

Where a bankrupt's trustee indorsed a claim "disallowed as a preferred claim," such indorsement did not constitute an adjudication of the invalidity of an alleged lien held by the claimant, so as to bar the trial and determination of that question in an action against the trustee to enforce the lien. Skilton v. Coddington, 93 N. Y. Supp. 460, 463, 105 App. Div. 617.

Where a contract for the sale of certain patents was to be noneffective if the patents were "disallowed in substance," and several of the patents were not allowed, and one was allowed, but on account of its interference with a patent for a similar device was not issued, the patents were "disallowed in substance." Murphey v. Weil, 61 N. W. 315, 316, 89 Wis. 146.

DISAPPEARANCE

A provision, in an accident insurance policy, that it did not cover "disappearance" or any injury of which there was no visible mark of violence appearing on the body of the insured undoubtedly included disappearance by death or otherwise. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. of Detroit, Mich., v. McNulty, 157 Fed. 224, 226, 85 C. C. A. 22.

DISAPPOINTMENT

As mental anguish, see Mental Agony or Anguish.

DISAPPROVED

The word "disapproval," as used in Const. art. 7, § 15, providing that every bill passed by the Legislature making appropriations of money, embracing distinct items, shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the Governor, and if he disapprove the bill, or any item or appropriation therein contained, he shall communicate such disapproval with his reasons therefor to the House in which the bill originated, and any item or items so disapproved shall be void unless repassed by a majority of each House according to the rules and limitations prescribed in the preceding section in reference to other bills, relate not simply to disapproval in the mind of the Governor, but to some act of disapproval, some manner of disapproval. That act or manner of disapproval provided for just above these words, and to which "so disapproved" clearly relates, is by communication with reasons to the House in which the bill originated. The very connection between the words "so disapproved" and "unless repassed" show that the Constitution intends that the disapproval of the Governor, to be a disapproval at all, must be communicated to the House of the Legislature in which the bill originated, so that the Legislature may again act upon the item, so that it may repass it, if the Governor's reasons for disapproval do not persuade it to do otherwise, by a majority of each House according to the rules and limitations prescribed. Only by being "so disapproved" is the item declared void by the Constitution. Disapproval in any other form or manner does not affect it. May v. Topping (W. Va.) 64 S. E. 849, 850.

DISASTER

The word "disaster" is defined to be misfortune, mishap, calamity; any unfortunate event especially sudden or great misfortune; a word used with much latitude, but most appropriately for some unforeseen event of a very distressing or overwhelming nature; hence an instruction which uses "disaster" rather than accident is not erroneous. Colorado Springs Electric Co. v. Soper, 88 Pac. 161, 165, 38 Colo. 126 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict.).

The sinking of a vessel, causing damage to its cargo, was the "disaster" causing the loss, within an open policy of marine insurance issued to a carrier on its cargoes, insuring them "for account of whom it may concern," containing a provision that no actions should be maintained thereon "unless commenced within the time of 12 months next after the disaster causing such loss or damage shall occur," and the insured had immediately a right of action for the benefit of any party in interest, independently of any antecedent recovery against it by the cargo owner, and that an action was barred in 12 months thereafter. Lehigh Val. R. Co. v. Providence Washington Ins. Co., 172 Fed. 364, 365, 97 C. C. A. 62.

DISBARMENT PROCEEDING

As criminal action, see Criminal Action.

DISBURSE—DISBURSEMENTS

See Money Disbursed; Necessary Disbursements.

See, also, Appropriate—Appropriation.

The appropriation of public money and its disbursement are two different and separate acts. Webster's definition of "appropriation," so far as here pertinent, is: "The act of setting apart or assigning to a particular use or person in exclusion of all other; application to a special use or purpose, as of money to carry out some object." "Disbursement" is of course the same as "payment." In our systems of government, federal and state, the appropriation and the payment of public moneys are always kept distinct, and appropriations are often coupled with some condition whose performance is to come after the appropriation, but before the actual payment. Brown v. Honiss, 68 Atl. 150, 158, 74 N. J. Law, 501.

As costs

See Cost.

As expenditure

The word "disbursements," as used in section 48 as amended, should be construed, with reference to receivers, to include the value of property taken possession of by the receiver and delivered to others in specie. In re Cambridge Lumber Co., 136 Fed. 983, 986.

DISCARD

An instruction that, if any witness had willfully testified falsely in regard to any material fact, the jury was at liberty to "disregard and discard his entire testimony" is not objectionable because of the use of the words "disregard" and "discard" instead of "distrust," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 3, providing that, when a witness is false in one part of his testimony he is to be "distrusted" in the others, since the court did not tell the jury that they ought to reject, or that they must reject, the entire evidence of the witness, but simply instructed them that they were at liberty to disregard and discard the whole evidence of a witness who had willfully testified falsely to a material fact in the case. Whitaker v. California Door Co., 95 Pac. 910, 911, 7 Cal. App. 757; People v. Soto, 59 Cal. 367.

DISCHARGE

See Brush Discharge; Legally Discharged; Port of Discharge; Release and Discharge; Release, Remise, and Forever Discharge.

Ready to discharge, see Ready.

See, also, Release.

Of attachment

In Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5374, as to the effect of giving a bond in attachment, expressly stating that the attachment shall be "discharged" and restitution made of property taken, the term "discharged" is used as referring to the attachment and must mean that the attachment then becomes a closed incident in the case. Section 5376 provides that at any time before or after the "release" of the property, or before an actual levy has been made, application may be made that the writ be discharged on the ground that it was improperly issued. This section cannot be consistent with section 5374, if it is held that application may be made to discharge the writ of attachment after it has already been discharged by the giving of the bond. It must therefore refer to a "release" of the property made voluntarily or authorized, but without a discharge of the writ. Brady v. Onffroy, 79 Pac. 1004, 1007, 37 Wash. 482.

The word "discharge," as used in a memorandum in which plaintiff admitted a certain payment and consented to discharge the defendant until he can pay the balance without distressing his family, can mean no more than giving a day of payment of the balance until payment could be so made. Austin v. Smith, 39 Me. 203, 204.

Of debtor

A "discharge" of a defendant from execution, not appearing to have been by authority of the plaintiff or to have been acquiesced in or approved by her or her administrator, does not discharge the judgment. Wood v. Tyrrell (R. I.) 87 Atl. 429 (citing Whipple v. Whitman, 13 R. I. 512, 43 Am. Rep. 42).

Of employé

To "suspend" or "discharge" means to remove either temporarily or permanently from employment, and to "reinstate" may mean to receive back into employment only, or to put back into the same position or situation from which removed. Under Code Supp. 1907, § 679h, authorizing the chief of police to suspend or discharge any member of the force, but giving such suspended person the right to appeal to the board which might reinstate him, upon reinstatement by the board of a police captain suspended by the chief of police, the chief is not compelled to reinstate him as a captain, but could require him to report for duty as police patrol. Markey v. Pickley, 132 N. W. 883, 885, 152 Iowa, 508.

"Any form of words which convey to the servant the idea that his services are no longer required are sufficient to constitute a discharge." Johnson v. Crookston Lumber Co., 100 N. W. 225, 92 Minn. 393.

Of guardian

The words "removal" and "discharge" are used indiscriminately in the statute to designate orders of court which have the effect of simply removing guardians, executors, etc., from office without exonerating them from liability to account. Code Civ. Proc. § 1805, requiring action on a guardian's bond to be commenced within three years from the "discharge or removal" of the guardian, applies to an action after a final order of the court removing or discharging the guardian, and does not include termination of the guardianship by the ward attaining majority. Cook v. Ceas, 77 Pac. 65, 68, 143 Cal. 221.

Under section 32, c. 34, Comp. St., providing that no action shall be maintained against the sureties in any bond given by the guardian, unless it be commenced within four years from the time when the guardian shall have been "discharged," the term "discharged" means any mode by which the guardianship is effectually determined and brought to a close, either by the removal, resignation, or death of the guardian, the marriage of a female guardian, the arrival of a minor ward at the age of 21, or otherwise. Goble v. Simeral, 93 N. W. 235, 236, 67 Neb. 276 (quoting and adopting statements in Loring v. Alline, 9 Cush. [63 Mass.] 68).

A guardian's death was his "discharge," within Rev. Laws, c. 149, § 35, providing that no action shall be maintained against the sureties on a guardian's bond, unless brought within four years from his "discharge." Hill v. Arnold, 85 N. E. 97, 199 Mass. 109.

Of officer

The ineligibility of a person to office because of official default in the past does not cease upon the amount of the default being made good by his sureties in satisfaction of their own obligation. A receipt to the sureties for payment made by them under their bond is not a "discharge" obtained by the officer, within Const. art. 182. State ex rel. Stewart v. Reid, 42 South. 662, 663, 118 La. 106.

Of official duty

Revisal 1905, § 1868, provides that game wardens shall possess all the powers held by a constable at common law and under the statutes. Section 3708 declares that the prohibition against carrying concealed weapons shall not apply to officers of the state or any county, city, or town, charged with the execution of the laws, while "discharging their official duties." Held, that a game warden, shown to have had a concealed pistol in his possession while not in the actual performance of his duties, was not within the exception of section 3708, even if invested with the power of a constable for all purposes. State v. Shumons, 56 S. E. 701, 702, 143 N. C. 613 (citing State v. Hayne, 88 N. C. 625; State v. Boone, 44 S. E. 595, 132 N. C. 1107).

A "discharge" by a United States commissioner is not equivalent to an acquittal. Williams v. State, 82 N. E. 790, 791, 169 Ind. 384.

As used in New York City Charter, § 1398 (Laws 1897, c. 373, as amended by Laws 1901, c. 466), authorizing magistrates to discharge on Sunday persons who are under arrest, the word "discharge" has no reference to a trial but merely authorizes persons arrested to be discharged on Sunday, if there be no ground for holding them. People ex rel. Price v. Warden of New York State Reformatory for Women, Bedford, N. Y., 76 N. Y. Supp. 728, 729, 73 App. Div. 174.

Of receiver

The "discharge" of a receiver relates to the termination of the receivership and is asked and ordered for the reason that there is no longer any necessity for continuing the receiver. It is thus distinguished from a removal, which is simply a change in the personnel of the receivership, which itself continues unaffected. Pagett v. Brooks, 87 South. 263, 264, 140 Ala. 257.

The "discharge" of a receiver relates to the termination of the receivership. Ripy v. Redwater Lumber Co., 106 S. W. 474, 478, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 311.

Of tax

The way to "discharge" a tax being to pay it, the property owner, who once pays taxes on his property in good faith, is thereby discharged from further liability for taxes thereon for the year for which the taxes paid were assessed. Nyce v. Schmoll, 82 N. E. 539, 540, 40 Ind. App. 555.

DISCHARGE IN BANKRUPTCY

As decree, see Decree.

Bankr. Act 1898, § 17, provides that a "discharge in bankruptcy" does not release a bankrupt from provable debts not duly scheduled in time for proof and allowance, with the name of the creditor, if known to the bankrupt, unless the creditor had notice or actual knowledge of the proceedings. Dight v. Chapman, 75 Pac. 585, 586, 44 Or. 265, 65 L. R. A. 798.

DISCHARGEABLE DEBT

A fine imposed, though after filing the petition, by a state court for a criminal contempt, is not a dischargeable debt under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17a, 30 Stat. 550, and proceedings for its enforcement will not be stayed, if the contempt have itself occurred prior to filing the petition. In re Hall, 170 Fed. 721.

DISCHARGED AS IMPROVED

The term "discharged as improved" is not the equivalent of "discharged as cured," within the meaning of the latter term as used in Gen. St. 1909, § 8484, providing for restoring the rights of persons discharged as cured of insanity. Johnson v. Schoch, 118 Pac. 696, 697, 85 Kan. 837.

DISCHARGING

See Dispatch for Discharging.

DISCIPLINE

The word "discipline," as used in Rev. Codes 1905, § 1752, relating to the National Guard, means system of drill; systematic training. State v. Peake, 135 N. W. 197, 201, 22 N. D. 467; 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 354.

DISCLAIMER

A "disclaimer" is a mode of defense. Isham v. Miller, 14 Atl. 20, 21, 44 N. J. Eq. 61.

As a plea

In ejectment, a plea by one of the defendants jointly sued that he was not in possession of the land sued for or any part thereof, that he was jointly sued with the other defendant, who at the commencement of the suit and still was in active possession of all the land sued for, and that there was therefore a misjoinder of parties defendant in the action, for which the pleader prayed that the suit abate as to him, was in effect a "disclaimer" and did not operate as a plea in abatement. Dennis v. Price, 41 South. 840, 841, 148 Ala. 243 (citing Bailey v. Selden, 26 South. 909, 124 Ala. 403).

DISCONTINUANCE

As settlement, see Settle—Settlement.

Of action

"Discontinued," with reference to an action, is synonymous with stricken from the docket, filed away. Aikman v. South (Ky.) 97 S. W. 4, 5.

A "discontinuance" is in effect an abandonment of the pending cause, and only a declaration of the party's willingness to stop the action, and it is not an adjudication of his cause by the proper tribunal, nor an acknowledgment by him that his claim is not well founded. Farmers' Oil & Mfg. Co. v. Melton & Stuart, 49 South. 225, 226, 159 Ala. 469.

Where, pending trial to a jury, the case was settled pursuant to stipulation before submission, it was not "discontinued," within Rev. St. § 824, allowing a discontinuance fee. Howler v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 166 Fed. 828, 831.

The continuance of a civil suit by a justice of the peace for more than 90 days from the return day of the summons, without the consent of the parties, is a "discontinuance" of the action, and therefore a final order, which may be reviewed by proceedings in error in the district court. Tongue v. Lloyd, 138 N. W. 738, 739, 92 Neb. 488.

An action in a justice's court is not "discontinued" by the mere fact that no orders of continuance or other orders are made on the docket therein. Where judgment was rendered in an action before a justice and on a writ of prohibition was held void, and a second judgment was rendered and a period of 18 months during pendency of the prohibition elapsed between the two judgments without any order in the action, there was no "discontinuance." Thomasson v. Simmons, 50 S. E. 740, 741, 57 W. Va. 576.

Of business

In case of a sale to a firm on six months' credit, with condition that the account shall mature immediately on the "discontinuance of business by the purchaser," there is such discontinuance where one of the parties sells his interest in the business, though the other and a new partner continue to carry on the business. Warren & Lanier v. Cash, 39 South. 124, 126, 148 Ala. 158.

Of highway

An order by a board of street commissioners extending an avenue so as to include a certain street, widening the latter, and changing its name to that of the avenue, did not work a "discontinuance" of the street. Jones v. City of Boston, 74 N. E. 295, 297, 188 Mass. 53.

The building of fences across an old highway by direction of the selectmen, and the exclusion of travel therefrom, after the town, in town meeting, passed a vote accepting a proposition for opening of a new highway, was not a "discontinuance of the old highway," within Comp. Gen. St. 1838, pp. 344, 346 (Rev. St. 1849, p. 421), providing that the selectmen of a town might, with the approbation of the town, discontinue any public highway, and such discontinuance could only be accomplished by a vote to that effect by the selectmen. Greist v. Amrhyne, 68 Atl. 521, 523, 80 Conn. 280.

Within law relating to ouster

"A 'discontinuance,' within the law relating to ouster, occurs when the feoffee of tenant in tail holds beyond the life of the feoffor, under a feoffment for a greater estate than the latter can convey, his possession thus retained being considered as an injury to the heir in tail, whose ancient legal estate is thereby destroyed or at least suspended or for a while discontinued." Dobbins v. Dobbins, 53 S. E. 870, 872, 141 N. C. 210, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185, 115 Am. St. Rep. 682 (citing 3 Black. Com. 167).

DISCONTINUE

Where the by-laws of a private corporation give the board of directors power to elect a secretary, treasurer, and other officers and agents that may be required, and to continue or discontinue them in office, the expression "discontinue" gives them the right to remove such officers and agents. Darrah v. Wheeling Ice & Storage Co., 40 S. E. 373, 374, 50 W. Va. 417.

DISCONTINUOUS EASEMENT

The distinction between easements "continuous and discontinuous" is found in the Civil Code of France, where easements or servitudes are divided into continuous and discontinuous, and are defined: "Continuous are those of which the enjoyment is or may be continued, without the necessity of any actual interference by man, as a water-spout or a right of light or air." "Discontinuous are those enjoyment of which can be had only by the interference of man, as rights of way, or a right to draw water." Fayter v. North, 83 Pac. 742, 746, 30 Utah, 156, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 410 (quoting and adopting definition in Washburn, Easements and Servitudes [4th Ed.] 21).

Under Civ. Code, arts. 727, 766, defining "continuous servitudes" as those whose use is or may be continual without the act of man, and "discontinuous servitudes" as such as need the act of man to be exercised, and providing that discontinuous servitudes can be established only by title, a railroad for the transportation of sugar cane is a discontinuous servitude, and not prescriptible. Ogborn v. Lower Terrebonne Refining & Mfg. Co., 56 South. 323, 129 La. 379.

DISCOUNT

See Trade Discount.

"Discount," in finance, is "to purchase or pay the amount of in cash, less a certain per cent., as a promissory note, bill of exchange, etc., to be collected by the discountor or purchaser at maturity." Under a bank charter providing that certain classes of promissory notes and bills of exchange shall, "when discounted" by the bank, be upon the footing of foreign bills of exchange, a note is "discounted" by the bank when it deducts from the face of the note in advance the interest until maturity, and places the balance to the credit of the makers. Eastin v. Third Nat. Bank, 42 S. W. 1115, 1116, 102 Ky. 64 (quoting and adopting the definition in Cent. Dict.).

The purchase by a New Jersey corporation of the assets of a defunct building and loan association, with its own money, is not "discounting bills, notes, or other evidences of debt," within the meaning of the New Jersey corporation act. Clark v. Assefs Realization Co., 115 Ill. App. 150, 152.

As purchase

The "discounting" of promissory notes and other evidences of debt by national banks, under Rev. St. § 5136, is sufficiently comprehensive to include the acquisition both by way of purchase and by way of ordinary loan. Morris v. Third Nat. Bank of Springfield, Mass., 142 Fed. 25, 31; 73 O. C. A. 211.

As set-off or counterclaim

The word "counterclaim" is not synonymous with "discount." "Discount" is any deduction, while "counterclaim" is ordinarily used to signify some claim against the debt. An affidavit to a claim against a decedent, averring that there is "no legal offset or counterclaim" against the demand, does not comply with Ky. St. 1903, § 3870, requiring demands to be verified by an affidavit stating that there is no "offset or discount" against the same. Spradlin v. Stanley's Adm'r, 99 S. W. 965, 966, 124 Ky. 701.

DISCOUNTED

A note given to a bank in payment of a debt, including interest for the ensuing year, is not "discounted," within a provision of the bank's charter that notes discounted by it are placed on the same footing as foreign bills of exchange. Bramlette v. Deposit Bank of Carlisle (Ky.) 79 S. W. 193, 194.

A petition alleging that an obligation was during business hours at the plaintiff's regular place of business, and before its maturity, "discounted" at, by, and to plaintiff, is sufficiently explicit, as the term "discounted" has a well-known legal definition, which involved the statement that the note had been bought by the bank and paid for, it deducting and reserving interest. Davis v. Boone County Deposit Bank (Ky.) 80 S. W. 161, 162.

The word "discounted," as ordinarily used, applies to completed transactions, but not necessarily so, and it may apply as well to future as to past transactions. Where one agrees to guarantee a bank on account of business paper discounted to amounts designated, and the bank at the time of the guaranty had already discounted paper for an amount less than that stated, the guaranty is a continuing one, covering not only past but future transactions. National Bank of Chester County v. Thomas, 69 Atl. 813, 814, 220 Pa. 360.

DISCOVERED

In a parent's action for the death of a minor by being struck by a railroad train, the modification, by striking out the quoted word, of a requested instruction, that the duty of the engineer to make all reasonable effort to avoid striking the boy, did not arise till he "actually" discovered the boy in a position of peril, was not erroneous, since "discovered" means "actually discovered," and "actually discovered" does not mean more than "discovered." Haddox v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 127 Pac. 152, 46 Mont. 185.

DISCOVERED NEGLIGENCE

Plaintiff's claim that the conductor of the train which injured plaintiff discovered plaintiff's dangerous position in time to have prevented the injury if proper effort had been made by him, and failed, through negligence, to prevent the collision, was a claim made under what is familiarly termed "discovered negligence." Ft. Worth & R. G. Ry. Co. v. Bowen, 67 S. W. 408, 95 Tex. 364.

DISCOVERED PERIL

See, also, Discovered Negligence; Humanitarian Doctrine; Last Clear Chance.

"Negligence in failing to discover appellant's perilous position is not the equivalent of 'discovered peril.'" Hawkins v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas, 83 S. W. 52, 53, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 633.

The doctrine of "discovered peril" is a qualification of the rule that contributory negligence bars a recovery, and involves the principle that, though plaintiff was guilty of negligence in exposing himself to peril, he may recover where defendant, after knowing of the danger, could have avoided the injury by the exercise of ordinary care, but failed to do so. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Corbin's Adm'r, 67 S. E. 179, 181, 110 Va. 700.

By the doctrine of discovered peril is meant that, where the danger of inflicting an injury is discovered by the person inflicting it in time to have prevented the injury by the exercise of proper care, he will be liable for injury proximately resulting from his negligence, though the injury would not have occurred but for the previous negligence of the person injured. Furst-Edwards & Co. v. St. Louis S. W. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 146 S. W. 1024, 1026.

On an issue of "discovered peril" in reference to an accident at a railroad crossing, the essential questions are whether the engineer discovered that the injured person was attempting to cross the track in front of the train and the danger of his being struck by it, whether he then failed to use all the available means in his power, consistent with the safety of his train, to avert the danger and avoid injury, and whether the danger was discovered in time for the engineer to have prevented the accident by the use of the means at his command. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. King (Tex.) 123 S. W. 151, 153.

DISCOVERY

"Discovery" means something more than mere suspicion. It implies a certain degree of knowledge on the part of the person to be charged with the consequences of such discovery. Defendant deserted plaintiff, his wife, and left the state in 1891. In 1896 he obtained a divorce in Florida, which was void in this state because of lack of jurisdiction of the wife. During the same year plaintiff heard that he had married again, but when or where the marriage was contracted, or who his alleged second wife was, was not made known to her, and it did not appear that she ever knew where he was living, except that he was somewhere in Florida. In 1897 he left Florida and disappeared, and it was not until 1902 or 1903 that, through the efforts of plaintiff's brother-in-law, acting in her behalf, he was located in Baltimore, living with the woman he had so married. Held, that the information conveyed to plaintiff, more than five years prior to the commencement of her action for a divorce, that defendant had remarried would not preclude her obtaining a divorce, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1758, providing that a plaintiff is not entitled to a divorce, although adultery is established, where the action is not commenced within five years after plaintiff's discovery of the offense charged. Ackerman v. Ackerman, 108 N. Y. Supp. 534, 536, 123 App. Div. 750 (citing Judge Brewer in the case of Marbourg v. McCormick, 23 Kan. 38, 43; Parker v. Kuhn, 32 N. W. 74, 21 Neb. 413, 59 Am. Rep. 838; Judge Finch in the case of Higgins v. Crouse, 42 N. E. 6, 147 N. Y. 416).

The provision of Code, § 155 (9), declaring a three-year limitation for actions for relief on the ground of fraud or mistake, that the cause of action shall not be deemed to have accrued till "discovery" by the aggrieved party of the facts constituting such fraud or mistake, applies only when the "ground" of the action for relief is fraud or mistake; and the statute runs from the discovery of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake, and not from the discovery by a party of rights theretofore unknown by him. Bonner v. Statesbury, 51 S. E. 781, 782, 139 N. C. 3.

Of fraud—Knowledge distinguished

"Discovery," as employed in a statute or equitable rule of limitations, and "knowledge" are not convertible terms, nor does the former mean the result of a resort at leisure to known sources of information. The possession of the means of knowledge is equivalent to knowledge itself. A party who has the opportunity of knowing the facts of which he complains cannot avail himself of his inactivity, and thus escape the imputation of laches. Williamson v. Beardsley, 137 Fed. 467, 470, 69 C. C. A. 615.

The term "until discovery of the fraud," in the statute of limitations, does not necessarily mean until the party complaining had actual notice of the fraud alleged to have been committed. Constructive notice of the fraud is sufficient to set the statute in motion. Where the means of discovery lies in public records required by law to be kept, and which involve the very transaction in hand and the interests of the parties to the litigation, in such case the public records themselves are sufficient constructive notice of the fraud to set the statute in motion. Black v. Black, 68 Pac. 662, 666, 64 Kan. 689.

The phrase "until discovery of the fraud," in the third paragraph of Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4216, which provides a limitation of two years in case of action for relief on the ground of fraud, and which also provides that the cause of action in such cases shall not be deemed to have accrued until discovery of the fraud, does not necessarily mean until the party complaining had actual notice of the fraud alleged to have been committed, for constructive notice of the fraud is sufficient to set the statute in motion, even though there may be no actual notice. Where means of discovery lie in public records, required by law to be kept, which involve the very transaction in hand, and the interests of the parties to the litigation, the public records themselves are sufficient constructive notice of the fraud to set the statute in motion. Board of Com'rs of Garfield County v. Renshaw, 99 Pac. 638, 640, 23 Okl. 56, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 207 (citing Black v. Black, 68 Pac. 662, 64 Kan. 689).

In mining law

See Prior Discovery.

Under the federal statute providing that no location shall be made till the "discovery" of the vein or lode within the limits of the claim, it is enough that gold and silver bearing rock showing on the surface is found. Score v. Griffin, 80 Pac. 331, 332, 9 Ariz. 286.

The "discovery" of mineral on a claim, within Rev. St. §§ 2320, 2329, providing that no location of a mining claim shall be made until the "discovery" of the mineral within the limits of the claim is located, means such a "discovery" of mineral thereon that an ordinarily prudent man, not necessarily a miner, would be justified in spending his time and labor thereon in the development of the property. Cascaden v. Bartolis, 146 Fed. 739, 741, 77 C. C. A. 496; Fox v. Myers, 86 Pac. 793, 796, 29 Nev. 169; Murray v. White, 113 Pac. 754, 756, 42 Mont. 423, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1297.

When a locator of a mining claim finds therein any place containing mineral in certain quantity to justify him in expending the time and money necessary in prospecting and developing the claim, he has made a "discovery," whether the rock or earth is rich or poor, within Rev. St. U. S. § 2320, providing that no location of a mining claim shall be made until the discovery of the vein or lode within the limits of the claim located, but something more permanent must be discovered than mere shale, slide rock, or debris. Ambergis Min. Co. v. Day, 85 Pac. 109, 115, 12 Idaho, 108 (quoting and adopting definition in Migeon v. Montana Cent. R. Co., 77 Fed. 249, 23 C. C. A. 156).

Mere indications of oil, however strong, are insufficient to constitute a discovery of mineral within the limits of a mining claim in order to support an original location, especially where the substance found is claimed on one side to be oil, and on the other to consist only of shale grease. Dean v. Omaha-Wyoming Oil Co. (Wyo.) 128 Pac. 881, 884.

A "discovery" of a vein or lode, within the federal mining laws, which makes such discovery a necessary prerequisite to a valid location, takes place when the locator finds rock in place containing mineral, whether it assays high or low. It is the finding of the mineral in rock in place, as distinguished from float rock, that constitutes the discovery and warrants the location of a mining claim. Whether or not a discovery has been made is always a question of fact. Columbia Copper Min. Co. v. Duchess Mining, Milling & Smelting Co., 79 Pac. 385, 386, 13 Wyo. 244 (quoting and adopting Judge Hawley's definition as given in 1 Lindley, Mines [2d Ed.] p. 610).

"What may constitute a sufficient 'discovery' to warrant a location of a claim may be wholly inadequate to justify the locator in claiming or exercising rights reserved by the statute. What constitutes a discovery that will validate a location is a very different thing from what constitutes an apex, to which attaches the statutory right to invade the possession of and appropriate the property which is presumed to belong to the adjoining owner. In determining what constitutes such a 'discovery' as will satisfy the law and form the basis of a valid mining location, we find, as in the case of the definition of the terms 'lode' or 'vein,' that the tendency of the courts is toward marked liberality of construction, where a question arises between two miners who have located claims upon the same lode or within the same surface boundaries and toward strict rules of interpretation when the miner asserts rights in property which either prima facie belongs to some one else or is claimed under laws other than those providing for the disposition of mineral lands, in which latter case the relative value of the tract is a matter directly in issue." Grand Central Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., 83 Pac. 648, 677, 29 Utah, 490.

To constitute a "discovery" which will support the location of a gold placer claim or other rock bearing gold or silver deposits, or which will support the location of a gold placer claim as against another mineral claim, it is not necessary that the gold should have been found thereon in paying quantity, but there must have been such a discovery of gold as gives reasonable evidence that the ground is valuable for placer mining, taking into consideration its character, location, and surroundings. Lange v. Robinson, 148 Fed. 799, 802, 79 C. C. A. 1 (citing Book v. Justice Min. Co., 58 Fed. 106; Migeon v. Montana Cent. R. Co., 77 Fed. 249, 23 C. C. A. 156; Shoshone Min. Co. v. Rutter, 87 Fed. 807, 31 C. C. A. 223; Erhardt v. Boaro, 5 Sup. Ct. 564, 113 U. S. 536, 28 L. Ed. 1113; Nevada Sierra Oil Co. v. Home Oil Co., 98 Fed. 673; Book v. Justice Min. Co., 58 Fed. 106).

The uncovering of a mineral deposit in a known mineral-bearing lot and alongside of the old workings which had existed long prior to the inception of defendants' license from the landowner did not constitute a "discovery" within St. 1898, § 1647, providing that the discovery of a crevice or range containing ores shall entitle the discoverer to follow it until exhausted, free from the landowner's right to forfeit the license, etc.

St. Anthony Min. & Mill. Co. v. Shaffra, 120 N. W. 238, 239, 138 Wis. 507.

In patent law

See Inventive Discovery.

See Bill of Discovery.

"Discovery" means the production of evidence." The jurisdiction of equity to decree an accounting cannot be sustained on the ground that the complainant has a right to invoke the aid of equity for "discovery," where the complainant, as authorized by the chancery act, waives an answer under oath, and submits no interrogatory to be answered under oath, and elects to have the answer stand as a mere pleading. Daab v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co., 62 Atl. 449, 450, 70 N. J. Eq. 489.

"Discovery" is the disclosure by the defendant of facts, titles, documents, or other things, which are in his exclusive knowledge or possession, and which are necessary to the party seeking the discovery, as a part of a cause of action pending or to be brought in another court, or as evidence of his rights or title in such proceeding. Rosenberger v. Shubert, 182 Fed. 411, 413.

A "suit for discovery," belonging to the auxiliary jurisdiction exercised by court of equity in aid of an action at law or some other proceeding, should be carefully distinguished from the so-called "discovery" which may be and ordinarily is an incident of every equitable action. It is a part of the ordinary equity procedure that whatever be the relief sought, and whether the jurisdiction be exclusive or concurrent, plaintiff may, by means of allegations and interrogations contained in his pleading, compel defendant to disclose by his answer facts within his own personal knowledge which may operate as evidence to sustain plaintiff's contention. The name "discovery" is also given to this process of probing defendant's conscience and of obtaining admissions from him which accompanies almost every suit in equity; but it should not be confounded with "discovery" in its original and strict signification, nor with the suit for discovery in the technical sense which is sometimes made the ground for extending the concurrent jurisdiction of equity over cases otherwise belonging to the domain of the common-law courts. Balfour v. San Joaquin Val. Bank, 156 Fed. 500, 503 (quoting and adopting definition in Pom. Eq. Jur. [3d Ed.] § 144).

A motion in a divorce action for an order to examine defendant as to his property is for an "examination," and not for a "discovery," under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 803-809, relating to discovery of books and papers. Bradley v. Bradley, 122 N. Y. Supp. 626, 627, 137 App. Div. 751.

"The word 'discovery' is used in connection with bills of different classes or kinds. It is used in connection with bills containing no averments to distinguish them as being bills of discovery. The word is also used with reference to bills technically called bills of discovery, which do not pray for any relief and seek a discovery only in aid of an action at law. The word is also used with reference to bills properly denominated bills for discovery and relief. This class of bills is distinguished from those first alluded to by containing certain statements, averments, and prayers, such as statements of the facts, a discovery of which is desired, an averment that they rest within the knowledge of the defendant alone and are incapable of other proof, and that a discovery of them is material to enable plaintiff to obtain relief. These allegations are not formal merely, but essential to enable defendants to put a point in issue and to have a decision upon it, if desirable, whether the discovery is such that it ought to be granted. Woodman v. Freeman, 25 Me. 531, 545.

DISCRETION

See At Their Discretion; Best Skill and Discretion; Judicial Discretion; Sound Discretion.

Discretionary writ, see Mandamus.

"Discretion" is the freedom to act according to one's judgment. State v. Foren, 97 Pac. 791, 793, 78 Kan. 654.

"Discretion" is defined as deliberate judgment. Stewart v. Stewart, 62 N. E. 1023, 1025, 28 Ind. App. 378.

"Discretion" of court is a liberty or privilege allowed to a judge, within the confines of right and justice, to decide and act in accordance with what is fair, equitable, and wholesome, as determined by the peculiar circumstances of the case, and as discerned by his personal wisdom and experience, guided by the spirit, principles, and analogies of the law, to be exercised in accordance with a wise, as distinguished from a mere arbitrary, use of power, and under the law. Gaar, Scott & Co. v. Nelson, 148 S. W. 417, 421, 166 Mo. App. 51.

"Discretion" implies that, in the absence of positive law or fixed rule, the judge is to decide by his view of expediency or of the demands of equity and justice. Graffam v. Cobb, 56 Atl. 645, 647, 98 Me. 200.

By many authorities the word "discretion" is properly enough used to express that judicial judgment in discriminating as to weight and cogency between different witnesses, and between conflicting evidentiary documents and circumstances, which must be exercised in reaching every conclusion of fact from evidence. Nash v. Fries, 106 N. W. 210, 211, 129 Wis. 120.

"Discretion" in granting a new trial means an honest attempt, in the exercise of judicial duty, to see that justice is done to establish a legal right. Johnson v. Grayson, 130 S. W. 673, 676, 230 Mo. 380.

The "discretion" of the court in granting or refusing specific performance does not mean caprice, but means sound "discretion." Kirkpatrick v. Pease, 101 S. W. 651, 657, 202 Mo. 471.

"Discretion," which a chancellor may exercise in granting specific performance, does not mean caprice. It is rather a discretion governed by solid and settled rules and principles, a sound—meaning judicial—discretion. Aiple-Hemmelmann Real Estate Co. v. Spelbrink, 111 S. W. 480, 494, 211 Mo. 671, 14 Ann. Cas. 652 (quoting and adopting the definition in Kirkpatrick v. Pease, 101 S. W. 657, 202 Mo. 493, 494).

The court's "discretion" to relieve a party from a default is not a capricious or arbitrary discretion, but an impartial discretion, guided and controlled in its exercise by fixed legal principles. It is not a mental discretion, to be exercised ex gratia, but a legal discretion, to be exercised in conformity with the spirit of the law, and in a manner to subserve, and not to impede or defeat, the ends of substantial justice. In a plain case this discretion has no office to perform, and its exercise is limited to doubtful cases, where an impartial mind hesitates. Moody v. Reichow, 80 Pac. 461, 462, 38 Wash. 303 (quoting and adopting definition in Bailey v. Taaffe, 29 Cal. 423).

The "discretion," under Civ. Code, § 187, vested in the trial court in a divorce suit to allow the wife costs on appeal, is a discretion guided by law, based upon sound judgment, and inspired by the desire to promote justice, and must not be arbitrary or capricious. On awarding a husband a divorce and all the property, it was an abuse of discretion to refuse to make some allowance for the wife's costs on appeal. Cargnani v. Cargnani, 116 Pac. 306, 309, 16 Cal. App. 96.

Const. art. 8, § 2, as amended in 1910, provides that the Supreme Court may in its own discretion take original jurisdiction in habeas corpus proceedings. Held, that it was the intent to allow to the court the widest latitude consistent with law and justice in determining whether it will act in any given case, "discretion" not meaning absolute or arbitrary power when vested in an officer and meaning when vested in a court the exercising of the best of the court's judgment upon the occasion that calls for it, and the section does not thrust upon the Supreme Court the burden of hearing and deciding in the first instance every application for habeas corpus which might be presented to it, but before taking jurisdiction the court should consider the condition of its business, the hardships of petitioner incident to a denial of the writ, and whether he has any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the circuit court, and a remedy by appeal, and where the court's docket is greatly congested, so that if jurisdiction were taken other criminal cases equally meritorious, some involving the question of life and death, and nearly all involving the present imprisonment of the parties concerned, would have to be postponed, the court will refuse to take jurisdiction of a petition for habeas corpus by persons who have appeared in court and pleaded guilty to an offense, craving immediate sentence, on the ground that the clerk in entering the judgment failed to recite therein the crime for which they were sentenced, as expressly required by B. & C. Comp. § 1444; they having adequate remedy by application to the court to require the clerk to correct the judgment entry, by appeal to the Supreme Court, and by application for habeas corpus in the circuit court. Ex parte Jerman, 112 Pac. 416, 418, 57 Or. 387, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 149.

The words "in his discretion," as used in Acts 1897, p. 499, § 2, providing that, whenever the mayor shall find a party charged before him guilty of violating a town ordinance, he may impose "in his discretion" a fine or imprisonment, in the alternative, not to exceed the limits prescribed for such violation by the town ordinances, and such imprisonment may be accompanied with the additional requirement of hard labor, are not inconsistent with the words "in the alternative," but refer to the extent of the punishments, and not to the question whether the mayor could impose a single, instead of an alternative, sentence. Town of Union v. Hampton, 64 S. E. 1017, 1018, 83 S. C. 46.

A "discretionary duty" of an officer may be executive or judicial, according to the nature of the subject-matter. State v. Howard, 74 Atl. 392, 395, 83 Vt. 6.

The phrase "in his discretion," as used in Act April 23, 1902 (95 Ohio Laws, p. 259), authorizing the court, in proceedings for detaching unplatted farm lands from the city or village, to make the order or decree detaching such lands "in his discretion," do not import an absolute discretion upon a matter of public policy affecting the municipal government, but rather judicial discretion, to be exercised upon the hearing of the cause in determining whether the alleged reasons for detachment have a foundation in fact, and whether the detachment of the lands would in fact substantially embarrass the municipality. Incorporated Village of Fairview v. Giffey, 76 N. E. 865, 867, 73 Ohio St. 183.

Though the excise commissioners of the city of Camden have discretionary power to grant or refuse licenses to sell intoxicating liquors, and though "discretion" means the exercising of the best of their judgment upon the occasion that calls for it, yet if this discretion be willfully abused it is criminal, and an indictment will therefore lie against such commissioners who grant or refuse such a license from corrupt and improper motives. State v. Sweeten, 85 Atl. 309, 310, 83 N. J. Law, 364.

Where an officer's duty necessarily requires examination of evidence in the decision of questions of law and fact, the duty is not ministerial, but judicial or "discretionary." An act, however, is none the less ministerial because the person performing it may have to satisfy himself that a state of facts exists under which it is his right and duty to perform the act, though in doing so he must to some extent construe the statute by which the duty is imposed. Stephens v. Jones, 123 N. W. 705, 708, 24 S. D. 97.

As applied to public functionaries, "discretion" is defined to be a power conferred by law of acting officially in certain circumstances according to the dictates of their own judgment and conscience, uncontrolled by the judgment or conscience of others. It perverts and destroys the meaning of the word to hold that exercise of discretion may be reviewed or controlled by some other person or tribunal than the person on whom it is conferred. Ministerial duties resting on an executive officer have been enforced by the courts. Ministerial acts do not flow from the exercise of discretion, but involve a simple, definite duty imposed by law. Farrelly v. Cole, 56 Pac. 492, 497, 60 Kan. 356, 44 L. R. A. 464 (quoting and adopting definition in Judges of Oneida Common Pleas v. People [N. Y.] 18 Wend. 79).

The term "in their discretion," in Balinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 3787, providing that boards of county commissioners must cause to be opened and worked roads necessary for public convenience, and "in their discretion" let out by contract to the lowest bidder the construction or improvement of any road when the expense will exceed $50, refers to the manner of letting the contract, and not to the letting of the contract, and vests in the board the right, when they let a contract involving an expenditure exceeding $50, to call for bids and let it to the lowest bidder, or let it without calling for bids. Giffin v. King County, 97 Pac. 230, 231, 50 Wash. 327.

"Discretion," as applied to public functionaries, means the power or right to act officially, according to what appears just and proper under the circumstances. Courts will not interfere with the exercise of such discretion unless it has been abused. In order to constitute an abuse of such discretion, it must appear that it was exercised on grounds, or for reasons, clearly untenable to an extent clearly unreasonable." Board of Com'rs of Rio Grande County v. Lewis, 65 Pac. 51, 52, 28 Colo. 378.

A provision in a will authorizing the sale of property at the "discretion" of the executors imposes a special confidence in them, which they cannot delegate, and which the law will not transmit in any way to others. Chambers v. Tulane, 9 N. J. Eq. 146, 156.

"Discretion" vested in a trustee is not absolute, but is a sound discretion, to be exercised according to his best judgment and in the best of faith. Discretion may excuse honest errors of judgment, but never excuses bad faith, which violates the fundamental principle upon which every trust rests, since a trust implies confidence, and confidence excludes bad faith. In re Wilkin, 75 N. E. 1105, 1107, 183 N. Y. 104.

The term "discretion," as used in the rule that, where a broker is vested with the least discretion, an employment of the broker by the other side in a similar capacity where his duty and his interests might clash will avoid all his right to compensation, does not mean discretion conferred on a broker to fix the terms of the contract or to accept or reject offers without communicating them to his principal, but means freedom to act according to one's own judgment, unrestrained exercise of choice or will, so that the rule applies where, by reason of such dual relation or employment, the broker's interests may conflict with his duties to his client. Jacobs v. Beyer, 125 N. Y. Supp. 597, 600, 141 App. Div. 49.

The word "discretion," as used in B. & C. Comp. § 3365, as amended, providing that the district boundary board in its "discretion" may on the petition of three or more legal voters change or divide the districts of the county, does not mean absolute or arbitrary power, to be exercised to the injury of another. Nicklaus v. Goodspeed, 108 Pac. 135, 136, 56 Or. 184.

The "discretion" vested in boards of county commissioners by an act which provides for the enforcement of payment, by judicial proceedings, of taxes upon real property sold to the state or county, and remaining unredeemed for more than three years, and giving to the several boards of county commissioners of all counties in the state a discretionary authority to institute the proceedings therein provided for, is nothing more than an administrative discretion to cause the proceedings therein provided for to be instituted and conducted. It is not the legislative discretion of determining the policy and expediency of the law, and deciding whether or not it shall be the law. It is an administrative discretion committed to them, as the fiscal agents of the county, to determine whether and when the machinery for the collection of real estate taxes provided by the act shall be set in motion. Picton v. Cass County, 100 N. W. 711-713, 13 N. D. 242, 3 Ann. Cas. 345.

Under a contract: "We, the undersigned, agree to pay the sum set opposite our names to the executive mill committee appointed at a meeting of the citizens of Petersburg and vicinity, for the purpose of procuring and locating a flouring mill of from 40 to 50 barrels capacity in Petersburg, said amount to be paid when the mill is erected, at the discretion of the above committee"—it is clear that the "discretion" of the committee related only to the acceptance of the mill as a substantial compliance with the subscription contract and a declaration that the money represented by the several subscriptions should be paid. Mefford v. Sell, 92 N. W. 148, 150, 3 Neb. (Unof.) 568.

Absence of fixed rule implied

A judicial act is said to lie in "discretion" when there are no fixed principles by which its correctness may be determined and such determinations are not subject to review on appeal. Palliser v. Home Telephone Co., 54 South. 499, 500, 170 Ala. 341.

"Discretion" is defined as that part of the judicial function which decides questions arising in the trial of a cause according to the particular circumstances of each case, and as to which the judgment of the court is not controlled by fixed rules of law. It is this discretion which courts of record exercise in revising or vacating their orders and judgments during the term at which they were made, and such discretion will not be controlled by courts of review unless manifestly abused. Taylor v. State, 57 S. E. 1049, 1 Ga. App. 539 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

As judicial discretion

The "discretion" of the chancellor to award specific performance is not an arbitrary or capricious discretion, but is a judicial discretion. Heyward v. Bradley, 179 Fed. 325, 330, 102 C. C. A. 509.

As legal discretion

The word "discretion," as used in section 3 of Act June 18, 1910 (36 Stat. 542, c. 309), creating the Commerce Court, means a legal discretion, a discretion controlled and limited by sound principles of law applied to the facts in each particular case. Nashville Grain Exch. v. United States, 191 Fed. 37, 39.

The word "discretion," when applied to a court of justice, means sound "discretion" guided by law. It must be governed by rule, not by humor; it must not be arbitrary, vague, or fanciful, but legal and regular. Jarrett v. High Point Trunk & Bag Co., 55 S. E. 338, 339, 142 N. C. 468.

DISCRIMINATION

See Undue and Unreasonable Discrimination; Unjust Discrimination; Unlawful Discrimination.

The word "discriminate" may be defined as treating one differently from another. Wimberly v. Georgia Southern & F. Ry. Co., 63 S. E. 29, 31, 5 Ga. App. 268.

"Discrimination" means to make a difference between—that is, as applied to shippers, to make a difference between them—and the motive therefor is favor, or coercion, or ill will. Wynn v. Wabash R. Co., 86 S. W. 562, 563, 111 Mo. App. 642.

In the federal statute forbidding carriers to offer, grant, or give, and shippers to solicit, accept, or receive, any rebate, concession, or discrimination in respect of transportation, etc., the word "discrimination" in and of itself implies a comparison with, a measurement by, and a departure from a determined standard. Standard Oil Co. of Indiana v. United States, 164 Fed. 376, 390, 90 C. C. A. 364.

The term "discrimination," as used in the Elkins act (32 Stat. 847) in its common sense, as well as with whatever enlarged or more definite meaning the context of the amendment of 1906 (34 Stat. 587) gives to it, includes a case where a shipper is permitted to settle his charges by paying a less or "different" compensation to the carrier than other shippers shipping under similar circumstances are compelled to pay. United States v. Sunday Creek Co., 194 Fed. 252, 254.

The use of the word "discrimination" in section 1 of the Elkins act (32 Stat. 847), as amended by Hepburn Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 2, 34 Stat. 586, without the qualifying words "unjust," etc., used in Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, §§ 2, 3, 24 Stat. 379, 380, was not intended to broaden the provisions of the earlier act in that respect; the word "discrimination" itself, as so applied, implying an unjust or unfair distinction. United States v. Wells-Fargo Exp. Co., 161 Fed. 606, 610.

A railroad company practices a "discrimination" in respect to transportation, in violation of section 6 of the interstate commerce act (24 Stat. 380), as amended by Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 2, 34 Stat. 586, in favor of one interstate shipper and against others of the same class, shipping the same commodity from the same points and under substantially the same conditions as to time of shipment, destinations, connections, and manner of transportation and other details identifying the similarity of transactions, by the device of extending credit to such favored shipper for the freight charges, and exacting and collecting such charges from the other shippers. United States v. Hocking Val. Ry. Co., 194 Fed. 234, 246.

Under Const. Pa. 1874, art. 17, §§ 1, 3, 7, the Interstate Commerce Act, prohibiting "discrimination" by carriers either in rates or transportation facilities, and P. L. Pa. 1846, p. 323, § 21, requiring railroads to transport cars owned by individual shippers on reasonable rules and regulations, a rule providing that, in the distribution of the cars of a railroad company available for the transportation of coal, cars for the railroad's fuel supply, foreign railroad cars, specially consigned for the fuel supply of the consigning railroads, and individual cars owned by shippers and assigned to specified mines for loading, should be charged against the capacity of the mines at which they were placed, and that the difference between the rated capacity of the mine and the capacity of such assigned cars should be the rate on which all the other cars of the railroad company would be prorated, which rule operated slightly to the advantage of the owners of individual cars, was not objectionable as a "discrimination" against them. Logan Coal Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 154 Fed. 497, 503 (citing United States ex rel. Coffman v. Norfolk & W. R. Co., 109 Fed. 831; United States ex rel. Kingwood Coal Co. v. West Virginia Northern R. Co., 125 Fed. 252; West Virginia Northern R. Co. v. United States ex rel. Kingwood Coal Co., 134 Fed. 198, 67 C. C. A. 220; United States ex rel. Greenbrier Coal & Coke Co. v. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co., 143 Fed. 266, 74 C. C. A. 404; State ex rel. Kohler v. Cincinnati, W. & B. Ry. Co., 23 N. E. 928, 47 Ohio St. 130, 7 L. R. A. 319; United States ex rel. Pitcairn Coal Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 154 Fed. 108).

To constitute actionable "discrimination," there must be an undue, unjust, or unreasonable preference. Where all shippers in the same situation at a given point on a railroad are treated alike in the matter of furnishing coal cars, the mere fact that shippers who own spur tracks are furnished cars in preference to those who do not own tracks, but require the use of the railroad's side tracks, which are needed by the railroad to conduct its general business and serve the public, is not a "discrimination," within Const. art. 17, § 3, providing that all persons shall have an equal right to transportation on railroads, and forbidding undue or unreasonable "discrimination." Nor is such preference a violation of the act of March 11, 1899 (Acts 1899, p. 82, c. 53), providing a penalty for unlawful "discrimination." Choctaw, O. & G. Ry. Co. v. State (Ark.) 84 S. W. 502, 503 (citing Little Rock & Ft. S. Ry. Co. v. Oppenheimer, 43 S. W. 150, 64 Ark. 271, 44 L. R. A. 353).

The term "discrimination" is used in the section in its ordinary acceptation as meaning a delivery showing a preference for or against a shipper in the performance of any act essential to the completion of that service, and is synonymous with "delay" as used in the section. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Thompson (Tex.) 118 S. W. 618, 622.

Where a common carrier allowed the purchasers of hogs to ship them to a central point of the state and from there to ship them to foreign states, charging them only the interstate rate which was lower than the local rate, and these hogs came into competion with those of purchasers making only local shipments, there was an unjust "discrimination" against the local purchasers within the purview of Code, §§ 2124, 2125, respectively, providing that no common carrier shall give any preference to any particular person or persons. Central Trust Co. of Illinois v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. (Iowa) 135 N. W. 721, 727.

Where a railroad company, a common carrier, is engaged in voluntarily transporting and delivering between stations on its line employes and freight for one incorporated public telegraph company and refuses similar services to others, without giving sufficient excuse for such refusal, the railroad company as common carrier is guilty of unjust "discrimination," and may be compelled to perform like services, for a reasonable compensation, for another incorporated public telegraph company, even though the service being voluntarily rendered is under a contract, when it is not shown that such service differs from that performed by the railroad company as a common carrier for other shippers, except as to delivery between stations. State ex rel. Ellis v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 41 South. 705, 710, 52 Fla. 646, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 506 (citing State ex rel. Lamar v. Jacksonville Terminal Co., 27 South. 225, 41 Fla. 377; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. People ex rel. Hempstead, 56 Ill. 365, 8 Am. Rep. 690; Messenger v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 37 N. J. Law, 531, 18 Am. Rep. 754; Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Morgan's L. & T. R. Co., 24 South. 803, 51 La. Ann. 29, 72 Am. St. Rep. 442; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Atlantic & P. R. Co., 63 Fed. 910; 6 Cyc. p. 372; State ex rel. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 28 South. 284, 52 La. Ann. 1850; State ex rel. Ellis v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 40 South. 875, 51 Fla. 578; Augusta Brokerage Co. v. Central of Georgia R. Co., 48 S. E. 714, 121 Ga. 48; Tift v. Southern R. Co., 123 Fed. 789; Agee & Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 37 South. 680, 142 Ala. 344).

To bring a "discrimination" within Act Oct. 15, 1891 (Acts 1891, p. 155; Civ. Code, 1895, §§ 2299-2301), forbidding a railroad company to refuse to put on sale or to sell any ticket of any other railroad company with which it is directly or indirectly connected for passage over such connecting road, so as to entitle a recovery of the penalty prescribed by that act, it must appear, not only that the railroad company refused to sell tickets to a station on the line of a connecting railroad, but also that tickets to such station had been tendered it by such connecting railroad company to be sold for it. Wimberly v. Georgia Southern & F. Ry. Co., 63 S. E. 29, 31, 5 Ga. App. 263.

The term "discrimination," as used in a statute imposing a penalty upon telegraph companies for discrimination and partiality in the transmission and delivery of messages, does not imply willfulness and positive wrongdoing as distinguished from negligence. Western Union Tel. Co. v. McClelland, 78 N. E. 672, 673, 38 Ind. App. 578.

Act April 8, 1885 (Laws 1885, p. 151, c. 48), provides that every telegraph company shall transmit messages impartially, in good faith and in the order of time in which they are received, and shall in no manner discriminate in rates charged between any of its patrons, but shall serve individuals, corporations, and other telegraph companies with impartiality, and provides a penalty for violation. Held, that the terms "discrimination" and "partiality," as used in such act, do not imply willfulness and positive wrongdoing, as distinguished from negligence. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Braxtan, 74 N. E. 985, 987, 165 Ind. 165.

For a telephone company to require one subscriber, when desiring to make long-distance connections, to go to the central office and pay cash in advance, when it is not required of other subscribers, but they are allowed to connect from their homes and places of business, a bill therefor being rendered at the end of the month, is an unreasonable and unnecessary "discrimination," for which a penalty is recoverable under Acts 1885, p. 178, § 11. Yancey v. Batesville Tel. Co., 99 S. W. 679, 681, 81 Ark. 486, 11 Ann. Cas. 135.

That a telephone company, which was under no duty to extend its lines outside of the corporate limits of a city, where it maintained an exchange in fact, made such extensions for the accommodation of one or two persons, did not entitle another outside resident to demand the same service, and the refusal of the company to comply with such demand did not constitute an unlawful "discrimination" within the meaning of Kirby's Dig. Ark. 1904, § 7948, which requires such companies to supply all applicants for telephone connection and facilities without discrimination or partiality under penalty of $100 for each day such connection of facilities are withheld. Younts v. Southwestern Telegraph & Telephone Co., 192 Fed. 200, 205.

DISCRIMINATING REDUCED RATES

Acts 32d Gen. Assem. c. 112, entitled "An act to prohibit common carriers from giving free passes," or "discriminating reduced rates," does not violate Const. art. 3, § 29, providing that every act shall embrace but one subject and matters connected therewith, which shall be expressed in the title, simply because in the body thereof it broadened the literal meaning of "free pass" to include all transportation for anything other than money; "free pass" and "discriminating reduced rates" being of the same nature and the title of an act being sufficient if it answers as a key to the subject-matter. Schuls v. Parker (Iowa) 189 N. W. 173, 177.

DISEASE

See Bright's Disease; Infectious Disease; Serious Disease.

Any disease, see Any.

Blood poisoning

Blood poisoning is a "disease," just as many other pathological conditions of the human system resulting from the introduction therein of other specific bacilli are diseases. It is, indeed, wholly immaterial whether the pathological condition which results in death is due to bacilli or not. Delaney v. Modern Acc. Club, 97 N. W. 91, 93, 121 Iowa, 528, 63 L. R. A. 603.

Insanity

"Infirmities or disease," within the meaning of a life and accident policy, exempting the insurer from liability for any bodily injury happening directly or indirectly in consequence of bodily infirmities or disease, does not include insanity, during the time of which the insured, while unconscious of what he was doing, kills himself. Blackstone v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 42 N. W. 156, 163, 74 Mich. 592, 3 L. R. A. 486.

Malignant pustule

Malignant pustule, which is the result of an infection from coming in contact with poisonous animal matter, is a "disease." Delaney v. Modern Accident Club, 97 N. W. 91, 93, 121 Iowa, 528, 63 L. R. A. 603 (citing Bacon v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 25 N. E. 399, 123 N. Y. 304, 9 L. R. A. 617, 20 Am. St. Rep. 748).

Pregnancy

Pregnancy is not per se a condition of unsound health, nor a "disease," within the meaning of such terms used in an application for a policy of insurance. Rascot v. Royal Neighbors of America, 108 Pac. 1048, 1053, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 433, 138 Am. St. Rep. 180.

Temporary ailment or disorder

The technical meaning of the word "disease" is "any derangement of the functions or alteration of the structure of the animal organs," so that it necessarily includes the slightest, most temporary, as well as the most serious and inveterate, ailments. Ordinarily, however, when speaking of an infirmity, we generally mean the state or quality of being infirm physically or otherwise, debility or weakness, and by disease to convey the impression of a morbid condition resulting from some functional disturbance or failure of physical function, which tends to undermine the constitution. In using either word we do not, as a rule, refer to a slight or mere temporary disturbance or enfeeblement. If this is true in our ordinary speaking and writing, it is certainly clear that the words should be given no broader meaning when we find them used by an insurance company in a clause of its policy which it relies upon to defeat a recovery thereon. The language used is made up of words framed by the company or its legal advisers in an attempt to limit as narrowly as possible the scope of the insurance, and it is a universal as well as a fair rule, adopted by the courts everywhere, to construe the terms of the policy most strongly against the assurer, and resolve every doubt or ambiguity in favor of the assured and against the assurer. Peterson v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 101 N. W. 289, 291, 125 Iowa, 562, 67 L. R. A. 631 (quoting Meyer v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 65 N. W. 328, 96 Iowa, 878, 59 Am. St. Rep. 374).

The word "disease," as used in an accident policy providing that no recovery should be had in case of death resulting from disease in any form, either as cause or effect, does not apply to a temporary derangement of the stomach, so as to preclude a recovery for insured's death by being thrown from the platform of a railway train whence he had gone for the purpose of vomiting. Preferred Acc. Ins. Co. of New York v. Muir, 126 Fed. 926, 929, 61 C. C. A. 456.

The term "disease" does not mean a trifling illness, or an occasional physical disturbance resulting from accidental causes, not permanent in their effects, nor a temporary illness which readily yields to professional treatment and leaves no permanent injury or disorder calculated to, or having a tendency to, shorten life. Logan v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. of New York, 50 S. E. 529, 533, 57 W. Va. 384 (citing Joyce, Ins. § 1848).

"An affection, even though curable only by medical or surgical treatment, but nevertheless readily remediable, and so not necessarily tending to shorten life before it has become so far developed as to have some bearing in present upon the general health, is not a 'disease' as one would ordinarily understand that term; and a local affection is not a local disease within the meaning of a warranty in a policy of insurance, unless such affection has sufficiently developed to have some bearing upon the general health." Cady v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 118 N. W. 967, 971, 134 Wis. 322, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 260.

The question, in an application for life insurance, "Give full particulars of all 'diseases, injuries, and affections' which you have had," refers to only such diseases as affect the general health and are of a serious nature, and not to temporary or trivial ailments. Des Moines Life Ins. Co. v. Clay, 116 S. W. 232, 89 Ark. 230.

Traumatic neuritis

Where plaintiff, while operating a mower, suffered a personal bodily injury, which left an external mark visible to the eye and developed into traumatic neuritis, such affection was not a "disease" within an accident policy providing a lesser liability in case of claims for indemnity for injuries of which there was no external mark visible to the eye, or accidental injuries resulting from disease in any form. Kenney v. Bankers' Accident Ins. Co. of Des Moines, 113 N. W. 566, 569, 136 Iowa, 140.

Wounds or injuries

Where an accident policy provided for lesser liability in case of accidental injuries resulting from disease in any form, the term "disease" was used to denote a malady, affection, sickness, illness, or disorder entirely apart from a wound or hurt producing an injury or immediate functional disturbance. Kenny v. Bankers' Accident Ins. Co., 118 N. W. 566, 569, 136 Iowa, 140.

DISEASE PECULIAR TO WOMEN

Since cancer is a disease from which men are not immune, the fact that a cancer attacks the womb of a female insured does not make it one of the "diseases peculiar to women," within the meaning of a provision of a mutual benefit insurance policy excepting such diseases from the risks assumed by the insurer. Shuler v. American Benev. Ass'n, 111 S. W. 618, 622, 182 Mo. App. 123.

DISFIGURE

"To 'disfigure' is to willfully and maliciously place any mark by means of a knife or other instrument upon the face or other part of the person." Pool v. State, 129 S. W. 1135, 1136, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 482 (referring to White's Ann. Pen. Code, art. 614).

Burning with a hot stove-lid lifter, thereby causing sores and lacerations, constitutes a disfigurement within Rev. St. 1899, § 1849 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1279); the word "disfigure," as it has no technical meaning, being considered in its ordinary sense as meaning to mar the figure and to render less perfect or beautiful in appearance. State v. Nieuhaus, 117 S. W. 73, 78, 217 Mo. 332.

DISFRANCHISED VOTERS

By "disfranchised voters" is meant (1) persons denied the right, by whatever means, to vote; (2) persons permitted to vote, but whose votes, by reason of fraud, violence, or other wrong, have not been counted as cast. Voters are to be deemed disfranchised where persons entitled to vote are denied the right to do so by whatever means, and also where persons are permitted to vote, but their votes, by reason of fraud, violence, and other wrongdoing, have not been counted at all, or have not been counted as cast. Where no election whatever was held in three precincts, and in nine other precincts the election officers of one of the political parties attempted to hold the election in places other than those designated, and, removing the poll books to such places, attempted to vote the registration alphabetically, without the presence of the voters, and returned forged certificates, the entire registered vote of such precincts was disfranchised. Where the polls in a certain precinct were raided by a band of armed men at about the time they should have been closed, and the ballot box was seized, carried off, and the contents destroyed after 187 voters had voted, such voters were entirely disfranchised. Where, in a certain precinct, the ballots, certificate stubs, and everything connected with the election, save the ballot box, were fraudulently burned before the count had been completed, so that nothing remained but the statements of the election officers as to the condition in which the ballots were at the time they were destroyed, none of them having been counted, the entire precinct was disfranchised. Where, in an election contest, all that was presented from one precinct was a forged certificate of election and ballots which on their face bore unmistakable evidence that they had not only been tampered with, but much mutilated, and it appeared that the certificate and ballots were taken from the election officers by policemen, and while in their charge the certificate was forged and the ballots restamped, the entire registration of such precinct should be considered disfranchised. Where during an election the polls of one precinct were broken into before the count was completed by a band of men, who in the presence of policemen acted in such a threatening manner as to frighten the Republican officers of election, so that they left the polls and were afraid to return, and the certificate from such precinct was a forgery, showing 232 votes for one candidate for mayor and 10 votes for his opponent, while the ballots as found in the box showed 136 to 92 for the same candidates, the voters of such precinct were disfranchised. Owing to a dispute as to the filling of a vacancy occasioned by the nonappearance of a Republican judge in one election precinct, the polls were not opened until between 11:30 and 12 o'clock. Many people had come to vote, but, finding the polls were not open, had gone away. After the polls were opened, people voted constantly until they were closed, after having been open but four hours, when there were from 35 to 75 men standing in line who had not voted, and who demanded their right to do so. Held, that all of the voters who were denied the right to vote in such precinct should be considered disfranchised, and that their number should be determined by deducting the number of those who did vote from the registered vote of the precinct. Where, in one precinct, 76 old men from a charitable institution were voted illegally without first having been required to take the statutory oath, but there was no proof as to how they voted, their votes should be counted as cast. Scholl v. Bell, 102 S. W. 248, 249, 256, 125 Ky. 750.

DISHONESTY

Fraud and "dishonesty" are synonymous terms. Whatever is dishonest is fraudulent in foro conscientie, and is so treated in a court of equity. Ex parte Hollman, 60 S. E. 19, 27, 79 S. C. 9, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242, 14 Ann. Cas. 1105 (quoting Ex parte Clark, 20 N. J. Law, 648, 45 Am. Dec. 394).

"Fraud" and "dishonesty" are synonymous terms. Whatever is dishonest is fraudulent in foro conscientie. If one acts unjustly and unlawfully, he acts fraudulently. An unjust man is a fraudulent man. Ex parte Drayton, 153 Fed. 986, 991.

"Dishonesty" signifies an intentional violation of the truth. Substantial dishonesty means a reckless or entirely inexcusable disregard of the truth." Godfrey v. Godfrey, 106 N. W. 814, 819, 127 Wis. 47, 7 Ann. Cas. 176.

A letter from the defendant to plaintiff's employer, which stated representations made by plaintiff and other facts concerning him, and stated that he was dishonest, the word "dishonest" was used in the sense of a want of probity, or fairness, in business transactions. Mitchell v. Morris, 56 South. 502, 129 La. 543.

"Dishonesty," within Code Civ. Proc. § 2612, subd. 5, declaring one incompetent to serve as an executor, who, on proof, is found by the surrogate to be incompetent to execute the duties of such trust by reason of dishonesty, means dishonesty in money matters from which a reasonable apprehension may be entertained that the funds of the estate would not be safe in the hands of the executor. After a brokerage firm had been dissolved by the death of the member who had contributed all its capital, and the winding up of its business, required by the will of deceased, was nearly complete, A., who had been manager of its cotton department, openly, and after asking permission of the liquidating partner, to which no answer was given, copied names from the mailing list of the firm, and used the copy in sending out circulars, stating his prior connection with such firm, and that he had associated himself with another firm. Held, that thereby he was not guilty of dishonesty within Code Civ. Proc. § 2612, subd. 5, declaring one incompetent to serve as an executor who, on proof, is found by the surrogate to be incompetent to execute the duties of such trust by reason of dishonesty. In re Latham's Will, 130 N. Y. Supp. 535, 539, 145 App. Div. 849.

In a collector's fidelity bond guarantying against loss through the "dishonesty or any act of fraud amounting to larceny or embezzlement," the phrase "amounting to larceny or embezzlement," does not qualify "dishonesty," and the principal is liable for a loss sustained through the collector's conversion of rents, though the conversion would not subject him to indictment for larceny or embezzlement. City Trust, Safe Deposit & Surety Co. v. Lee, 68 N. E. 485, 486, 204 Ill. 69.

DISHONOR

See Notice of Dishonor.

A negotiable instrument is "dishonored" when it is not paid on presentment for that purpose. Kinsel v. Ballou, 91 Pac. 620, 622, 151 Cal. 754 (referring to Civ. Code, § 3141).

A bill is "dishonored by nonacceptance" when it is duly presented for acceptance, and the statutory acceptance is refused or cannot be obtained. The person presenting it loses the right of recourse against the drawer and indorsers where he does not treat it as dishonored by nonacceptance. An immediate right of recourse against drawers and indorsers accrues to the holders, and no presentment for payment is necessary. National Park Bank v. Salita, 111 N. Y. Supp. 927, 931, 127 App. Div. 624 (quoting and adopting the definitions in Negotiable Instruments Law [Laws 1897, c. 612] §§ 246, 247, 248).

DISINTER

The word "disinter" is used in Pen. Code, art. 367, providing that if any person not authorized by law, or by a relative or friend, for the purpose of reinterment, shall "disinter" any human body, he shall be punished, etc., means that the body and the whole thereof should be removed from the grave. Where a grave was uncovered, and only the head of the body displaced and taken therefrom, this would not be an offense under the statute, because disinterring does not mean simply uncovering the grave, but includes removing of the whole body therefrom. Williamson v. State, 72 S. W. 600, 601, 44 Tex. Cr. R. 520.

DISINTERESTED

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 433, providing that a deposition shall be written down by the officer or deponent, or some disinterested person, a clerk or stenographer in the employment of the attorney of one of the parties to the action cannot be considered a "disinterested person." Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Gray, 72 N. E. 869, 871, 165 Ind. 140, 6 Ann. Cas. 607.

Municipal officers do not constitute a "disinterested tribunal" for the ascertainment of just compensation to be paid for land taken by the city for public use. Peirce v. City of Bangor, 74 Atl. 1039, 1041, 105 Me. 413.

Within the meaning of the appraisal clause of a standard fire insurance company, one is not disqualified, as a matter of law, from being a "disinterested" appraiser merely because he has previously made an estimate of the loss at the request of the insured. National Fire Ins. Co. v. O'Bryan, 87 S. W. 129, 130, 75 Ark. 198, 5 Ann. Cas. 334.

An arbitrator of a loss under an insurance policy, who, because of association with or employment for insurance companies, entered on an inquiry in a friendly attitude, to the company, and who had a considerable income from adjusting such losses, and whose attitude during the investigation indicated a purpose to reduce the amount of the award to the minimum, was not a "disinterested" person, within the rule relating to arbitrators, though his conduct may have been consistent with an honest judgment. Produce Refrigerator Co. v. Norwich Union Fire Ins. Soc. (Minn.) 97 N. W. 875.

All the referees provided for in the Maine standard fire insurance policy to fix the amount of the loss must be "disinterested" men, not only in the narrow sense of being without relationship and pecuniary interest, but also in the broad, full sense of being competent, impartial, fair, and open-minded, and substantially indifferent in thought and feeling between the parties, and without partisanship or bias either way. Young v. Aetna Ins. Co., 64 Atl. 584, 586, 101 Me. 294.

The adjective "competent" has a variety of meanings, depending on the connection in which it is used, and it does not mean "disinterested" in all cases. Competency may have reference to fitness, qualification, sufficient ability, and training to successfully execute the work to be undertaken. The term "competent," as used in Rev. St. 1898, § 1379—13, providing for the appointment of three competent persons as drainage commissioners, does not mean "disinterested," and owners of land within the proposed district are not disqualified. In re Cranberry Creek Drainage Dist., 107 N. W. 25, 26, 128 Wis. 98 (citing Crabb, Eng. Synonymous; Stand. Dict.; 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1358; Bowes v. Haywood, 35 Mich. 241; In re Pacheco's Estate, 23 Cal. 476; Aetna Ins. Co. v. Stevens, 48 Ill. 33; Attorney General v. Hallett, 2 H. & N. 374; Tenney v. State, 27 Wis. 387).

As without pecuniary interest

Members of a committee appointed on appeal from county commissioners in proceedings to lay out a highway are "disinterested," though owning lands liable to taxation in the town through which the highway passes. The requirement to be "disinterested" is the equivalent of "not interested." The liability to taxation is not such an interest as disqualifies an action. Selectmen of Andover v. County Com'rs, 29 Atl. 982, 983, 86 Me. 185.

As not related

Under Rev. St. c. 1, § 6, rule 22, providing that, when a person is required to be "disinterested" or indifferent in a matter in which others are interested, the relationship by consanguinity or affinity within the sixth degree, according to the civil law, or within the degree of second cousin, inclusive, except by written consent of the parties, will disqualify him, a juror who was related to plaintiff within the fourth degree, and to defendant within the fifth degree, according to the rules of the civil law, but of which fact neither the plaintiff nor the defendant had knowledge, and the juror was not aware of it until after the verdict, was not "disinterested," and was not a legal member of the panel, and plaintiff was entitled to a new trial as a matter of law. Jewell v. Jewell, 24 Atl. 858, 859, 84 Me. 304, 18 L. R. A. 473.

DISINTERESTED WITNESS

A "competent witness," within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 3132, requiring a will to be witnessed by two or more "competent witnesses," is one competent to testify generally in courts of justice, and laboring under no legal disqualification, the word "competent" being synonymous with "credible," "disinterested," and meaning one who, at the time of subscribing the will, is competent to testify in a proper probate proceeding to the facts attested. Hiatt v. McColley, 171 Ind. 91, 85 N. E. 772, 774.

A subscribing witness to a will containing charitable gifts, who was an executor and trustee under the will, is not a "disinterested witness," where he was also an officer and trustee of a church to which the income and a portion of the corpus of the trust estate was bequeathed, and had an option to purchase certain shares of stock, which were a part of the trust, for religious and charitable uses, at a price to be agreed on by three disinterested persons, to be selected in a particular manner, he being one of the two trustees to whom the stock of the corporation was given in trust to vote at corporate elections, and whose duties required that dividends received be paid by them to the persons named, and in the proportions fixed in the will, and was also a stockholder and director in the corporation, as well as an officer and employé. In re Kessler's Estate, 70 Atl. 770, 773, 221 Pa. 314, 128 Am. St. Rep. 741, 15 Ann. Cas. 791.

DISK

"Disk" is "any flat or approximately or apparently flat circular plate or surface."

Glauber v. H. Mueller Mfg. Co., 169 Fed. 110, 113, 95 C. C. A. 108 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict.).

DISLOYAL

A plea in an action for the wrongful discharge of an employé, which alleges as a ground for the discharge that the employé was "disloyal" in secretly accepting gifts from the persons from whom he bought goods for the employer, charges that the employé was untrue to his employer's cause, involving a corrupt or improper state of mind, and, if proved, justifies the discharge. Wade v. William Barr Dry Goods Co., 134 S. W. 1084, 1086, 155 Mo. App. 405.

DISMISS

See Motion to Dismiss.

"Dismiss" is the equivalent of "cancel," within the meaning of a contract to "cancel" a suit. Klitze v. Smith, 91 N. E. 748, 749, 46 Ind. App. 26.

The constitution of a mutual benevolent society organized in the New York City police department required a member to be in good standing for one year before he would be entitled to any benefit, except death or dismissal, and by another section a member who absented himself from duty for five days or more, and was therefore dismissed from the department relinquished all claim to benefits, and Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, c. 466) § 303, in fact provided dismissal for such cause. The constitution of the society also deprived any member of benefits who was convicted of crime, or was exceptionally reckless, or who apparently sought dismissal. The society was incorporated about three years after the rendition of a decision by the Supreme Court holding that a constitutional provision of a similar society, giving benefits to a member dismissed from the force for a violation of duty, was invalid. Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, c. 466) §§ 353, 354, 355, provided for the pensioning of policemen who were "relieved and dismissed" from the police force because of injuries sustained in the line of their duty, disability, or disease contracted without misconduct, and in case of veterans of the police force or war veterans after having served on the force for a certain period. Held, that a policeman who was retired because of physical infirmities, rendering him incapable of performing his duties, was "dismissed" within the first provision of the constitution set out, so as to be entitled to benefits, though he had not been a member for one year. Foley v. New York Mut. Benev. Soc., 126 N. Y. Supp. 12, 14, 141 App. Div. 180.

As final disposition

An erroneous entry on a calendar of the word "dismissed" not made in the presence of the court and not in consequence of its orders, is not to be taken as a final judgment dismissing the action. Ledbetter v. Mandell, 109 N. Y. Supp. 602, 608, 124 App. Div. 854.

Where defendant in a penal action dies after judgment against him and before its reversal, the action is not "dismissed" nor finally disposed of in favor of or against a party, within Code Civ. Proc. §§ 3228, 3229, and neither party is entitled to costs on the entry of judgment of abatement. People v. Newcomb, 135 N. Y. Supp. 151, 153, 75 Misc. Rep. 258.

Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 12e, 30 Stat. 550, declares that on confirmation of a composition the consideration shall be distributed as the judge shall direct and the case dismissed. Held, that "dismissed" as so used meant only that the court should proceed no further with the administration of the estate under the bankruptcy act, and not that no further proceedings in the case should be taken to terminate the same, and hence did not deprive the referee of jurisdiction conferred by section 22a (1) to thereafter pass on the accounts of the trustee, and, after allowing the same, direct that the trustee be discharged and the estate closed. United States v. Sondheim, 188 Fed. 378, 380.

DISMISSAL

See Decree of Dismissal.

Dismissal on the merits, see Merits.

Dismissal without prejudice, see Without Prejudice.

Reason for dismissal, see Reason.

"Dismissal" is the equivalent of cancellation." Klitz v. Smith, 91 N. E. 748, 749, 46 Ind. App. 26.

The "dismissal" of a count of an information is not an amendment thereof, but is in the nature of an election to proceed on the remaining counts. Under Pen. Code, § 1019, providing that a plea of guilty puts in issue every material allegation of the information, the dismissal of one count after the plea is entered, leaving another count, the allegations of which are complete and independent of the dismissed count, does not leave the case without issue joined. People v. Danford, 112 Pac. 474, 478, 14 Cal. App. 442.

The word "dismissal," in Pol. Code, § 1698, providing that a teacher in case of his dismissal before the expiration of his contract may appeal to the school superintendent, etc., does not imply a hearing, the word meaning the summary disposal of a case as distinguished from a trial of it, and the action of the county superintendent in approving after a hearing, the dismissal of a teacher by the board of trustees was binding on the trustees, and they could not be compelled by mandamus to reinstate the teacher. Taylor v. Marshall, 107 Pac. 1012, 1013, 12

Cal. App. 549 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2105).

A judgment of "nonsuit" and a judgment of "dismissal" serve the same purpose, have the same legal effect, and arrive at the same end, and hence should be treated alike and allowed the same office in the everyday administration of the law. Wetmore v. Crouch, 87 S. W. 954, 956, 188 Mo. 647, 3 Ann. Cas. 94.

"Dismissal," though not a final determination of the controversy, is a final ending of that particular suit." Livingston v. New England Mortgage Security Co., 91 S. W. 752, 753, 77 Ark. 379 (citing And. Dict. Def. Words, "Dismiss," p. 364; "Discontinuance," p. 360; "Nonsuit," p. 712; 14 Cyc. p. 391).

"In those jurisdictions where the rule indicated by the word 'retraxit' has been recognized, the substance of the matter seems to be that a dismissal by agreement of the parties is equivalent to and is treated as a public renunciation on the part of the complainant of the claim asserted by him in his pleadings against the defendant, and he is thereafter estopped to bring it forward again." Lindsay v. Allen, 82 S. W. 171, 174, 112 Tenn. 637.

A "dismissal," under Kansas practice, is a judicial act rather than an act of the party. Whether "with prejudice" or "without prejudice," it is in the nature of a judgment, and a judgment "with prejudice," not set aside or reversed, is a final disposition of the controversy. Hargis v. Robinson, 79 Pac. 119, 120, 70 Kan. 589.

As final decree or judgment

See, also, Final Decree or Judgment.

While a "dismissal" for want of prosecution terminates a suit, it does not end the controversy; it being in effect a final judgment for defendant, but not precluding plaintiff from bringing new suit for the same cause. State ex rel. Sheridan Pub. Co. v. Goodrich, 140 S. W. 629, 630, 159 Mo. App. 422 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2105).

Where all the defendants except one appeared and confessed judgment, whereupon the case was ordered "filed away," such order was a final order of "dismissal" as to the defendant who did not appear, and a judgment could not be entered against him at a subsequent term without further notice. Alkman v. South (Ky.) 97 S. W. 4, 5.

A "dismissal" of a cause for want of prosecution, though not a final ending of a controversy, is a final ending of that particular suit. In effect, it is a final judgment for the defendant, though it does not preclude the plaintiff from bringing a new suit for the same cause. State ex rel. Sheridan Pub. Co. v. Goodrich, 140 S. W. 629, 630, 159 Mo. App. 422 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2105; Livingston v. New England Mortgage Security Co., 91 S. W. 752, 77 Ark. 379).

Under Rev. St. 1887, § 4823, providing that the dismissal of an appeal is in effect an affirmance of the judgment or order appealed from, unless the dismissal is expressly made without prejudice to another appeal, the "dismissal of an appeal" for failure to furnish an undertaking is an affirmance of the judgment from which the appeal was taken, unless the order of dismissal is expressly made without prejudice to another appeal. West v. Dygert, 97 Pac. 961, 962, 15 Idaho, 350.

As strike from docket

"Stricken from the docket" is used as synonymous with "discontinued," "filed away," so that an order striking a cause from the docket amounts to a "dismissal." Aikman v. South (Ky.) 97 S. W. 4, 5.

DISMISSAL AGREED

"The words 'dismissed agreed,' entered as the judgment of the court, do not of themselves import an agreement to terminate the controversy, nor imply an intention to merge the cause of action in the judgment." Ex parte Loung June, 160 Fed. 251, 258 (quoting and adopting definition in Haldeman v. United States, 91 U. S. 584, 23 L. Ed. 483).

DISMISSAL OF APPEAL

As decision of court, see Decision (Of Court).

DISOBEDIENCE

Though a pupil could ask to be excused from taking the part assigned to him in a dialogue and give his reasons for his request, if the principal regarded his reasons insufficient, it was the pupil's duty to obey, and his refusal to do so constituted "disobedience," and his continued disobedience and refusal of offers permitting his return on taking another part constituted insubordination, and was good cause for the suspension, under Ky. St. 1903, § 4367, requiring common school pupils to comply with legal regulations for their government, and making willful disobedience or defiance of teachers' authority, etc., ground for suspension, and section 4473, authorizing school trustees to adopt such legal regulations as they may deem necessary. Cross v. Board of Trustees of Walton Graded Common School, 110 S. W. 346, 347, 129 Ky. 35.

DISORDERLY

See Idle and Disorderly.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT

"Disorderly conduct" generally means some act which tends to a breach of the peace, or to disturb the portion of the public which may hear or see the conduct claimed to have been disorderly. Sheppard v. City of Jackson, 76 S. E. 367, 368, 11 Ga. App. 811.

The term "disorderly conduct," standing alone, may mean anything a police officer or magistrate may wish, and there is no such criminal offense in the Criminal Code or under general conduct as "disorderly conduct"; but in New York City Charter (Consolidation Act, Laws 1882, c. 410) §§ 1448, 1458, driving or riding a horse through the streets faster than five miles an hour is a criminal offense, called "disorderly conduct," and the suffering of an unmuzzled vicious dog to be at large, and threatening, abusive, or insulting behavior with intent to provoke a breach of the peace, and the plying of her vocation in the streets by a lewd woman, constitute offenses also called "disorderly conduct." In re Newkirk, 75 N. Y. Supp. 777, 778, 37 Misc. Rep. 404.

Comp. Laws § 5923, enumerating certain acts which are thereby declared to constitute "disorderly conduct," and the actors disorderly persons, subject to punishment under its provisions, did not deprive the Legislature of power to authorize the city of Grand Rapids to declare other acts than those defined by the statute to constitute disorderly conduct under Grand Rapids City Charter, tit. 8, § 10, authorizing the city to provide for the punishment of vagrants and all disorderly persons, and to punish disorderly persons of all kinds, since the term "disorderly" will not be confined to its statutory definition. In re Stegenga, 94 N. W. 385, 387, 133 Mich. 55, 61 L. R. A. 763.

To constitute the offense of "disorderly conduct," under an ordinance providing that whoever shall be guilty of any violent, riotous, or disorderly conduct, or who shall use any profane, abusive, or obscene language, in any street, house, or place within the city, whereby the peace or quiet of the city is or may be disturbed, shall upon conviction pay a fine, the acts alleged to constitute the offense must have been committed in a street, house, or similar place within the city; the general word "place," as used in the ordinance, meaning a definite location within the city of the same kind and nature as a street or house. Barton v. City of La Grande, 22 Pac. 111, 112, 17 Or. 577.

Consolidation Act (Laws 1882, p. 366, c. 410) § 1458, provides that a person who shall use any threatening, etc., behavior with intent to provoke a breach of the peace, etc., shall be guilty of disorderly conduct. Section 1459 provides that, when it appears on oath of a credible witness before any police justice that any person has been guilty "of any such disorderly conduct as in the opinion of such magistrate tends to a breach of the peace," the magistrate may cause the person complained of to be brought before him to answer the charge. Held that, under section 1459, "disorderly conduct" is such conduct as in the opinion of the magistrate tends to a breach of the peace, and the section does not relate only to the acts specified in section 1458. People v. Mansi, 113 N. Y. Supp. 893, 866, 129 App. Div. 386.

The magistrates of the city of New York have jurisdiction to try persons charged with "disorderly conduct" tending to a breach of the peace, as defined in New York Consolidation Act (Laws 1882, c. 410) § 1458, one of which offenses is soliciting within a thoroughfare or public place. People ex rel. St. Clair v. Davis, 127 N. Y. Supp. 1072, 1075, 143 App. Div. 579.

Drunkenness

Drunkenness in a public place is a nuisance and "disorderly conduct," within Kirby's Dig. §§ 5438, 5461, authorizing municipal corporations by ordinance to prevent nuisances and disorderly conduct. Dewitt v. Lacotts, 88 S. W. 877, 878, 76 Ark. 250.

Violation of official conduct

One who, intrusted with official power, violates his public obligation, betrays his official trust, and loses the public confidence by selling his official influence or vote in a body of which he is a member, is guilty of "disorderly conduct in office." A charge that, in effect, alleges that a member of a city council agreed for a consideration to aid in securing a valuable contract with the city through a constituted board of the city, and to secure an increase in the appropriation for the purposes of the contract to unduly increase the profits, sufficiently sets forth conduct amounting to "disorderly behavior and malconduct in office," for which such officer may be expelled under the statute; and where there is evidence to sustain the charge, and no illegality appears in the proceedings of expulsion, the courts will not interfere by mandamus. Malconduct in office, like misconduct in office, includes such acts as amount to a breach of the good faith and the right action that are tacitly required of all officers. Etzler v. Brown (Fla.) 50 South. 416-418.

A member of a city council who is guilty of "grafting" is liable to expulsion for "disorderly conduct" within the meaning of Passaic City Charter, § 19, empowering the city council to punish or expel its members for disorderly conduct. Darmstatter v. City Council of City of Passaic, 79 Atl. 545, 546, 81 N. J. Law, 162, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 150.

The words "disorderly conduct," as used in a charter authorizing a city council to expel a member for disorderly conduct, have reference to the conduct of a member of a council acting in his official character. "He who, intrusted with official power, violates his public obligations, betrays his official trust, and abuses the public confidence by selling his official influence or vote in the body in which he is a member, is guilty of 'disorderly conduct.'" Any conduct which is contrary to law is within the definition of disorderly conduct as given by standard lexicographers, and any gross violation of duty on the part of the members of a common council is within the legal meaning of the words used in the charter. State v. Jersey City, 25 N. J. Law, 516, 540, 541.

DISORDERLY HOUSE

Any place where illegal practices are habitually carried on is a "disorderly house." State v. Martin, 73 Atl. 548, 549, 77 N. J. Law, 652, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 507, 134 Am. St. Rep. 814, 18 Ann. Cas. 986.

A "disorderly house" may result from maintaining a place wherein any practices, such as tipping, fighting, or gaming, are permitted to be carried on. State v. Moore, 68 Atl. 165, 166, 75 N. J. Law, 619.

A charge that one is keeping a "disorderly house" means that he is so keeping a house as to make it a common nuisance to the neighborhood, and thereby renders himself liable to indictment. Moore v. Beck, 58 Atl. 166, 71 N. J. Law, 7.

A "disorderly house," within the statute punishing any person who shall maintain a common, ill-governed, and disorderly house, to the encouragement of idleness, gaming, drinking, fornication, and other misbehavior, must be a house of public resort, one frequented by the public, where illegal practices are habitually carried on, to the corruption of public morals and safety. The house is "ill-governed" if the law be habitually unobserved, and it is "disorderly" if the restraints of order and law are habitually violated. The term, therefore, includes a house in which the community are habitually permitted to assemble and buy liquors sold in violation of law. Isolated unlawful sale of liquor in a drug store, incident to the business, would not make the drug store a disorderly house; but where one operates a drug store in one room, and back of it in another room a bar, where liquors are habitually sold to the public in violation of law, such room is a disorderly house, the term "house" as so used embracing a single room in a house or building, or any place used as a shelter for disorderly conduct. Walt v. People, 104 Pac. 89, 91, 92, 46 Colo. 136.

A lessee who sublets rooms in a building, and who keeps a key to the building, and who reserves to himself the right of entry for the management of the premises, and who knows that the subtenants are of evil repute, and who occasionally participates in running the house as a disorderly house, keeps a "disorderly house," in violation of Comp. Laws 1897, § 11,697. People v. Hoek, 134 N. W. 1031, 1033, 169 Mich. 87.

Gambling house

A house in which persons are permitted to gather and gamble in violation of law is a "disorderly" one, however quietly it may be done. Arenz v. Commonwealth, 102 S. W. 238, 239, 125 Ky. 737.

Where a house is so kept that no one outside of its inmates is disturbed, annoyed, or corrupted in their morals, it is not, as a general proposition, a "disorderly house"; but the annoyance or corrupting influence must reach beyond the inmates and affect the public peace or morals of the community. People v. Hoffman, 103 N. Y. Supp. 1000, 1001, 118 App. Div. 862.

"At common law a 'disorderly house,' in its broadest sense, may be defined as a house that is kept in such a way as to disturb, annoy, and scandalize the public generally or the neighborhood, or the passers-by on a highway, or in such a way as to encourage or promote breaches of the peace, or to corrupt the morals of the community." "A 'disorderly house' is a house in which people abide or to which they resort to the disturbance of the neighborhood, or for purposes which are injurious to the public morals, health, convenience, or safety." "Any place of public resort * * * in which illegal practices are habitually carried on, or when it becomes the habitual resort of thieves, drunkards, prostitutes, or other idle, vicious, and disorderly persons, who gather together there for the purpose of gratifying their own depraved appetites, or to make it a rendezvous where plans may be concocted for depredations upon society, and disturbing either its peace or its rights of property." "The term 'disorderly house,' as defined by the common law, is one of very wide meaning, and includes any house or place the inmates of which behaved so badly as to make it a nuisance." It must be a place of public resort, or a place frequented by the public, kept or maintained so as to disturb or annoy the public, the neighborhood, or passers-by, or a place where illegal or immoral practices are habitually carried on, to the corruption of the public health, morals, or safety, or a place resorted to by idle, dissolute, vicious, or disorderly persons for the purposes of concocting depredations on society. It must have some of the above elements, from which it follows that it must have some of the elements of a public nuisance. Mossman v. City of Ft. Collins, 90 Pac. 605, 606, 40 Colo. 270, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 842, 122 Am. St. Rep. 1060 (quoting and adopting definitions in 14 Cyc. p. 482; State v. Williams, 30 N. J. Law, 102; State v. Grosowski, 94 N. W. 1077, 89 Minn. 343).

As house of prostitution

"A 'disorderly house' is one kept for prostitution, or where prostitutes are permitted to resort or reside for the purpose of plying their vocation." There are three essential ingredients of the offense of keeping a disorderly house that must be established by the state by legal and competent evidence beyond a reasonable doubt: (1) That defendant is the owner, lessee, or tenant of said house; (2) that said house is run as a place where prostitutes are permitted to resort and reside for the purpose of plying their vocation; (3) that prostitutes did resort and reside there for the purpose of plying their vocation. Bass v. State (Tex.) 66 S. W. 558.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 359, declaring that a "disorderly house" is one kept for prostitution, a disorderly house can be kept, although it is inhabited by only one prostitute; but a woman of bad reputation for chastity occupying a house frequented by men, which is a quiet and orderly house, in which no act of illicit intercourse is shown to have occurred, cannot be convicted of keeping a "disorderly house." Ramey v. State (Tex.) 45 S. W. 489, 490.

As a noisy place

To constitute a house a "disorderly house" in law, the noises, etc., must be usual, or common, and the disturbance must be general, and not of only one person in a thickly settled neighborhood. Wilder v. State, 60 S. E. 112, 113, 3 Ga. App. 443.

Place where usurious interest is taken

Those who maintain a place where usurious rates of interest are taken, and where the statutes prohibiting usurious interest are habitually violated, are indictable for keeping a "disorderly house." State v. Diamant, 62 Atl. 286, 73 N. J. Law, 131.

Sale of liquors

"The terms 'tippling shop' and 'disorderly house' have in law well-settled and well-defined meanings, and those meanings are not identical, nor is either necessarily included in the other." Territory v. Robertson, 92 Pac. 144, 145, 19 Okl. 149 (quoting and adopting definition in City of Emporia v. Volmer, 12 Kan. 622).

In this state, a house in which unlawful sales of liquor are habitually made is a nuisance, and one maintaining it is guilty of keeping a "disorderly house," and by the Werts law (2 Gen. St. p. 1810) any person selling any of the liquors named without a license obtained for that purpose is guilty of the offense of keeping a disorderly house. Under that act, a conviction for keeping a disorderly house may be had on proof of a single sale in violation of its provisions. Parker v. State, 39 Atl. 651, 652, 61 N. J. Law, 308 (Citing State v. Fay, 44 N. J. Law, 474).

"A 'disorderly house' is any place of public resort in which unlawful practices are habitually carried on, or which becomes a rendezvous or place of resort for thieves, drunkards, prostitutes, or other idle, vicious, and disorderly persons, who gather there to gratify their depraved appetites, or for any purpose; for such persons are regarded as dangerous to the peace and welfare of the community, and their presence at any place in considerable numbers is always a just cause for alarm and apprehension. * * * And a place where liquor is sold under a license in excessive quantities, whereby persons become intoxicated, and where brawls result therefrom, is a disorderly house, and indictable as a nuisance, for no person has a right to carry on upon his own premises or elsewhere for his own gain or amusement any public business clearly calculated to injure and destroy public morals or to disturb the public peace." State ex rel. Crow v. Canty, 105 S. W. 1078, 1082, 207 Mo. 439, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 747, 123 Am. St. Rep. 393, 13 Ann. Cas. 787 (quoting Wood, Nuis. § 38); Reaves v. Territory, 74 Pac. 951, 954, 13 Okl. 396 (quoting Wood, Nuis. p. 43, § 38).

To constitute a "disorderly house" where intoxicants are sold, spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors must be sold or kept for sale without a license, and a single sale is insufficient. Morford v. State, 131 S. W. 568, 569, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 190.

Under the Penal Code, defining a "disorderly house" as one where spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors are kept for sale without first having obtained a license, an indictment for keeping a disorderly house is not insufficient for failure to allege that the liquors kept for sale were intoxicating. Tacchini v. State, 126 S. W. 1139, 1140, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 55.

The Penal Code, defining a "disorderly house" as a house where intoxicating liquors are kept for sale and sold without a license, or any house located in prohibition territory in which nonintoxicating malt liquor is sold or kept for sale, so as to require the seller to obtain an internal revenue license under the federal laws, etc., does not include persons not previously included, but merely provides that, where by law a license is required, the carrying on of the business without a license gives to the house the quality of a disorderly house, and a club organized to maintain golf and other sports which maintains a clubhouse where its members may obtain intoxicating liquors, does not maintain a disorderly house. State v. Duke, 137 S. W. 654, 662, 104 Tex. 355.

A single sale or gift of intoxicating liquor to two minors of the age of 19 years or over, by a dramshop keeper, does not make his place of business a "disorderly house," within Ann. St. 1906, § 3012, authorizing the revocation of a license on it appearing that a dramshop keeper has not at all times kept an orderly house, since a disorderly house is any house to which people resort to the disturbance of people lawfully within the place, a house used or resorted to for the purpose of gaming, or immoral purposes. State ex rel. Arnold v. Lichta, 109 S. W. 825, 827, 130 Mo. App. 284.

The title of Laws 1907, p. 246, c. 132, being an act to amend Pen. Code 1895, tit. 10, c. 4, art. 359, defining a "disorderly house" as a house in which liquors are sold without a license, and adding article 359a, defining the offense of procuring, and to amend articles 361, 362, stating who shall be guilty of the offense of keeping a disorderly house, etc., is sufficient, under Const. art. 3, § 35, to include a provision defining a disorderly house as a house where intoxicating liquors are sold without having a license, and punishing a keeper of a disorderly house; and it is valid, though it be assumed that article 359a is not fairly embraced within the title, that matter being clearly separable, and, if not within title, not affecting the remainder of the act. Bumbaugh v. State, 120 S. W. 423, 424, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 331; Joliff v. State, 109 S. W. 176, 178, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 61.

DISORDERLY PERSON

Under the express provisions of Cr. Code, § 899, subd. 3, persons who pretend to tell fortunes are "disorderly persons." Fay v. Lambourne, 108 N. Y. Supp. 874, 876, 124 App. Div. 245.

A wife sued for the alienation of her husband's affection. On failure to recover the parties separated. For 17 years he contributed to her support, when he refused so to do, though earning good wages, on the ground that he was not liable unless she lived with him. Held that, on evidence that her own earnings were insufficient for her support, he was properly convicted as a "disorderly person," under Code Cr. Proc. § 899 (1). People v. Romaine, 109 N. Y. Supp. 1100, 1101, 57 Misc. Rep. 571.

To justify a conviction of being a "disorderly person," under Code Cr. Proc. § 899, defining disorderly persons as those who abandon their wives or children without adequate support, or leave them in danger of becoming a burden to the public, the proof must show that the family of accused is liable to become a public burden. People v. Smith, 124 N. Y. Supp. 57, 139 App. Div. 361.

DISPATCH

See Customary Dispatch; Reasonable Dispatch.

The term "dispatch" is a technical one in the postal service, and means a mass of matter to be sent to a certain place at a certain time. The term "trip" is also technical, and refers to the wagon which will carry the whole or a part of the dispatch. Utah, N. & C. Stage Co. v. United States, 39 Ct. Cl. 420, 438.

DISPATCH FOR DISCHARGING

A charter party providing for the unloading of a cargo with "dispatch for discharging" requires a discharge according to the custom of the port. The Joseph W. Brooks, 122 Fed. 881, 884.

DISPATCHER

DISPENSARY

It was not intended by the use of the word "dispensary" in the act of August 1, 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 114), to provide for local option elections in counties where the sale of liquor is unlawful except in dispensaries, to make a class out of any of these various forms of a dispensary that are found under the different laws providing for the establishment of such institutions. The General Assembly evidently intended, by the use of the word "dispensary," to describe a place where liquor is sold by governmental authority, without reference to whether the officers in charge were officers of the state, county, or municipality, or how the profits of the dispensary were to be divided. The legislative intention was to enable the people of the county where any one of the different forms of a dispensary appeared to express their preference as to whether the dispensary should continue in that county or whether it should be suspended. City of Barnesville v. Means, 57 S. E. 422, 426, 128 Ga. 197.

DISPENSE

"Dispense" means to deal out in portions; to distribute; to give. State v. Ball, 123 N. W. 826, 827, 19 N. D. 782.

"Dispense" has been defined: "To deal out in portions; to distribute; to give." Webster's New International Dictionary. "To deal out; to apportion; to distribute. To dispense is to deal out generally or indiscriminately; to distribute, deal out to, or divide among individuals." Worcester's Dictionary. "To deal or divide out; give forth diffusively, or in some general way; practice distribution of." Century Dictionary. A restaurant keeper who serves to his patrons at his premises intoxicating liquors to whomsoever orders and pays for the same "dispenses" liquor within the meaning of the statute. It has also been held that giving away liquors constituted dispensing. Sawyer v. Frank, 132 N. W. 861, 152 Iowa, 341 (citing Johnson v. Chattanooga, 36 S. W. 1092, 97 Tenn. 247).

DISPONE

"Dispone" has been held to be equivalent to disposition, and to mean alienate. In re Hubbell Trust, 113 N. W. 512, 515, 135 Iowa, 637, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 496, 14 Ann. Cas. 640.

DISPOSAL

The words "disposal" and "distribution" are often used synonymously. Scully v.

The ninth clause of a will was divided into three seemingly distinct parts, the first part giving and bequeathing to testator's wife, after debts and bequests made in other clauses of the will had been paid, all the residue of the property, both personal and real, "to have and to hold during her lifetime, to manage and control without having to give bonds, and this is to be in lieu of her dower interest in my estate, for the benefit and support of herself and my two minor children * * * excepting" certain described land, which by the second part of the clause he devised to two sons. The third part of the clause provided "the remainder of the estate after these bequests are made shall be at my wife, M. I.'s disposal, but it is expressly provided that if any of my children mentioned in this will shall die before they come in possession of their bequest, it will revert to the estate and shall be subject to the same conditions as the estate according to the terms mentioned in the will." Held, that the will, aside from the third part of the ninth clause, having disposed of all of testator's property, the word "remainder" as used in such third part must be held to refer to the remainder after the wife's life estate, and, as the word "disposal" indicates the power of absolute disposition, the life estate granted by the first part of the ninth clause was raised to a fee simple by the third part of the clause, and hence the wife took a fee rather than a life estate in the property devised and bequeathed to her by the ninth clause. Ironsides v. Ironside, 130 N. W. 414, 416, 150 Iowa, 623.

The word "disposal," as used in Rev. St. U. S., § 2387, providing that whenever any portion of the public lands have been or may be settled upon and occupied as a townsite, not subject to entry under the agricultural pre-emption laws, it shall be lawful, in case such town be incorporated, for the corporate authorities thereof, and, if not incorporated, for the judge of the county court for the county in which such town is situated, to enter at the proper land office the land so settled and occupied in trust for the several use and benefit of the occupants thereof, and that the execution of such trust as to the disposal of the lots in such town, and the proceeds of the sales thereof, shall be conducted under such regulations as may be prescribed by the legislative authority of the state or territory in which the same may be situated, means distribution, when applied to the lots that were actually occupied and possessed, for under the section such lots are already disposed of; that is, they became the property of the occupants, and the occupant of a town lot, at the time of the entry of the townsite, is its real owner. Scully v. Squier,

DISPOSABLE PORTION

A will by a resident of Louisiana of the "disposable portion" of all the property she might leave passed all property located in Mississippi, though under the laws of Louisiana testatrix's disposable property was only one-third of her estate. L'Hote v. Roca (Miss.) 58 South. 655, 656.

DISPOSE OF

See Sell and Dispose of; Sell, Give Away, or Otherwise Dispose of.

Any way dispose of, see Any.

Otherwise dispose of, see Otherwise.

To "dispose of" means to part with, to relinquish, to get rid of, to alienate, to effectually transfer. Connely v. Putnam, 111 S. W. 164, 166, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 233.

The definitions, that to "dispose of" property is to alienate it, assign it to a use, bestow it, direct its ownership, and that it is to part with, to sell, to alienate, embrace both the popular and legal significance of the word, when used in an attachment law in connection with property. Pearre v. Hawkins, 62 Tex. 434, 437 (quoting and adopting Abb. Dict. and Webst. Dict.).

The words "disposed of" are not of legal technicality, but are in general use. Great variety and many shades of meaning have been assigned to them in judicial definitions. Webster defines them as "to determine the fate of; to exercise the power of control over; to fix the condition, application, employment, etc., of; to direct or assign for a use; to exercise finally one's power of control over; to pass over into the control of some one else, as by selling." Where a will gave trustees testamentary power to sell certain lands, which power they did not exercise, the lands did not fall within another cause relating to lands not otherwise "disposed of." Whitfield v. Thompson (Miss.) 38 South. 113, 117.

"Dispose," in the sense in which it is used in the Constitution of the state of New York, means "to part with to another," "to put into another power and control," or "to give away or transfer by authority." Newcomb v. Newcomb, 12 N. Y. 603, 620.

The word "tried," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 976, providing that an issue of law may be brought and tried as a contested motion, is to be deemed as synonymous with the words "disposed of." People v. Bleecker St. & F. F. R. Co., 124 N. Y. Supp. 786, 787, 67 Misc. Rep. 582.

Rev. St. 1009, § 2294, subd. 8, authorizing an attachment where defendant has fraudulently "disposed of" his property so as to hinder or defraud creditors, does not apply to conveyances of property; subdivision 7 only applying thereto. Conran v. Fenn, 140 S. W. 82, 86, 159 Mo. App. 664.

Mortgaging exempt property is not a disposal thereof, within Code 1906, § 2158, providing that, where an owner "disposes of" exempt property, it shall not thereby become liable to his debts. And so section 2139, cl. 10, par. "b," exempting the proceeds of a sale of such property, does not apply where a homestead is mortgaged in acquiring another place, to which the occupant removed, and an execution is thereupon levied against the homestead; there having been no sale of the property and no attempt to subject the proceeds of a sale to the creditor's debts. Bennett Bros. v. Dempsey, 48 South. 901, 902, 94 Miss. 406, 136 Am. St. Rep. 584.

A lease of land for any number of years does not violate a provision in an instrument of trust that the property shall not be sold or "disposed of," since a voluntary parting with anything short of an estate in the land is not a "disposal" of it. In re Hubbell Trust, 113 N. W. 512, 515, 135 Iowa, 637, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 496, 14 Ann. Cas. 640.

Ky. St. § 3941a, authorizes persons to pool tobacco raised by them for the purpose of grading and storing it to obtain a higher price therefor than they could obtain by selling their crops separately. Subsection 3 (section 1786) provides that the agent appointed for the parties to such contract as provided in the act shall have the sole right to sell the crops pooled, and that it shall be unlawful for any owner of crops so pooled to "dispose of" it without written consent of the agent. Held, that where a pooling contract was made in M. county, and agents appointed to sell the tobacco pooled were in that county, the mere removal of tobacco pooled by one who had entered into the contract from M. county without consent of the agents and with intent to sell it without their consent, in violation of the contract, was a disposal of it within the statute, though it was actually sold in another state, and the offending person could be indicted and tried in M. county. Collins v. Commonwealth, 133 S. W. 233, 234, 141 Ky. 564; Malone v. Same, 133 S. W. 235, 141 Ky. 570.

The term "dispose of," as used in Pen. Code 1895, § 630, providing that any cropper who shall sell or otherwise dispose of any part of the crop grown by him shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, includes only those transactions in which there has been a transfer by the defendant of either title or absolute possession of the property, or else some such disposition of it as would destroy it in whole or in part. It means to alienate, to effectually transfer. It covers "all such alienations of property as may be made in ways not otherwise covered in the statute; for example, such as pledges, pawns, gifts, bailments, and other transfers and alienations." "To dispose of" in a popular sense, as used in reference to property, means to part with a right to or ownership of it; in other words, a change of property. If this does not take place, it would scarcely be said the property was disposed of. It differs in meaning from the word "secrete." When it is associated in the context with the word "sell," then under the principle contained in the legal expression "noscitur a sociis" its meaning takes on some limitation from the association. Where the expression is "sell or otherwise dispose of," the other disposition must be somewhat in the nature of a sale. It does not include a mere removal of the property. In a statute prohibiting "the selling, giving away, or otherwise disposing of" certain property under certain conditions, the expression "otherwise dispose of," in the absence of any expression of a legislative intent otherwise, must be construed to apply only to such a disposition as a sale or gift. Scott v. State, 64 S. E. 1005, 1006, 6 Ga. App. 332 (citing United States v. Hacker, 73 Fed. 292, 294; Bullene v. Smith, 73 Mo. 151, 161; Reynolds v. State, 73 Ala. 3; Franklin v. State, 12 Md. 246, 248; Pearre v. Hawkins, 62 Tex. 434, 437; In re Carr, 19 Atl. 145, 16 R. I. 645, 27 Am. St. Rep. 773; Phelps v. Harris, 101 U. S. 370, 25 L. Ed. 855; Hawthurst v. Rathgeb, 51 Pac. 846, 119 Cal. 531, 533, 63 Am. St. Rep. 142; Robberson v. State, 3 Tex. App. 502, 503; Robberson v. State, 14 South. 554, 100 Ala. 37).

To "dispose of liquor in any manner" might, unqualified by anything else, mean the giving of it away; but in a statute providing that any persons who shall barter, sell, or dispose of in any manner any spirituous liquor, without first having obtained a license, shall be fined, it meant to part with it for some consideration, or with some motive of gain, and did not prohibit the giving of it away. It was intended to reach those cases where persons by some artifice or indirection attempted to cover up a sale, and thus evade the penalties of the law. Litch v. People ex rel. Town of Sterling, 75 Pac. 1079, 1080, 19 Colo. App. 421 (citing Wood v. Territory, 1 Or. 223).

Sell

The grant of a power to "dispose" of property is equivalent to the power to alienate or direct the ownership of the property. Ironside v. Ironside, 130 N. W. 414, 416, 150 Iowa, 628.

That the words "sell" and "dispose," as used in a will, were synonymous, was indicated by the words "either at public or private sale" appearing after the direction for the executrix to "sell and dispose" of the property as she might think best. Rutledge v. Crampton (Ala.) 43 South. 825, 826.

"Whilst it may be true that when the words 'disposed of' are used in connection with the word 'sell,' in the phrase 'to sell and dispose of,' they may often be construed to mean a disposal by sale. The word is nomen generalissimum, and standing by itself, without qualification, has no technical signification." Phelps v. Harris, 101 U. S. 370, 381, 25 L. Ed. 855.

Sell on credit

Land was conveyed to a district agricultural association in trust as a place for holding agricultural exhibitions, a part thereof to be sold or disposed of to the best advantage for the purpose of improving the agricultural grounds and for meeting the expenses of the trust, including the expenses of litigation. The trustees of the association thereafter deeded part of the latter tract to B. in payment of legal services rendered the association and of services to be rendered in future. Held, that the power of disposition of the tract was not limited to a sale for cash, and even giving the word "sale" the definition of Civ. Code § 1721, as an exchange of property for a money consideration, the association was also authorized to "dispose" of the property which would empower it to transfer the property itself in payment of legal expenses. Mansfield v. District Agr. Ass'n No. 6, 97 Pac. 150, 151, 154 Cal. 145.

DISPOSING MIND AND MEMORY

"A 'disposing memory' exists when one can recall the general nature, condition, and extent of his property, and his relations to those to whom he gives, and also to those from whom he excludes his bounty. He must have active memory enough to bring to his mind the nature and particulars of the business to be transacted, and mental power enough to appreciate them and act with sense and judgment in regard to them." In re American Board of Com'rs for Foreign Missions, 66 Atl. 215, 221, 102 Me. 72 (quoting and adopting the definition in Hall v. Perry, 33 Atl. 161, 87 Me. 572, 47 Am. St. Rep. 352).

"A 'disposing mind and memory' may be said to be one which is capable of presenting to the testator all of his property, and all the persons who come reasonably within the range of his bounty; and if a person has sufficient understanding and intelligence to understand his ordinary business, and to understand what disposition he is making of his property, then he has sufficient capacity to make a will." Jones v. Thomas, 117 S. W. 1177, 1188, 218 Mo. 508 (quoting and adopting definition in Benoist v. Murrin, 58 Mo. 322).

To constitute a "disposing mind and memory," it is not essential that the mind should be unbroken, unimpaired, unshattered by disease or otherwise. The testator should be capable of recollecting the property he is about to bequeath, the manner of distributing it, and the objects of his bounty.

His mind and memory should be sufficiently sound to enable him to know and understand the business in which he is engaged at the time. Sloan v. Maxwell, 3 N. J. Eq. 563, 568, 573; Jones v. Collins, 51 Atl. 398, 399, 94 Md. 403 (quoting and adopting the definition in Sloan v. Maxwell, 3 N. J. Eq. 563).

A testator has a "disposing mind and memory" when his mind and memory are sufficiently sound to enable him to recollect the property he is about to bequeath, the objects of his bounty, and the manner of distributing it; that is to say, to know and to understand the business in which he was engaged at the time he executed the will, though his memory be very imperfect and greatly impaired by age or disease. Stackhouse v. Horton, 15 N. J. Eq. 202, 206.

DISPOSITION

See Final Disposition; Unlawful Disposition of Mortgaged Goods.
Other disposition, see Other.

By "disposition," according to the lexicographers, is meant the tendency, bent, propensity, or inclination for or toward a particular thing. This may exist without the intent or design of doing it. State v. Thompson, 111 N. W. 319, 321, 133 Iowa, 741.

In reply to counsel's argument that the term "codicil," used by the notary, designated the last bequest as a separate act, and not as a part of the one will, the district court said that the notary did not use the term "codicil" alone, but styled the additional bequest a "codicil and addition to the will," but if he had used the term "codicil" alone, he would have been using a term synonymous with the word "bequest" or "disposition"; that the Civil Code uses the word "codicil" as synonymous with the word "disposition," or "legacy," in the provision that no "disposition" mortis causa shall henceforth be made otherwise than by a last will or testament, but the name given to the act of last will is of no importance, and dispositions may be made by testament, or under that institution or heir, of legacy, codicil, donation mortis causa, or under any other name indicating the last will, provided that the act be clothed with the forms required for the validity of the testament, and the clauses it contains, clearly establish that it is a "disposition" of last will. The conclusions of the district court were affirmed. Oglesby v. Turner, 50 South. 859, 864, 124 La. 1084.

DISPOSSESS

The word "dispossess," in a lease authorizing the landlord, in case of default in the payment of rent, to re-enter by force or otherwise, and providing that on any default by the lessee the landlord may either dispossess the lessee or resort to a deposit made by the lessee to secure the performance of covenants, includes removal from premises by the remedies afforded to a landlord to regain possession for nonpayment of rent. Anzalone v. Paskusz, 89 N. Y. Supp. 203, 206, 96 App. Div. 188.

The word "repossess," as used in a covenant in a lease authorizing the landlord, on the tenant's breach of covenant, to re-enter the premises and repossess himself of the same, was not equivalent to "dispossess," as used in the statute providing for regaining possession of real property by summary proceedings. Kleinstein v. Gonsky, 118 N. Y. Supp. 949, 950, 134 App. Div. 266.

When the owner of an easement is deprived of his right, he is not referred to as having been "dispossessed" of the land, but it is referred to as an "interference," "obstruction," or "disturbance." The remedy is on the case for damages for the injury done, or, if this is inadequate, permanent injunction is the proper remedy. Kansas & C. P. R. Co. v. Burns, 79 Pac. 238, 240, 70 Kan. 627.

DISPROPORTIONATE TO THE VALUE

In a statute relating to sale of land in probate proceedings, providing that the court must examine the return of the sale, and if the proceedings were unfair, or the sum bid "disproportionate to the value," the words quoted mean disproportionate to the value at the time of the bid. It would not be sufficient for the court to merely find that a sum exceeding the bid by 10 per cent. might be obtained, but it must also find that the bid, when it was made, was disproportionate to the value, or that the proceedings were unfair. In re Leonis' Estate, 71 Pac. 171, 173, 138 Cal. 194; McGregor v. Jensen, 109 Pac. 729, 731, 18 Idaho, 320.

In a complaint for specific performance, alleging that the consideration which plaintiff was to pay was adequate and "not disproportionate to the value" of the lands, the expression "not disproportionate to the value" is rather a circumlocutory form for "equal in value," and meets the requirement that the adequacy of the consideration must be shown. Kerr v. Moore, 92 Pac. 107, 108, 6 Cal. App. 305.

DISPUTABLE PRESUMPTION

"Disputable presumptions of law" do not belong to the law of evidence, but to a much larger topic; the topic of legal reasoning in its application to particular subjects. They are aids to reasoning and argumentation, and assume the truth of certain matters for the purpose of some given inquiry. They may be grounded on general experience, or probability of any kind, or merely on policy and convenience. On whatever basis they rest, they operate in advance of argument or evidence, or irrespective of them, by taking something for granted, by assuming its existence; and the exact scope and operation of these prima facie assumptions are to cast upon the party against whom they operate the duty of going forward in argument or evidence on the particular point to which they relate, but they are not in themselves either argument or evidence, although for the time being they accomplish the result of both. In re Cowdry's Will, 60 Atl. 141, 142, 77 Vt. 359, 3 Ann. Cas. 70 (citing Thayer, Prelim. Treatise, Ev. 314).

DISPUTE

See Amount in Dispute; Matter in Dispute; Real and Substantial Dispute; Substantial Dispute; Value in Controversy or Dispute.

The treaty between the United States and Germany, giving consuls general, consuls, etc., exclusive charge of the internal order of the merchant vessels of their nation, and exclusive power to determine differences of every kind arising, either at sea or in port, between captains, officers, and crews, does not prevent an action in the courts for personal injuries from negligence on the part of the owners, agents, servants, and crew of such a vessel, although such an action might bring into question contradictions or differences in the statements of occurrences by the various officers or members of the crew. This is a question of evidence, and not such a matter of substantial rights as to be legally termed a "dispute or difference," in the sense of meaning a case at law or a claim to be litigated. The Baker, 157 Fed. 485, 487.

DISPUTED CLAIM

Where an executor, in giving notice of a dispute or rejection of a claim under Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 1822, at the same time does or says anything from which claimant may reasonably infer that the determination to dispute or reject is not final, but the claim will be further examined and considered, it is not a "disputed claim" within the meaning of the statute. In re Latham's Will, 130 N. Y. Supp. 535, 539, 145 App. Div. 849.

DISQUALIFY

See Mental Disqualification; Permanently Disqualified.

Otherwise disqualified, see Otherwise.

Under Rev. St. c. 3, § 18, which provides that administration shall be granted to the husband upon the estate of his wife, if he will accept the same and is not disqualified, a husband is not "disqualified," so as to justify the county court in refusing him letters of administration, because of a post-nuptial contract by which he relinquished all his right and interest in his wife's estate. Orear v. Crum, 25 N. E. 1097, 1098, 185 Ill. 294.

DISQUALIFYING INTEREST

The "disqualifying interest" precluding a person from testifying to a transaction by him with a person since deceased, as provided by Code, § 4604, is an interest in the event of the case, and not in the question to be decided, and the witness' liability to a like action or his standing in the same predicament, if the verdict cannot be given in evidence for or against him, is an interest in the question only, which does not disqualify. Mollison v. Rittgers, 118 N. W. 512, 514, 140 Iowa, 365, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1179.

DISREGARD

In an instruction that "you are not at liberty to disregard such testimony entirely," to "disregard" means to overlook, to pay no attention to, to ignore; and as it was their duty to consider the evidence, to properly regard and weigh it, and then believe or disbelieve it as they should see fit, the province of the jury was not invaded in any manner by the instruction. Everson v. State, 93 N. W. 394, 396, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 109.

An instruction that, if any witness had willfully testified falsely in regard to any material fact, the jury was at liberty to "disregard and discard his entire testimony," is not objectionable because of the use of the words "disregard" and "discard," instead of "distrust," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 3, providing that, when a witness is false in one part of his testimony, he is to be "distrusted" in the others, since the court did not tell the jury that they ought to reject, or that they must reject, the entire evidence of the witness, but simply instructed them that they were at liberty to disregard and discard the whole evidence of a witness who had willfully testified falsely to a material fact in the case. Whitaker v. California Door Co., 95 Pac. 910, 911, 7 Cal. App. 757; People v. Soto, 59 Cal. 367.

"A 'disseisin' is when one enters, intending to usurp the possession and to oust another of the freehold." Toney v. Knapp, 106 N. W. 552, 553, 142 Mich. 652 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Greenl. Cruise, 51).

"Disseisin" is the wrongful putting out of him that is seised of the freehold, an attack upon him who is in the actual possession and turning him out, an ouster from a freehold in deed." Dobbins v. Dobbins, 53 S. E. 870, 872, 141 N. C. 210, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185, 115 Am. St. Rep. 682 (citing 3 Black. Com. 167).

"It is * * * laid down that if A. executes to B. a lease for the lands of C., and B. enters, this is a 'disseisin' by A., and the reason assigned is that the demise to B. is equivalent to a command to enter the land of C." Bradstreet v. Huntington, 5 Pet. (30 U. S.) 402, 434, 8 L. Ed. 170.

Dispossession distinguished

Disseisin is always a wrongful dispossession; i. e., it is never supported by a good title. "Disseisin" and "ouster" mean very much the same thing as "adverse possession." Earnest v. Little River Land, etc., Co., 75 S. W. 1122, 1126, 109 Tenn. 427 (citing Feld. Real. Prop. §§ 693, 694; Coal Creek Consol. Coal Co. v. East Tennessee Iron & Coal Co., 59 S. W. 634, 105 Tenn. 574).

Possession

Taking possession and occupancy of vacant land by a mere squatter does not work a "disseisin" of the true owner, nor will such possession ripen into title. Jasperson v. Scharnikow, 150 Fed. 571, 573, 80 C. C. A. 373, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1178.

An adverse possession cannot begin until there has been a disseisin, and to constitute a "disseisin" there must be an actual expulsion of the true owner for the full period prescribed by the statute. Hume v. Rogue River Packing Co., 92 Pac. 1065, 1071, 51 Or. 237, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 396, 131 Am. St. Rep. 732.

The possession of land by a tenant in common may become adverse, if he, by his acts and conduct, disseises his co-tenants by repudiating their title and claims adversely to them; it being necessary to constitute "disseisin" that there be outward acts of exclusive ownership, and such as by their own import would impart notice to the co-tenants that an actual disseisin was intended. Carpenter v. Fletcher, 88 N. E. 162, 239 Ill. 440.

Since there could be no adverse possession of public land on which a mining claim was located while the title was in the United States, there was no "disseisin" sufficient to start the statute of limitations in operation, as against the locator of such claim, prior to the issuance of a government patent to him therefor. Tyee Consol. Min. Co. v. Langstedt, 136 Fed. 124, 128, 69 C. C. A. 548 (citing United States v. De la Maza Arredondo, 6 Pet. [31 U. S.] 743, 8 L. Ed. 547).

Color of title and mere possession thereunder by one or more of a number of tenants in common, however long continued, does not amount to a "disseisin" of the co-tenants out of possession, and is therefore not adverse. The possession of one tenant in common is the possession of all. Russell v. Tenant, 60 S. E. 609, 611, 63 W. Va. 623, 129 Am. St. Rep. 1024.

DISSEIZIN

DISSENT

Where testator's son, though named as such, refused to act as director of the corporation, and testator's wife, who acted as such, disagreed as to voting the stock with the remaining persons designated as trustees who had accepted the trust, there was not a "dissent" of two of the directors within the meaning of the will so as to confer any authority as to voting the stock upon the corporate executor or trustee. Elger v. Boyle, 126 N. Y. Supp. 946, 948, 69 Misc. Rep. 273.

DISSENT FROM VERDICT

After a verdict in favor of defendants had been rendered, a statement of one of the jurors that the jury intended that plaintiff should have the building, and be permitted to remove it, to which defendants at once agreed, did not constitute a "dissent from the verdict," within Kirby's Dig. §§ 6203, 6204, providing that, if any juror dissents, the jury must be again sent out for deliberation, and therefore did not justify the court in refusing to accept the verdict, and to enter judgment thereon. Harris v. Graham & Bordley, 111 S. W. 984, 986, 86 Ark. 570.

DISSIMILAR CONDITION

The ownership or nonownership by the shipper of the goods tendered for carriage is not a "dissimilar condition," within the meaning of Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 2, 24 Stat. 379, prohibiting inequality and discrimination in rates. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 392, 398, 220 U. S. 235, 55 L. Ed. 448.

DISSOLUTION

See De Facto Dissolution.

By a "dissolution" in law is meant a dissolution which may take place either by a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, or by a legislative repeal of a charter of a corporation where the right of repeal has been reserved in the statute granting the charter, or in the Constitution or in the general law, or by the expiration of the period named in the charter as the period of the duration of the life of the corporation. Youree v. Home Town Mut. Ins. Co. of Warrensburg, 79 S. W. 176, 178, 180 Mo. 153 (citing Thomp. Corp.).

The word "dissolution," as used in a charter provision as to the disposition of property on the dissolution of a subordinate council of a beneficiary order having governmental powers to grant charters, enact laws, levy taxes, and dissolve subordinate councils, should be construed as meaning what it would mean when we speak of a corporation being dissolved by an act of government or judicial proceedings. State Council of Junior Order of United American Mechanics of New Jersey

v. Enterprise Council No. 6, 72 Atl. 19, 20, 75 N. J. Eq. 245.

Of corporation

Good cause for, see Good Cause.

A "dissolution" of a corporation, within the contemplation of the law, is the death of the corporation. It means a disintegration, a separation, a going out of business. Thels v. Spokane Falls Gaslight Co., 74 Pac. 1004, 1006, 34 Wash. 23.

Civ. Code 1901, par. 772, providing that a corporation may be dissolved by a majority vote of its members, and Laws 1903, No. 82, providing for the dissolution of a corporation by direction of the holders of the majority of its outstanding stock represented at the meeting, does not authorize the reorganization of a corporation into another corporation by a majority vote of its members, as the "dissolution" of the corporation means its complete destruction and the liquidation and distribution of its assets, and Act 82 does not authorize the majority of the stockholders to give away the corporate assets, or to place upon nonassenting stockholders the necessity of being parties to a continuation of the business under a new corporate franchise. Farish v. Cieneguita Copper Co., 100 Pac. 781, 783, 12 Ariz. 235.

"Dissolution," in the sense in which the term is used in Gen. St. 1906, § 2681, consummating the right of corporate creditors to proceed against the stockholders for the collection of their claims upon a dissolution of the corporation, takes place when the corporation comes into the condition of having debts and no assets and has ceased to act and exercise its corporate functions, or has suffered acts to be done which end the object for which it was created. Knight & Wall Co. v. Tampa Sand Lime Brick Co., 46 South. 285, 289, 55 Fla. 728.

Corporation

A corporation which for two years has failed to pay its franchise tax, so that its charter and powers have, under Franchise Tax Act (21 Del. Laws, c. 166) § 10, become inoperative and void, and whose charter the Governor has proclaimed repealed, as required by section 11, is within General Corporation Act (22 Del. Laws, c. 166) § 43, providing that "when a corporation * * * shall be 'dissolved' in any manner whatever" a court of chancery may appoint a receiver for it. Harned v. Beacon Hill Real Estate Co. (Del.) 80 Atl. 805, 808.

DISSOLVING CONDITION

The Code, recognizing conditional contracts, recognizes a classification of conditions; it recognizes "conditions precedent" and "conditions subsequent," "suspensive conditions" and "dissolving or resolutive conditions," and it affixes to each their appropriate legal effect. The claim of a vendor to property immobilized by the purchaser and seized and sold in enforcing a pre-existing mortgage, made under a condition in the contract of sale that the title was to remain in the vendor until the entire price was made was not the "resolutive or dissolving condition," but the "suspensive condition." W. T. Adams Mach. Co. v. Newman, 32 South. 38, 41, 42, 107 La. 702.

DISTANCE

See Convenient in Point of Distance; Same Distance.

DISTILLATION

"The 'distillation' of spirits, and the rectification of them after they are distilled, appear to be distinct and separate acts." United States v. Tenbroek, 2 Wheat. (15 U. S.) 248, 258, 4 L. Ed. 231.

DISTILLED OIL

So-called olein, a distillate from wool grease, in the form of an oil, is not "wool grease," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 279, 30 Stat. 172, but is dutiable as a "distilled oil," under Schedule A, par. 3, 30 Stat. 151. Swan & Finch Co. v. United States, 172 Fed. 173.

DISTILLED LIQUOR

Liquor as including, see Liquor.

DISTILLED SPIRITS

Bay rum is not within the enumeration of "distilled spirits," defined in section 3248, Rev. St., as "ethyl alcohol, * * * including all dilutions and mixtures of this substance." Anderson v. Newhall, 161 Fed. 906, 908, 88 C. C. A. 511.

DISTILLER

A "distiller" may act in the capacity of a warehouseman. Commonwealth v. Walker, 89 S. W. 180, 181, 121 Ky. 274 (citing Ky. Stat. 1903, § 2572a, subsec. 6).

DISTINCT

DISTINCT SPECIFICATION OF ERROR

The term "distinct specification of error," within Courts of Civil Appeals rule 25 (67 S. W. xv), defining the term as a requirement that an assignment of error shall not only point out the particular part of the proceedings complained of, but also the particular matter in which the judgment is erroneous, contemplates that the error shall be pointed out and a statement in what it consists made. Cobb v. Johnson (Tex.) 105 S. W. 847, 850.

DISTINCTIVE FORCE

Under Laws 1909, p. 277, c. 187, including a definition of intoxicating liquors as a beverage retaining the alcoholic principle as a "distinctive force," a defendant having sold liquor labeled "Purity Malt," commonly sold in the state as a substitute for beer, and containing 1.75 per cent. of alcohol by volume and 1.40 per cent. of alcohol by weight, was guilty in violation of the prohibitory law. State v. Fargo Bottling Works Co., 124 N. W. 387, 389, 19 N. D. 396, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 872; Same v. American Bottling Ass'n, 124 N. W. 396, 19 N. D. 344.

DISTINCTLY

A protest did not set forth the importer's objections "distinctly and specifically," within the meaning of the Customs Administrative Act (26 Stat. 137), where goods, which should have been classified free of duty under a paragraph relating to "jute bagging," were asserted in the importers' protest to be free under a paragraph relating to "bur-laps," and there was no suggestion that the importers at the time of filing the protest had in mind the former provision. Corbitt & Macleay Co. v. United States, 153 Fed. 648, 650.

While alternative grounds of dissatisfaction may properly be stated in protests against decisions by collectors of customs, this rule does not permit the enumeration of a long list of paragraphs, many of which are entirely remote, with the purpose of covering everything. Under the provision in the Customs Administrative Act (26 Stat. 137), that protests shall set forth "distinctly and specifically" the importers' grounds of objections, it is not enough that the provision ultimately relied upon can be found somewhere in the protest. Protests each covering 24 separate provisions of the tariff, which carry about 50 different rates of duty, are invalid as not setting forth the importers' objections "distinctly and specifically," within the intent of the Customs Administrative Act. J. H. Lichtenstein & Co. v. United States, 175 Fed. 1016, 1017.

DISTINGUISH

DISTINGUISH BETWEEN RIGHT AND WRONG

The phrase "distinguish between right and wrong," as applied to the defense of insanity, means that the defendant had not the mental capacity to know that he was doing a moral wrong. If his mind is not so diseased at the time of the crime as to prevent him from knowing the nature and quality of his act, or if he did know the nature and quality of his act, that he was morally doing a wrong, he has sufficient mental capacity to be responsible for his acts. State v. Wetter, 83 Pac. 341, 347, 11 Idaho, 433.

DISTINGUISHED BALLOT

Webster defines "distinguishing" as "constituting a difference or distinction from everything else." The election law provided that if on the face or back of any ballot there shall be any mark, sign, designation, or device other than permitted by the act, whereby the ballot may be identified or distinguished from any other ballot, it shall be absolutely void. Held, that official ballots indorsed with a fac simile of the signature of the municipal clerk are not marked ballots which can be "distinguished" from any other ballot, within the meaning of the statute. Bliss v. Wooley, 52 Atl. 835, 836, 68 N. J. Law, 51.

A "distinguished ballot" is one which bears an identification mark made by the voter, or with his connivance, knowledge, or consent, to distinguish it from other ballots cast. Town of Eufaula v. Gibson, 98 Pac. 565, 567, 22 Okl. 507.

DISTINGUISHING MARK

To constitute a "distinguishing mark," within the election laws declaring that no ballot bearing any "distinguishing mark" shall be counted, it must appear that the mark, whether made by the use of a letter, figure, or character, is such a mark as shows an intention on the part of the voter to identify or distinguish his particular ballot from others of the class, and any mark inadvertently made on the ballot, or made through carelessness or ignorance, which does not show on the face of the ballot that such mark was made with the intention of distinguishing that ballot from others of the same class, or that that result would be accomplished by the mark, will not be treated as a "distinguishing mark." McClelland v. Erwin, 86 Pac. 283, 287, 16 Okl. 612.

The "distinguishing mark" prohibited by the law is such a mark as will separate and distinguish the particular ballot from other ballots cast at the election. It is some sort of a mark put upon the ballot to indicate who cast it, and to furnish the means of evading the law as to secrecy. Winn v. Blackman, 82 N. E. 215, 220, 229 Ill. 198, 120 Am. St. Rep. 237; Pierce v. People, 64 N. E. 372, 374, 197 Ill. 432; Rexroth v. Schein, 69 N. E. 240, 248, 206 Ill. 80.

Numerals placed upon election ballots with honest intent by the election officials are not "distinguishing marks," within the provision of the statute, and the ballots cannot be disregarded for that reason. Hardy v. Beaver City (Utah) 125 Pac. 679, 683.

A ballot had a cross in the circles at the head of the Democratic and Republican columns and a cross in front of the name of the Democratic candidate for village trustee. There were two other offices to be filled, and there was a cross in front of the names of each Republican candidate for the two offices and a cross in front of the name of one of the Democratic candidates. Held, that the ballot was not void on the ground that it was marked by the voter to enable his ballot to be identified, but should be counted for the Democratic candidate for trustee. People ex rel. Moran v. Sniffin, 108 N. Y. Supp. 243, 244, 123 App. Div. 730.

A ballot marked through inadvertence or carelessness has not been given a "distinguishing mark," so as to render it an illegal ballot. Town of Eufaula v. Gibson, 98 Pac. 565, 567, 22 Okl. 507.

Where a voter was required by law to mark his ballot by making a cross opposite the names of the candidates voted for, and was furnished with a stamp for the purpose, but, either because the stamp was defective or he used it improperly, he made only rectangular marks or blotches, the ballot was properly rejected as containing "distinguishing marks"; but where another voter so applied the stamp that all or a portion of the rectangular outline of the stamp was left upon the ballot surrounding the cross, but not rendering it indistinguishable, the defect only appearing in what was probably the first mark made on the ballot, it being opposite the first name, and all the other crosses on the ballot being clear, the ballot was valid. Strosnider v. Turner, 90 Pac. 581, 582, 29 Nev. 347.

Not every mark made by a voter on his ballot, which may separate and distinguish the particular ballot from other ballots cast at the election, will necessarily result in the declaration that the ballot is invalid. If it appears from the face of the ballot that such marks or writings were placed thereon as the result of an honest effort on the part of the voter to indicate his choice of candidates among those to be voted for at the election, and that the voter did not thereby intend or attempt to indicate who voted the ballot, the ballot should not be rejected as to candidates for whom there is thereon a choice expressed in compliance with the requirements of the statute. The fact that a ballot bore the printed words "For Constable" and below that a printed dotted line with a square opposite the dotted line, so that the voters desiring to vote for such office could have written in the name of the candidate on the line and placed a cross in the square, and that the name of the person was written below the dotted line, though on the margin of the ticket; that a ballot bore in pencil on a dotted line under the words "For Constable" the capital letters "H. A."; that the name of a candidate written on a proper dotted line on a ballot extends beyond that line; that in the square opposite the name of the candidate on a ballot there was a distinct cross and near the square opposite the name of another candidate for another office, in which there was a cross, appeared a mark made with a pencil after the square; that marks constituting crosses, or nearly completed crosses, in the circle at the head of the column on a ballot had been erased by the voters, the column of opposing candidates bearing a proper mark in the circle at the head; that a voter placed a cross in the square opposite the name of a candidate for each office, and that there was an erasure in the square opposite the name of one candidate, and the proper cross in the square opposite the name of the opposing candidate; that a ballot has a cross in the circle at the head of a column of candidates, and also some other pencil marks in the circle; that a ballot bore dotted lines, above which were the printed words "For Justice of the Peace," but they were voted in precincts where no justice of the peace was to be elected, and names were written on such dotted lines—did not constitute "distinguishing marks" on any of such ballots within the meaning of a statute rendering invalid ballots containing "distinguishing marks." Rexroth v. Schein, 69 N. E. 240, 248, 206 Ill. 80.

DISTRESS

See Unreasonable Distress.

"Distress" is "the taking of a personal chattel out of the possession of a wrongdoer into the custody of the party injured to procure satisfaction of the wrong committed; the act of taking possession of personal property to hold as a pledge for the payment of a debt, the discharge of a duty, or for reparation of some injury done." "Distress" is not a judicial process, and under it only such property can be taken as is tangible and capable of seizure and sale. Acme Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Hinkley, 122 N. W. 482, 483, 23 S. D. 509, 21 Ann. Cas. 743.

As judicial process

See Judicial Process.

For rent

"Distress for rent" is a remedy of the landlord for the collection of rent, and applies whenever the relation of landlord and tenant exists. All goods on demised premises, by the common law or the statutory law of Pennsylvania, may be considered as under a quasi pledge to the landlord, which gives superiority to the specific lien acquired by a distraint, and such a lien is not one obtained through legal proceedings, within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67f, 30 Stat. 565, and is not divested by the bankruptcy of the tenant within four months thereafter. In re West Side Paper Co., 162 Fed. 110, 111, 89 C. C. A. 110, 15 Ann. Cas. 384.

Of mind

"The word 'distressed' has application to physical as well as mental suffering." International & G. N. R. Co. v. Gonzalez, 91 S. W. 597, 598, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 22.

Since the word "distress," being a generic term, includes anguish or suffering, both of mind and body, and since "humiliation" and mortification are simply phases of mental anguish, allegations in a petition, in an action against a sheriff and his deputy, that they wrongfully and unlawfully entered into a house and premises occupied by plaintiff under a lease and dispossessed him, and put his household goods and personal property in the public highway, and so put plaintiff to great trouble and distress, properly authorize a recovery for humiliation and mortification, or any phase of "mental anguish." Perkins v. Ogilvie, 146 S. W. 735, 738, 148 Ky. 309.

DISTRIBUTE

See Fully Distributed.

"Distribute" is defined as "to divide among several or many; to deal out; to allot." Staté ex rel. Shaw v. Thompson, 131 N. W. 231, 235, 21 N. D. 426.

The word "distributed" is not a technical word in conveyancing; but, if it has any technical meaning, it is with reference to decrees of distribution in probate courts. In re Heberle's Estate, 95 Pac. 41, 153 Cal. 275 (citing In re Dunphy's Estate, 81 Pac. 315, 147 Cal. 95).

A direction in a will directing the executors to "distribute equally to testator's legal heirs" is equivalent to a direction to make distribution in accordance with the statutes providing for descent and distribution. Barr v. Denney, 87 N. E. 267, 268, 79 Ohio St. 358.

The use of the word "distributed," in a will providing that one-fifth of the income of trust fund shall be paid quarterly to testator's daughter, and at her death one-fifth of the principal of the estate shall be transferred and "distributed" as she may by will direct, would not show an intention to create a trust to convey, or that testator supposed that a conveyance by the trustee was necessary to pass title. In re Dunphy's Estate, 81 Pac. 315, 317, 147 Cal. 95.

The averment of the petition for grant of administration, under Rev. Laws, c. 137, § 4, more than 20 years after death of deceased, because of undistributed property, averring that there were funds of a certain amount in the hands of the state treasurer which remained to be administered, and which the state auditor was unwilling to pay to any but an administrator, though not in the precise statutory form, is equivalent thereto; it being impossible that money in the hands of the state officials could have been "distributed," within the meaning of the statute. Dallinger v. Morse, 94 N. E. 701, 702, 208 Mass. 501, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 982.

In a note promising to pay a certain sum in consideration of the promise by the payer to "distribute" a certain sum after the maker's death for masses, another sum to a sister, and to keep the balance, the word

"distribute" is inconsistent with the idea that the payer is to make payments out of her own funds and reimburse herself by enforcing the note, but consistent with the idea that she is to obtain the money from the payee's estate. McCourt v. Peppard, 105 N. W. 809, 812, 126 Wis. 326.

The term "fully distributed," as used in Rev. Laws Mass. c. 167, § 127, which provides that, where an attachment has been dissolved by the appointment of a receiver, the receiver shall not be discharged until all the assets which have come into his hands have been "fully distributed," is not satisfied by a remission of the property to a receiver in another jurisdiction; the word "distributed" implying a division, apportionment, and delivery. Second Nat. Bank of Pittsburgh v. J. C. Lappe Tanning Co., 84 N. E. 301, 302, 198 Mass. 159 (citing 1 Bouv. Law Dict. 550; Thomson v. Tracy, 60 N. Y. 174-180; William Hill Co. v. Lawler, 48 Pac. 323, 116 Cal. 359-361; Rogers v. Gillett, 9 N. W. 204, 56 Iowa, 266-268).

As relating to real property

While the word "distribute" is usually applied to money and personal property, it also designates a division of real estate among heirs or devisees; so that where an academy, to which real estate had been devised, provided it had on hand a certain endowment fund, otherwise to revert to the testator's heirs and be distributed among them, failed to accumulate the fund, the title to the real estate vested in the testator's heirs at law. Clark v. Fleischmann, 116 N. W. 290, 293, 81 Neb. 445.

DISTRIBUTABLE PROPERTY

Switches and industrial tracks off the main right of way, but used as a part of the general system, and for the same purposes as switch tracks on the right of way are used, must be assessed as "distributable" property, but all buildings, coal bins, round-houses, machine shops, depot buildings, and other structures located on the terminal yards must be assessed as "localized" property, within Acts 1897, p. 102, c. 5, requiring railroads to file a schedule setting forth the length in miles of its railroad bed, switches, and side tracks, and the value of the whole, providing that the road of any railroad shall include side tracks, switches, etc., and that the roadbed, rolling stock, franchises, choses in action, and personal property having no actual situs shall be known as "distributable property," and shall be valued separately, and that the depot buildings and other property, real, personal, and mixed, having an actual situs, shall be known as the "localized property," and shall be valued separately. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Patterson, 122 S. W. 467, 469, 122 Tenn. 1.

DISTRIBUTEE

As legal representatives, see Legal Representatives.

As heirs, see Heir.

The words "heir" and "distributee," as used in Rev. St. 1893, § 2316, relating to actions for wrongful death, and declaring that every such action shall be for the benefit of the wife, husband, parent, and children of the person whose death shall have been so caused, and, if there be none such, then for the benefit of the heirs at law or distributees of the person whose death shall have been so caused, etc., mean the same thing. Kitchen v. Southern Ry., 48 S. E. 4, 6, 68 S. C. 554, 1 Ann. Cas. 747.

The word "distributees," as used in the statute granting administration to distributees where there is no will, means those who would be entitled under the statute of distribution to the personal estate of the decedent if he had died intestate; and where the statute granted administration with the will annexed to the person who would have been entitled to administration if there had been no will on the refusal of an executor, a devisee and legatee had no preferable right to be appointed, such person not being a "distributee." Smith v. Lurty, 59 S. E. 403, 404, 107 Va. 548.

While the words "distributive share" ordinarily refer to personal property, and "distributee" denotes the person on whom such property devolves by act of law in case of intestacy, yet in view of the item in a will, whereby testatrix, in terms, devises that negroes be kept together on her plantation, and that it be carried on as in her lifetime, till one of her three children reaches the age of 21, and then the property, both real and personal, shall be equally divided between them, the words "distributive share" in the next item, in terms devising that half of each distributive share to her children, "as directed above," shall be settled on each of them, so that he shall have the use of it for life, and at his death it shall be divided between his children, disposes of real as well as personal property. Jones v. Myatt, 69 S. E. 135, 136, 153 N. C. 225.

DISTRIBUTION

See Decree of Distribution; Just and Equal Distribution; On Final Distribution.

Ratable distribution, see Ratable Distribution.

Ready for distribution, see Ready.

The words "disposal" and "distribution" are often used synonymously. Scully v. Squier, 90 Pac. 573, 577, 13 Idaho, 417, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 183.

"Distribution" means the act of distributing or dispensing; the act of dividing or portioning among several or many; apportionment. Under Mechanics' Lien Act, § 1, amended by Laws 1893, Act No. 199, providing that the owner of a building is not to be protected in payment to the contractor unless the same is distributed to the subcontractors, etc., the term "distribution" means a prorating to all entitled to take, and not a payment of the entire contract price to one. Fairbairn v. Moody, 75 N. W. 469, 470, 116 Mich. 61 (quoting definition in Webst. Dict.); Blitz v. Fields, 76 N. W. 119, 118 Mich. 83 (citing and adopting Fairbairn v. Moody, 75 N. W. 469, 116 Mich. 61).

Within a statute providing for an allowance to a referee of commissions when he is required to distribute any of the proceeds of a sale, a payment of the proceeds to the parties entitled in accordance with their respective rights is not a "distribution" of such proceeds. Harrington v. Bayles, 82 N. Y. Supp. 379, 388.

The executors of an estate met and determined to distribute to themselves as trustees a large part of the estate of a decedent, and pursuant thereto transferred certain securities and other property, and opened a new inventory, in which the securities transferred were marked as belonging to the trustees, and gave notice and filed lists with the assessors of the various municipalities, but failed to file their final account as executors, or to have it allowed in the probate court. Held that, because of such want of a final approved account, there was no "distribution of the estate for the purpose of taxation," within the meaning of St. 1909, c. 490, pt. 1, § 23; cl. 7, specifying where the personal property of the estates of deceased persons shall be assessed after it has been distributed. Welch v. City of Boston, 97 N. E. 893, 897, 211 Mass. 178.

"Distribution," as used in a statement by the court in an action to recover for death by wrongful act, where the father was the sole beneficiary, and the recovery would be for his exclusive benefit, that the recovery shall be distributed the same as personal property of the deceased would be distributed under the laws of the state, meant division, and yet there could be no distribution of the recovery in the sense of a division, because there was but a single beneficiary (the father), and the recovery, whatever the amount, would be for his exclusive benefit as compensation for his pecuniary loss, and none other. Swift & Co. v. Johnson, 138 Fed. 867, 871, 71 C. C. A. 619, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1161.

A contract between an inventor and capitalists, who had each contributed $250 for the perfection of a machine, provided that the capitalists were to contribute a certain amount of money, and that the inventor, in lieu of money, was to give his process and time to the enterprise, and that when it was under way a corporation should be formed to manufacture the desired product. It further provided that the interest of the inventor in the capital stock of the corporation should be three-fifths, and the interest of the capitalists two-fifths, and that the capital stock should be distributed accordingly. The capitalists were entitled to two-fifths of the capital stock of the corporation after it was formed. The privilege of going into the market and buying stock of the concern at market rates would not seem to be an interest which satisfies either the meaning of the agreement or the equities of the parties, and such purchase would scarcely be a "distribution" of stock. Hunter Smokeless Powder Co. v. Hunter, 91 N. Y. Supp. 620, 623, 100 App. Div. 191.

The "distribution" of an estate includes the determination of the persons who are legally entitled thereto, and also the proportions or parts to which each of these persons is entitled, and the parts of the estate so distributed may be segregated or undivided portions thereof. A proceeding for "distribution" is in the nature of a proceeding in rem, the res being the estate which is in the hands of the executor under the control of the court, and which he brings before the court for the purpose of receiving directions as to its final disposition. Snyder v. Murdock, 73 Pac. 22, 23, 26 Utah, 233.

The word "distribution," used by the testatrix in requesting the legatee to make distribution of a portion of the property, would tend strongly to indicate an intention not to make an absolute gift; but this is not conclusive, where other parts of the will show a contrary intention. In re Murray, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1047, 1050, 124 App. Div. 548.

Same—Partition distinguished

"We lay aside, as not open to dispute, the proposition that there is a difference between 'distribution' and 'partition.' Distribution neither gives a new title to property, nor transfers a distinct right in the estate of the deceased owner, but is simply declaratory as to the persons upon whom the law casts the succession, and the extent of their respective interests; while partition, in most, if not in all, of its aspects, is an adversary proceeding, in which a remedial right to the transfer of property is asserted, and resulting in a decree which, either ex proprio vigore or as executed, accomplishes such transfer." How, Ann. St. c. 226, § 2, requires the probate court in partition to assign the estate of a decedent to the persons entitled thereto; section 5 provides that when the estate assigned to two or more heirs, etc., shall be in common, partition and distribution may be made by commissioners appointed by the probate court; and section 18 provides that the partition, when confirmed, shall be conclusive on all the heirs, etc. Held, that a decree of the probate court making partition among devisees, and deciding that one of them held a life estate in the part allotted to her, acquiesced in by her, precluded her from thereafter asserting a different tenure. Parkinson v. Parkinson, 102 N. W. 1002, 1004, 139 Mich. 530 (quoting and adopting definition in Robinson v. Fair, 9 Sup. Ct. 34, 128 U. S. 76, 2 L. Ed. 415).

Same—Payment of debts

"While the word 'distribution' is generally used to indicate a division among legatees, or heirs of the personal estate of a decedent, it is likewise often used as referring to the payment of the decedent's debts by the administrator. The expression 'distribution among creditors' is by no means uncommon in the law books." Dinning v. Conn's Adm'r, 99 S. W. 914, 915, 124 Ky. 623.

DISTRIBUTIVE SHARE

While the words "distributive share" ordinarily refer to personal property, and "distributee" denotes the person on whom such property devolves by act of law in case of intestacy, yet in view of the item in a will, whereby testatrix, in terms, devises that negroes be kept together on her plantation, and that it be carried on as in her lifetime, till one of her three children reaches the age of 21, and then the property, both real and personal, shall be equally divided between them, the words "distributive share" in the next item, in terms devising that half of each distributive share to her children, "as directed above," shall be settled on each of them, so that he shall have the use of it for life, and at his death it shall be divided between his children, disposes of real as well as personal property. Jones v. Myatt, 69 S. E. 135, 136, 153 N. C. 225.

"Distributee's share" is his proportionate part of whatever is left after the debts and expenses of administration have been paid. The distributee is not entitled to a share of the specific rights and credits and goods and chattels which came into the administrator's hands, but only to a share of the fund produced by administering them; that is, by reducing them to money." Wright v. Holmes, 62 Atl. 507, 508, 100 Me. 508, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 769, 4 Ann. Cas. 583.

The words "distributive share," as used in Code 1896, § 1506, declaring that a widow having a separate estate at least equal to her dower interest and "distributive share" shall not be entitled to dower, and section 1507, providing for dower less the widow's separate estate worth less than the dower interest and the "distributive share," mean the share a person takes of personal property in case of intestacy. Guice v. Guice, 43 South. 199, 201, 150 Ala. 552.

Rev. St. c. 77, § 13, prior to Laws 1909, c. 260, provides that, where testator's widow waives the provision made for her in the will, she shall receive the same distributive share of the personal estate as is provided by law in intestate estates. Section 18 provides that the personal estate of intestate, except that portion assigned to his widow by law and by the judge of probate, shall be applied first to the payment of debts, funeral charges, and charges of settlement, and the rest shall be distributed by the rules provided for the distribution of real estate. Held, that the phrase "distributive share" in section 18 refers to that share which the widow would receive in the distribution of the residue of an intestate estate under section 18, and she is entitled to one-half of the personal estate if there are no issue, after deducting the widow's allowance and the debts, funeral charges, and expenses of administration. In re Fogg's Estate, 74 Atl. 1133, 1134, 105 Me. 480.

Where testator gave his residuary estate to a trustee to pay enumerated bequests and convert the residue into money and invest the same in real estate and pay the net income to his two daughters and granddaughter until they reached the age of 30, and further provided that, as each arrived at that age, she could demand and receive a third as her "distributive share" to hold the same to her and her heirs forever, and, if either of the daughters or granddaughter died without issue and before receiving her distributive share, her share should go to the surviving daughters or granddaughter, the words "distributive share" merely referred to the quantum of the estate which the beneficiaries were to take if they took at all, and the words could not be considered as terms of devise. In re Blake's Estate, 108 Pac. 287, 293, 157 Cal. 448.

Testamentary trustees are entitled to pay the income from trust funds to the guardian of an infant beneficiary pending proceedings for settlement of their accounts without requiring a bond; such income not being a "distributive share," within Code Civ. Proc. § 2746. In re Williams, 123 N. Y. Supp. 383, 384, 66 Misc. Rep. 417.

The right given to a beneficiary by a will to receive a stated share of the net income from the entire residuary estate of the testator, left in trust until the time fixed for its distribution, is not a "distributive share," within the meaning of such terms as used in War Revenue Act, 30 Stat. 464; and, under Act June 27, 1902, c. 1160, § 8, 32 Stat. 406, which provides that no tax shall be assessed under said section 29 in respect of any contingent beneficial interest which shall not become absolutely vested in possession or enjoyment prior to July 1, 1902, the only interest of the legatee in such income which was subject to taxation was the amount thereof actually received by him prior to said July 1, 1902, provided such amount was $10,000 or more. Lynch v. Union Trust Co. of San Francisco, 164 Fed. 161, 165, 90 C. C. A. 147.

The term "distributive share," as used in War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, imposing a tax on the "distributive share" in the hands of administrators, executors, or trustees, means a definite portion in money of the residue of a personal estate of an intestate. Diaston v. McClain, 147 Fed. 114, 117, 77 C. C. A. 340.

A power of attorney to complainant to collect all moneys, legacies, bequests, inheritance, and distributive share of defendants in a certain estate, and for his taking possession of and attending to all landed property which they may be entitled to as heirs of deceased, and assigning to complainant such an interest in the property, estate, or inheritance to which they are entitled as heirs or next of kin as will secure to complainant his fees for services, not to exceed 50 per cent. of "our distributive share of said decedent's estate as such heirs or next of kin," does not by the words "distributive share," in view of the word "heirs," limit the assignment to personal property. Adams v. Schmitt, 60 Atl. 345, 350, 68 N. J. Eq. 168.

DISTRICT

See Assessment District; Civil Districts; Drainage District; Original District; Prohibition District; Proper District; School District; Street Improvement District; Subdistrict; Tax District; Town School District; Within the District.

Under the provision of Bill of Rights, § 9, guaranteeing to accused persons a trial by jury of the county or "district" in which the offense is alleged to have been committed, no district created by the Legislature can extend beyond the limits of a county. People v. Rodenberg, 98 N. E. 764, 766, 254 Ill. 386.

The words "precinct" and "district" in the election law are frequently used interchangeably, and the meaning must be gathered very largely from the connection in which they are used. Welsh v. Shumway, 88 N. E. 549, 555, 232 Ill. 54.

The words "district" and "precinct" as used in the election law since the present Constitution was adopted, have not always been used with the same meaning. Sometimes they have been so used that the word "precinct" meant a larger territory than the word "district"; a district being a subdivision of a precinct. This is usually, but not always, the case in the general election law. Sometimes they have been used so that the word "precinct" covered a smaller territory than the word "district." This is the case with reference to the election act passed in 1885, now in force in the city of Chicago, when taken in connection with certain primary laws, although generally in primary laws the term "primary district" is used. Sometimes "district" and "precinct" are used interchangeably, as will be shown from a careful reading of the present general election law. They will be found to be so used in paragraph 30 of chapter 46 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 46, par. 30, p. 860); hence the meaning of these words must be gathered very largely from the connection in which they are used in each instance. For the purpose of town elections only, polling places and election districts in a town having been established by the county board, under the law, solely for the convenience of the voters, for that election the entire town, as to the qualifications of the electors, is considered one voting district. People ex rel. Delaney v. Markiewicz, 80 N. E. 256, 258, 225 Ill. 563.

The word "district" in Pol. Code, § 2763, which empowers the board of supervisors of a road division to issue the bonds of said division payable out of the funds of such division, and which provides that the money shall be raised by taxation upon the property in said "district" for the redemption of the bonds, means "division," the district in fact becoming a division, and, so construed, the section is not void for uncertainty. Potter v. Santa Barbara County, 116 Pac. 1101, 1103, 160 Cal. 349.

The word "district," as used in Rev. St. § 1014, providing that, where any offender is committed in any district other than where the offense is to be tried, it shall be the duty of the judge of the district where the offender is imprisoned to issue a warrant for his removal to the district where the trial is to be had, applied, at the time of the original act, to one of the judicial districts into which, by that act, the United States was divided; but by virtue of Act Feb. 21, 1871, c. 62, 16 Stat. 426, declaring that the Constitution and laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect within the District of Columbia as elsewhere within the United States, the word "district" includes the District of Columbia, and hence section 1014 authorizes the removal of a federal offender to the District of Columbia for trial of an offense committed there. In re Benson, 130 Fed. 486, 488.

Naturalization Law (Act June 29, 1906, c. 3592, 34 Stat. 599) § 10, provides that, in case the petitioner for naturalization has not resided in the state, territory, or district for five years continuously immediately preceding the filing of his petition, he may establish by two witnesses, both in his petition and at the hearing, the time of his residence within the state, provided that it has been for more than a year, and the remaining period of his five years' residence within the United States required to be established may be proved by the deposition of two or more witnesses who are citizens of the United States, on notice to the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization and the United States attorney for the district in which the witnesses reside. Held, that the word "district," as used in such section, meant a federal district, and not the District of Columbia; and hence, where an applicant for naturalization had not resided continuously for five years in the district where he applied for citizenship, his residence in another state, territory, or district sufficient to establish a five years' residence in the United States could be proved by deposition. United States v. Kolodner, 199 Fed. 809, 810.

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 7571, makes it unlawful for any first-class city to order an improvement, the cost of which is to be charged to abutting property, when such cost exceeds 50 per cent. of the value of the real estate, exclusive of improvements within the proposed improvement district, etc. Held, that the "district" referred to in such section was not limited to the real estate within the boundaries of a specified locality which might ultimately be legally assessed to pay the cost of the improvement, but included all the real estate within the physical outer boundaries of the defined district, though some of it was subsequently found not benefited, and therefore not subject to assessment. Hapgood v. City of Seattle, 125 Pac. 965, 966, 69 Wash. 497.

As city or town

To give the word "district" its common meaning, it would unquestionably embrace a township as well as many other subdivisions of territory, although in its application it would in many cases include less territory than a township, such as an election district or a school district. The word "district," as used in Act May 8, 1889 (P. L. 136), providing for the incorporation of electric light companies, and section 2, authorizing such corporations to supply light, heat, and power to the public in the borough, town, city, or district where it may be located, includes a township. Brown v. Radnor Tp. Electric Light Co., 57 Atl. 904, 905, 208 Pa. 453.

Rev. Pol. Code, § 1802, provides that every office shall be vacant on the officer ceasing to be a resident of the state, district, county, township, or precinct in which the duties of his office are to be exercised or for which he may have been elected; and section 810, as amended by Laws 1905, provides for the nomination of county commissioners by the county instead of by commissioner district conventions, and they are to be regarded as county officers. Held, that the term "district," as used in section 1802, referred to a subdivision of the state embracing more than one county, so that a county commissioner did not disqualify himself by removing to a different commissioner district from that in which he was elected, within the same county. Gray v. Board of Com'rs of Beadle County, 110 N. W. 36, 37, 21 S. D. 97.

To understand the signification of the words "municipal legislation," as used in Const. art. 11, § 2, prohibiting the Legislature from amending the charters of cities and towns, the right of which is reserved to the voters thereof, and article 4, providing that the referendum may be demanded by the people, which power is reserved to the legal voters of every municipality and district, as to all local, special, and municipal legislation of every character in and for their respective municipalities and districts, requires an interpretation of the term "local and special legislation," the right to formulate rules in relation to which is impliedly denied to cities and towns, on the principle that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. The qualifying words "local and special" are synonymous, and, in the sense in which they are used, mean any enactment that is plainly intended to affect a particular person or thing or to be in effect in some specified locality only. The words "municipality" and "district," as used, are evidently expressions of equivalent import, for a district legally created from a designated part of the state and organized to promote the convenience of the public at large is a municipal corporation. The authority of such a corporation has been heretofore derived from an act of the legislative assembly creating it, and as such statute is applicable to and enforceable in a part of the state only, it is a local or special law. The change in the organic law deprives the legislative assembly of all authority to enact, amend, or repeal any charter of a town, the legal voters of which reserve to themselves the exercise of all such power, except the right of repeal, and it was evidently the intention of the framers of such constitutional provision, and also the people who ratified it, to vest an incorporated city or town with authority to provide the manner of exercising the initiative and referendum powers as to amendments of a charter, which change is reasonably within the term "municipal legislation." Acme Dairy Co. v. City of Astoria, 90 Pac. 153, 154, 49 Or. 520.

As county

The term "district," as employed in Const. art. 1, § 10, guaranteeing to accused a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the county or district in which the offense is alleged to have been committed, is not synonymous with county; but it was intended to designate and include a place or jurisdiction other and distinct from that of the county in which the offense was committed. State ex rel. Hornbeck v. Durlinger, 76 N. E. 291, 292, 73 Ohio St. 154.

The word "district," as used in a constitutional provision, providing that in criminal prosecutions the accused shall have a trial by jury of the county or district in which the offense is alleged to have been committed, is synonymous with the term "county." State v. O'Brien, 90 Pac. 514, 518, 35 Mont. 482, 10 Ann. Cas. 1006.

The word "district," as used in the Constitution, providing that the accused in all criminal prosecutions shall have the right to a trial by jury of the county or district in which the offense is alleged to have been committed, means "county." City of Chicago v. Knobel, 83 N. E. 459, 460, 232 Ill. 112.

A county is an involuntary civil or political division of the state, created in the administration of government, and is not synonymous with the word "district." Adams v. Southern Ry. Co., 52 South. 439, 441, 167 Ala. 383.

"County," as used in Const. art. 1, § 10, guaranteeing to an accused party a "speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the county or district in which the offense is alleged to have been committed," is not synonymous with "district," but the latter term is used to designate and include a place or jurisdiction other and distinct from that of the county wherein the offense was committed, and therefore Rev. St. 1906, § 7263, which permits the court to direct that the person accused be tried in some adjoining county, where it appears that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county in which the offense is committed, is not unconstitutional, as allowing the trial to be held in a county other than that in which the offense was committed, on motion of the state, properly supported by affidavits. State ex rel. Hornbeck v. Durlinger, 76 N. E. 291, 292, 73 Ohio St. 154.

A county is within Const. art. 4, § 1a, reserving the initiative and referendum powers to the voters of every municipality and district, and the people of the several counties are authorized, by article 9, § 1a, to regulate taxation and exemptions within their several counties, as provided by article 4, § 1a, in a manner subservient to any general law which may be enacted, though the word "district," as used in article 4, § 1a, has a broader signification than "county," and may designate a territory comprising more than a county, or containing less area. Schubel v. Olcott, 120 Pac. 375, 379, 60 Or. 503.

As judicial district

Under the constitutional right to a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the county or district in which the offense is alleged to have been committed, the word "district" has uniformly been construed to mean the trial district, or territory from which the jury is summoned. In this state, where unorganized territory may be attached to an organized county for judicial purposes, the phrase "judicial subdivision," frequently found in our statutes, would have more accurately defined the right than the word "district." In re Nelson, 102 N. W. 885, 887, 19 S. D. 214.

In the Constitution, providing for courts to be presided over by a judge, elected by the voters of a number of counties, called a "district," the word "district" is used to distinguish this class of courts from the Supreme and other classes of courts, and likewise to designate the territory over which the particular judge shall preside. State v. Ely, 113 N. W. 711, 716, 16 N. D. 569, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 688.

The word "district," like the word "county," in the provision giving to accused the right to a trial in the district or county in which the offense charged was committed, is used in a restrictive sense, and designates the precise portion of territory or division of the state over which a court at any particular sitting may exercise power in criminal matters. Moran v. Territory, 78 Pac. 111, 114, 14 Okl. 544.

Under Act Cong. May 28, 1896, c. 252, §§ 7, 9, 29 Stat. 180, 181, the territory of Arizona, though divided for the administration of law and for the holding of district courts with powers of the District and Circuit Courts of the United States into five judicial districts, with boundaries as established by the justices, is one "district," within Act Cong. March 3, 1901, c. 845, 31 Stat. 1093 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1327), authorizing the district attorney of the district in which any Chinese person may be arrested for being found unlawfully within the United States to designate the commissioner within such district before whom such person shall be taken for hearing, and the district attorney of the territory may designate a commissioner within the First judicial district of the territory as the commissioner before whom a Chinese person arrested in the second judicial district shall be taken for hearing. Lee Kim Fong v. United States, 108 Pac. 237, 13 Ariz. 47.

As municipal corporation

See Municipal Corporation.

As port

What constitutes a "port" for purposes of the revenue act is of necessity a matter of proof in each case. The term is broader than the word "harbor," and may mean more in one connection than in another. "Port" is often used as synonymous with "district," where the limits of the port and district are the same. Hartwell Lumber Co. v. United States, 128 Fed. 306, 308 (quoting and adopting Ayer v. Thacher, 2 Fed. Cas. 269, 3 Mason, 155).

DISTRICT ATTORNEY

As court officer, see Court Officer.

As magistrate, see Magistrate.

As officer of United States, see United States Officer.

As state officer, see State Officer.

See, also, County Attorney.

The "district attorney" is not only an officer of the state, but also, in common with other attorneys, an officer of the court. Taylor v. State, 38 South. 380, 384, 49 Fla. 69.

As used in Laws 1882, p. 371, c. 410, § 1482, providing that forfeiture of bail shall not be remitted without the certificate of the "district attorney," the words "district attorney" mean the person who was district attorney at the time the recognizance was forfeited, and not some subsequent district attorney. In re Sayles, 81 N. Y. Supp. 258, 259, 40 Misc. Rep. 185.

Const. art. 4, § 1, created the office of Attorney General, requiring him to perform such duties as should be prescribed by the Constitution and by law; and by Rev. St. 1908, § 6168, he was required to appear for the state, prosecute and defend all actions and proceedings, civil and criminal, in which the state should be a party or interested, when required to do so by the Governor or General Assembly. By Laws 1891, pp. 240-242, the courts were invested with the same power and jurisdiction to try prosecutions on information as they had been authorized to do by indictment, section 2 providing that all informations should be filed in term time in the court having jurisdiction of the offense by the district attorney of the proper county as informant and his name should be subscribed thereto either by himself or by his deputy. Section 4 prescribed a form of information in which the district attorney appeared as the charging officer, and section 5 declares that all provisions of law applicable to prosecutions on indictments, to writs and process therein, and the issuing of service thereof, to motions, pleadings, trials, and punishments, or to the passing or execution of any sentence, and to all proceedings in cases of indictment, whether in court of original or appellate jurisdiction, shall apply to informations and to all prosecutions and proceedings thereon. Held, that the words "district attorney," as used in such act, should be construed as synonymous with "public prosecutor," and hence the Attorney General has authority to charge by information in the name of the people the commission of a felony and to prosecute the proceedings in the district court. People v. Gibson, 125 Pac. 531, 532, 53 Colo. 231.

DISTRICT COURT

"Judge of the District Court" and "District Court" are not, strictly speaking, convertible terms, but they are so in a popular sense," and under section 6 of the act of March 3, 1891, creating the Circuit Courts of Appeals (26 Stat. 828, c. 517), which gives such courts the power to review by appeal or writ of error final decisions in the District Court, an appeal lies to such court from a judgment of a District Court rendered on appeal from an order of a commissioner for the deportation of a Chinese person arrested under section 13 of the exclusion act of September 13, 1888 (25 Stat. 479, c. 1015), which authorizes an appeal from a conviction before a commissioner "to the judge of the District Court for the district." Tsoi Yil v. United States, 129 Fed. 585, 586, 64 C. C. A. 153 (quoting and adopting definition in United States v. Gee Lee, 50 Fed. 271, 1 C. C. A. 516).

"The name 'commissioners' court' is as distinctly the name of that court as is the 'district court' the name of the court presided over by the district judge. * * * While the district and county courts were established for the trial of litigated cases, the commissioners' court is a political body; the powers and duties of its members being largely legislative and ministerial." Robinson v. Smith County, 76 S. W. 584, 585, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 251.

Const. art. 6, vests the judicial power of the state as to matters of law and equity in a Supreme Court, district court, county court, justices of the peace, and such other courts as may be provided by law. It then provides the jurisdiction of various courts designated, "district court," "county court," and "criminal court," and for the election of judges thereof. Article 14 treats of counties and county officers, not including the judge of the county court, and article 20, creating the city and county of Denver, and providing for the termination of the terms of office of county officers, declares that district and county judges and the district attorneys should serve their full term, respectively, for which they had been elected. Held, that the words "district," "county," and "criminal" in Const. art. 6, as prefixed to the word "court," had no other significance than to give appropriate names to the tribunals of government, and that a judge of the county court in the city and county of Denver was not a county officer within Const. art. 20, and hence, after the adoption of such article and the charter of the city and county of Denver, he continued to hold his office under Const. art. 6, and not under the charter, and this, notwithstanding the charter, provided additional duties for such office and also for two incumbents. Dixon v. People, 127 Pac. 930, 932, 53 Colo. 527; Sartin v. Snell, 125 Pac. 47, 48, 87 Kan. 485.

DISTRICT COURT JUSTICE

Const. art. 6, § 17, requires town electors to elect justices of the peace at the annual town meeting, or at such other time as the Legislature directs, and provides that justices of the peace and district court justices may be elected in the different cities in such manner as is prescribed by law, and that all other judicial officers in cities shall be chosen by the electors or appointed by local authorities. Held, that the term "district court justices" included justices of the municipal court, and hence such offices should be filled by election. Markland v. Scully, 131 N. Y. Supp. 364, 371, 146 App. Div. 350.

DISTRICT JUDGE

DISTRICT MEETING

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 535 et seq., relating to district meetings of school districts, the term "district meeting" means a coming together, an assembling, of the electors in a body at a stated time and place. Parker v. School Dist. No. 4 of Sweetwater County, 101 Pac. 944, 945, 17 Wyo. 534.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

As state, see State.

DISTRICT OF HIS DOMICILE

Where two petitions in bankruptcy have been filed against the same individual, one in the district in which the alleged bankrupt has resided during the greater part of the preceding six months and the other in a district into which he has recently removed and established his residence, the former is the "district of his domicile," within the meaning of General Order No. 6 (32 C. C. A. v), in which the first hearing should be had unless the case is transferred for convenience of parties under the provisions of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 82, 30 Stat. 554. In re Isaacson, 161 Fed. 779, 782.

DISTRICT OF HIS RESIDENCE

Where a person worked a farm, keeping a furnished room in the house thereon, which he occupied when there, and claimed his residence there, but generally and continuously lodged with his parents in another school district because they were old and helpless and he considered it his duty to stay with them at night, returning to his farm every morning, the district where his farm was situated was the "district of his residence," within Rev. St. 1899, c. 149 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 4198-4322), providing that all personal property shall be assessed in the county and district where the owners reside. State ex rel. Kelly v. Shepperd, 117 S. W. 1169, 1171, 218 Mo. 656, 131 Am. St. Rep. 568.

As used in Act March 8, 1887 (24 Stat. 552, c. 373), as corrected by Act Aug. 13, 1888 (25 Stat. 433, c. 866), declaring that the Circuit Courts of the United States shall have original cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several states, of certain actions, and providing that, where the jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the action is between citizens of different states, suit shall be brought only in the "district of the residence" of either the plaintiff or the defendant, "the phrase 'district of the residence' of a person is equivalent to 'district whereof he is an inhabitant,' and cannot be construed as giving jurisdiction, by reason of citizenship, to a Circuit Court held in a state of which neither party is a citizen, but, on the contrary, restricts the jurisdiction to the district in which one of the parties resides within the state of which he is a citizen." Ex parte Wisner, 27 Sup. Ct. 150, 153, 203 U. S. 449, 459, 51 L. Ed. 264 (quoting Shaw v. Quincy Min. Co., 12 Sup. Ct. 935, 936, 145 U. S. 444, 446, 36 L. Ed. 768, 770).

DISTRICT OF SEIZURE

Jurisdiction of a proceeding for the forfeiture of smuggled goods exists only in the "district of seizure," which is the district in which the goods, if on hand, are found; a collector cannot, by carrying them into another district and there making the formal seizure, confer jurisdiction of the proceeding on the court in such district. United State v. Larkin, 153 Fed. 113, 116, 82 C. C. A. 247 (citing The Abby, 1 Fed. Cas. 26, 1 Mason, 360; Four Packages v. United States, 97 U. S. 404, 24 L. Ed. 1031).

DISTRICT OFFICER

The words "district officer" used in section 3 of article 20 of the Constitution refer to the district attorney and district judge, but the words were used to designate the geographical limits within which such officer performed the duties of his office, and did not refer to the nature and grade of the office. State v. Romero (N. M.) 125 Pac. 617, 618.

Const. § 152, provides that, if the unexpired term of an elective office will end at the next succeeding annual election at which either city, town, county, district, or state officers are to be elected, the office shall be filled by appointment for the remainder of the term. On June 30, 1906, defendant was appointed as trustee of a town of the sixth class to fill a term expiring in November, 1907. An election of a Congressman for that district was held November 6, 1906, and plaintiff procured his own election at that time as trustee to fill the unexpired term. Held that a Congressman not being a "district or state officer" within the meaning of the Constitution, the election held November 6, 1906, was not such an election as warranted the filling of the vacancy in question at that time. Provence v. Lucas (Ky.) 107 S. W. 755, 756.

DISTRICT SCHOOL

The ward schools of a city are "district schools," within Const. art. 10, § 3, requiring the establishment of district schools. Maxcy v. City of Oshkosh, 128 N. W. 899, 908, 144 Wis. 238, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 787.

DISTRINGAS

"Distringas" is a writ addressed to the sheriff, demanding him to distrain one of his goods and chattels to enforce compliance with an order of court. Fiedler v. Bambrick Bros. Const. Co., 142 S. W. 1111, 1114, 162 Mo. App. 528.

DISTRUST

An instruction that if any witness had willfully testified falsely in regard to any material fact the jury was at liberty to "disregard and discard his entire testimony" is not objectionable because of the use of the words "disregard" and "discard," instead of "distrust," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 3, providing that when a witness is false in one part of his testimony he is to be "distrusted" in the others, since the court did not tell the jury that they ought to reject, or that they must reject, the entire evidence of the witness, but simply instructed them that they were at liberty to disregard and discard the whole evidence of a witness who had willfully testified falsely to a material fact in the case. Whitaker v. California Door Co., 95 Pac. 910, 911, 7 Cal. App. 757; People v. Soto, 59 Cal. 367.

DISTURB

Under B. & C. Comp. § 1930, providing for the punishment of persons who willfully and wrongfully commit any act which grossly disturbs the public peace or health, the word "disturb" is defined by Webster to mean to throw into disorder or confusion; to interrupt the settled state of; to excite from a state of rest; to render uneasy. The statute therefore simply means that one who knowingly and without authority of law commits an illegal act which greatly or painfully annoys or scandalizes the community, and agitates and disturbs the quiet and tranquility of the public, or outrages public decency and is injurious to the public morals, is guilty of an offense. A pool room on one of the principal thoroughfares of a city, in which persons daily congregate to bet upon horse races reported to the proprietor by telegraph, is a gaming house, punishable as a nuisance under the statutes. State v. Nease, 80 Pac. 897-899, 46 Or. 433.

The word "disturb," according to Webster, means "to interrupt a settled state of," and "proprietary" means "belonging or pertaining to a proprietor, considered as property owned," and the words "the property shall not be disturbed or the proprietary rights of the owner divested," as used in Const. Okl. art. 2, § 24, providing that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation, and until the compensation shall be paid to the owner or into court for the owner the property shall not be disturbed nor the proprietary rights of the owner divested, seems to mean that possession thereof shall not be taken, nor the property taken, nor shall the title thereof be divested, until compensation therefor has been first paid to the owner or into court for the owner. Edwards v. Thrash, 109 Pac. 832, 837, 26 Okl. 472, 138 Am. St. Rep. 975.

DISTURBANCE

The unlawful striking of one with a hard substance is not a "disturbance" of his peace and quiet, within Mansf. Dig. Ark. § 1800 (Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 1143), providing punishment for a breach of the peace. Miles v. United States, 108 S. W. 598, 599, 7 Ind. T. 11.

When the owner of an easement is deprived of his right, he is not referred to as having been "dispossessed" of the land, but it is referred to as an "interference," "obstruction," or "disturbance." The remedy is on the case for damages for the injury done, or, if this is inadequate, permanent injunction is the proper remedy. Kansas & C. P. R. Co. v. Burns, 79 Pac. 238, 240, 70 Kan. 627.

DISTURBANCE OF PEACE

See Breach of the Peace.

DISTURBING RELIGIOUS WORSHIP

Under the statute inhibiting the "disturbance of a congregation, or a part of a congregation," any member is a part of the congregation; and hence, where accused, before a large part of a Sunday school audience had left, unhitched an old shabby horse and buggy belonging to prosecuting witness, and, with the intent to mortify her, drove it up in front of the Sunday school, accused violated the statute. Wyatt v. State, 119 S. W. 1147, 1148, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 50.

Under Code 1896, § 4654, prohibiting "disturbance of an assemblage for divine worship," the nature or form of worship is immaterial; it being sufficient if the exercise was intended as a celebration of the birth, life, death, and resurrection of Christ, and in commemoration of the beginning of the Christian era. Where defendant willfully committed an assault on his companion with a fire shovel, not in self-defense, during the dismissal of a Sunday school Christmas tree entertainment, at which there had been prayer, singing, and a scriptural talk by the minister, he was properly convicted of "disturbing an assemblage for divine worship," prohibited by Code 1896, § 4654. Stafford v. State, 45 South. 673, 674, 154 Ala. 71.

DITCH

Said ditch, see Said.

A "ditch" is no more than a right of way for the passage of water. Smith v. Hampshire, 87 Pac. 224, 225, 4 Cal. App. 8.

A "ditch" is as much an artificial mechanism as a pump, when applied to diversion of water from a stream or a disturbance of the natural order of things. Garvey Water

Co. v. Huntington Land & Improvement Co., 97 Pac. 428, 432, 154 Cal. 232.

No technical effect in conveyancing has been attributed to the word "ditch." Plaintiffs declared in ejectment for a strip of land 14 feet wide and about 600 feet long, extending to tidal waters, and designated in their deed as "a certain ditch." At the trial their claim of title rested on a deed containing the following clause: "And also the said party of the second part [the plaintiffs] is to have the exclusive privilege and use of a certain ditch that leads," etc. The grant of this exclusive privilege was not a conveyance of land, for the recovery of the possession of which the action could be maintained. Conover v. Atlantic City Sewerage Co., 57 Atl. 897, 898, 70 N. J. Law, 315.

The words "ditch" and "drain" have no exact or technical meaning; they both may mean a hollow or open place in the ground, natural or artificial, where water is collected or conducted off, and if sufficiently defined they may bound land as other natural objects. Sherrod v. Battle, 70 S. E. 884, 886, 154 N. C. 845.

Rev. St. Ohio 1908, § 4511, defines the word "ditch" as a drain or water course, and provides that a petition for improvement of the ditch shall be held to include any site, lateral, spur, or branch ditch, drain, or water course necessary to secure the object of the improvement. Greek v. Joy, 80 N. E. 932, 934, 81 Ohio St. 315.

A conduit through which a water power company conducts the water from its dam across a river to the place of use is not strictly a "ditch" or a canal, but is a conduit through which water is diverted from the natural channel in which it would flow if left unobstructed, and the company is liable for the fees imposed by Act March 11, 1908 (Sess. Laws 1908, p. 233) § 10, providing that upon the issuance of a certificate by the state engineer in relation to the completion of any canal, ditch, or other works, a fee to cover the expense of the examination of such works shall be paid to the state engineer. Idaho Power & Transportation Co. v. Stephenson, 101 Pac. 821, 824, 16 Idaho, 418.

A mere excavation, though called a "ditch," on a person's land, cannot be construed as coming within the purpose and intention of the statutes relating to ditches and priorities of water rights. A ditch with rights is referred to; and a ditch that is built without authority, the building of which conveys no authority upon the owner to divert water, is not such a ditch as the statute mentions. Whalon v. North Platte Canal & Colonization Co., 71 Pac. 995, 998, 11 Wyo. 313.

Structures common in all highways for collecting surface water and keeping it out of the traveled part of the road are usually called "ditches" or gutters. A gutter beside a roadway, by reason of which ice gathered in the roadway, causing plaintiff's injury, was not a sluiceway, within a statute making towns liable for damages to any person traveling on a sluiceway, by reason of any defect making it unsuitable for travel. Drew v. Town of Bow, 65 Atl. 831, 74 N. H. 147.

Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 42, § 151, providing that, where two or more parties on adjoining lands requiring a system of combined drainage have voluntarily constructed ditches which form a continuous line or line and branches, and where needed repairs and improvements are not made by voluntary agreement, any owner of part of such ditch may petition the commissioners of highways of the township for the formation of a drainage district to include all lands to be benefited by maintaining these ditches, a ditch constructed by highway commissioners in a highway, draining not only adjoining lands but the highway, and forming a part of a continuous line, is to be regarded as a "ditch of an owner of land," within the meaning of the act, so as to authorize the organization of a drainage district under the act, on petition of any owner of part of the ditch. People v. Magruder, 86 N. E. 615, 617, 237 Ill. 340.

L. O. L. § 5136, provides that the owner of a "ditch or mining flume, or water right appurtenant thereto," who fails to operate or exercise ownership over such property for a period of five years shall lose the title, claim, and interest therein, etc. Held that, as a "ditch" is an "aqueduct," which is a water carrier or leader, and "flumes" are usually portions of ditches, a reservoir is not included within the statutory provisions; and nonuser thereof for the period named would forfeit no right. Moore v. United Elkhorn Mines (Or.) 127 Pac. 964, 968.

The word "ditto" and its abbreviation "do." and the dots and marks that stand for the word are in common use, and have a perfectly well-defined meaning known to persons generally, and which should not be disregarded in an election return wherein dots are used under figures or words set against a person's name. Opinion of the Justices, 70 Me. 560, 567.

"Ditto marks" are marks which are generally understood to mean "the same as above." Duerr v. Snodgrass, 52 S. E. 531, 532, 58 W. Va. 472.

"Ditto marks" must be read as a representation of what appears written above them, and as meaning "the same as above," since the abbreviations commonly used in the English language may be used in general writing, and legal documents and records, as parts of the English language. *Chase v. —shows by means of "ditto marks" that the property in the second description was in the "R R Del Diablo." Best v. Wohlford, 94 Pac. 98, 100, 153 Cal. 17.

Under Rev. St. 1908, § 4096, requiring that the date of signing the petition for a local option election and the residence address of the signer shall be written opposite his name, the use of "ditto marks" is permissible, for writing consists of any symbols generally used to transmit ideas, and as no particular style is required, ditto marks, which are to be read as a repetition of the line above, and are as much a part of the English language as punctuation marks, may be used. People v. Newell, 113 Pac. 643, 646, 49 Colo. 349 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2141).

DIVERS

A plaintiff, in an action for slander, who alleges that the words were spoken by defendant in the presence and hearing of "divers" persons, must prove that the words were spoken in the presence of at least three persons; the word "divers" meaning "several," which means any number more than two. Day v. Becker (Tex.) 145 S. W. 1197, 1199.

DIVERSE CITIZENSHIP

Where plaintiff and defendant are citizens of different states, there exists what, for the purpose of removal to a United States court, is termed "diverse citizenship." Carolina Coal & Ice Co. v. Southern R. Co., 57 S. E. 444, 445, 144 N. C. 732.

Whether the jurisdiction of the federal Circuit Court depended on "diverse citizenship" alone, within the meaning of the act of March 3, 1891, § 6, making the decrees of the Circuit Courts of Appeals final in such cases, or was rested on other grounds as well, must be determined from the complainant's statement of his own cause of action as set forth in the bill, without regard to any questions that might have been brought into the suit by the answers or in the course of the subsequent proceedings. Shulthis v. McDougal, 32 Sup. Ct. 704, 706, 225 U. S. 561, 56 L. Ed. 1205.

Revised Charter and Ordinances of Tacoma, § 96, pp. 79, 80, provides that moneys collected by taxation for special funds provided by law shall remain therein, and that all funds raised by a vote of the people or by special taxation for a special purpose shall be used for that purpose and none other, and that no fund shall be "diverted" from the purpose for which it was originally assessed or collected or voted by the people, without submission of the question to a vote of the people, etc. Held, that the word "diverted" contemplates the permanently turning of a fund from its purpose, the equivalent of appropriation for some other use, and not the temporary transfer of the general fund to another fund with an assured income under the control of the city when necessary to expedite the city's business. Griffin v. City of Tacoma, 95 Pac. 1107, 1110, 49 Wash. 524.

Of water

It is a "diversion" of waters onto plaintiff's land, to its detriment, which is not permissible, where water is collected by defendant's ditches, and carried by them through his land and that of the next lower proprietor, and there ceases to be carried further to a natural water way, but is allowed to ooze through and water-sob plaintiff's land. Briscoe v. Parker, 58 S. E. 443, 444, 145 N. C. 14 (citing Staton v. Norfolk & C. R. Co., 13 S. E. 933, 109 N. C. 341; Porter v. Durham, 74 N. C. 787; Jenkins v. Wilmington & W. R. Co., 15 S. E. 193, 110 N. C. 444, 447).

DIVIDE

See Equally Divided.

Where the Legislature, after fixing the boundaries of counties, refers to "streams which divide counties," it must be understood as meaning streams in which are situated the boundary lines which "divide" counties. Dodge County v. Saunders County, 97 N. W. 617, 618, 70 Neb. 442.

Where several persons agreed to go in and buy some whisky, each man who was to share in the whisky signing his name to a paper showing how much money he had contributed to the fund, it is commonly known as a "divide"; and where one of such persons purchased five gallons for the purpose of dividing according to the agreement, it is not a violation of Act April 15, 1884 (1 Acts 1883-84, p. 1404, c. 789), and of the acts amendatory thereof, regulating the sale of intoxicating liquor in the counties of Knox and Whitley, and forbidding a sale of less than five gallons, unless the liquor was sold with the knowledge, understanding, or design that it would be so received. Farris v. Commonwealth, 104 S. W. 288, 289, 126 Ky. 463.

By his will, a testator devised and bequeathed unto his trustees all his estate, including real property, to pay the income to his wife during her natural life, and upon her death to divide the estate into three equal parts, and to assign one part to each of two sons, and hold the remainder in trust to pay the income to his daughter during her life. Civ. Code, § 847, forbids trusts of real property, save those specified; and section 857 provides that express trusts in real property may be created to sell, mortgage, or lease, to receive the rents and profits and pay them to the use of any person, and to accumulate the rents and profits. Held that, as the word "equal," used in the direction to divide the estate into three equal parts, implies parts equal in all respects—in quantity, character, and value—and as the term "divide" does not, of itself, import a physical segregation in distinct shares, the directions to the trustees were not to make an actual physical division, it apparently being the intention of the testator to devise his property to his children as tenants in common; and hence the trustees did not take absolute title, but took only sufficient title to support their duty of apportioning the share of the daughter and paying over the income, and so the absolute devises to the children were not invalid, because based on trusts to physically divide, which were invalid. In re Spreckels' Estate, 128 Pac. 371, 373, 162 Cal. 559.

Apportion synonymous

See Apportion.

As creating tenancy in common

As a rule, when a bequest is made to several persons of income to be "divided equally" among them, they take as tenants in common, and not as a class or as joint tenants. Loomis v. Gorham, 71 N. E. 981, 982, 186 Mass. 444.

As devise

A will creating a trust in favor of testator's daughter, and providing that in case of the death of the daughter without issue the property should be "divided" among certain of testator's relatives, did not create a trust as to the relatives specified, but constituted a direct devise to them in the event of the testator's death. In re Heywood's Estate, 82 Pac. 755, 758, 148 Cal. 184.

As divide equally

Since the word "divide" in common parlance means, when used by two contracting parties, a severance or partition into equal parts, a complaint in an action by a broker for commissions, which alleges that plaintiff was employed to assist in making a sale, that defendants promised to pay plaintiff for his services a half of the commissions received, on a sale being made, that a sale was made through services of plaintiff, and that defendant received a specified sum for commissions, is supported by evidence that defendants agreed to "divide" the commissions with plaintiff. Graves v. White, 95 Pac. 347, 348, 43 Colo. 131, 127 Am. St. Rep. 106.

DIVIDING LINE

"Dividing line," as used in a plea in an action of trespass to try title, describing the land as "being the same land plaintiff sued for, except a strip nine feet wide along said dividing line throughout its entire length, and being the same land to which the pleas of limitation herein apply," were used as describing the land claimed with reference to both the east and west sides of the tract. Cochran v. Moerer, 105 S. W. 1138, 1142, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 372.

DIVIDEND

See Cash Dividend; Preferred Dividend; Stock Dividend.

Set apart dividend, see Set Apart.

The word "dividend" has a peculiar and definite significance, and means a distributive sum, share, or percentage arising from some joint venture, as a corporation, or a proportionate amount arising from a bankrupt or other estate. Simcoke v. Sayre, 128 N. W. 816, 817, 148 Iowa, 132.

A bequest of interest arising from bank stock, to be paid "as the same shall be declared by said bank," entitles the beneficiary only to "dividends declared," and not dividends earned. Howell v. Westbrook, 66 Atl. 417, 69 N. J. Eq. 641.

It is the characteristic feature of a "dividend declared and paid wholly from the net profits" or undivided earnings that it diminishes the property of the corporation by exactly the amount of the dividend so paid out, while it leaves the fractional interest represented by each share of the capital stock exactly what it was before. Gray v. Hemenway, 98 N. E. 789, 790, 212 Mass. 239.

A transfer of assets by a railway company to a trustee and subsequent issue of participation certificates by the trustee do not constitute a "dividend" on stock, so as to entitle a life tenant under a stockholder's will to it as against the remainderman. In re Bunker's Estate, 137 N. Y. Supp. 104, 109, 77 Misc. Rep. 320.

Under New Jersey laws authorizing a corporation to retire preferred stock on which it shall have continuously declared and paid "dividends" for a period of at least one year preceding the meeting at which the resolution authorizing the retirement was adopted, the payment of "dividends" must begin at or before the period, and must include the last of the regular or continuous payments before the end of the period; and where a corporation paid quarterly "dividends," it must have declared and paid out of its earnings five regular dividends before it is entitled to retire its stock. "Earnings" for the period of a year before the meeting may be said to accrue from the beginning of the year, but "dividends" have no existence under the by-laws until and as they are declared out of the earnings, and therefore "dividends" cannot be said to accrue at the beginning of the year. Hodge v. United States Steel Corp., 53 Atl. 601, 606, 64 N. J. Eq. 90.

As division of profits

A "dividend" is a corporate profit set aside, declared, and ordered by the directors to be paid to the stockholders upon demand or at a fixed time. People ex rel. Pullman Co. v. Glynn, 114 N. Y. Supp. 460, 461, 130 App. Div. 332.

A division of profits of a corporation is a "dividend," though not called or considered such by the directors or stockholders. Barnes v. Spencer & Barnes Co., 127 N. W. 752, 756, 162 Mich. 509, 139 Am. St. Rep. 587.

A "dividend" has been defined as that portion of the profits and surplus funds of a corporation which has been actually set apart by a valid resolution of the board of directors or by the shareholders at a corporate meeting for distribution among the shareholders according to their respective interests, in such sense as to become segregated from the property of the corporation, and to become the property of the shareholders distributively. Other definitions are "a profit set aside, declared by the board of directors of a corporation, and ordered by them to be distributed among the holders of its stock"; "a fund which the corporation sets apart from its profits to be divided among its members." The doctrine is that a "dividend" is considered parcel of the mass of corporate property until declared, and therefore incident to and parcel of the stock up to the time it is declared, and before its declaration will pass with a sale or devise of the stock. Whoever owns the stock prior to the declaration of a dividend owns the dividend also, but the moment the dividend is declared it becomes then separate and distinct from the stock, and falls to him who is proprietor of the stock of which it was theretofore incident. McLaran v. Crescent Planing Mill Co., 93 S. W. 819, 821, 117 Mo. App. 40 (quoting

2 Thomp. Corp., § 2126; 2 Cook, Corp. [4th Ed.] 534).

"The word 'dividends,' when used in connection with corporate stock, means a proportionate part of the profits which have arisen from corporate transactions. They are payable out of the profits alone." Defendant guaranteed payment of a semiannual dividend to plaintiff on certain corporate stock of 3 per cent. for 10 years, or until his stock was purchased. In pursuance of such contract the stockholder, who was treasurer of the corporation, resigned his office and surrendered his stock and certain accrued dividends. Held that, the corporation having been dissolved and its corporate rights forfeited, defendant was no longer liable on his guaranty. Columbus Trust Co. v. Moshier, 100 N. Y. Supp. 1066, 1067, 51 Misc. Rep. 270 (citing Tayl. Corp. §§ 563, 565; 2 Purdy's Beach Priv. Corp. §§ 451, 453).

Commonly speaking the word "dividend" signifies such portions of accumulated net earnings, or surplus, as the directorate of a corporation may deem expedient to be distributed, and in appropriate proceedings is by them ordered to be distributed among those entitled by law to receive it. It is ex vi termini the part of a thing which has been set apart for distribution. United States Life Ins. Co. v. Spinks (Ky.) 96 S. W. 889, 892, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1053.

The word "dividends," as used in Corporation Tax Act (Act Cong. Aug. 5, 1909, c. 6, 36 Stat. 112) § 38, imposing an excise tax on insurance companies equivalent to 1 per cent. on the entire net income above $5,000 received from all sources during the year, exclusive of amounts received as dividends on stock of other corporations, etc., subject to the tax, such income to be ascertained by deducting all losses sustained and not compensated by insurance or otherwise, including a reasonable allowance for depreciation and sums other than dividends paid within the year on policy and annuity contracts, and the net addition, if any, required by law to be made within the year to reserve funds, was used in its popular sense as representing profits; and so-called dividends of a mutual company doing business on the level premium plan, consisting merely of the portion of the loading of the premium charged in excess of the cost of insurance and returned annually to the policy holders after the first year, so far as the same were used to reduce subsequent premiums, were not "income . . . received," and were, therefore, not subject to taxation. Such rule, however, does not apply to a "dividend" declared in the case of a full-paid participating policy, wherein the policy holder has no further premium payments to make, which dividend constitutes a participation in the profits and income of the invested funds of the company. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Herold, 198 Fed. 190, 202.

A will bequeathed certain stock to the executor in trust to apply the dividends to testator's sister so long as she should live, and at her death to transfer the stock to B., but that if the sister at testatrix's decease, or at any time thereafter, shall have her present income increased to as large an amount as the dividends would increase it, then the stock was to go to B. at once. Held, that the word "dividends" was sufficiently broad to include all distributions of profits, whether in cash, stock, or bonds, and was not qualified by the provision for termination of the life estate prior to the life tenant's death. Thayer v. Burr, 119 N. Y. Supp. 755, 757, 134 App. Div. 889.

A contract between the owners of mining claims and persons intending to form a corporation to work such claims provided that the owner should sell the claims for cash and a certain amount of stock in the corporation. Part of the remaining stock was to be set apart as treasury stock, to be sold and the proceeds to be used for developing of the claims, and the remainder to be sold to pay the cash payment on the price. The contract also provided that, if there should be a production from the claims sufficient to make the cash payment or any part thereof, the vendors should receive dividends on a certain number of shares of stock absolutely, but that the dividends on the balance of the stock of the corporation, not purchased and held by persons other than the purchasers of the claims, should be applied upon the payment for the property as rapidly as such dividends might accrue, and that the purchasers were not to receive any part thereof until the cash payment should have been made in full. It was further agreed that the purchasers were to take care of the company's pay roll and guarantee its payment while the contract remained in force. Held, that the word "dividends" was intended to mean the net receipts or profits after payment of all expenses in the operation of the plant, and not the gross proceeds from the sale of ore, and the gross proceeds could not be applied to payment of the cash consideration for the claims or as dividends upon their stock. Farrell v. Garfield Mining, Milling & Smelting Co., 111 Pac. 839, 842, 49 Colo. 159.

As income

See Income.

As payable in money

Where the word "dividend" is used without qualification or explanation, it signifies dividends payable in money. Lancaster Trust Co. v. Mason, 68 S. E. 235, 236, 152 N. C. 660, 136 Am. St. Rep. 851 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, pp. 2143, 2147).

As principal

See Principal.

Profits distinguished

The term "profits" has a larger meaning than "dividends," and covers benefits of any kind, excess of value over cost, acquisition beyond expenditure, gain or advance. Slimcoke v. Sayre, 126 N. W. 816, 817, 148 Iowa, 132.

"Profits" and "dividends" of a corporation are not necessarily synonymous terms. Boothe v. Summit Coal Min. Co., 104 Pac. 207, 212, 55 Wash. 167, 19 Ann. Cas. 1255 (citing City of Allegheny v. Pittsburgh, A. & M. Pass. R. Co., 36 Atl. 161, 179 Pa. 414).

DIVIDEND (In Bankruptcy)

Payments to secured creditors

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 65a, 30 Stat. 563, providing that dividends of an equal per centum shall be declared and paid on all allowed claims except such as have priority or are secured, the word "dividends" as used in the bankruptcy act applies only to claims of general unsecured creditors and not to secured creditors, except as to the amount of the claim in excess of the security. Hawthorne v. Hendrie & Bolthoff Mfg. & Supply Co., 116 Pac. 122, 124, 50 Colo. 342.

DIVIDEND ADDITIONS

Under a clause in a life policy providing for expenditures for such term as the amount of the cash surrender value of the policy will produce, and providing that the cash surrender value shall be computed by deducting 1 per cent. of the amount insured, the "dividend additions" are additions to the insurance from the dividends declared by the company. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. O'Brien (Ky.) 116 S. W. 750, 752.

"Dividend additions," as used in connection with life insurance, was originally a term sometimes employed to represent additional insurance set apart by the insurer to a policy whose dividends had accumulated to a period of distribution, and which had not been otherwise applied. "The method of dealing with the surplus on policies entitled to participate therein, which was intended by the founders of the Equitable of London, was * * * to divide the same to the insured at frequent intervals in cash. The method actually adopted by the Equitable of London * * * was to grant reversionary bonuses, payable at the death of the insured, and to make apportionments every seven years. The application of surplus earnings to purchase reversionary bonuses, known in this country as paid-up additions, reversionary additions, or merely dividend additions, was also employed in this country at an early date." Laws N. Y. 1892, p. 1969, c. 690, § 88, requiring the application of the reserve, on a policy lapsed after being in force three full years, to the payment for extended insurance, and providing that "reserve" should include "dividend additions," meant that the surplus on a lapsed policy, as well as the reserve thereon, should be applied in purchasing extended insurance in case of lapse after a policy was in force three years, though the words "dividend additions" may have meant, in a technical sense in life insurance, additions on account of surplus to the face of a policy, payable at death while the insurance was in force. United States Life Ins. Co. v. Spinks (Ky.) 103 S. W. 335, 336 (citing Dawson's Elements of Life Insurance, p. 105).

DIVIDEND IN SCRIP

A corporation expended a portion of its income, otherwise applicable to the dividends, to the purchase of real estate and permanent improvements, and issued to its stockholders dividends and obligations equal to the amount so spent. Held, that such obligations are "scrip dividends," and are the property of the life tenant, rather than remaindermen, under a deed of trust directing that all dividends on stock, whether in money or scrip, were to go to the life tenant. The court said: "A scrip dividend is a dividend of certificates, giving the holder certain rights which are specified in the certificate itself. These dividends are usually declared when the company has profits which are not in the shape of money, but are in other forms of property, and the company wishes to anticipate the time when the property may be sold for cash, and the cash distributed by a money dividend. * * * Sometimes the certificate so far partakes of the character of a certificate of stock as to entitle the holder to dividends. * * * A 'dividend in scrip'—i. e., a paper entitling the holder to dividends equal to dividends thereafter declared on the capital stock—is practically a stock dividend, except that the scrip cannot vote, and provision is generally made for taking it up in some manner." In re Robinson's Trust, 67 Atl. 775, 777, 218 Pa. 481 (quoting and adopting definition in Cook, Corp. § 535, and note thereto, and citing Gordon's Ex'rs v. Richmond, F. & P. R. Co., 78 Va. 501; Thomp. Corp. § 2193; Lowry v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 64 N. E. 796, 172 N. Y. 137).

DIVIDEND-PAYING STOCK

Ky. St. 1903, § 4707, forbidding a personal representative to sell any "dividend-paying stocks" owned by decedent until so ordered by the court, applies only to stocks actually paying dividends, and not to stocks which may at some time pay dividends. Chappell v. Chappell (Ky.) 99 S. W. 959, 960.

DIVIDENDS, ISSUES, AND PROFITS

Where, under a will, the stock of a certain corporation was placed in trust, "the dividends, issues, and profits thereof" to be paid to the beneficiaries, the words "dividends, issues, and profits" were interchangeable with "income," and referred to the earnings paid over by the officers of the corporation in the form of dividends to the trustees. In re Stevens, 95 N. Y. Supp. 297, 305, 46 Misc. Rep. 623.

Where a will created a trust fund, giving the dividends, rents, and profits of trust property to testator's widow for life, and on her death the corpus to certain remaindermen, in ascertaining the rights of the wife under the trust, the phrase "dividends, rents, and profits" will be treated as synonymous with "use and income." Boardman v. Boardman, 62 Atl. 339, 342, 78 Conn. 451, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 779.

Testator bequeathed the "dividends, rents, and profits" of a trust fund of $200,000 to his widow for life, with remainder to the uses and appointments set forth in his will. During the widow's life, through a change in the investments, profits were added by the sale of securities or increase in valuation amounting to $53,575.77. There were also certain rights to participate in new stock issues of corporations in which the trust fund was invested, which were sold by the trustees for $15,758.41, and in other instances the trustees elected to take new stock, a part of the price being paid by appropriations of surplus by the corporation, realizing profits amounting to $50,849.45. Held, that none of such amounts belonged to the life tenant, but they were all an increase in the corpus of the estate which passed to the remaindermen. Boardman v. Mansfield, 66 Atl. 169, 170, 79 Conn. 634, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 793, 118 Am. St. Rep. 178.

DIVINE HEALING

As practice of medicine, see Practice of Medicine.

DIVINE SERVICE

Where two church congregations build a church in which, by their articles of association, divine service only was to be held, Sabbath schools are not included in the term "divine service." Craig v. First Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh, 88 Pa. 42, 48, 32 Am. Rep. 417.

In popular usage, the expression "religious services" is synonymous with "divine service." McDaniel v. State, 63 S. E. 919, 920, 5 Ga. App. 831.

DIVISIBLE CONTRACT

A contract whereby one undertook to do all the necessary excavating for a building according to the plans and specifications, and another agreed to pay therefor at the rate of 40 cents per cubic yard of earth and $1.00 per cubic yard of rock removed, was an entire and not a "divisible contract," all of which, both as to the earth and rock, had to be performed by the former as a condition precedent to his right of payment for any of the work. Toher v. Schaefer, 91 N. Y. Supp. 3, 4, 45 Misc. Rep. 618.

A "divisible contract" is one in its nature and purposes susceptible of division and apportionment, having two or more parts, in respect to matters and things contemplated and embraced by it, not necessarily dependent upon each other, nor is it intended by the parties that they shall be. Cantwell v. Crawley, 86 S. W. 251, 253, 188 Mo. 44; Green v. Security Mut. Life Ins. Co., 140 S. W. 325, 331, 159 Mo. App. 277; Strauss v. Yeager, 93 N. E. 877, 880, 48 Ind. App. 448.

An "indivisible contract" of sale is one in which, by its terms, the price for a portion of the goods is not fixed or cannot be ascertained, and is the opposite of a "divisible contract" of sale, defined in Laws 1907, c. 99, § 76, as a contract of sale in which, by its terms, the price for portions of the goods is fixed or ascertainable by computation, though, as provided by section 9, the contract price may be fixed by the course of dealing between the parties. Boyd v. Second Hand Supply Co. (Ariz.) 123 Pac. 619, 620.

DIVISION

See Conventional Division of Charges; Final Division; Subdivision.

Where a division arose in an independent self-governing congregation, and neither faction withdrew therefrom, but each claimed to be the majority, with the right to rule, there was a "division," within Ky. St. 1903, § 322, providing that, in case a division shall take place in a society, the trustees shall permit each party to use the church for worship a part of the time, etc., and the faction excluded from the use of the property of the congregation was entitled to a judgment giving them the right to use such property on designated occasions; but the excluded faction was not entitled to recover possession of the old church record, but was entitled to a copy thereof, the cost of the making of which should be divided between the factions. Poynter v. Phelps, 111 S. W. 699, 703, 129 Ky. 381, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 729.

Of court

The circuit court of the city of St. Louis, which is the Eighth judicial circuit, is one court, composed of many parts, called "divisions"; each division being, for certain purposes, in itself a complete court, and independent of the other divisions. A suit is not begun in any division. It is begun in the circuit court, and, under rules of the court, is assigned to a division. When a cause is assigned to a division, that division becomes as to that cause a whole court, and has as exclusive jurisdiction of it as a circuit court of an adjoining county has of a cause pending in it. Goddard v. Delaney (Mo.) 80 S. W. 886, 891.

DIVISION FENCE

The words "division fence" in Civ. Code, § 1301, relating to division fences between appears in the same column and immediately above such word. Duerr v. Snodgrass, 52 S. E. 531, 532, 58 W. Va. 472.

DO ALL IN HIS POWER

An undertaking by one person for another to "do all in his power" to prevent the confirmation of a certain land claim depending before Congress, etc., does not import that any unfair or improper means are to be resorted to, but evidently means that he shall exert his utmost diligence and ability. Hunt v. Test, 8 Ala. 713, 720, 42 Am. Dec. 659.

DO AND PERFORM

The words "do and perform," as used in the condition of a bail bond that the debtor shall "abide, do and perform the judgment," mean "submit to," "stand to," or "abide," and are evidently a useless iteration to add force and expression to the idea conveyed by the words "to abide." Hewins v. Currier, 62 Me. 236, 239.

DO AS SHE PLEASES

The words in a will empowering a widow to "do as she pleases" with the property bequeathed to her are inconsistent with the existence of an estate over, and she takes an absolute estate in fee. Breeden v. Welker, 2 Tenn. Ch. App. 109, 111.

DO NOT KNOW

Whether the answer "do not know" to a special finding of fact, returned by a jury, is equivalent to "yes" or "no" depends upon the form of the question answered. Generally, such an answer shows that the party whose duty it was to establish the fact involved in the question failed in his proof. In a case where it was the duty of the defendant to prove that E. did not sign a certain promissory note, and the jury returned the following finding and answer: "Did E. sign the note in question? Do not know"—such answer is equivalent to "yes." Croan v. Baden, 85 Pac. 532, 533, 73 Kan. 364.

"A 'dock' is an artificial basin in connection with a harbor, used for the reception of vessels in the taking on or discharging of their cargoes, and provided with gates for preventing the rise and fall of the waters occasioned by the tides, and keeping a uniform level within the docks." Perry v. Haines, 24 Sup. Ct. 8, 13, 191 U. S. 17, 48 L. Ed. 73.

The term "dock," as defined by Webster, is an artificial basin or inclosure in connection with a harbor for the reception of vessels, and the slip or water way extending between two piers or projecting wharves, or cut into the land for the reception of ships. Water ways are included within the term. Under a city charter authorizing the city to incur a bonded debt to acquire or construct and operate public wharves, docks, piers, or moles along the seashore in connection with the transportation of passengers and freight, etc., the city was authorized to contract indebtedness for the construction of docks, wharves, and warehouses, including the maintaining of streets and highways to navigable waters, and the construction and maintenance of canals and water ways. Clark v. City of Los Angeles, 116 Pac. 966, 969, 160 Cal. 317.

DOCKAGE

See Dry Dockage.

The word "wharfage" is sometimes used synonymously with "dockage" or "moorage" to describe the charge made by the owner of a dock or basin for the privilege of allowing a vessel to lie there. Mayor, etc., of City of Baltimore v. Baltimore & P. Steamboat Co., 65 Atl. 353, 358, 104 Md. 485.

DOCKET ENTRY

Within Sp. Laws 1885, c. 119, § 7, relating to the municipal court of the city of Mankato, and providing that every person in whose favor a judgment is rendered, in said municipal court, for an amount exceeding $5 besides costs may, upon paying the fee therefor, demand and shall receive from such clerk a transcript of the "docket entries" of such judgment duly certified, and may file the same in the office of the clerk of the district court of the county of Blue Earth, it is doubtful if the term "docket entries," as used in the municipal court act, was intended to refer to entries in a judgment docket book which the clerk was not required to keep, but which might properly be kept, if the judge so ordered, as a convenient index of the judgment debtors; it is more probable that the term refers to the entries in the minute book or docket that the clerk is required to keep by the provisions of section 7. Funk v. Lamb, 92 N. W. 8, 9, 87 Minn. 348.

DOCKET FEE

A deposit made with the clerk of the court, which under the rules is required to be made whenever a cause is filed there, is generally called by the profession a "docket fee." People ex rel. Denver Engineers' Sup- ly Co. v. District Court of City and County of Denver, 80 Pac. 1069, 1070, 83 Colo. 416.

DOCKETING JUDGMENT

The "docketing of a judgment" is a proceeding ministerial in character, which cannot occur until there is a judgment rendered. It is not the making or giving of a judgment, but the act of a mere clerk, and it necessarily implies the pre-existence of the judgment to be docketed. In California the docketing must not only await the rendition of the judgment, but it is to be done after the filing of the judgment roll, which takes place after the judgment is entered. Ridgley v. Abbott Quicksilver Min. Co. of Illinois, 79 Pac. 833, 834, 7 Cal. Unrep. 200.

DOCKING

Where a charter party provided that, in the event of loss of time by reason of docking, there should be an abatement of hire money, the expression "docking" referred to loss of time in case it should be necessary to dry dock the vessel, and not to loss of time in waiting to reach a dock, so that it could be coaled. Anderson v. Bowring & Co., 197 Fed. 675, 678.

DOCTOR

An indictment alleging that accused practicing medicine without a license treated a physical disease in the capacity of a physician or doctor or both is not objectionable because in the disjunctive; the words "physician" and "doctor" being synonymous. Millington v. State (Tex.) 150 S. W. 434, 436.

The term "doctor," as defined by the lexicographers, signifies or means, in one respect, a person who practices medicine. One who held himself out to the public as a "doctor" located in a certain city, with stated office hours, gave all persons to understand that he was engaged in the practice of curing diseases by some method adapted to that purpose, notwithstanding the fact that he disclaimed the use of medicine of the character of drugs in his treatment of disease. Witty v. State, 90 N. E. 627, 630, 173 Ind. 404, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1297.

The indictments against a person are "records or 'documents' filed in a public office under authority of law." Code Cr. Proc. § 272; Code Civ. Proc. § 866. They are the property of the state, and a willful and unlawful removal of them constitutes a crime under Pen. Code, § 94. People v. Mills, 70 N. E. 786, 789, 178 N. Y. 274, 67 L. R. A. 131.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, cl. 13, 30 Stat. 544, defines a "document" to include any books, deeds, or instruments of writing, and includes deeds, all other muniments of title, contracts, securities, bills receivable, notes, bankbooks, bills of exchange, account books, and all papers and books relating to the business of a bankrupt, and these books and papers are regarded by the bankrupt act as personal property, the title to which, by operation of law, is vested in the trustee. In re Hess, 134 Fed. 109, 111.

A motion for inspection of a picture, the property involved in the action and bearing the purported signature of the artist, will be denied; it not being a "document or other paper" within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 803, authorizing inspection. Wilson v. Collins, 109 N. Y. Supp. 660, 662, 57 Misc. Rep. 363.

St. 1898, § 2921, authorizes the recovery of "necessary disbursements," and section 2928 declares that, when there are charges in a bill of costs for attendance of witnesses or copies or exemplifications of documents or papers, such charges for copies shall not be taxed without an affidavit that the copies were actually and necessarily used or necessarily obtained for use, or unless they shall appear to have been necessary and reasonable in amount. Held, that the words "documents or papers" did not include a copy of testimony taken before a referee, claimed by plaintiff's attorneys to have been necessary to enable them to argue the case before the referee, and hence plaintiff was not entitled to charge for such copy as a necessary disbursement. Wisconsin Sulphite Fibre Co. v. D. K. Jeffris Lumber Co., 111 N. W. 237, 250, 132 Wis. 1.

Record book of corporation

The corporate records and stock books passed on an adjudication in bankruptcy against the corporation to the trustee, by virtue of the provisions of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 13, § 70, 30 Stat. 544, 465, vesting in such trustee the title of the bankrupt to all documents relating to his property, and section 1, subd. 13, providing that the word "documents" shall include any book, deed, or instrument in writing. Babbitt v. Dutcher, 30 Sup. Ct. 372, 216 U. S. 102, 54 L. Ed. 402, 17 Ann. Cas. 969.

The appliance on a harvester, which is made of canvas, and is near the smokestack, and is used as a header draper, is called a "dog house." Quint v. Dimond, 82 Pac. 810, 312, 147 Cal. 707.

DOG TAIL COTTON

"Dog tail cotton" is cotton of a poor grade and of little value. Soudan Planting Co. v. Stevenson, 102 S. W. 1114, 1116, 83 Ark. 163.

DOGS—DOGGER

The term "dogs," as used in a sawmill, are devices for holding the logs securely in position to saw. O'Brien v. Page Lumber Co., 82 Pac. 114, 39 Wash. 537.

The carriageman in a sawmill is sometimes called the "dogger." Evans v. Louisiana Lumber Co., 85 South. 736, 737, 111 La. 534.

A "dogger," in a mill, is one required to ride backwards and forwards on the saw carriage, and to attach the dogs to the log on the carriage. O'Brien v. Page Lumber Co., 82 Pac. 114, 116, 39 Wash. 537.

While the extent to which a foreign corporation must "do business" in a state to justify the service of process upon it there is not clearly defined, the transaction of some substantial business must be established. Cody Motors Co. v. Warren Motor Car Co., 196 Fed. 254, 255.

The drawing of bills of exchange by a foreign corporation on a drawee in this state does not imply the "transaction of business" in the state. H. T. Woodall & Son v. People's Nat. Bank of Leesburg, Va., 45 South. 194, 195, 153 Ala. 576.

A foreign corporation, receiving dividends on stock in another corporation whose stock it is one of its purposes to hold, is "doing business" for a profit, so as to render it taxable within the Tax Law. People ex rel. Manhattan Silk Co. v. Miller, 109 N. Y. Supp. 866, 868, 125 App. Div. 296.

The doing of matters of which the ordinary business of a foreign corporation does not consist, but which it does in the exercise of its general rights for the purposes of its safety, or in order to do justice to its creditors, or to comply with some other provision of the local law, is not the "doing of business" within a state, but it consists only of carrying on the operations of its trade for the making of profit. American Copying Co. v. Eureka Bazaar, 108 N. W. 15, 16, 20 S. D. 526, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1176 (citing 19 Cyc. p. 1280).

A contract by a foreign corporation for the sale and delivery in the state of paving blocks manufactured in another state, negotiated largely by correspondence and afterwards reduced to writing, the deliveries to extend over a period of about ten months, does not constitute "doing business in the state" by such corporation, so as to require a certificate from the Secretary of State authorizing it to do such business, as provided by Corporation Law, § 15. Haddam Granite Co. v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 116 N. Y. Supp. 96, 98, 131 App. Div. 685.

The General Corporation Law provides that no foreign stock corporation other than a moneyed corporation shall do business in this state without first having procured a certificate, etc., and that no foreign stock corporation doing business in this state shall maintain any action upon any contract made by it in the state unless prior to the making thereof it shall have procured such certificate, etc. Plaintiff was a corporation organized under the laws of another state and manufactured its products there. It dealt with about 35 people of this state during the last eight years. The president of the company came here once in a while as its representative, and as a rule, when coming to transact business, remained two or three days. Sales of some of plaintiff's machines to other parties had been canceled, and the machines were transferred to defendant for the notes in suit. There was no other evidence as to its doing business in the state. Held, that plaintiff was not "doing business in this state" within the meaning of the statute, so as to warrant dismissal of the complaint. Novelty Tufting Mach. Co. v. Huttoff, 107 N. Y. Supp. 88-90, 56 Misc. Rep. 522.

The expression "doing business in this state," as used in Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 32, § 26, imposing duties and restrictions on foreign corporations both doing business in the state, means doing the business or character of business for which the corporation was organized. People ex rel. Stead v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co., 79 N. E. 144, 146, 223 Ill. 581, 7 Ann. Cas. 1 (citing Bradbury v. Waukegan

& Washington Mining & Smelting Co., 118 Ill. App. 600; Mandel v. Swan Land & Cattle Co., 40 N. E. 462, 154 Ill. 177, 27 L. R. A. 313, 45 Am. St. Rep. 124.

A foreign corporation doing interstate business, or a corporation selling an article in another state to a citizen of Idaho, is not "doing business in the state" within Const. art. 11, § 10, providing that no foreign corporation shall do business in the state without having one or more offices and an authorized agent therein upon whom process may be served and Rev. Codes, § 2792, providing that every foreign corporation before "doing business in this state" must file its articles of incorporation and designate an agent upon whom process can be served. Foore v. Simon Piano Co., 108 Pac. 1038, 1042, 18 Idaho, 167.

The term "doing business in the city" in the Roanoke City Charter, specifying various kinds of business or employment on which the city may levy a license tax, and providing that a license may be required of any person "doing business in the city," whether the business or employment be of a like character as that the statute meant or not, does not include a person selling on the market square country produce from his wagon. Brown's Case, 36 S. E. 485, 487, 98 Va. 366.

The question as to whether a foreign corporation is "doing business" in the state so as to be subject to service of process under R. L. 1905, § 4109, is entirely distinct from the question as to whether such a corporation is "doing business" in the state within the purview of the Somerville Law (R. L. 1905, §§ 2888-2890), relative to the conditions upon which a foreign corporation may be allowed to do business in the state; and it does not follow that business which, by reason of the Interstate Commerce Law, does not bring the corporation within the Somerville Law, may not nevertheless bring it within R. L. 1905, § 4109. Kendall v. Orange Judd Co., 136 N. W. 291, 292, 118 Minn. 1.

The fact that motor cars built by defendant, a foreign corporation located at Detroit, and having no certificate authorizing it to do business in New York, and no established place of business in the state, where shown in a space leased by defendant at a New York automobile exhibition, and that defendant's officers were present conferring with different persons, including local sales agents, all of the complete cars exhibited, however, being owned by a local concern, did not constitute a "doing business in the state" which will sustain service of summons upon it therein to give jurisdiction to a federal court. Cody Motors Co. v. Warren Motor Car Co., 196 Fed. 254, 255.

A corporation organized for the purpose of owning and renting an office building, but which has wholly parted with the control and management of the property, and by the terms of a reorganization has disqualified itself from any activity in respect to it, its sole authority being to hold the title subject to a lease for 130 years, and to receive and distribute the rentals which may accrue under the terms of the lease, or the proceeds of any sale of the land, if it shall be sold, is not "doing business" within the meaning of Act Aug. 5, 1909, c. 6, § 38, imposing an excise upon the doing or the carrying on of business in a corporate or quasi corporate capacity. Zonne v. Minneapolis Syndicate, 31 Sup. Ct. 361, 362, 220 U. S. 187, 55 L. Ed. 428.

The purchase at execution sale of property in satisfaction of a judgment procured in an interstate transaction is not in itself "doing business," within Const. art. 11, § 10, and Rev. Codes, § 2792, prohibiting a foreign corporation "doing business" in this state without first filing its articles of incorporation and designating an agent, as those provisions do not apply to a foreign corporation doing interstate business, or a corporation that sells an article in another state to a citizen of this state, and which thereafter finds it necessary to resort to the courts of this state for the collection of the debt. Foore v. Simon Piano Co., 108 Pac. 1038, 1042, 18 Idaho, 167.

The making of a collateral trust mortgage to secure a bond issue and an underwriting agreement to sell part of the bonds, the procuring of defendant's signature to such an agreement, the receipt of money from defendant on his contract, the delivery to him of the bonds to be paid for, and the assignment of the underwriting contract to another to secure a note, does not constitute "doing business," within General Corporation Law (Laws 1892, p. 1805, c. 687) § 15, prohibiting the maintenance of an action by a foreign corporation "doing business" in this state until after payment of a license fee, etc. Union Trust Co. of Rochester v. Sickels, 109 N. Y. Supp. 262, 265, 125 App. Div. 105.

Where a foreign corporation came into the state of New Jersey and organized and controlled a corporation, causing it to issue its bonds and stock, and took them and purchased stocks held in various New Jersey corporations, and also took from such stockholders sums of money as further consideration, and gave a guaranty that another corporation would pay the interest on its bonds, such transactions amounted to a "doing of business," within P. L. 1896, p. 307, providing that foreign corporations, as a condition precedent to doing business shall take certain steps. Groel v. United Electric Co. of New Jersey, 60 Atl. 822-832, 69 N. J. Eq. 397.

While as a general rule a foreign corporation can be sued and served with process in a state court only when it is doing business, in such state, it being often a matter of extreme nicety to determine whether or not at the time of service the corporation was in contemplation of law "doing business" within the state, the state may properly provide that before any foreign corporation shall transact business within its borders it shall designate an agent in the state upon whom process may be served in a suit brought before or after it has ceased to do business in the state. The act of Idaho of March 10, 1903, requiring such a designation of an agent, which designation shall run from the time of filing until his successor is appointed or his resignation filed, permits valid service or process to be made on an agent, whose appointment has neither been resigned nor revoked, in suits against the corporation growing out of its business in the state, even though it has ceased such business and sold its property, and although the agent is no longer connected with it aside from such designation, since otherwise, if "doing business" implies, as has been held, corporate continuity of conduct in that respect, a foreign corporation might comply with the requirements of the act, so as to have its advantages, and yet "fit into the state and out again in such a way that it would be almost impossible successfully to serve process upon it." Hill v. Empire State-Idaho Mining & Developing Co., 156 Fed. 797, 809.

A petition in involuntary bankruptcy was filed in the district of Massachusetts against a Maine corporation, which had carried on the mercantile business for which it was incorporated in Boston. About six months prior to the filing of the petition it sold the most of its stock in trade and gave up its place of business, and two months later receivers were appointed by a court of Maine, who took charge of and kept its remaining property in Boston. Held, that the corporation was not "doing business" in any proper sense after the appointment of the receivers, and had not had its principal "place of business" in Massachusetts for the greater part of the six months preceding the filing of the petition, within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 2 (1), 30 Stat. 545, and that the court in that district was without jurisdiction of the proceedings. In re Perry Aldrich Co., 165 Fed. 249, 251.

A bank, which has gone into voluntary liquidation, paid off its depositors, surrendered to the bank commissioner its certificate of authority to transact business, and ceased to transact any business, except to collect debts owing it and to distribute the proceeds among its stockholders by way of closing up its affairs, is not "doing business," within Gen. St. 1901, § 1283, requiring financial statements to be filed with the Secretary of State by corporations doing business in the state as a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action. Wilson v. First State Bank of Jetmore, 95 Pac. 404, 405, 77 Kan. 589.

Defendant, a Virginia railroad company, neither owned nor operated any railroad located in Pennsylvania, and maintained no office in that state, though three directors and its assistant secretary resided there, who may, at various times, have received and given information indirectly affecting the corporation's business elsewhere. Defendant's cars, both freight and passenger, were transported through Pennsylvania by other railroads, for the convenience of passengers and shippers, such railroads, however, paying for the use of the cars, and receiving the freight and passenger rates for that portion of the haul that was done in Pennsylvania. Defendant was also a member of a freight transportation line which maintained an agency in Pennsylvania for the solicitation of freight to be shipped under through bills of lading, each line receiving a proportionate share of the freight, and each contributing to the expenses of the agency; and another railroad located in Pennsylvania sold coupon tickets in connection with its own tickets only, good over defendant's road, accounting each month to defendant for its proportion of the proceeds. The facts did not justify a finding that defendant was "doing business" in Pennsylvania, so as to authorize it to be sued in that state. Earle v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 127 Fed. 235, 237.

Where a railroad operates boats in the waters of New York, and delivers coal in that state, it is "doing business" therein, and subject to service of process there, though its railroad is not within the state. Cafasso v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co., 169 Fed. 887.

If a foreign insurance company unauthorized to do business in this state issues policies through a licensed broker acting pursuant to the statute authorizing the obtaining by such a broker of policies issued by foreign insurance companies unauthorized to do business in this state, such foreign insurance company is not "doing business" in this state contrary to the statute. Equitable Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. McCrae, 156 Ill. App. 467, 471.

Rev. Laws Mass. c. 119, § 11, relating to fraternal benefit corporations conducting business under the provisions of the chapter, provides that an agreement for the transfer of membership of such corporations shall be approved by a two-thirds vote of the certificate holders of each corporation, etc. Plaintiff and defendant were Grand Lodges of a fraternal insurance order; plaintiff being the Grand Lodge of Connecticut, and defendant the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts. The latter formerly had included the members of the order in Connecticut and other states, but plaintiff had been created a separate Grand Lodge by the Supreme Lodge of the order, acting under its constitution and laws. Thereafter plaintiff and defendant had entered into an agreement for the proportionate division of the funds held by defendant at the time of the separation, and plaintiff brings this action for an accounting thereof.

Defendant demurred to the complaint because, besides other reasons therefor, it did not appear that plaintiff had authority to carry on its business in Massachusetts, or that two-thirds of the certificate holders of defendant had consented to the contract alleged between plaintiff and defendant. Held, that as it did not appear that plaintiff had ever undertaken to do business in Massachusetts, and as the division of territory by the Supreme Lodge, a foreign corporation, and creating plaintiff a Grand Lodge in another state, was not the "doing of business" in Massachusetts within the meaning of the statute, its provisions, under the circumstances, had no application. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. of Connecticut v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. of Massachusetts, 70 Atl. 617, 625, 81 Conn. 189.

The words "doing business" in this state, as used in Rev. St. 1878, § 1954, providing that every life or accident insurance corporation doing business in this state shall on or before the 1st day of March in each year file in the office of the commissioner of insurance a statement of its business standing and affairs, etc., and imposing a penalty for neglect to comply therewith, which by the next section is made a ground for revoking the authority, license, or certificate granted to such a corporation, necessarily imply and refer to corporations which have the lawful right or authority to make contracts of insurance, such corporations as the state may have jurisdiction over, and not to unlicensed nonresident corporations. State v. United States Mut. Acc. Ins. Co., 33 N. W. 90, 92, 69 Wis. 76.

Corporations organized for and actually engaged in such activities as leasing property, collecting rents, managing office buildings, making investments of profits, or leasing ore lands and collecting royalties, managing wharves, dividing profits, and in some cases investing the surplus are engaged in business within the meaning of Act. Aug. 5, 1909, c. 6, § 38, imposing an excise upon the doing or the carrying on of business in a corporate or quasi corporate capacity. A corporation owning and leasing taxicabs and collecting rents therefrom is "engaged in business" within the meaning of Act. Aug. 5, 1909, c. 6, § 38, 36 Stat. 112 (U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 844), imposing an excise upon the doing or carrying on of business in a corporate or quasi corporate capacity. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 842, 357, 220 U. S. 107, 55 L. Ed. 389, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1312.

Where the proprietor or keeper of a saloon maintains a billiard table in connection therewith, it will be held that such table is kept and used in "doing business" within Const. art. 7, § 2, authorizing the Legislature to impose a license tax on persons and corporations doing business in the state, though no separate or specific hire is exacted or charge made for the playing of games on the table; the incidental advantage the table affords to the business in connection with which it is used being sufficient to bring it within the purview of "doing business." In re Gale, 95 Pac. 679, 680, 14 Idaho, 761.

Under Laws 1905, p. 807, c. 491, authorizing the Governor to employ competent accountants necessary to investigate the various state departments, the Governor may employ a foreign corporation, chartered as public accountants, and such corporation while engaged in such examination on behalf of the state is not "doing business" within the state within the meaning of Bush law, requiring foreign corporations to obtain a permit to do business within the state. Haskins & Sells v. Kelly, 93 Pac. 605, 606, 77 Kan. 155.

S. urged M. to buy a place, telling him he had been "doing business" with defendant for a long time, that he (S.) could be trusted, that M. could steal horses enough to make the payments, and that defendant would take and handle them for him. Held, that S., in using the expression "doing business," intended to be understood as saying that he had been stealing horses for a long time, and that defendant had been handling them for him. State v. Allen, 87 Pac. 177, 179, 34 Mont. 403.

Agent as doing business

The specific tax "upon all agents of packing houses doing business in this state," which is levied by paragraph 19 of section 2 of a general tax act approved December 21, 1900 (Acts 1900, p. 21), is a vocation or occupation tax; and, construing together the various provisions of the act applicable to this tax, it is apparent that the act in effect declares that an agent representing a packing house and carrying on its business in any county of this state is pursuing a vocation or occupation, and is himself "doing business" in this state, and is liable to the tax. Stewart v. Kehrer, 41 S. E. 680, 682, 115 Ga. 184.

An agent representing a packing house and carrying on its business as the alter ego of the principal is "doing business" within an ordinance imposing a tax on agents of packing houses having a place of business or stock of merchandise in the city and selling to customers therein, and is liable for the tax. City of Savannah v. Cooper, 63 S. E. 138, 139, 131 Ga. 670.

A foreign corporation, which, through a resident agent, makes a contract in the state to furnish labor and material for construction work, and in pursuance thereof sends laborers and employes, together with a superintendent, into the state, to perform the contract, "engages in business" within the state within Rev. St. 1895, art. 745, requiring foreign corporations to file their articles with and receive from the Secretary of State a permit to transact business in the state, and is not engaged in interstate commerce. St. Louis Expanded Metal Fireproofing Co. v. Bellharz (Tex.) 88 S. W. 512, 514.

Under Pub. St. 1901, c. 245, § 5, providing that a person doing business in the state may be summoned upon trustee process, the property of a nonresident landowner in the charge of his resident agent may be attached by a creditor on such process; the care of real estate being in nature of "doing business in this state." Bennett v. Hebbard, 68 Atl. 537, 74 N. H. 411.

Under Act April 22, 1874 (P. L. 108), making it unlawful for a foreign corporation to do business in the state without having a place of business and a registered authorized agent, the same person may be both the commercial agent of a corporation and its authorized registered agent; but where he resigns his position as commercial agent, without having his appointment as registered agent canceled, he continues to act as such, so that the corporation is still "doing business" in the state with a duly appointed registered agent. De La Vergne Refrigerating Mach. Co. v. Kollscher, 63 Atl. 971, 974, 214 Pa. 400.

Accepting premiums and paying losses

A foreign insurance company, though it has ceased to solicit new business, is still "doing business" in the state, so that jurisdiction may be acquired by service on an agent, where it still has outstanding policies in the state, on which it collects dues, and, in case of losses thereunder, adjusts them and makes remittances. Johnston v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ins. Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 438, 441, 43 Misc. Rep. 251.

A foreign accident insurance company which has policies outstanding in the state, and has and exercises the right to investigate losses thereunder, to examine the body of the deceased insured, and to adjust and settle losses within the state, is "doing business" therein so as to support service of process upon a local agent, conformably to Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 7992, providing for the service of process in actions against foreign insurance companies. Commercial Mut. Accident Co. v. Davis, 29 Sup. Ct. 445, 446, 213 U. S. 245, 53 L. Ed. 782.

The receipt by a foreign insurance company at its home office of premiums upon policies theretofore issued, together with four isolated acts extending over a period of three years, consisting in rewriting an existing policy, sending a check in payment of a policy, to be delivered upon receipt of certain unpaid assessments, and two adjustments within the state of claims which have accrued, do not constitute "doing business" within the state after the company's asserted withdrawal therefrom in good faith, so as to preclude it from revoking its designation of the state insurance commissioner as its agent to receive service of process. Hunter

A foreign insurance company is "doing business" within the state, so far as the question of the power of a federal court, sitting in that state, to obtain jurisdiction over such corporation, is concerned, where, under the terms of its policies covering property in that state, it sends its agents there to adjust losses. Pennsylvania Lumbermen's Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Meyer, 25 Sup. Ct. 483, 485, 197 U. S. 407, 49 L. Ed. 810.

A life insurance company, which has surrendered its license to do business in the state, withdrawn its agencies, and transacts in the state only such business as is necessary under its outstanding policies, though "doing business" in the state so as to subject it to reasonable regulations for the benefit of resident policy holders, is not "doing business" within St. 1898, § 1954, as amended by Laws 1907, c. 597, requiring every life insurance company doing business in the state to file, on or before March 1st in each year with the insurance commissioner, an annual statement, giving a complete account of its business and financial condition covering the year ending the preceding December. State v. Columbian Nat. Life Ins. Co., 124 N. W. 502, 503, 141 Wis. 557.

Where a foreign assessment insurance company, with its home office in the state of its origin, issued policies there to a domestic corporation on applications sent by mail to the home office by the treasurer of the domestic corporation from his home in New York, or in a sister state, and the policies were sent by mail, either to the company in New York or to its treasurer in the sister state, and were retained, and the insurer had neither office nor agent in New York, and did not solicit business in New York, the transaction did not constitute "doing business" there, within the insurance law (Laws 1892, c. 690, as amended by Laws 1893, c. 725), relating to foreign corporations transacting the business of insurance, or within General Corporation Law (Consol. Laws, c. 23) § 15, denying a foreign corporation not having its certificate of regularity, the right to sue in New York. Stone v. Penn Yan, K. P. & B. R. Co., 90 N. E. 843, 846, 197 N. Y. 279, 134 Am. St. Rep. 879.

The operations of a life insurance agent in soliciting insurance, receiving applications, obtaining policies, and collecting premiums constitute a "doing and conducting of an insurance business," within an ordinance levying a license therefor. City of Lake Charles v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 38 South. 578, 579, 114 La. 836.

A foreign insurance company, writing insurance on property in the state for residents, is "doing business" in the state, within Act March 11, 1901 (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 4798), so as to be subject to process, though not licensed to do business in the state and maintaining no office therein. McCord v. Illinois Nat. Fire Ins. Co., 94 N. E. 1058, 1054, 47 Ind. App. 602.

Appointing agents

The appointment of an agent to transact the company's business is not "doing business" within the meaning of the statute. Verdigris River Land Co. v. Stanfield, 105 Pac. 337, 340, 25 Okl. 285.

The provisions of a statute requiring agents of foreign corporations to deposit in the county where they purpose to do business the authority under which they act as agents before entering upon their duties in the state, and requiring such agents to file with the clerk of the circuit court of the county where they propose to do business, before commencing the duties thereof, the consent of the corporation to be sued in the state and authorization of service of process, are applicable to the persons who propose to engage in business in the state as agents of foreign corporations, but not to transactions by an agent in the conduct of business of a corporation which has no permanency in the state. They do not apply to a nonresident manager or agent, who comes to the state to appoint agents. Hollowell v. Smith Agricultural Chemical Co., 83 N. E. 772, 41 Ind. App. 361.

A complaint by a foreign business corporation showing a contract made within the state for the employment by it of a district manager for a specified state "or other territory" warrants an inference of the "doing of business within the state" within General Corporation Law (Consol. Laws, c. 23) § 15, prohibiting suits by foreign stock corporations on contracts made in the state before procuring a certificate from the Secretary of State. Chicago Crayon Co. v. Slaterry, 123 N. Y. Supp. 987, 990, 68 Misc. Rep. 148.

Bringing or maintaining action

By instituting and prosecuting a suit a foreign corporation is not "doing business" within the meaning of statutes imposing conditions precedent thereto. Cooper v. Ft. Smith & W. R. Co., 99 Pac. 785, 788, 23 Okl. 139 (citing St. Louis, A. & T. Ry. Co. v. Fire Ass'n, 18 S. W. 43, 55 Ark. 163; Christian v. American Freehold Land & Mortgage Co., 7 South. 427, 89 Ala. 198; Ginn v. New England Mortgage Security Co., 8 South. 388, 92 Ala. 135; 2 Morawetz, Corp., § 662; Cook v. Rome Brick Co., 12 South. 918, 98 Ala. 409; St. Louis, A. & T. Ry. Co. v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 30 S. W. 350, 60 Ark. 325, 28 L. R. A. 83).

The institution of a suit by a foreign corporation is not an "act of business" in the state, and may be done without having a place of business or an agent in the state. H. T. Woodall & Son v. People's Nat. Bank of Leesburg, Va., 45 South. 194, 195, 153 Ala. 576.

The bringing of an action in the state by a foreign corporation it not "doing business in the state," so as to require the foreign corporation to pay an annual license fee, within Laws 1907, c. 140, providing that no corporation shall be permitted to maintain any suit in any court of the state without alleging and proving that it has paid its annual license fee last due, which refers only to corporations doing business in the state. Lilly-Brackett Co. v. Sonnemann, 97 Pac. 505, 50 Wash. 487.

Bringing an action is not "doing business," within Banking Law, Laws 1892, p. 1861, c. 689, § 31, providing that no foreign corporation incorporated for carrying on the business specified in article 5 shall transact business in the state without a certificate from the Superintendent of Banks. Western Nat. Bank of Louisville v. Kelly, 95 N. Y. Supp. 574, 48 Misc. Rep. 366.

The bringing of a suit does not constitute "doing business," within Gen. St. 1901, § 1283, requiring financial statements to be filed with the Secretary of State by corporations doing business in the state as a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action; that phrase being intended to comprehend only the exercise of corporate functions in the attainment of the ends for which the corporation was organized. Wilson v. First State Bank of Jetmore, 95 Pac. 404, 406, 77 Kan. 589.

The phrase "exercise or attempt to exercise any power," within Code 1906, c. 82, § 136, relating to proceedings against corporations, delinquent as to license taxes, should be read as if it said "carry on the business" of the corporation, and "doing business," as found in such statutes, is construed as not extending to the mere act of suits in respect to contracts made or rights acquired while the corporation had power to do business. Comstock v. J. R. Droney Lumber Co., 71 S. E. 255, 256, 69 W. Va. 100.

The enforcement of a contract in the courts of the state by a foreign corporation is not the "doing of business in the state" within the statute prohibiting foreign corporations from doing business within the state until they comply with the laws thereof. United Shoe Machinery Co. v. Ramlose, 132 S. W. 1133, 1141, 231 Mo. 508.

The prosecution of an action by a foreign corporation to recover on a contract for the purchase of lawbooks did not constitute "doing business" in Arkansas, within Act Feb. 16, 1899, p. 18, c. 19, requiring a foreign corporation to file a copy of its articles with the Secretary of State as a prerequisite to its right to do business within the state. Alley v. Bowen-Merrill Co., 88 S. W. 838, 840, 76 Ark. 4, 113 Am. St. Rep. 73, 6 Ann. Cas. 127 (citing Buffalo Zinc & Copper Co. v. Crump, 69 S. W. 572, 70 Ark. 525, 91 Am. St. Rep. 87; St. Louis, A. & T. Ry. Co. v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 18 S. W. 48, 55 Ark. 174).

Where a nonresident corporation brings an action, and the issue is raised by answer that plaintiff has not complied with the corporation laws (Gen. St. 1901, § 1283), and the evidence shows that plaintiff had for years before suit traveling men in its employ in the state obtaining contracts from implement dealers, providing that the title of goods shipped under the contract from Missouri should remain in the corporation until paid for, and the corporation sent agents thereafter to Kansas to receive payment, it is error to assume in the instructions that, though the dealer in Kansas paid the freight, the goods were delivered to the carrier in Missouri, as the property of the dealer in Kansas. Elliott v. Parlin & Orendorff Co., 81 Pac. 500, 503, 71 Kan. 685.

The prosecution, by a foreign corporation, of an action in the state for collection of a debt contracted in another state, and payable in that state, does not constitute "doing business" in Idaho, within Const. art. 11, § 10, providing that no foreign corporation shall do any business within the state without having a place of business and an authorized agent therein upon whom process may be served, and Rev. Codes, § 2792, requiring certain steps to be taken by foreign corporations before doing business in the state. Bonham Nat. Bank of Fairbury v. Grimes Pass Placer Mining Co., 111 Pac. 1078, 1079, 18 Idaho, 629.

A suit to foreclose a real estate mortgage transferred to plaintiff in another state before maturity, and for which plaintiff, a foreign corporation, comes into the courts for the purpose only of maintaining such action, is not "doing business" within the state, within Const. art. 11, § 10, and Rev. Codes, § 2792. Diamond Bank v. Van Meter, 113 Pac. 97, 98, 19 Idaho, 225.

A statute providing that no foreign corporation shall have or exercise any corporate powers, or be permitted to do business within the state, until a required fee shall have been paid, does not prohibit a foreign corporation from suing to protect its property or other rights, or from acquiring property in the state, until such fees are paid, as such acts are not "doing business within the state." Craig v. A. Leschen & Sons Rope Co., 87 Pac. 1143, 1144, 38 Colo. 115.

The institution and prosecution of suits in the courts of this state by a foreign corporation is not "doing business" therein within the meaning of section 43, art. 9, of the Constitution, or of article 23, c. 18 (sections 1225-1227) Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903. Freeman-Sipes Co. v. Corticelli Silk Co., 124 Pac. 972, 973, 34 Okl. 229.

Consigning goods to factors

A foreign corporation which has no warehouse, office, or place of business, and which neither incurs nor pays any of the expenses of receiving, handling, and selling its goods in a state to which it consigns them to its factor, who conducts all the business there, assumes and pays all expenses, is not "doing business" in the latter state within the meaning of statutes relative to the admission of foreign corporations. Where a New Jersey corporation entered into a factorage contract with a corporation in Colorado, the Colorado corporation ordering, receiving, storing, and selling merchandise of the New Jersey corporation at its own expense in consideration of the factorage secured to it by the contract, the New Jersey corporation was not "doing business" in Colorado within the meaning of the Constitution and statutes of that state. Butler Bros. Shoe Co. v. United States Rubber Co., 156 Fed. 1, 20, 84 C. C. A. 167.

Where a foreign corporation furnishes wagons to an agent on board cars in Ohio for sale in Kentucky under an "agent's commission contract," retaining title in the corporation and requiring the proceeds to be kept separate as its funds, the corporation "does business" in Kentucky, within Ky. St. 1903, § 571, requiring foreign corporations to designate a local agent upon whom process may be served. Milburn Wagon Co. v. Commonwealth, 104 S. W. 323, 324, 139 Ky. 330.

A foreign corporation shipped liquors without the state to a factor within Michigan, retaining title thereto and contemplating that the factor should make sales to its customers within Michigan. The foreign corporation sent a man to supervise the keeping of the books and the handling of the funds by the factor, and the factor paid him. It was agreed that the book accounts should belong to the foreign corporation. Held, that the foreign corporation did not "transact business" in Michigan within the laws regulating the doing of business by foreign corporations, but the transactions partook of the character of interstate commerce. In re Monongahela Distillery Co., 186 Fed. 220, 225.

Construction work

Plaintiff, a corporation not registered in Pennsylvania, was engaged in engineering and contracting. It had no factory or workshop where anything was made and did not manufacture the machinery which it designed and sold; its capital being chiefly invested in patterns, drawings, and the good will of its business, and its usual agreements contemplating a particular plant contracted for in accordance with such an agreement as was in controversy with defendant. Held, that plaintiff's purchasing and assembling the necessary parts to complete the plant it had agreed to construct for defendant, was not interstate commerce, but constituted "doing business" in Pennsylvania, where the plant was to be erected, in violation of Act Pa. 1874 (P. L. 108), prohibiting foreign corporations from "doing business within the state" without having complied with such act, and hence plaintiff could not recover on the contract. Buffalo Refrigerating Mach. Co. v. Penn Heat & Power Co., 178 Fed. 696, 698, 102 C. C. A. 196.

A foreign corporation engaged in the manufacture and installation of elevators contracted in New York to furnish and install elevators in a building in New York City. It had an office in New York, and brought suit for the amount due on the contract, alleging a substantial performance. Held, that its acts constituted "doing business within the state," within General Corporation Law (Laws 1892, p. 1805, c. 687) § 15, as amended by Laws 1904, p. 1250, c. 490, prohibiting the "doing of business within the state" without having first secured a certificate from the Secretary of State, etc. Portland Co. v. Hall & Grant Const. Co., 106 N. Y. Supp. 649, 654, 121 App. Div. 779.

Where a foreign corporation entered into a contract with defendant bank to furnish materials and construct certain fixtures in defendant's bank building in Alabama, involving the construction of brick walls, putting on of finished plaster, and the furnishing and construction of different articles making up the furniture and fixtures of the bank, such work constituted "doing business" within the state, and the corporation, not having complied with Code 1907, §§ 3642, 3644, regulating foreign corporations, it could not maintain a suit to enforce a lien therefor. Geo. W. Muller Mfg. Co. v. First Nat. Bank (Ala.) 57 South. 762, 763.

Continuance implied

Within a statute requiring foreign corporations doing business in the state to obtain a certificate of authority from the Secretary of State, the carrying on through an agent of the business of selling agricultural implements and farm machinery of various kinds for many years, which, instead of being merely casual or incidental, was continuous and carried on as such a business is ordinarily conducted, constitutes the "doing of business in the state." Osborne & Co. v. Shilling, 88 Pac. 258, 259, 74 Kan. 675, 11 Ann. Cas. 319.

"To be 'doing business in this state' implies a corporate continuity of conduct in that respect, such as might be evidenced by the investment of capital here, with the maintenance of an office for the transaction of its business, and those incidental circumstances which attest the corporate intent to avail itself of the privilege to carry on a business." A foreign corporation engaged in buying and selling fruit, which had an arrangement with a commission dealer in the state by which the corporation was to buy peaches in Michigan and ship them to the commission dealer, billing them at cost price in Michigan, and accompanying them with draft on the commission dealer, who was to pay the same, sell the peaches, and divide the profits, was not "doing business within the state," within section 15 of the general corporation law (Laws 1892, p. 1805, c. 687), providing that no foreign stock corporation doing business within the state shall maintain any action upon any contract made by it in the state until it shall have procured a certificate permitting it to transact business within the state. Alfred J. Brown Seed Co. v. Richardson, 103 N. Y. Supp. 243, 245, 53 Misc. Rep. 517 (quoting and adopting definition in Penn Collieries Co. v. McKeev-, 75 N. E. 935, 188 N. Y. 98, 2 L. R. A. [N. S.] 127).

A corporation, to be "doing business," must transact within the state some substantial part of its ordinary business, continuous in the sense that it is distinguished from merely casual or occasional transactions, and it must be of such a character as will give rise to some form of legal obligation. Where a foreign railroad corporation only maintained an advertising agent within the state, whose duties were only to explain to intending travelers and shippers of freight the advantages of traveling and shipping over such railroad, and the agent possessed no power to sell tickets or contract on behalf of the railroad company, the railroad was not doing business within the state, so as to authorize service of summons on it by delivering a copy to such agent. Rich v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 74 Pac. 1008, 1009, 34 Wash. 14.

"It is impossible to assent to the proposition that 'doing business' within a state means a persistent or continuous condition of doing or offering to do business, usually leading to the appointment of an agent or the establishment of an office within the state." An officer and authorized agent of defendant, a manufacturing corporation of another state, was in Connecticut on business connected with a contract made with plaintiff by the predecessor of defendant, to whose rights and liabilities it had succeeded, when he was served with summons in an action brought by plaintiff against defendant in the federal court for Connecticut for breach of the same contract. Neither defendant nor its predecessor had ever maintained an office or agent in Connecticut, but they had made a number of sales in the state, including the one to plaintiff which was in controversy. Held, that the service was good, and gave the court jurisdiction of defendant. New Haven Pulp & Board Co. v. Downingtown Mfg. Co., 130 Fed. 605, 608.

"The term 'doing business in the state,' with reference to a foreign corporation, implies a continuity of conduct in that respect, such as might be evidenced by the investment of capital with the maintenance of an office for the transaction of the corporation's business and those incidental circumstances which attest the corporate intent to avail itself of the privilege of carrying on business." Lathrop-Shea & Henwood Co. v. Interior Const. & Imp. Co., 150 Fed. 666, 671 (quoting and adopting definition in Penn Collieries Co. v. McKeever, 75 N. E. 936, 183 N. Y. 103, 2 L. R. A. [N. S.] 127. Simmons Burks Clothing Co. v. Linton, 117 S. W. 775, 776, 90 Ark. 73 (quoting and adopting definition in Penn Collieries Co. v. McKeever, 75 N. E. 935, 183 N. Y. 98, 2 L. R. A. [N. S.] 127); Ozark Cooperage Co. v. Quaker City Cooperage Co., 98 N. Y. Supp. 113, 115, 112 App. Div. 62 (quoting Penn Collieries Co. v. McKeever, 75 N. E. 935, 183 N. Y. 98, 2 L. R. A. [N. S.] 127).

Correspondence schools

A foreign corporation conducting a correspondence school, whose business involves the solicitation of students in Kansas by local agents, who are also authorized to collect and forward to the home office tuition fees, and the systematic intercourse by correspondence between the company and its scholars, and the transportation of books, papers, etc., in the course of instruction, is "doing business," within the statute prohibiting the maintaining of an action in the courts by any corporation doing business in the state without filing with the Secretary of State a statement of its condition. International Text-Book Co. v. Pigg, 30 Sup. Ct. 481, 482, 217 U. S. 91, 54 L. Ed. 678, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 493, 18 Ann. Cas. 1103.

A foreign corporation operating as a correspondence school is "doing business" in the state within such statute, where it has agencies in various parts of the state to solicit persons to contract with it for instruction, each district office being charge of a district superintendent of the corporation having under him a corps of the corporation's representatives, where the rent and other expenses of each of the offices are paid by the corporation, including the salaries of the superintendent and his corps of assistants, and the payments made by students are collected by the division superintendent, deposited in a special account in his own name in a bank in the city where his office is situated and sent by him from time to time to the corporation, and each of the division superintendents and representatives in the state is required to be qualified to give instruction in mathematics to its students, and assistance in mathematics is given by such superintendents at their division offices to such students as desire it. International Text-Book Co. v. Connelly, 124 N. Y. Supp. 603, 605, 67 Misc. Rep. 49.

A foreign corporation conducting a correspondence school by soliciting students in Missouri by local agents, who collect and forward the tuition, and by intercourse by correspondence between the corporation and its students and agents, and by the transportation of needful books, papers, and apparatus, is "doing business" in Missouri within Rev. St. 1899, §§ 1024-1026, requiring foreign corporations to obtain a certificate to do business in the state, in order to sue in the courts of the state. International Text-Book Co. v. Gillespie, 129 S. W. 922, 923, 229 Mo. 397.

Where plaintiff, a foreign corporation, rented and fitted up an office in this state and placed an agent in charge thereof for the purpose of soliciting persons to enroll for instruction by correspondence, some of the documents necessary for the instruction being kept there, and monthly payments were made to the agent by students for remittance to plaintiff, it was "doing business" in the state within Acts 1902, No. 20, § 55, prohibiting a foreign corporation, doing business herein without having paid the annual license tax, from maintaining an action in this state. International Text-Book Co. v. Lynch, 81 Vt. 101, 69 Atl. 541, 542.

A Pennsylvania corporation contracted with a citizen of Wisconsin for the furnishing, by the usual transportation agencies, of instruction continuously for a considerable period of time. The contract was accepted and to a great extent performed in Pennsylvania, and included only incidentally the transfer of articles of property to Wisconsin, which were not objects of sale, but instrumentalities through which the instruction was furnished. Held, that the contract was in violation of St. 1898, § 1770b, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 653, c. 351, § 27, and Laws 1901, p. 620, c. 434, requiring foreign corporations "doing business" in the state to take certain steps, forbidding any such corporation which has not complied with the statute to transact business in the state, and declaring that every contract made by or on behalf of a corporation failing to comply with the statute, "affecting the personal liability thereof," or relating to property within the state, shall be void in its behalf. International Text-Book Co. v. Peterson, 113 N. W. 730, 731, 133 Wis. 302, 14 Ann. Cas. 965.

As doing present business

An act requiring fire insurance companies doing business in incorporated cities or towns having regularly organized fire departments to pay specific sums to create a pension fund imposed a tax, and not merely a condition upon which they would be permitted to do business, since the use of the word "doing" implied that the corporations were already in existence, carrying on business, and that the licenses had already issued. Aetna Fire Ins. Co. v. Jones, 59 S. E. 148, 149, 78 S. C. 445, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1147, 125 Am. St. Rep. 818.

Exchange of property

A contract between plaintiff and a foreign corporation, providing for the exchange of stock of the corporation for advertising in a paper represented by plaintiff, in order to sell the corporate stock to raise money for development purposes, was not "doing business," within a statute making void contracts of a foreign corporation doing business in the state without complying with the statutes, but related to furnishing capital with which to do business. Clark v. Kansas Petroleum Co., 129 S. W. 466, 144 Mo. App. 182.

Keeping office and maintaining agency in state

The fact that a corporation had an office in the state and was authorized to do business there did not make it "doing business" within the state, within the meaning of a statute providing that nonresidents doing business in the state shall be taxed upon the capital invested to the same extent as if they were residents of the state. People ex rel. Dives-Pelican Min. Co. v. Feitner, 78 N. Y. Supp. 1017, 1018, 77 App. Div. 189.

The phrase "doing business" within a state is not ambiguous or elastic, but has been defined by the federal courts. A foreign building and loan association, having no office or general agent in the state, but having a special agent intrusted with authority to solicit subscriptions for stock, receive application for loans, and receive payment of dues, interest, and premiums, loaning money to a shareholder in the state, makes a contract governed by the laws of the state, notwithstanding the payment to be made in a foreign state. Nat. Mut. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Brahan, 81 South. 840, 847, 90 Miss. 407, 57 L. R. A. 799.

Where it is admitted that for seven years prior to the commencement of an action a corporation has maintained a branch office transacting business at a specified place in San Francisco, and had been there represented by general managers, who were at all times in charge thereof, there was a sufficient showing that it was doing business within the state, when coupled with the pleadings and facts shown at the trial. Black v. Vermont Marble Co., 82 Pac. 1060-1062, 1 Cal. App. 718.

General Corporation Law, Laws 1892, p. 1805, c. 687, § 15, prohibiting foreign corporations, "doing business in the state" without complying with the corporation law, from maintaining actions, etc., applies only to corporations maintaining a place of business and pursuing business within the state, and does not prohibit a California corporation from suing in the New York courts for breach of a contract made or approved in

A foreign corporation, engaged in the business of buying and selling lumber, which maintains an office in the state in charge of a resident agent, who makes no sales, but who looks after the purchasing business in adjacent states, does not engage in business in the state, within Acts 1895, c. 81, prohibiting any foreign corporation from "doing business in the state" without complying with the acts as to the registration of its charter, though it was a party to two or three isolated transactions had in the state. Advance Lumber Co. v. Moore, 148 S. W. 212, 213, 126 Tenn. 313.

A foreign corporation, publishing a magazine, which keeps a local office in the state to enable agents to solicit business, which is accepted at its home office, where its magazine is published and from which it is distributed, is not "doing business in the state," within General Corporation Law (Consol. Laws, c. 23) § 15, requiring a foreign corporation to secure a certificate of authority. System Co. v. Advertisers' Cyclopedia Co., 121 N. Y. Supp. 611, 612.

A foreign corporation's maintenance of an office for the registration of transfers of shares of stock only and for meetings of directors, together with the keeping of a bank account in the state, is not "doing business in this state." Honeyman v. Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., 133 Fed. 96, 99.

A foreign corporation, the office of which is in another state, and which merely has an agent in this state, who maintains an office for his own convenience, and does not have exclusive control of the business in the state, and keeps no books nor bank account, and makes no contracts for the sale of goods, but reports everything to the home office, and who usually makes sales to parties outside the state, and, while a particular sale was made of coal situated in the state to a resident, it had been previously sold to a party without the state, who had rejected it, is not "doing business in the state," within Laws 1892, p. 1805, c. 687, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 1326, c. 538, prescribing the conditions on which foreign corporations may do business in the state. Penn. Collieries Co. v. McKeever, 87 N. Y. Supp. 869, 870, 93 App. Div. 303.

Under General Corporation Law, § 15, which provides that no foreign corporation doing business in the state shall maintain any action here upon any contract made here unless it shall have procured a certificate of compliance with the statutes, a company having an office in this state used by its president, but which at the time of making the contract did no business in this state, and whose property was in the state of Florida, whose books had been sent from this state to Florida, and which made no contract here except the insurance contract, was not "doing business," since that term as used in the statute relates to the ordinary business which a corporation was organized to do, and has no relation to the incidental contract of a foreign corporation. Kline Bros. & Co. v. German Union Fire Ins. Co. of Baltimore, 132 N. Y. Supp. 181, 182, 147 App. Div. 790.

Acts 1887, p. 386, c. 226, § 1, provides that a foreign corporation doing business in the state shall be subject to suit to the same extent as a domestic corporation as to "any transaction had in whole or in part within this state, or any cause of action arising here." Section 2 of said act defines "doing business in this state" as: "Having any transaction with persons, or having any transaction concerning any properties situate in this state through any agency whatever, acting for it within the state." Section 3 authorizes process to be served on any agent. Held, that a foreign railroad corporation, operating a line of road wholly outside of the state and having only a soliciting agent in the state, which negligently handles a nonresident's freight passing over its line as intermediate carrier, is not "doing business in the state" within sections 1 and 2, although the wrong is not discovered until the freight reaches its destination here. Hence service on the traveling agent, having no connection with the shipment, does not give jurisdiction. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Richardson, 117 S. W. 496, 497, 121 Tenn. 448.

A corporation organized under the laws of Delaware by residents of Pennsylvania for the purpose of owning the stock of and financing certain Pennsylvania corporations having the same officers and substantially the same stockholders and which in fact did nothing else, but maintained its office, held its directors' meetings, registered its bonds, and made the loans to the other corporations in Pennsylvania, was doing business in that state within the meaning of Act Pa. April 22, 1874, and its failure to file its statement and otherwise comply with the requirements of that act rendered its contracts made within the state void and unenforceable. In re Montello Brick Works, 163 Fed. 621; Colonial Trust Co. v. Montello Brick Works, 172 Fed. 310, 312, 97 C. C. A. 144.

The making by a West Virginia corporation of a contract to build a railroad in Canada and having an office therein constitute "doing business," under Winding-Up Act (Rev. St. Canada, c. 129) § 3, as amended by St. 52 Vict. c. 32, § 3. Hyde v. Scott, 133 N. Y. Supp. 904, 906, 75 Misc. Rep. 487.

A nonresident corporation dealing in farm machinery maintained an agency in the state to store and deliver goods to purchasers in the state, to whom sales were made by traveling salesmen, subject to the approval of the corporation at its home office; the agent in the state having no authority to sell property stored with it, or receive orders therefor. Held, that the corporation was not "doing business within the state" in violation of Gen. Laws 1899, pp. 68, 71, cc. 69, 70, prescribing certain conditions on which foreign corporations may do business in the state. Rock Island Plow Co. v. Peterson, 101 N. W. 616, 618, 93 Minn. 356.

Laws 1892, p. 1805, c. 687, § 15, provides that no foreign stock corporation doing business in the state shall maintain any action in the state on any contract made by it in the state unless prior to the making of the contract it shall have procured a certificate from the Secretary of State permitting it to do business. Held, that "doing business" means maintaining an office and having capital invested and carrying on a regular business, and the mere furnishing, under a contract with the owner, of materials for a building, by a foreign corporation, was not a doing of business, so as to preclude an action on a contract. New York Architectural Terra Cotta Co. v. Williams, 92 N. Y. Supp. 808, 811, 102 App. Div. 1 (citing National Knitting Co. v. Bronner, 45 N. Y. Supp. 714, 20 Misc. Rep. 125; People v. Garabed, 45 N. Y. Supp. 827, 20 Misc. Rep. 127; Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 5 Sup. Ct. 739, 742, 113 U. S. 727, 735, 28 L. Ed. 1137; Vaughan Mach. Co. v. Lighthouse, 71 N. Y. Supp. 799, 801, 64 App. Div. 138, 142; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7936; Potter v. Bank of Ithaca [N. Y.] 5 Hill, 490; Suydam v. Morris Canal & Banking Co. [N. Y.] 6 Hill, 217; Cummer Lumber Co. v. Associated Manufacturers' Mut. Fire Ins. Corp., 73 N. Y. Supp. 668, 67 App. Div. 151; In re Simonds Furnace Co., 61 N. Y. Supp. 974, 80 Misc. Rep. 209).

A mining corporation having no properties and doing no mining or smelting business in this state is not "doing business within this state," within General Incorporation Act, § 26, merely by opening an office within the state and placing a safe and other furniture therein for the convenience and use of the secretary and treasurer of the company, notwithstanding stock certificates may have been issued from such office, the books kept, and directors' meetings, etc., held there. Bradbury v. Waukegan & W. Mining & Smelting Co., 113 Ill. App. 600, 602.

A foreign corporation, whose mine and plant are located in another state, is "doing business" in New York, so as to render it liable to the license tax and franchise tax imposed on foreign corporations for the privilege of doing business in the state, based on the amount of capital therein, where it has its only business office in the state at which the entire negotiation for the sale of its product is conducted. People ex rel. Union Sulphur Co. v. Glynn, 109 N. Y. Supp. 868, 869, 125 App. Div. 328.

A foreign business corporation, having its principal office in the state and branch offices and agencies in other cities, managed from the main office, is "doing business within the state," within the meaning of the tax law, providing for the taxation of nonresidents doing business within the state. People ex rel. International Banking Corp. v. Raymond, 102 N. Y. Supp. 85, 87, 117 App. Div. 62.

Where a foreign corporation, not having complied with the statute prohibiting such corporations from doing business within the state until they have filed a certified copy of their charter or articles of incorporation, etc., made a contract in Michigan with defendant, by which, in consideration of a specified payment, defendant was appointed the corporation's agent in L. county to sell the corporation's product, appoint subagents, and to make county contracts subject to the corporation's approval in counties not already contracted for, such transaction constituted "doing business" within the state; the test applicable being, not the consummation of a single transaction or the shipment of goods pursuant to orders taken, but the establishment of an agency or branch office within the state. Neyens v. Worthington, 114 N. W. 404, 406, 407, 150 Mich. 580, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 142.

A foreign corporation is "doing business" in the state, when it sells scholarships in many branches of learning and collects pay therefor, maintaining a local agency for that purpose through which it has done quite an extensive business with numerous customers, and is evidently seeking and intending to pursue and extend such business, such scholarships entitling the owner to certain books and instructions, which are transferable when paid for, and, though prepared and forwarded from another state, are ordered and partly paid for in advance through the local agent. International Text-Book Co. v. Pigg, 91 Pac. 74, 76, 78 Kan. 328.

Defendant was a corporation of France, having its principal place of business in Paris, and operating a line of passenger steamers between Havre and New York. It maintained a general agency in New York, with a resident agent, who represented it in the United States and Canada. It had numerous ticket agents throughout the United States, who sold its tickets, among others a company in Philadelphia. Such company maintained offices in the principal cities of the United States and Europe, and arranged tours and sold tickets over the principal railway and steamship lines of the world. It sold tickets over defendant's line, among others, at its Philadelphia office, receiving a commission therefor, and also $600 per year on account of its office rent. It painted defendant's name on its office door, as also the names of other steamship and railway lines. Except for the sale of such tickets, no business was done on behalf of defendant in the Eastern district of Pennsylvania. Held, that it was not "doing business" in the district in such sense that a federal court there obtained jurisdiction over it by service on the local agent. Goeppfert v. Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 156 Fed. 196, 199.

Service of process in this District on an officer of a West Virginia corporation, whose only business is that of constructing and operating a railroad in that state, is sufficient under the provision of section 1537, Code D. C. (31 Stat. 1419, c. 854), that, in actions against foreign corporations "doing business" in the District, process may be served here, where it appears that defendant maintains an office here in which its president, secretary, and treasurer, transact business, that bids for the construction of its road were here opened, considered, and accepted, and that the arbitration agreement out of which the suit arose was agreed upon here, and the proceedings thereunder were here conducted; and it is immaterial that the office here is maintained primarily for the convenience of the president and treasurer. Ferguson Contracting Co. v. Coal & Coke Ry. Co., 83 App. D. C. 159, 170.

Contracts were made in Maryland, through the Merchants' & Miners' Transportation Company, a domestic corporation, for the Central of Georgia Railway Company, a foreign corporation, which the foreign company recognized as binding. The domestic corporation sold tickets and issued bills of lading good over its own line and also over the lines of the foreign corporation, collecting the whole fare in the case of a passenger, and collecting the entire charge for the carriage in the case of freight. An agent within the state was appointed jointly by the two companies to solicit traffic over both lines, which were advertised under the name of the "Central Savannah Line." In the window of the building occupied by the domestic company there was a sign "Central Savannah Line via Central of Georgia Railway & Merchants' and Miners' Transportation Company." In this building the joint agent had his office, and solicited freight for transportation over parts of the entire line. The advertising folders of the Central of Georgia Railway stated that tickets over that line could be purchased at any of the Merchants' & Miners' ticket offices. Held, that the Central of Georgia Railway Company was "transacting business" in Maryland within the meaning of Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 23, § 409, providing that any corporation not chartered by the state which shall transact business therein shall be deemed to hold and exercise its franchises within the state, and shall be liable to suit in any of the courts of the state on any dealings or transactions therein. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Elchberg, 68 Atl. 690, 692, 107 Md. 363, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 389.

Plaintiff, a foreign corporation, is not shown to be "doing business" in the state within the general corporation law by evidence of a traveling salesman of his having an office in the state for the transaction of business, in absence of knowledge of plaintiff that such office was maintained. L. C. Page Co. v. Sherwood, 120 N. Y. Supp. 837, 838, 65 Misc. Rep. 543.

A foreign corporation transacting business in a sister state, from which its goods are shipped and in which payments are received, is not "doing business" in New York, within General Corporation Law (Consol. Laws, c. 23) § 15, requiring foreign corporations to procure a certificate authorizing it to do business in the state, though a witness called by the corporation inadvertently stated that he was an official transacting all the business of the corporation, while he was only its resident salesman doing the business which the corporation did in the state. Rundle Spence Mfg. Co. v. Gainsborough Const. Co., 123 N. Y. Supp. 785.

General Corporation Law (Consol. Laws c. 23) § 15, forbids any foreign corporation to "do business" in the state without first procuring a certificate of authority so to do from the Secretary of State, and further forbids any such corporation doing business in the state to sue on any contract made in the state until such certificate is obtained. Plaintiff, a foreign corporation, maintained a general agent for the sale of its product with a district covering a large part of the eastern end of the state, and an office operated under plaintiff's name, the records and data of which were plaintiff's property. Goods were sold to defendant by the agent on a written order, subject to acceptance at the home office; the order providing that the advance payment should be returned to defendant on nonacceptance. A note for the balance of the price, given under a misunderstanding, was returned to defendant; the balance due being stated to be left on open account. Held, that the advance payment, to be returned on rejection of the order, was to be paid in the state, as was the balance of the account, and that the requirement of a foreign acceptance of the order was ineffective to make the contract other than a New York contract, so that plaintiff having no certificate of authority, and its contract, were both within the statute, and no action could be maintained on the contract. American Case & Register Co. v. Griswold, 128 N. Y. Supp. 206, 207, 143 App. Div. 807.

Loaning money

A foreign corporation, whose business it is to loan money on real estate mortgages, "does business in the state" when it pays in New York a draft attached to a note and mortgage executed in South Carolina on lands in the state on application forwarded by a resident borrower. British-American Mortg. Co. v. Jones, 58 S. E. 417, 77 S. C.

443 (citing Chattanooga Nat. B. & L. Ass'n v. Denson, 23 Sup. Ct. 630, 189 U. S. 403, 417, 47 L. Ed. 870); British American Mortg. Co. v. Jones, 56 S. E. 983, 984, 76 S. C. 218.

A brick company incorporated in another state and not registered in the state of Pennsylvania as required by the law of that state, which advanced money to a company in that state in consideration of its duebills, was "doing business" in that state. In re Montello Brick Works, 174 Fed. 498, 499 (citing and adopting Colonial Trust Co. v. Montello Brick Works, 172 Fed. 310, 97 C. C. A. 144).

A Delaware corporation whose principal business, which was authorized by its charter, was the acquiring of stock in other corporations and lending them money, which maintained its principal business in Pennsylvania and there let money to another corporation in which it owned a controlling interest, taking duebills therefor, was "doing business" in Pennsylvania. In re Montello Brick Works, 163 Fed. 621, 623.

Maintenance of railroad in state

Where a part of defendant's railroad passed into K. county, Ky., defendant did business in that state, so that some court of that state had jurisdiction of an action against it, though none of them were within Civ. Code Prac. Ky. § 73, providing that an action against a carrier for injury to a person must be brought in the county in which defendants or either of them reside, in which plaintiff is injured, or in which he resides, if he resides in a county into which the carrier passes. Fisher v. Cleveland, C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 169 Fed. 956, 957.

Maintenance of salesroom

Evidence that a manufacturing corporation of another state maintains a warehouse in Chicago, advertised as a "salesroom," where it stores goods before sale, and from which deliveries are made, but which does not go to the extent of showing that any sales are made there, or at any other place than at the home office of the company, is not sufficient to show that it is "doing business" in Illinois, within the meaning of the statute of that state, prohibiting foreign corporations "doing business in the state" from maintaining actions therein unless they comply with its requirements. Dixie Cotton Felt Mattress Co. v. Stearns & Foster Co., 185 Fed. 431, 434, 107 C. C. A. 501.

Where a foreign corporation maintains a salesroom in a city of this state, where no goods except samples are kept, and orders are sent to the home office in another state, where they are accepted, and the goods are shipped from there directly to purchasers, and the books of account are kept at the home office, from which all employes are paid directly, and there is no bank account in this state, the corporation is not "doing business in this state," within the meaning of General Corporation Law, requiring compliance with certain conditions by foreign corporations doing business in the state. E. T. Burrowes Co. v. Caplin, 111 N. Y. Supp. 498, 499, 127 App. Div. 317.

Ownership, acquisition, and lease of land

Holding real estate by a foreign corporation for investment is not "doing business within the state." Singer Mfg. Co. v. Granite Spring Water Co., 123 N. Y. Supp. 1088, 1090, 66 Misc. Rep. 595.

Under Pub. St. 1901, c. 245, § 5, providing that a person doing business in the state may be summoned upon trustee process, the property of a nonresident landowner in the charge of his resident agent may be attached by a creditor on such process, the care of real estate being in nature of "doing business in this state." Bennett v. Hebbard, 68 Atl. 537, 74 N. H. 411.

A corporation incorporated for the purpose of buying and acquiring half a certain tract of real estate in the borough of Brooklyn, which begins business in the state of New York and has a principal place of business in Brooklyn, is "doing business in the state," within Tax Law, § 182 (Laws 1901, c. 558), as amended by Laws 1906, c. 474, imposing a tax on the capital of a corporation doing business in the state. People ex rel. Vandervoort Realty Co. v. Glynn, 87 N. E. 434, 191 N. Y. 387.

The ownership of land in this state by a foreign corporation, and the lease of the same on shares, and the assignment of the rent by it, do not constitute doing business in this state, in such sense as to require such corporation to obtain a permit from the Secretary of State. Wilson v. Peace, 85 S. W. 31, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 234.

Acts 1895, p. 123, c. 81, § 1, provides that a foreign corporation desiring to own property or carry on business in the state shall first file with the Secretary of State a copy of its charter; and by section 2, p. 124, it is unlawful for such corporation to do business in the state until it has complied with section 1. Held, that a purchase of real estate by a foreign corporation which had not at that time complied with the statute was not unlawful, it not being the doing of business, and hence the failure to observe the statute before the purchase was no bar to recovery by the corporation for damage to the land from the change of grade of a street. Louisville Property Co. v. Nashville, 84 S. W. 810, 811, 114 Tenn. 213.

Ownership of and subscription to stock

The mere ownership of stock by a foreign corporation in a domestic corporation, even if it be a controlling interest, does not constitute the doing of business in the state. Mannington v. Hocking Valley Ry. Co., 183 Fed. 133, 156.

New York General Corporation Law, § 15, provides that no foreign stock corporation other than a moneyed corporation can do business within the state without first having procured a certificate that it has complied with the requirements of law. Held, that a subscription to the stock of a foreign corporation and the issuance of the stock subscribed for to a resident of New York do not constitute "doing business within the state" by the corporation. A foreign corporation before suing in this state must obtain a certificate from the Secretary of State that the license fee has been paid, permitting it to do business in this state, but this rule does not apply to a suit brought by the trustee in bankruptcy of a foreign corporation to recover a balance due on certificates of stock issued by the corporation, as an effort to dispose of its stock in order to obtain the requisite capital with which to engage in business is not "doing business" within the meaning of the statute, which requires a payment of the license fee and the issuance of the certificate before a foreign corporation may do business in the state. Southworth v. Morgan, 128 N. Y. Supp. 598, 600, 71 Misc. Rep. 214.

Settling accounts

Where the president of a foreign corporation came to New York to settle a claim for the wrongful killing of plaintiff's decedent in the state of the corporation's domicile, such business did not constitute a doing business by the corporation in New York, so as to confer jurisdiction on the New York courts by service of process on the president while so engaged. Hoyt v. Ogden Portland Cement Co., 185 Fed. 889, 891.

Single act or transaction

A single transaction by a foreign corporation may constitute a doing of business in the state, within the statutes making certain requirements of foreign corporations conditions precedent to their doing business in the state, where such transaction is a part of the ordinary business of such corporation, and indicates a purpose to carry on a substantial part of its dealings in the state. Tomson v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Ass'n, 129 N. W. 529, 530, 88 Neb. 399.

A single act of business is not within 1 Mills' Ann. St. §§ 499, 500, 1868, prohibiting foreign corporations from engaging in business in Colorado until they have conformed thereto; and where, in an action by a foreign building and loan association to foreclose a mortgage, it does not appear that plaintiff transacted any business in the state, except that involved in the action, the statute is no defense. Roseberry v. Valley Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 83 Pac. 637, 638, 35 Colo. 132.

The single act of taking title to a tract of real estate does not constitute "doing business" within the meaning of constitutional or statutory provisions as to foreign corporations. War Eagle Consol. Min. Co. v. Dickie, 94 Pac. 1034, 1035, 14 Idaho, 534.

The crucial test in "doing business," within the meaning of the statute requiring foreign corporations to obtain a license to do business in the state, "is not an isolated transaction within the state, or the transshipment of goods from the home office pursuant to orders taken by drummers within the state, but it is the establishment of an agency or branch office within the state limits." Authorities hold "that a single sale of goods or a single business transaction by such corporation cannot be held to amount to carrying on business where there is no purpose to do any further business." Neyens v. Worthington, 114 N. W. 404, 406, 407, 150 Mich. 580, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 142 (quoting and adopting definition in Vaughn Mach. Co. v. Lighthouse, 71 N. Y. Supp. 799, 64 App. Div. 138, and citing 19 Cyc. p. 1268).

A single transaction in another state, such as a contract for the sale of goods, does not constitute "doing business" in the state within the meaning of foreign corporation laws. Kirven v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., 145 Fed. 288, 293, 76 C. C. A. 172, 7 Ann. Cas. 219.

A single transaction by a foreign corporation does not constitute "doing business" within the state, within Code Civ. Proc. § 411, authorizing service of summons in a suit against a foreign corporation "doing business" and having a managing and business agent, cashier, or secretary within the state, by delivering a copy to such agent, cashier, or secretary. Jameson v. Simonds Saw Co., 84 Pac. 289, 290, 2 Cal. App. 582.

A single transaction by a foreign corporation within the state does not necessarily constitute "doing business" within the state under a statute requiring foreign corporations to comply with certain specified requirements before "doing business" within the state. First Nat. Bank v. Leeper, 97 S. W. 636, 637, 121 Mo. App. 688.

A single and isolated transaction, such as the sale and delivery of a machine by a foreign corporation to a person within the state, is not "doing business" within the state within the meaning of chapters 69, 70, pp. 68, 71, Laws 1899. W. H. Lutes Co. v. Wysong, 110 N. W. 367, 368, 100 Minn. 112.

A single transaction by a foreign corporation may constitute a "doing of business in this state" within the meaning of section 1283, Gen. St. 1901, making certain requirements of foreign corporations doing business in the state, where such transaction is a part of the ordinary business of the corporation, and indicates a purpose to carry on a substantial part of its dealings here. John Deere Plow Co. v. Wyland, 76 Pac. 863, 864, 69 Kan. 255, 2 Ann. Cas. 304.

The doing of a single act of business by a foreign corporation is not the "doing of business," within Act Cong. Feb. 18, 1901, c. 379, prescribing the conditions upon which a foreign corporation may "do business" in Indian Territory. Poole v. Peoria Cordage Co., 97 S. W. 1015, 1018, 6 Ind. T. 298.

A single act of business by a foreign corporation within Const. art. 12, § 15, providing that no foreign corporation shall be allowed to transact business in the state on more favorable conditions than are prescribed by law to similar domestic corporations, must be an act within the ordinary business of the corporation, and a single sale of real estate by a foreign corporation organized for religious, missionary, educational, and charitable purposes, with the incidental power to take and sell real estate, is not a transaction of business, and the failure of the corporation to comply with Civ. Code, § 598, and obtain an order for the sale, does not render the sale invalid. General Conference of Free Baptists v. Berkey, 105 Pac. 411, 412, 156 Cal. 466.

Under the rule that a mere solitary transaction within the state is not doing business, within General Corporation Law, § 15, requiring a foreign corporation to procure a certificate of authority to transact business in the state, the indorsement in the state to a foreign corporation of a note executed in the state is not "doing business." People's Sav. Bank of Bay City, Mich., v. Fulton Contracting Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 622.

Acts 1901, p. 386, regulating the business of foreign corporations, provides (section 1) that before a foreign corporation shall be authorized to establish a business in the state, or to continue business therein, it shall file a copy of its articles of incorporation with the Secretary of State, etc. Section 2 provides that no foreign corporation may make any contract in the state, nor sue thereon, until it has complied with the provision of the preceding section. Held, that the term "business" as used in the act means an established, continuing business, rather than mere single, isolated acts done in the state, either in connection with, or apart from, some business that has its domicile in another state. Simmons Burks Clothing Co. v. Linton, 117 S. W. 775, 776, 90 Ark. 73.

The sale by a foreign corporation of five car loads of cement to one in this state was not "transacting business" in the state in violation of a statute providing that foreign corporations which have not complied with its terms shall not be permitted to transact business in the state; being only a single transaction. Alpena Portland Cement Co. v. Jenkins & Reynolds Co., 91 N. E. 480, 481, 244 Ill. 354.

Act May 18, 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 124), is entitled "An act to regulate the admission of foreign corporations for profit, to do business in the state," and section 1 provides that, before such corporations shall be permitted to transact any business or exercise any of its corporate powers in the state, they shall comply with the provisions of the act and be subject to all regulations prescribed for domestic corporations. Sections 2 to 5, inclusive, provide the steps for admission of such corporations to the state, and section 6 imposes a penalty for neglect to comply with the act, and in addition thereto forbids any foreign corporation, failing to comply with the act, to sue upon any claim, legal or equitable. Held, that the terms "doing business" and "transacting business" meant only the transaction of the ordinary business in which the corporation was engaged, and did not include the prosecution of actions; and, in view of the title of the act, the inhibition against the exercise of any "corporate powers" did not change its meaning, "corporate powers" referring to those powers or franchises conferred upon the corporation to enable it to prosecute the business in which it was engaged, together with those implied powers necessary thereto, so that merely bringing a suit in this state by a foreign corporation was not "transacting business" so as to require compliance with the act before bringing such suit. Alpena Portland Cement Co. v. Jenkins & Reynolds Co., 91 N. E. 480, 481, 244 Ill. 354.

The words "doing business," as used in the provisions prohibiting corporations from doing business in the state without having a place of business, etc., referred to a general transaction of business, and not to an isolated transaction or to single or wholly collateral acts. The doing of a single act or the making of a single contract by a foreign corporation in the line of its business within the state, without having complied with the statutes regulating foreign corporations, does not constitute "doing business" within the state. A. Booth & Co. v. Weigand, 83 Pac. 734, 737, 30 Utah, 135, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 693.

The fact that foreign corporations proposing to do business here are required to establish a place of business within the state makes it clear that the term "doing business" does not mean a single isolated transaction. It is not reasonable to suppose that the Constitution or the statute intended that a foreign corporation, without intending a continuance of its business in the state, could not collect a debt or make any contract or demand that its property rights should be respected unless it had previously acquired a situs or domicile within our borders. The object of laws of this character is to require foreign corporations which undertake to carry on their business generally in this state to establish a domicile or situs here, so that they shall, like domestic corporations, be within reach of the process of our courts. The term

"transacting or doing business," as used in laws of this character, implies continuity, and does not mean a single isolated transaction within the borders of the state, without any purpose of engaging generally in the carrying on of its business here. State, to Use of Hart-Parr Co., v. Robb-Lawrence Co., 106 N. W. 406, 408, 15 N. D. 55.

Corporation Law, Laws 1892, p. 1805, c. 687, § 15, which requires a foreign corporation to procure certificate of authority to transact business in the state, implies, by the phrase "doing business in this state," a continuity of conduct in that respect; and a sale of a single cargo of coal in the city of New York by a foreign corporation through an agent whose territory was the New England district and the state of New Jersey, though he had an office in the city of New York, does not constitute doing business in the state, so as to require a certificate from the Secretary of State in order to maintain an action for the price of coal. Penn Collieries Co. v. McKeever, 75 N. E. 935, 936, 183 N. Y. 98, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 127.

The presence of an officer of a corporation in another state than that of its domicile, for the purpose of discussing a proposed adjustment of a single controversy, does not constitute a "doing of business within the state" by the corporation such as to subject it to the jurisdiction of a federal court therein by service of process on such officer. Wilkins v. Queen City Savings Bank & Trust Co., 154 Fed. 173 (citing Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 19 Sup. Ct. 308, 172 U. S. 602, 43 L. Ed. 569; Goldey v. Morning News, 15 Sup. Ct. 559, 156 U. S. 518, 39 L. Ed. 517; Conley v. Mathieson Alkali Works, 23 Sup. Ct. 728, 190 U. S. 406, 47 L. Ed. 1113; Houston v. Flier & Stowell, 85 Fed. 757; Londen Machinery Co. v. American Malleable Iron Co., 127 Fed. 1006; Clews v. Woodstock Iron Co., 44 Fed. 81).

Taking orders, soliciting business, or making sales by agent

The mere solicitation of business by agents of a foreign corporation is not such a "doing business" within the statute as to subject the foreign corporation to the jurisdiction of the courts of the state in which the business is solicited. Berger v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 65 Atl. 261, 262, 27 R. I. 583, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1214, 8 Ann. Cas. 941.

A foreign corporation, whose salesmen solicit orders in the state for intoxicating liquor, subject to its approval, and which when accepted are filed by shipping the liquor, f. o. b., is engaged in business in the state. State v. Wm. J. Lemp Brewing Co., 102 Pac. 504, 506, 79 Kan. 705, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 44.

Const. art. 12, § 232, fixes the venue of suits against a foreign corporation in any country where it does business, by service of process upon an agent anywhere in the state, and section 4207, Code 1896, in any county in which it does business by agent. Held, that the act of a corporation in constituting agents, with no power or authority to bind it, but simply to solicit traffic, was not "doing business" within the constitutional or statutory provisions. Abraham Bros. v. Southern Ry. Co., 42 South. 837, 838, 149 Ala. 547.

A foreign corporation, having no place of business in the state, and employing a soliciting agent, whose orders are filled by shipment direct to the purchaser from the home office, is not "doing business" within the state, within Laws 1894, p. 49, c. 61, regulating the service of process against foreign corporations. Saxony Mills v. Wagner & Co., 47 South. 899, 900, 94 Miss. 233, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, 136 Am. St. Rep. 575, 19 Ann. Cas. 190.

Soliciting through its district freight and passenger agent in Philadelphia freight and passenger traffic for a railway company incorporated in Iowa and having its eastern terminal at Chicago, is not "doing business" within the Eastern district of Pennsylvania in such a sense that process can be served upon the corporation there. Green v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 27 Sup. Ct. 595, 596, 205 U. S. 530, 51 L. Ed. 916.

Where an agent of nonresident railroad companies was soliciting within the state passenger and freight to be routed over their lines, the railroad companies were not doing business in the state within Rev. Laws 1905, § 4109, subd. 3, authorizing the service of summons on an agent of a foreign corporation doing business in the state. North Wisconsin Cattle Co. v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 117 N. W. 391, 392, 105 Minn. 198.

The fact that a person soliciting freight and passenger business routed it over the connecting line of a foreign railroad company, as he did over all other lines connecting with the companies by whom he was employed, did not make him an agent of the former company on whom process might be served within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4875, where all contracts were issued as the contracts of one or the other of the latter companies to whom he alone reported, and they, in turn, arrange a division of the charges with the connecting lines upon an agreed basis. Such an arrangement did not constitute "doing business within this state" within the meaning of the Codes. Arrow Lumber & Shingle Co. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 102 Pac. 650, 651, 53 Wash. 629.

Where a foreign corporation was engaged in publishing a magazine in Illinois, and employed an agent in New York, who merely solicited orders for advertisements, which orders were required to be forwarded to Illinois for acceptance, and, if accepted, the advertisements appeared in the magazine, such transactions did not constitute "doing business" in New York, within General Corporation Law, requiring foreign corporations doing business in New York to obtain a certificate from the Secretary of State and pay a license tax. American Contractor Pub. Co. v. Bagge, 91 N. Y. Supp. 73, 74.

Under Hurd's Rev. St. Ill. 1908, c. 32, § 26, which authorizes services of process upon an agent of a foreign corporation only in case that corporation is doing business in the state, the presence in the state of a traveling salesman representing a foreign corporation having no place of business there, with authority to take orders for goods, to be submitted to the corporation for approval, does not constitute "doing business within the state" by the corporation, which will subject it to suit therein. William Grace Co. v. Henry Martin Brick Mach. Mfg. Co., 174 Fed. 131, 132, 98 C. C. A. 167.

A foreign corporation, which sells and delivers goods, merchandise, machinery, or other articles of trade and commerce in this state upon orders taken therefor by its agents and traveling salesmen, and forwarded to it, and not otherwise, and transacts no other business in the state, does not transact or carry on business in this state, within the meaning of section 30 of chapter 54 of the Code, as amended by section 31, c. 35, p. 108, of Acts 1901, and is not required to comply with the provisions of said statute, nor denied by it the power to bring and maintain suits and actions for the enforcement of such contracts. Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Piggott, 55 S. E. 664, 666, 60 W. Va. 532 (citing 19 Cyc. pp. 1270, 1272).

A foreign corporation had its principal office in a sister state where its goods were manufactured. An order for goods was signed in New York addressed to the corporation at its home office; the order not being signed by the corporation or any one in its behalf. The company maintained no office in New York. The goods were shipped to the buyer, who signed notes for the price and an agent of the corporation transmitted them to the home office. Held, that the corporation was not doing business within the state within General Corporation Law, § 15, prohibiting foreign corporations from doing business in the state without procuring a certificate. Acorn Brass Mfg. Co. v. Rutenberg, 132 N. Y. Supp. 600, 601, 147 App. Div. 533.

Bakery wagons, which made regular trips from house to house in the streets of defendant city, selling and taking orders for bread, were "doing business" within the city, so as to be subject to an ordinance making it unlawful for any person or corporation to engage in certain businesses or occupations without obtaining a license, imposing a license for vehicles, including bakery wagons, and prohibiting any person from participating in doing business, within the city, for which a license is required, or assisting, directly or indirectly, in doing such business as agent or servant without a license, though the bakery was located, in another city. Wonner v. City of Carterville, 125 S. W. 861, 863, 142 Mo. App. 120.

Where a foreign corporation, in pursuance of a sale of its products made by its traveling salesman, entered into a written contract in Colorado, to furnish manufactured materials f. o. b. at its plant and office, the sale and delivery of the materials did not constitute "doing business" within a statute prescribing the terms on which a foreign corporation may do business within the state. International Trust Co. v. A. Leschen & Sons Rope Co., 92 Pac. 727, 730, 41 Colo. 299, 14 Ann. Cas. 861.

Where a manufacturing corporation was organized and had its principal place of business in Ohio, its employment of an agent residing in the city of New York, who sold goods for it under a written contract addressed to and accepted by the corporation in Ohio, did not constitute "doing business" in New York, within Corporation Law (Laws 1896, p. 856, c. 908) § 181, requiring foreign corporations doing business in New York to pay a specified license fee. Harvard Co. v. W'cht, 91 N. Y. Supp. 48, 49, 99 App. Div. 507; Milliken v. Fullerton, 91 N. Y. Supp. 1104.

An employer, living in another state, sending a man over to Kansas to make contracts with implement dealers in the state, and sending agents to the state to settle accounts and receive cash or notes in settlement thereof, is doing business in Kansas. Elliott v. Parlin & Orendorff Co., 81 Pac. 500, 502, 71 Kan. 665.

The sale of goods by a foreign corporation, and the delivery of the merchandise and collection of the price, is not a doing business, within statutes prescribing the conditions of doing business in such state or territory. Bruner v. Kansas Moline Plow Co., 168 Fed. 218, 220, 93 C. C. A. 504.

A foreign corporation, that manufactures farm machinery in another state and sells the same to citizens of the state on orders to be approved by it, taken by an agent, and which, if the contract is approved, ships the machinery into the state, is not "doing business" within the state, within the provisions of Rev. St. 1887, § 2653, as amended by Act March 10, 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 49). Belle City Mfg. Co. v. Frizzell, 81 Pac. 58, 59, 11 Idaho, 1.

Ky. St. 1906, § 571, requires every foreign corporation having a place of business in the state to file with the Secretary of State a statement naming its agents thereat upon whom process may be served. An Illinois corporation agreed to furnish its goods f. o. b. Cairo, Ill., to a retail firm in Kentucky, the latter to pay for such goods as it sold on specified terms. The corporation further agreed to carry over or take up such goods as were not sold at the expiration of the contract, provided they were delivered to it in good condition f. o. b. Cairo, Ill. The firm agreed to keep the goods insured in favor of the corporation. Held, that the contract did not make the firm the corporation's agent, but merely provided for a series of sales upon the terms set out therein, and the corporation was not doing business in the state in violation of the statute. Three States Buggy & Implement Co. v. Commonwealth, 105 S. W. 971, 972.

Where a foreign corporation having its factory in another state received and filled an order at its factory and shipped the goods by freight from its factory to a place in this state, this did not constitute a "doing business" within the state within the statute making the filing of a certificate a condition precedent to a foreign corporation's doing business in the state. A. H. Freiberg & Co. v. Cheseling, 78 N. Y. Supp. 1106, 1107, 88 Misc. Rep. 740 (citing Vaughan Mach. Co. v. Lighthouse, 71 N. Y. Supp. 799, 64 App. Div. 138; Cummer Lumber Co. v. Associated Mfrs.' Mut. Fire Ins. Corp., 73 N. Y. Supp. 668, 67 App. Div. 151; Waller v. Rothfield, 73 N. Y. Supp. 141, 36 Misc. Rep. 177).

Statement in action by foreign corporation showing that it had bought of defendant 800 cases of tomatoes, which defendant agreed to ship to it, to be paid for on their arrival and inspection, did not show on its face that plaintiff was "doing business" in the state, within the meaning of Rev. St. 1890, § 1026, so as to require it, before suing, to comply with the state laws governing foreign corporations. Groneweg & Schmoentgen Co. v. Estes, 119 S. W. 513, 514, 139 Mo. App. 36.

Defendant, in New York, gave the traveling salesman of plaintiff, a Massachusetts corporation, an order for goods, which he mailed to plaintiff's office in Massachusetts. Held, that as, in the absence of special authority in the salesman, the order would have to be accepted by his principal, it will, in the absence of further evidence, be considered that the order was accepted, and the contract made, in Massachusetts, so that General Corporation Law, § 15, forbidding action in the state by a foreign corporation, doing business in the state, on a contract made in the state, unless it shall have obtained a certificate of authority to do business in the state, does not apply. L. C. Page Co. v. Sherwood, 120 N. Y. Supp. 837, 838, 65 Misc. Rep. 543.

A foreign publishing corporation had no office or place of business within the state, but its president and salesman would visit and take orders, which were sent to the home office, passed upon, and the goods shipped from there, though in a few cases some of the books were bound in New York. Held, that the corporation was not "doing business within the state," within General Corporation Law, §§ 15, 16, prohibiting an action upon any contract made in the state unless a certificate be procured from the Secretary of State. L. C. Page & Co. v. Sherwood, 131 N. Y. Supp. 322, 323, 146 App. Div. 618.

A foreign corporation which merely files an order for goods and delivers the same in Pennsylvania, without maintaining an office in this state or transferring any portion of its capital to this state, or prosecuting its ordinary business here, may maintain an action of replevin without having previously registered in compliance with Act April 22, 1874 (P. L. 108). Hall's Safe Co. v. Walenk, 42 Pa. Super. Ct. 576, 578.

Where a foreign corporation with its principal western office in Chicago employed an exclusive broker in St. Louis for the sale of its products in St. Louis, which broker took an order for goods of such corporation, which was sent to the Chicago office for acceptance or rejection and the order was accepted and the buyer notified thereof, and the goods shipped to the buyer f. o. b. cars at a point without Missouri, the broker maintaining its own office and having no power to make contracts binding upon the foreign corporation, the transaction constituted interstate commerce, and not the doing of business in Missouri, and the foreign corporation was not precluded from suing on the contract of sale in Missouri because of its failure to comply with Rev. St. 1899, §§ 1024, 1025, 1026, requiring certain steps to be taken by a foreign corporation before obtaining the right to do business in the state, and providing that such corporations not complying with the statute cannot sue in any of the courts of the state on any contract; such sections not applying to interstate commerce. Corn Products Mfg. Co. v. Western Candy & Bakers' Supply Co., 135 S. W. 985, 986, 156 Mo. App. 110.

Rev. St. 1899, §§ 1024, 1026, and Laws 1903, p. 121, requiring foreign corporations to obtain a license and a certificate to do business, apply to corporations having a place of business in the state in charge of a local agent for the purpose of selling goods sent to him for subsequent sale, and not to corporations selling goods through traveling salesmen to be delivered from a foreign house. F. N. Ellis Lumber Co. v. Johns, 133 S. W. 633, 634, 152 Mo. App. 516.

Where a nonresident corporation had local agencies in Mississippi in control of salesmen, selling in a limited number of counties and reporting to such local agency, which reported to a district agency in another state, the corporation was doing business within the state and taxable on credits, as provided by Rev. Code Miss. 1880, § 497, but not so when it did business only through traveling salesmen, who transmitted all cash collected and contracts arising from the disposition of machines to agencies outside the state. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Adams, 165 Fed. 877, 879, 91 C. C. A. 461.

A foreign corporation by soliciting and taking orders in the state by commercial travelers, having no capital employed, or goods stored, or branch office, in the state, is not "doing business within" the state, so as to require it, under Corporation Law, Laws 1892, pp. 1805, 1806, c. 687, §§ 15, 16, to obtain a certificate in order to maintain an action. Vio Chemical Co. v. Studholme, 103 N. Y. Supp. 463, 464, 53 Misc. Rep. 470.

The complaint in an action by a foreign corporation was in the usual form, for goods sold and delivered on an agreed price, without alleging where the goods were sold. An itemized statement filed in response to the demand of defendant recited that the goods were sold to defendant on orders obtained by a traveling salesman of the corporation at New York and were received by defendant there. Held, that the statement was not inconsistent with proof that the sales were made at the residence of the foreign corporation when the orders were approved and that the delivery was made to defendant by a delivery to a carrier, sufficient to show that the corporation was not "doing business in the state," within General Corporation Law, Laws 1890, p. 1063, c. 563, § 15, as amended by Laws 1901, pp. 267, 1326, cc. 96, 538, and Laws 1904, p. 1250, c. 490, prohibiting a foreign corporation which has not procured a certificate authorizing it to do business in the state from maintaining an action on a contract made by it in the state. St. Albans Beef Co. v. Aldridge, 99 N. Y. Supp. 398, 400, 112 App. Div. 803 (citing Tallapoosa Lumber Co. v. Holbert, 39 N. Y. Supp. 432, 5 App. Div. 559; Murphy Varnish Co. v. Connell, 32 N. Y. Supp. 492, 10 Misc. Rep. 553; Novelty Mfg. Co. v. Connell, 34 N. Y. Supp. 717, 88 Hun, 254; Jones v. Keeler, 81 N. Y. Supp. 648, 40 Misc. Rep. 221; Vaughn Mach. Co. v. Lighthouse, 71 N. Y. Supp. 799, 64 App. Div. 138; Penn Collieries Co. v. McKeever, 75 N. E. 935, 183 N. Y. 98, 2 L. R. A. [N. S.] 127).

Taking orders for goods

Where a person in this state orders two car loads of iron of a corporation located in another state, to be delivered at a place in this state, the contract is made in the other state, and the iron is sold and delivered there, as delivery to the carrier was a delivery of the iron, and therefore the corporation did not do "business in this state," within the meaning of the law regulating foreign corporations doing business in this state. National Rolling Mill Co. v. Rubenstein, 147 Ill. App. 84, 85.

In the sale of goods upon an order the contract is completed where the order is received and accepted, and the sale is completed and delivery made to the buyer by delivery of the goods to a common carrier for conveyance to the buyer, unless a contrary intention of the parties is shown, and hence where a foreign corporation contracted for the sale of goods and their delivery on board cars in another state, consigned to persons in question upon their order, the transaction did not constitute "doing business in the state," requiring a certificate of authority as expressly provided by Gen. St. 1909, § 1726. Hessig-Ellis Drug Co. v. Sly, 109 Pac. 770, 771, 83 Kan. 60, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 551.

As transacting business

"Doing business," as used in statutes prohibiting a foreign corporation from doing business until it has filed a certificate, etc., is equivalent to the words "transacting business," and in most jurisdictions it is held that such statutes have reference to a continuation in some form of business, and do not apply where a foreign corporation does a single act of business within the state. General Conference of Free Baptists v. Berkeley, 105 Pac. 411, 412, 156 Cal. 466.

The phrase "transacting business" in Rev. St. 1895, arts. 745, 746, requiring foreign corporations desiring to transact business in the state to secure a permit, is not necessarily synonymous with doing business, as to do business in the state imports a carrying on of business of the corporation for the purpose of its organization, while the transaction of business rather imports the idea of isolated transactions. To "do business" is to carry on any particular occupation or employment for a livelihood or gain, as agriculture, trade, mechanic arts, or profession. S. R. Smythe Co. v. Ft. Worth Glass & Sand Co., 142 S. W. 1157, 1159, 105 Tex. 8.

DOING BUSINESS WITHOUT THE UNITED STATES

The words "doing business without the United States," within Laws 1897, p. 313, c. 384, § 30, giving corporations "doing business without the United States" until May 1st to make their annual report, must be construed with reference to the object sought to be accomplished by the statute, requiring corporations to file an annual report as of the 1st day of January, so that a corporation doing a meat and poultry business within the United States and a poultry and game business in England, Canada, and Germany, having an agency in England, and dealing with firms in Canada and Germany, was "doing business without the United States" within such act. Hoboken Beef Co. v. Hand, 93 N. Y. Supp. 834, 836, 104 App. Div. 390.

A corporation, the business of which is to manufacture and sell a patented article, is not "doing business without the United States," so as to be entitled under the statute as amended to a longer time for filing its annual report without making its directors liable for its debts, where all it is doing abroad is endeavoring to sell its stock there, preparing a couple of machines for exhibition, and obtaining foreign patents to prevent the manufacture of its products by foreigners. West v. Grosvenor, 92 N. Y. Supp. 429, 430, 102 App. Div. 266 (citing People ex rel. Lembeck & Betz Eagle Brewing Co. v. Roberts, 47 N. Y. Supp. 949, 22 App. Div. 282; Cummer Lumber Co. v. Associated Mfrs' Mut. Fire Ins. Corp., 73 N. Y. Supp. 668, 87 App. Div. 151; Penn Collieries Co. v. McKeever, 87 N. Y. Supp. 869, 93 App. Div. 303).

DOING HIM

Where defendant, in response to an inquiry for renewal of a note, wrote that the note was "outlawed," whether he acknowledged ever owing it or not, but that he had no idea of "doing him," the language was susceptible of but one interpretation, and that was that he did not intend to rely on the statute of limitations or any technical defense. Cleland v. Hostetter, 79 Pac. 801, 802, 13 N. M. 43.

DOING WORK BY CONTRACT

According to the ordinary acceptance of the term "doing work by contract," it means the letting of the work, or some portion thereof, to some one who agrees to deliver it completed for a specified price, and does not include the case of one who himself constructs an improvement by means of materials purchased directly by him and artisans and laborers directly employed and paid wages by him. Perry v. City of Los Angeles, 106 Pac. 410, 412, 157 Cal. 146.

DOLLAR

Dollar mark, see Signs.

The judgment of a police magistrate for the sum of 383.18, with nothing to show that this represents "dollars," is void for uncertainty. Avery v. Babcock, 85 Ill. 175, 177.

The judgment must show definitely the amount of tax for which it was rendered; figures without some mark indicating for what they stand, in a column, at the head of which are the words "Tax, Coll., Clerk, Pri.," are not sufficient. Randolph v. Metcalf, 6 Cold. (46 Tenn.) 400, 408.

Where the commissioners in their report use only numerals to express the valuation of the land taken and the damages to that not taken, and it is evident from the report that the commissioners intended that such numerals should represent dollars and cents, the report is not void because the commissioners omitted to use either the dollar mark or the words "dollars" and "cents," or some abbreviation of the same. Hunt v. Smith, 9 Kan. 137, 151.

Where the dollar mark has been omitted, and there is no mark, dot, or line to separate dollars and cents, and to show what is meant, it has been held void. Tidd v. Rines, 2 N. W. 497, 500, 26 Minn. 201.

Where the dollar mark was omitted and a perpendicular line used to separate dollars and cents, held, the meaning was sufficiently clear. Gutzwiller v. Crowe, 19 N. W. 344, 32 Minn. 70; Smith v. Headley, 33 Minn. 384, 23 N. W. 550, 552.

Under section 1125, Comp. Laws 1897, in an indictment for embezzlement of public moneys, an allegation that the defendant "having then and there in his possession the sum of [a certain number of] 'dollars' in money, a better description of the kinds and character of which is to the grand jurors unknown," is sufficient both as to description of the money and the value thereof. Territory v. Hale, 81 Pac. 583, 584, 13 N. M. 181, 13 Ann. Cas. 551.

A tax sale is not void because in the delinquent list the amount due was indicated only by the word "amount," and immediately under it the figures "4 00," without any dollar sign, but with a space between the figure "4" and the two ciphers as they usually appear when intended to mean "dollars." Carter v. Osborn, 89 Pac. 608, 609, 150 Cal. 620.

As coined dollar

"The dollar note is an engagement to pay a dollar, and the dollar intended is the coin dollar of the United States; a certain quantity in weight and fineness of gold or silver, authenticated as such by the stamp of the government. No other dollar had before been recognized by the legislation of the national government as lawful money." New York ex rel. Bank of New York v. Board of Sup'rs of New York County, 7 Wall. (74 U. S.) 26, 30, 19 L. Ed. 60.

Confederate money

Where a note was given in December, 1862, when there was nothing in circulation as money but Confederate notes, it was proper to further show on an issue as to whether the note was payable in Confederate money that the value of the articles for which the note was given was much less in good money than the price the maker, by the note, agreed to pay for them. Dean v. Campbell, 57 Ala. 372, 373.

As expression of value

The word "dollar" means a certain amount of money, and is of some value. An information for false pretenses, which alleges that accused with intent to defraud prosecutor obtained from prosecutor the sum of $20, the property of prosecutor, is not objectionable as failing to allege that the money was worth something. State v. Ryan, 76 Pac. 90, 92, 34 Wash. 597.

"The term 'dollars' is an expression of value as well as the name of a kind, and hence the word 'dollars' is uncertain as a description, since it may be used to denote a number of cents or dimes as well as dollars proper; but it is certain as an expression of value." An indictment for embezzlement, charging that the defendant embezzled $8,659.59 in money, was not objectionable for failing to allege the value of the money. Richberger v. State, 44 South. 772, 774, 90 Miss. 806.

As legal tender

The word "dollars" means money in the form of the lawful currency of the United States. Kelley v. Sullivan, 87 N. E. 72, 73, 201 Mass. 34.

As unit of value

"A dollar is the unit of our currency. It always means money, or what is regarded as money." United States v. Van Auken, 96 U. S. 366, 368, 24 L. Ed. 852.

The word "dollar" is used to signify the money unit of the United States of the value of 100 cents. It imparts to the common understanding the meaning of a thing of value. McDonald v. State, 58 S. E. 1067, 1068, 2 Ga. App. 633.

The "dollar" is the legal unit of money of the United States, and, when figures are used to denote a sum of money such figures are understood to represent dollars, unless a different intention is fairly expressed. Newlove v. Mercantile Trust Co. of San Francisco, 105 Pac. 971, 975, 156 Cal. 657.

The term "dollar" implies the money unit of the United States. It means simply money. Hence a provision in a will which gives to a legatee, to be paid by the executor, the interest annually during his life of $1,000, which the executor is directed to invest and keep safely invested, the $1,000 to be paid at the decease of the legatee to his children or their issue, and, in case he die without children or issue, then to another named, and provides, further, that the legatee may at any time secure to the executor the return to him of the $1,000 at the death of the legatee, and upon the offer of such security the said sum shall be delivered to said legatee, is a provision for the payment of money only, and not for the delivery of securities. Devenney v. Devenney, 77 N. E. 688, 689, 74 Ohio St. 96.

An indictment for robbery is sufficient on the question of value to allege that the 50 "dollars" in money was of the value of $50, as the courts will judicially recognize that the word "dollar" is the money unit of the United States and is of the value of 100 cents. Maxwell v. State, 72 S. E. 445, 9 Ga. App. 875 (citing McDonald v. State, 58 S. E. 1067, 2 Ga. App. 633).

DOLLS

Bath babies and position babies are "dolls," within the meaning of Schedule N, par. 418, 30 Stat. 191, and are dutiable as such, rather than as china toys, under Schedule B, par. 95, 30 Stat. 156. United States v. Butler Bros., 180 Fed. 1005.

DOMESTIC

"Domestic," derived from "domus," a house, means "belonging to the house or household, concerning or relating to the house or family." The term has a widely varying meaning, though primarily it relates to the house or home. Its significance must be determined with reference to the subject-matter and the relation in which it appears. Kimball v. Northeast Harbor Water Co., 78 Atl. 865, 866, 107 Me. 467, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 805.

The word "domestic," as defined by Webster's International Dictionary, means "of or pertaining to one's house or home, or one's household or family; relating to home life." Mitchell v. Tulsa Water, Light & Power Co., 95 Pac. 961, 966, 21 Okl. 243.

DOMESTIC ANIMALS

Of ordinary docility, see Ordinary Docility.

Rev. St. Ohio 1892, § 3324, requiring railroads to construct and maintain along the road fences sufficient to turn stock, and at highway crossings, cattle guards sufficient to prevent "domestic animals" from going upon such railroad, do not require railroads to fence as against persons, since stock and domestic animals only are mentioned, and these words do not include persons. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Lidtke, 69 N. E. 653, 656, 69 Ohio St. 384.

A town ordinance required every person keeping certain domestic animals named "within the limits of the town" to keep them on his own premises, except when temporarily passing through the streets, etc. Section 2 provided that the poundkeeper should provide a pound for "impounding any domestic animals found running at large within the city limits." Held, that the "domestic animals" referred to in section 2 were those specified in section 1, and that the ordinance had no application to animals running at large on the common range outside the limits of the town which might stray within such limits. City of Red Lodge v. Maryott, 83 Pac. 485, 486, 33 Mont. 299.

DOMESTIC BILL

A domestic bill, under the Mississippi statutes, is one drawn by a person in the state, or dated at a place in the state, or drawn on a person living therein. Ragsdale v. Franklin, 25 Miss. 143, 145.

DOMESTIC COMMERCE

While interstate commerce and the instrumentalities by which it is carried on are within the exclusive control of Congress, the domestic commerce of a state and the facilities by which it is conducted are within the control of the state, and the Legislature may make such reasonable rules governing its domestic commerce as seem best fitted for the interest of its citizens, provided such regulations do not burden or interfere with the interstate commerce of the nation. State v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 115 N. W. 614, 616, 81 Neb. 15.

DOMESTIC CORPORATION

Under Civ. Code S. C. 1902, § 1791, a foreign railroad corporation filing a copy of its charter granted in another state, with the Secretary of State, becomes a "domestic corporation." Geraty v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 60 S. E. 936, 938, 80 S. C. 355 (citing Southern Ry. v. Tompkins, 25 S. E. 982, 48 S. C. 49; Calvert v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 36 S. E. 750; Id., 41 S. E. 963, 64 S. C. 139; Black's Dill. Rem. Causes, § 101).

The term "resident" contemplated by Code Civ. Proc. § 340, which defines the jurisdiction of county courts and provides that such jurisdiction extends to an action where the defendant at the time of its commencement is a resident of the county, and by Const. art. 6, § 14, which declares that the jurisdiction of county courts shall not be extended to an action in which any person not a resident of the county is a defendant, may include a "domestic corporation," within Code Civ. Proc. § 341, which provides that, in determining the jurisdiction of a county court, a domestic corporation is to be deemed a resident of the county in which its principal place of business is located, and under section 431, which provides for personal service of summons on a domestic corporation by delivering a copy thereof, if the action is against the city of New York to the mayor, comptroller, or counsel to the corporation, New York City is such a "domestic corporation," and is therefore a resident of the borough of Manhattan and may not be sued in the county court of another county. Maisch v. City of New York, 111 N. Y. Supp. 645, 647, 127 App. Div. 424.

"Railroads are creatures of the law, invested with certain powers to promote the public interest, for which reason they may be required to conduct their affairs in furtherance of the public objects of their creation, and it is because of this public character that courts assume jurisdiction to enforce the public duties required of them." "A 'railroad corporation' created by a state is for all purposes of local self-government a domestic concern, even when its road connects, as most railroads do, with railroads in other states, and the state which created the corporation may make all needful regulations of a police character for the government of the corporation while operating its road in that jurisdiction. It may prescribe the location of the place of construction of the road, the rate of speed at which trains shall run, and the places at which they shall stop, and make any other reasonable regulation for their management in order to secure the objects of the corporation and the safety, good order, convenience, and comfort of the passengers and of the public. All such regulations are strictly within the police power of the state." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Central Stockyards Co., 97 S. W. 778, 782, 133 Ky. 148 (quoting from Commonwealth v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 85 S. W. 712, 120 Ky. 91; Gladson v. State of Minnesota, 17 Sup. Ct. 627, 166 U. S. 435, 41 L. Ed. 1064).

"A railroad corporation created by a state is, for all purposes of local government, a 'domestic corporation,' and its railroad within the state is a matter of domestic concern. Even when its road connects, as most railroads do, with railroads in other states, the state which created the corporation may make all needful regulations of a police character for the government of the company while operating its road in that jurisdiction. It may prescribe the location and the plan of construction of the road, the rate of speed at which trains shall run, and the places at which they shall stop, and may make any other reasonable regulations for their management, in order to secure the objects of the incorporation, and the safety, good order, convenience, and comfort of the passengers and of the public." *Railroad Com'rs v. DOMESTIC DUTIES

Services rendered by a wife in the home of her husband to a lodger residing with them, though consisting largely of personal attendance of the wife and including the nursing of the lodger when sick, were "domestic duties," for which, in the absence of an express promise by the lodger to pay the wife she could not recover; the implied promise being to pay the husband, and not the wife. Stevenson v. Akarman, 85 Atl. 166, 167, 83 N. J. Law, 458.

DOMESTIC EGG COAL

"Egg coal," as known to the trade, is coal run over screens with a 3-inch mesh, and another screen with a 1¼-inch mesh. There are two grades of egg coal, the higher grade, known as "domestic egg coal," being made by running the coal over the screens twice, and the lower grade, known as "steam egg," by running the coal over the screens but once. There is more slack in the lower grade than in the higher grade, and the higher grade is more expensive. Indiana Fuel Supply Co. v. Indianapolis Basket Co., 84 N. E. 776, 777, 41 Ind. App. 658.

DOMESTIC FIXTURES

"Domestic fixtures" are such articles as a tenant attaches to a dwelling house to render his occupation more comfortable or convenient, and may be separated from it without doing substantial injury. Hayford v. Wentworth, 54 Atl. 940, 942, 97 Me. 347 (quoting and adopting Tayl. Land. & Ten. [8th Ed.] § 547).

An electric chandelier, annunciator, and like contrivances or devices attached to the ceiling or walls of a house by a tenant, at his own expense and for his personal comfort and convenience, come within the legal definition of "domestic or ornamental fixtures" when so placed that they can be readily detached without injury to the premises. In the absence of any understanding to the contrary, such fixtures may be removed by the tenant at any time during his term or occupancy, and even thereafter, if he be deprived of the opportunity to remove them by a wrongful retaking of possession of the premises by the landlord. Not being annexed to the rented structure with any view to their becoming permanently attached thereto as a part of the realty, they do not lose their identity as chattels, and a possessory warrant will lie to recover them from a landlord who wrongfully withholds possession thereof from the tenant. Raymond v. Strickland, 52 S. E. 619, 620, 124 Ga. 504, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 69.

DOMESTIC MACHINERY

A buggy or wagon purchased for use at the purchaser's home is not "domestic machinery," within Laws 1903, c. 16, relating to licensing peddlers on sale of all articles except domestic machinery. Territory v. Russell, 86 Pac. 551, 552, 13 N. M. 558.

DOMESTIC MANUFACTURES

"We may properly and accurately speak of 'domestic manufactures,' meaning not those of the household, but those of a county, state, or nation, according to the object in contemplation." United States v. Edgar, 140 Fed. 655, 659 (quoting and adopting the definition of Justice McKenna in United States v. United Verde Copper Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 222, 196 U. S. 207, 49 L. Ed. 449).

DOMESTIC MEDICINE

The Century and Imperial Dictionaries define the phrase "domestic medicine" as "medicine as practiced by unprofessional persons in their own families." The Encyclopedias define it as "the practice or use of medicine by unprofessional persons in their own households." Appleton's Medical Dictionary and Gould's Illustrated Dictionary of Medicine define the phrase as "the use of domestic remedies"; but, as neither attempts to give the meaning of "domestic remedy," the definition is not illuminating. If, however, "domestic medicine" is the use of medicine in one's own family, and is also the use of domestic remedies, it would seem logically to follow that domestic remedies or domestic medicines are those which one uses in his own household. Foster's Encyclopedic Medical Dictionary contains, under the word "domestic," "pertaining to the household, to one's own home; * * * of remedies, prepared in one's own house or kept there for use in the absence of a physician." But the matter is not to be determined by mere reference to the dictionaries. Lippincott's Medical Dictionary says that "domestic medicine" is "medicine as practiced by nonprofessional persons." But the acceptance of that definition would make the phrase, as used in an exception in a statute relating to the practice of medicine and surgery, providing that the act shall not apply to the administration of domestic medicines, as broad as the act. The real meaning of the law must be sought by considering it as a whole, in the harmonious construction of its various parts. As used in an exception in a statute relating to the practice of medicine and surgery, which provides that nothing in the act shall apply to the administration of "domestic" medicines, it does not refer to medicines of home manufacture or to those manufactured from vegetables grown at home. State v. Huff, 90 Pac. 279, 283, 75 Kan. 585, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1094.

DOMESTIC PURPOSES

Other domestic purposes, see Other.

Where a water company was authorized to charge specific rates for the use of water for "domestic purposes," such rates did not include water used for lawns. Ward v. Birmingham Waterworks Co., 44 South. 570, 571, 152 Ala. 285.

The word "domestic," in Act Cong. June 3, 1878, § 1, providing that all citizens of the United States shall be permitted to fell and remove for building, agricultural, mining, or other "domestic" purposes, any timber, has a meaning consistent with the intentional use of the word "other." "It may relate, it is true, to the household, but keeping its idea of locality it may relate to a broader entity than household. We may properly and accurately speak of 'domestic' manufactures, meaning not those of the household but those of a county, state, or nation, according to the object in contemplation." And hence the word "domestic" applies to the locality in which the statute is directed and gives permission to the industries there practiced to use the public timber. United States v. United Verde Copper Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 222, 224, 196 U. S. 207, 49 L. Ed. 449.

The words "domestic purposes," as used in an ordinance granting a franchise to a water company, include "all uses which contribute to the health, comfort, and convenience of the family, in the enjoyment of their dwelling as a home." Mitchell v. Tulsa Water, Light, Heat & Power Co., 95 Pac. 961, 966, 21 Okl. 243 (quoting and adopting definition in Crosby v. City Council of Montgomery, 18 South. 723, 108 Ala. 498).

The right to cut timber from public mineral lands, subject to mineral entry only, for building, agricultural, mining, or other "domestic purposes," given to any bona fide resident of certain states and territories by Act June 3, 1878, c. 150, 20 Stat. 88, extends to all such lands in the state or territory, without limitation to any local subdivision. Under such statute, a resident of Montana, where he observes the regulations made by the Secretary of the Interior for the protection of undergrowth, etc., may lawfully cut timber for firewood from public mineral lands within the state, and ship the same to any part of the state for sale and use there in households, hoisting works in mines, smelters, or other local purposes, all of which are "domestic purposes" within the meaning of the statute. United States v. Edgar, 140 Fed. 655, 659.

"Domestic purposes," as used in a contract whereby a gas company agreed to pay a city one-fifth of the net profits from the sale of gas for such purposes, includes gas furnished, not only to the homes of the city, but to offices, stores, churches, and the like, where its principal use is for heating and lighting, and not for power. City of Erie v. Erie Gas & Mineral Co., 97 Pac. 468, 470, 78 Kan. 848.

Priv. Laws 1883, c. 168, chartering a water company to supply water for "domestic" purposes, requires the company to furnish water to operate an elevator in a summer hotel; such use not being a development of power for commercial or industrial purposes. Kimball v. Northeast Harbor Water Co., 78 Atl. 865, 866, 107 Me. 467, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 805.

A contract by a water company to furnish a town with water "for domestic purposes, the extinguishment of fires, and other lawful uses," and also "for public and domestic uses and purposes of the inhabitants" of the town, did not authorize the corporaporation to furnish water for the purpose of creating any power for mechanical purposes either by the means of the creation of steam or for the propelling any water motor to the prejudice of the town for domestic and fire uses. Mayor, etc., of Town of Boonton v. United Water Supply Co., 64 Atl. 1064, 1065, 70 N. J. Eq. 692.

DOMESTIC REMEDY

"The expression 'family medicines' is synonymous with such expressions as 'domestic remedies,' 'household remedies,' etc., found in the statute of other states and common in general parlance. It includes such things as camphor, quinine, paregoric, spirits of turpentine, castor oil, and salt peter, epsom salts, etc., but not a preparation containing sulphuric acid." Lewis v. Brannen, 65 S. E. 189, 190, 6 Ga. App. 419.

In determining the meaning of the phrase "usual domestic remedies and medicines," as used in the pharmacy act, providing that, "in rural districts where there is no registered pharmacist within five miles, it shall be lawful for retail dealers to procure license from the board of pharmacy * * * to sell the 'usual domestic remedies and medicines,'" judicial and legislative construction are an aid. "In Cook v. People, 125 Ill. 278, 17 N. E. 849, it was said that under a similar statute the jury were warranted in finding from the evidence that quinine was not one of the 'usual domestic remedies' referred to. In People v. Fisher, 83 Ill. App. 114, the court approved an instruction reading: 'Although the jury may believe from the evidence that the defendant sold iodine and quinine, yet if they further believe from the evidence that they are domestic remedies, then the defendant is not liable for such sales.' * * * The New York pharmacy act originally contained a provision permitting 'the sale of the usual domestic remedies by retail dealers in the rural districts.' Later a definition was added of which the following was the substance and finally the form: 'The term "usual domestic remedies," here employed, means medicines, a knowledge of the properties of which and dose has been acquired from common use and includes only such remedies as may be safely employed without the advice of a physician.' * * * It will be observed that the meaning pointed to in these expressions is in a way a modification of that adopted by the trial court. The phrase 'domestic medicines,' referring to those remedies which are in fact used by a nonprofessional person in his own home, appears to have been diverted from its original and literal import, perhaps in part by the addition of the qualification 'usual,' so as to signify such substances as are commonly kept by nonprofessional persons in their own homes for use as remedies in the absence of a physician, being necessarily substances the effect of which is a matter of general knowledge, so that no special training is required for their safe administration. * * * It would defeat the manifest purpose of the law to hold that under these provisions a defendant, charged and proved to have received money for recommending a certain substance as a cure for disease, might exculpate himself by showing that the substance he recommended was a domestic medicine, in the sense that it was a well-known remedy, the effect of which was a matter of common knowledge." State v. Huff, 90 Pac. 279, 283, 75 Kan. 585, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1094.

DOMESTIC SERVANTS—DOMESTICS

A "domestic servant," according to Webster's International Dictionary, as well as Bouvier's Law Dictionary, is a "house servant; a household assistant; one who lives in the family of another." The term does not extend to workmen and laborers out doors. Toole Furniture Co. v. Ellis, 63 S. E. 56, 57, 5 Ga. App. 271.

Farm hand

A farm tenant who sometimes worked in a store, but never about the storekeeper's house, was not a "domestic servant," so as to require submission of his status as such in a trial for burglary of the house. Williams v. State (Tex.) 143 S. W. 634, 636.

DOMESTIC SERVICE

A husband suing for wrongful injuries to his wife cannot recover compensation for the loss of his wife's services as a clerk in his store; such services not being the domestic services which a wife owes her husband because of the marital relation, the duty of support being placed by the law upon the husband, and the wife having the correlative duty of caring for the household and administering to the needs of the family. Kirkpatrick v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 107 S. W. 1025, 1026, 129 Mo. App. 524.

DOMESTIC USE

"Domestic use," as the term is used in the ordinance, means the use to which water is applied by the family, for family use, and includes the watering of animals, but it does not include the use of water in public parks or public pleasure resorts maintained by the city, or the temporary quenching of the thirst of animals while engaged in labor upon the streets. Water Supply Co. of Albuquerque v. City of Albuquerque (N. M.) 128 Pac. 77, 79, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 439.

The exclusive right under an ordinance to construct and operate waterworks for supplying the streets, lanes, alleys, squares, and public places, and for extinguishing fires, is not limited by a provision of the ordinance that water supplied for "domestic use" shall be brought from wells adjacent to a designated river, and, in emergency, from the river, to a waterworks supplied from wells adjacent to that river, and, in an emergency, from the river; water for "domestic use" not including water for supplying the streets, etc., but pertaining to uses which contribute to the health, comfort, and convenience of the family in the enjoyment of their dwelling as a home. Mitchell v. Tulsa Water, Light, Heat & Power Co., 95 Pac. 961, 984, 21 Okl. 243.

DOMESTICATED

Where defendant contended that the plaintiff corporation was subject to the insolvent law because it was "domesticated" in the state, the court presumed the word "domesticated" was intended to convey, in conciliatory form, the information that plaintiff was "domiciled" in the state and therefore barred by the language and legal operation of the act. Bergner & Engel Brewing Co. v. Dreyfus, 51 N. E. 531, 532, 172 Mass. 154, 157, 70 Am. St. Rep. 251.

DOMICILE

Change of domicile, see Change.

"Domicile" is a "place where a person lives, or has his home; that is, where one has his true, fixed, permanent home, and principal establishment, and to which, whenever he is absent, he has the intention of returning. The habitation fixed in any place without any present intention of removing therefrom." Schmoll v. Schenck, 82 N. E. 805, 807, 40 Ind. App. 581 (quoting and adopting the definition in Anderson's Law Dict.); Barron v. City of Boston, 72 N. E. 951, 952, 187 Mass. 168 (quoting and adopting definition in Viles v. City of Waltham, 32 N. E. 901, 157 Mass. 542, 34 Am. St. Rep. 311); Ruby v. Pierce, 104 N. W. 1142, 1143, 74 Neb. 754 (citing Wood v. Roeder, 63 N. To constitute a "domicile" but two elements are necessary, the act and the intention. Stevens v. Larwill, 84 S. W. 113, 118, 110 Mo. App. 140 (citing State ex rel. Lowe v. Banta, 71 Mo. App. 32; Greene v. Beckwith, 38 Mo. 384; Johnson v. Smith, 43 Mo. 499; Tiller v. Abernathy, 37 Mo. 196); United States Trust Co. of New York v. Hart, 135 N. Y. Supp. 81, 82, 150 App. Div. 413; Anderson v. Blakeley, 136 N. W. 210, 213, 155 Iowa, 430; Eaves Costume Co. v. Pratt, 22 N. Y. Supp. 74, 75, 2 Misc. Rep. 420; Ex parte Petterson, 166 Fed. 530, 541; Guggenheim v. City of Long Branch, 76 Atl. 338, 339, 80 N. J. Law, 246; Holt v. Hendee, 83 N. E. 749, 752, 248 Ill. 288, 21 Ann. Cas. 202. "A residence at a particular place, accompanied with positive or presumptive proof of an intention to remain there for an unlimited time." Pope v. Williams, 56 Atl. 543, 544, 98 Md. 59, 66 L. R. A. 398, 103 Am. St. Rep. 379 (quoting and adopting definition in Mitchell v. United States, 21 Wall. [88 U. S.] 350, 22 L. Ed. 584). "The place where a person lives and has his home." Humphrey v. Humphrey, 91 S. W. 405, 406, 115 Mo. App. 861 (citing Mitchell v. United States, 21 Wall. [88 U. S.] 350, 22 L. Ed. 584; Anderson v. Anderson's Estate, 42 Vt. 350, 1 Am. Rep. 834; Borland v. City of Boston, 132 Mass. 89, 42 Am. Rep. 424). The act of residence does not alone constitute the "domicile" of a party, but it is the fact of residence accompanied by an intention of remaining which constitutes domicile. Marks v. Marks, 75 Fed. 321, 324. It means residence in a particular place with an intention to remain for an indefinite period of time. Inhabitants of Palmer v. Inhabitants of Hampden, 65 N. E. 817, 818, 182 Mass. 511. As applied to the marriage relation, means a home where the husband and wife dwell together in amity. Buchholz v. Buchholz, 115 Pac. 88, 90, 63 Wash. 213, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 395. It denotes the actual or constructive presence of a person in a given place, coupled with an intention to remain there permanently. People ex rel. Brooklyn Children's Aid Soc. v. Hendrickson, 104 N. Y. Supp. 122, 124, 125, 54 Misc. Rep. 337.

Where a person lives is prima facie his "domicile," unless there is a motive for that residence not inconsistent with a clearly established intention to retain a permanent residence elsewhere. Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. (55 U. S.) 400, 423, 14 L. Ed. 472.

"Domicile" is the place where one has his true fixed permanent home and principal establishment, and to which, whenever he is absent, he has the intention of returning, and where he exercises his political rights. There must exist in combination the fact of residence and the animus manendi. Residence within the district, to give the court jurisdiction of proceedings in bankruptcy, must be bona fide; and the removal of a person from one district to another, for the express purpose of filing a petition in bankruptcy therein, and with the intent of leaving the district as soon as he obtained a discharge, does not make him a resident, so as to confer jurisdiction on the court. In re Garneau, 127 Fed. 677, 678, 62 C. O. A. 403.

Every person must have a domicile. He can have but one, which, when once established, continues until he renounces it and takes up another in its stead. It is not lost by temporary absence. The question is one of fact, and it is often difficult to determine. A person who has left his home in the country, and moved with his family to a city, where he has a residence, with no fixed intention of returning to his country home, which he has rented on shares, reserving three rooms in the house for his own use, becomes a resident of the city, and is liable to be taxed as such. City of Lebanon v. Biggers, 78 S. W. 213, 214, 117 Ky. 430.

"One cannot acquire the right to vote in this state by a sojourn here for business or pleasure, however long, without abandoning his former domicile. There must not only be a personal presence here for the requisite time, but a concurrence therewith of an intention to make the place of inhabitancy the true home." Under 2 Mills' Ann. St. § 4364, requiring petitions for the incorporation of a town to be signed by 30 electors owning land and residing in the territory sought to be incorporated, persons who moved into the territory temporarily, merely for the purpose of signing the petition, and persons who were granted land solely to qualify them as signers and as a reward for signing, were not bona fide electors and landowners, and not qualified as signers. People ex rel. Saunier v. Stratton, 81 Pac. 245, 248, 33 Colo. 464.

The old domicile continues until the acquisition of a new one, and while in transitu the old domicile remains, for a "domicile" is a residence at a particular place accompanied with positive or presumptive proof of an intention to remain there for an unlimited time. Littlefield v. Inhabitants of Brooks, 50 Me. 475, 477 (quoting and adopting definition in Phillim. Dom. p. 13).

The word "domicile," as used in General Order 6 of the General Orders of the United States Supreme Court, providing that, in case two or more petitions shall be filed against the same individual in different districts, the first hearing shall be had in the district in which the testator had his domicile, while grammatically fitting the 10 days' habitation of the bankrupt in the Southern district, should while rival petitions are under consideration be held to mean the domicile which has existed during the greater portion of the preceding six months. Where two petitions in bankruptcy have been filed against the same individual, one in the district in which the alleged bankrupt has resided during the greater part of the preceding six months, and the other in a district into which he recently removed and established his residence, the former is the district of his domicile within the meaning of General Order No. 6. In re Isaacson, 161 Fed. 779, 781.

Every person must have a "domicile" somewhere, and can have but one, which, when established, continues until he renounces it and takes up another in its stead. Helm's Trustee v. Commonwealth, 122 S. W. 196, 197, 135 Ky. 392.

"To acquire a 'domicile' both the fact and the intention must concur. Actual residence and the intention to remain either permanently or for an indefinite time, without any fixed or certain purpose to return to the former place of abode, are required to constitute a change of domicile. The length of the residence is immaterial provided the other elements are present and are found to exist." Where a man upon marriage went to Massachusetts with his wife, intending to reside there permanently, with no intention of returning to his previous abode, though he was undecided as to the particular place where he would reside, and another selected an apartment for him and his wife, which he took possession of by sending his clothing to it, he acquired a domicile in the state, though he never in fact occupied the apartment, being called away by his mother's illness in another state, and so lived in the state with his wife, within a statute providing that a divorce shall not, with an immaterial exception, be decreed if the parties have never lived together as husband and wife in the state. Winans v. Winans, 91 N. E. 394, 396, 205 Mass. 388, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 992.

Where one, born an English subject in Canada, removed to New York, there engaged in business, became naturalized, afterwards closed out his business, declared his intention to return to his place of birth to live, then became non compos, and a committee was appointed for him in New York, who took him back to his place of birth, where he resided till his death, a sufficient "domicile" was re-established there to confer probate jurisdiction in the first instance on the courts of that country, which took cognizance of his will. In re Robitaille, 138 N. Y. Supp. 391, 392, 78 Misc. Rep. 108.

"Domicile" is the habitation fixed in any place without any present intent of removing therefrom, and ordinarily is a pure question of fact. There can be but one domicile of testacy or intestacy, and the fundamental idea of domicile is a relation between an individual and a particular locality, and does not depend on any distinction as to the source of the local law. Mather v. Cunningham, 74 Atl. 809, 813, 105 Me. 328, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 761, 18 Ann. Cas. 692.

In order to give jurisdiction to grant a divorce to one coming to the state from another state, there must be an actual residence for two years with intention of remaining, so as to acquire a domicile in the state; the "domicile" of a person being the place in which he has voluntarily fixed his habitation, with a present intention of making it his home, until he is induced to adopt another permanent residence by some uncertain or unexpected event. Williams v. Williams, 78 Atl. 693, 695, 78 N. J. Eq. 13.

A wife who had been deserted by her husband came from New York to New Jersey in October, 1904, and filed a petition October 9, 1907. She resided in different places to find an inexpensive place, but, not two years before filing her petition, fixed her permanent residence at Asbury Park. Her intention when she came to New Jersey was to make her future home in the state. Held, that her residence in the state from the beginning, with her intention to remain here, gave her a domicile within the state within the divorce act (P. L. 1902, p. 503), requiring two years' residence in the state during the time for which the desertion continues; the word "residence" meaning "domicile." King v. King, 71 Atl. 687, 74 N. J. Eq. 824, 135 Am. St. Rep. 731.

A man's "domicile" is determined by his actual residence, coupled with his intention to remain, irrespective of the residence of his family. McCord v. Rosene, 80 Pac. 793, 794, 39 Wash. 1.

"Domicile" may be defined as home. A place where a person lives—his only place of residence. A box stall at a fair ground, provided with inside fastenings to its doors, which is prepared and used by a man as his office and sleeping apartment, the place where he resides, he having no other place of abode, and which contains his clothing, his money, and all his belongings, is in legal effect his home or domicile. Young v. State, 104 N. W. 867, 868, 74 Neb. 346, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 66.

Under Gen. St. c. 107, § 12, which provides that no divorce shall be decreed if the parties have never lived together as husband and wife in this state, parties must have a domicile here, and a resident of another state coming here with his wife to seek employment, and, failing that, returning to the state of his residence leaving his wife here, does not acquire a "domicile," since his intention to acquire a domicile depended upon a contingency that never happened. Ross v. Ross, 103 Mass. 575, 576, 577.

"The fact that the defendant never acquired a residence in another place and that he had all the time * * * an intention to return and resume housekeeping with his family in this city would be sufficient to constitute a 'domicile' within this state." Hanover Nat. Bank v. Stebbins, 23 N. Y. Supp. 529, 530, 69 Hun, 808.

As affected by absence

"In law every person has a 'domicile.' In some instances it may be different from his actual abode. Until he has changed it, which is a combination of act and intention, it continues to be his 'domicile' in law. Where one has an actual domicile, and departs from it temporarily, intending to return, it will remain his legal domicile for all purposes." Erwin v. Benton, 87 S. W. 291, 294, 120 Ky. 536, 9 Ann. Cas. 284.

One who owned real estate and personal property and had paid personal tax in the town in which he died, and where he had lived, was "domiciled" in such town, though he was frequently away from it, owned property in other states, and had declared that he expected to make his home in another state. In re Dalrymple's Estate, 64 Atl. 554, 555, 215 Pa. 367.

Defendant, having been born in Missouri, in 1907 disposed of all her property and removed with her mother to France to study music. She remained there for three years, visiting the United States in August, 1910, when she sang under complainant's management in New York and Philadelphia, and made a brief visit to her grandparents in Kansas City. She returned to Paris, where she remained until September 20th of that year, when she took up her residence in London, remaining there until September 12, 1912, when she came to the United States to give a concert in Kansas City. She testified that, when she left in 1907, she did so intending to change her domicile and take up a residence abroad, and that when she went to London it was with the intention of remaining there for an indefinite period, and that she had not then, nor at any time since her departure, any intention of returning to Missouri. Held, that defendant was not a citizen of Missouri, so as to confer jurisdiction on a federal court sitting in that state of a suit brought against her by complainant, a citizen of New York. Hammerstein v. Lyne, 200 Fed. 165, 170.

The word "domicile" is nearly synonymous with home. Ex parte Petterson, 166 Fed. 536, 541.

"The word 'home' is undoubtedly the fundamental idea of 'domicile,' though calling a place 'home' as a matter of fact may not be and often is not entitled to much weight." The word "home" is very frequently used with reference to a place other than the legal and permanent domicile. Pickering v. Winch, 87 Pac. 763, 765, 769, 48 Or. 500, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1159 (quoting and adopting definition in Jacobs, Dom. § 72).

Residence distinguished

The words "residence" and "domicile" are not convertible terms, the latter being a word of more extensive signification, and including, beyond mere physical presence at the particular place, positive or presumptive proof of an intention to make it a permanent abiding place. Pendleton v. Commonwealth, 65 S. E. 536, 538, 110 Va. 229.

"Domicile" and "residence" are not synonymous; "domicile" being a legal relation existing between a person and a particular place originating in residence and intention, or created by operation of law while a person may have as many residences as he may choose, and, while a minor's legal domicile is with his parents, he may, with consent of his father, acquire a residence in another parish to earn a livelihood. Oglesby v. Turner, 54 South. 400, 402, 127 La. 1093.

"Residence" means living in a particular locality, but "domicile" means living in that locality with intent to make it a fixed and permanent home; and "residence" requires only bodily presence as an inhabitant in a given place, while "domicile" requires presence in that place as well as an intention to make it a domicile. In re Newcomb's Estate, 84 N. E. 950, 954, 192 N. Y. 238.

The terms "residence" and "domicile" are not identical for all purposes, and their meaning is different under the rule suspending limitations by absence from the state. McDowell v. Friedman Bros. Shoe Co., 115 S. W. 1028, 1081, 135 Mo. App. 276.

The word "residence" indicates the place of dwelling, whether permanent or temporary, and the word "domicile" indicates the real home of the deceased. A few general rules may also be noticed in this connection. A man must have a domicile somewhere. He cannot have two at the same time, and a domicile once gained remains until a new one is acquired. Two things must concur to effect a change of domicile. There must be actual residence and the intent. Mere intention cannot effect the change, but the intention to remain, coupled with the fact of actual residence, establishes the domicile, notwithstanding a floating intention to return at some future time. And this intention need not be to remain for a definite time. "A change of domicile does not depend so much upon the intention to remain in the new place for a definite or indefinite period as upon the fact that it is without a definite intention to return; and even an intention to return at a remote or indefinite period may be controlled by other circumstances establishing the fact of domicile in the new place." In re Titterington's Estate, 106 N. W. 761, 762, 130 Iowa, 356 (citing Tuttle v. Wood, 88 N. W. 1056, 115 Iowa, 507; Cohen v. Daniels, 25 Iowa, 88; Vanderpoel v. O'Hanlon, 5 N. W. 119, 53 Iowa, 246, 36 Am. Rep. 216; Church v. Crossman, 49 Iowa, 444; State v. Groome, 10 Iowa, 308).

"The distinction between 'residence' and 'domicile,' in the law of process and attachment, is very clearly marked by the decisions. 'Domicile' is a much broader term than that of 'residence.' A man may have his domicile in one state, and actually reside in another, or in a foreign country. If he has once had a residence in a particular place, and removed to another, but with the intention of returning after a certain time, however long that may be, his domicile is at the former residence, and his residence at the place of his habitation." Atkinson v. Washington & Jefferson College, 46 S. E. 253, 259, 54 W. Va. 32 (quoting Drake, Attach. § 59).

The word "domicile," in a statute which provides that no person who is an inhabitant of the state shall be sued out of the county in which he has his domicile, except in certain cases, is used in the sense of "residence." There may, however, be a difference between a man's residence and his domicile. He may have his domicile in one place, and still may have a residence in another; for, although a man for most purposes can be said to have but one domicile, he may have several residences. Pearson v. West, 77 S. W. 944, 945, 97 Tex. 238 (quoting Brown v. Boulden, 18 Tex. 431, 434).

The word "resides," in Laws 1901, p. 588, c. 96, providing that any town not maintaining a high school shall pay for the tuition of any child who with parents "resides" in said town, and who attends a high school in another town, means actual habitation, and not a legal "domicile," which is acquired by residence and an intention of making it a home; and, where a father who lived on a farm in a town sold his stock and removed to another town with his family, and there kept house, without any definite intention either to make the latter town his home or of returning to the former town within which he was taxed, and wherein he voted, the former town was not liable to pay to the latter town for the tuition of his child attending high school in the latter town. Lisbon School Dist. No. 1 v. Landaff Town School Dist., 74 Atl. 186, 187, 75 N. H. 324.

"Domicile" is not the same as "residence," as the first expression indicates the fixed and permanent residence to which one when absent has the intention of returning. The other merely indicates the place of dwelling, whether permanent or temporary. In re Brannock, 131 Fed. 819, 922 (quoting and adopting the definitions in Fitzgerald v. Arel, 16 N. W. 712, 63 Iowa, 104, 18 N. W. 713, 50 Am. Rep. 733; Mann v. Taylor, 78 Iowa, 355, 43 N. W. 220).

"Residence" and "domicile" are sometimes distinct, and in contemplation of the attachment law the domicile of the defendant may be in this state, while the actual residence is in another. Hollander v. Central Metal & Supply Co., 71 Atl. 442, 448, 109 Md. 131, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135.

"Residence," it has been frequently held, is largely a matter of intention. That is the very language used in an extract from an opinion by the Attorney General appearing in Jewett's Election Manual, 1907, p. 378. It is a word which is ordinarily distinguishable from "domicile," and in cases in which it is distinguished from domicile it imports less fixity of tenure. It is not dependent upon the quantity of possession that a man may have about him at a given place, nor necessarily upon the length of time that he spends at a particular place. And this is particularly so in the absence of proof that a man spends the larger part of his time at some other place; but the prevailing authorities in this state seem to hold that, despite the use in a seemingly contrastive manner of the two terms "residence" and "domicile" in the election law (see Laws 1896, pp. 913, 914, c. 909, § 34, subds. 1, 2, as amended), those terms are to be regarded as practically synonymous where the question of the exercise of a franchise is concerned, and that in the case of a voter there must not only be an intention to regard a certain place as his voting residence, but conduct appropriate to and indicative of that intention. People v. Acritelli, 110 N. Y. Supp. 430, 446, 57 Misc. Rep. 574.

"A 'residence' is one thing, and a 'domicile' another. A person may have as many residences as he may choose, but can have but one domicile. Residence does not imply permanency, or the animo manendi, as does the word 'domicile.'" The term "residence," as used in Const. La. art. 197, fixing the qualification of voters, does not mean "domicile." Estopinal v. Michel, 46 South. 907, 908, 121 La. 879, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 759 (quoting and adopting the definition in State ex rel. Egan v. Steele, 33 La. Ann. 910); Estopinal v. Vogt, 46 South. 908, 909, 121 La. 883.

There may be a domicile without an actual present residence, and, vice versa, there may be a present residence without a domicile, as in case of foreign ministers who reside abroad without losing their domicile in the United States, and cabinet ministers and members of Congress, who reside in Washington, but are domiciled in their respective states. A man may have two or more residences, but only one domicile. He chooses which one of the residences shall be his domicile, and his choice is final, if made in good faith, although he may spend less time at his domicile than at his residence. The marks of the domicile include the character of the place, and the acts and declarations of the party in connection therewith, provided the declarations are made in good faith, and ante litem motam. Duke v. Duke, 62 Atl. 466, 467, 70 N. J. Eq. 185.

"Domicile," strictly speaking, is the relation which the law creates between an individual and a particular place or country, and each case is dependent upon its own particular facts. "Domicile" is not in a legal sense synonymous with "residence." A person may have more than one residence and more than one home, in the ordinary acceptance of those terms, but he can have only one "domicile," and the law requires that for the succession of his property, he be domiciled somewhere. The word "home" is the fundamental idea of "domicile," and the fact that one calls a place his "home" may not be of much weight in determining whether or not it is his "domicile." To constitute a "domicile" there must be a fixed habitation or abode in a particular place, and the intention to remain there permanently. There must be "residence," actual or inchoate, and the nonexistence of any intention to make a "domicile" elsewhere, and these two elements must concur. As said by Dicey in his Condict of Laws, p. 79: "The domicile of any person is, in general, the place or country which is in fact his permanent home, but is in some cases the place or country which, whether in fact his home or not, is determined to be his home by a rule of law." In regard to a change of domicile, the court says: "Mere change of residence is not of itself proof of a change of domicile unless accompanied by an intention, express or implied, to abandon the old domicile and acquire a new one. Within the principle of law declared in the decisions, a person may reside for pleasure or health in one place without forfeiting or surrendering his domicile or legal residence in another, if he so intends. It is not residence alone, but it is the intention of the person, expressed or implied from the facts in evidence, conjoined with residence, that determines domicile. Every person sui juris and capable of controlling his personal movements may change his domicile at pleasure, but a change of domicile involves intention as the dominant factor. To constitute a change of domicile three things are essential: (1) Residence in another place; (2) an intention to abandon the old domicile; and (3) an intention of acquiring a new one; or, as some writers express it, there must be an animus non revertendi and an animus manendi, or animus et factum." Pickering v. Winch, 87 Pac. 703, 765, 766, 48 Or. 500, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1159 (citing Jacobs, Dom. §§ 63, 72, 136; Wharton, Conflict of Laws, § 21; Dicey, Conflict of Laws, p. 79; 3 Cyc. p. 865; Caldwell v. Pollak, 8 South. 546, 91 Ala. 353; Emmis v. Smith, 14 How. 400, 423, 14 L. Ed. 472; Isham v. Gibbons [N. Y.] 1 Bradf. Sur. 69; Gilman v. Gilman, 52 Me. 165, 83 Am. Dec. 502; Tipton v. Tipton, 8 S. W. 440, 87 Ky. 245; Long v. Ryan [Va.] 30 Grat. 718; Stout v. Leonard, 37 N. J. Law, 492; Berry v. Wilcox, 62 N. W. 249, 44 Neb. 82, 48 Am. St. Rep. 706; Hayes v. Hayes, 74 Ill. 312, 316; Dupuy v. Wurtz, 53 N. Y. 556, 561; White v. Brown, 1 Wall. C. C. 217, 29 Fed. Cas. 982; Cruger v. Phelps, 47 N. Y. Supp. 61, 21 Misc. Rep. 252).

The term "residence," used by the Constitution in fixing the qualification of voters, does not mean "domicile," but the abode at which a man actually lives and works; the purposes of the requirement being to provide a term of educational probation and to prevent a colonization of voters. This abode may be a lodging house, and it makes no difference that the man may have in another parish a home where he keeps his wife and children. The words "actual bona fide resident" mean more than the word "resident." A person moving out of the state, with his wife and child and household effects, and residing and working in another state, cannot be considered as an "actually bona fide resident" of the precinct from which he removed. Article 197 of the Constitution excludes constructive residence based merely on intentions. State ex rel. Fleming v. Joyce, 49 South. 219, 220, 221, 123 La. 681 (citing Estopinal v. Michel, 46 South. 907, 121 La. 879, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 759; Estopinal v. Vogt, 46 South. 908, 121 La. 883).

Plaintiff in May, 1884, was married to A., and, while she was still his wife, during the same month he married E., she being his plural wife. Thereafter he went to England as a missionary, and took with him his wife E. and her children, and resided and worked there. During his absence in England, his wife A. built a house in Salt Lake City, with money furnished by plaintiff, and during plaintiff's absence lived therein. Plaintiff never saw the house nor lived in it until after his return from England, during which time summons was attempted to be served on him in an action brought by defendant by leaving a copy at such house with his wife A., on which judgment was rendered against him by default, concerning which he had no knowledge until he returned from England. Held, that such house was not plaintiff's "usual place of abode" within Comp. Laws 1907, § 2948, subd. 8, authorizing substituted service by leaving a copy of the process at the defendant's usual place of abode with a suitable person at least fourteen years of age; the term "place of abode" as so used being the place where defendant lives or abides, his "then present residence," and is not synonymous with "domicile." Grant v. Lawrence, 108 Pac. 931, 933, 37 Utah, 450, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 280.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2150, the provision that an application for the discharge of an insolvent debtor must be addressed to the county court of the county "in which he resides" means that the debtor must have his "domicile" in such county. Counsel for petitioner urged that the "residence" required by the Code did not imply the place of domicile, but the court held that while it might be that a Chinese merchant whose domicile was in Hongkong, but his business residence in New York, could properly apply for a discharge, a petitioner domiciled in New Jersey could not apply. In re Dimock, 39 N. Y. Supp. 501, 502, 4 App. Div. 301.

Consolidated School Law, Laws 1894, c. 556, tit. 7, § 36, provides that the common schools shall be free to all persons of certain age, "residing in the district." Held that, where an orphan child had been placed by a society in the home of a resident of a school district under an arrangement whereby the society paid for his board and clothing, he was entitled to school privileges as a resident, though there was no arrangement as to the term of his abode in the district; the well-recognized policy of the state relating to education, as expressed in Const. art. 9, § 1; School Law, Laws 1894, c. 556, tit. 7, §§ 11, 59, 60; and Compulsory Education Law, Laws 1894, c. 671, §§ 2, 13, making it obvious that it was not the legislative intent to employ the word "residence," as used in the school law, in the narrow sense of "domicile." People ex rel. Brooklyn Children's Aid Soc. v. Hendrickson, 104 N. Y. Supp. 122, 124, 125, 54 Misc. Rep. 337.

Inhabitation and residence do not mean precisely the same thing as "domicile," when the latter term is applied to personal estate; but they mean a fixed and permanent abode or dwelling place for the time being, as contradistinguished from a mere temporary locality of existence. There must be a settled fixed abode, an intention to remain permanently at least for a time, for business or other purposes, to constitute a residence within the legal meaning of that term. Defendant, after the rendition of the judgment sued on, went to Idaho, where she lived with her daughter in a rented house, and taught school there continuously thereafter, except during vacations, when she generally returned to Washington, always with the intention of returning to Idaho before the succeeding school year. Her visits to Washington were made to different localities, and not to the farm where she had previously resided; the house there having been first deserted and then wrecked by a windstorm and finally consumed by fire. Held, that defendant, after going to Idaho, became a nonresident of Washington within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4808, providing that the time that a person shall reside out of the state shall not be taken as a part of the time limited for the commencement of the action. Dignam v. Shaff, 98 Pac. 1113, 1115, 51 Wash. 412, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 996 (quoting definition in Wrigley's Case [N. Y.] 4 Wend. 602; Frost v. Brisbin [N. Y.] 19 Wend. 11, 32 Am. Dec. 423).

"Domicile" and "citizenship" are substantially synonymous terms in most cases, but there is a marked distinction between "domicile" and "residence"; the term "residence" indicating a place of abode, whether permanent or temporary, while "domicile" denotes a fixed permanent residence, to which, when absent, one has the intention of returning, and when there has been an actual removal with intent to make a permanent residence, and the acts of the party correspond with the purpose, the change of domicile is completed, and the law forces on him the character of a citizen of the state where he has chosen his domicile, although he may have formerly declared that he nevertheless considered himself a citizen of the state he had left. Harding v. Standard Oil Co., 182 Fed. 421, 423, 424.

A corporation organized to establish and maintain a school in a town for the education of young persons residing therein may receive pupils who are not domiciled inhabitants of the town, and may receive any young person temporarily or permanently residing in the town, and one who takes up a temporary abode therein for the mere purpose of receiving instruction at the school is a resident therein; residence not necessarily importing domicile. Hewitt v. Wheeler School and Library, 72 Atl. 935, 987, 82 Conn. 188.

Residence synonymous

"Domicile," in its general and popular sense, denotes residence and should be treated as synonymous therewith. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. McKnight, 89 S. W. 755, 758, 99 Tex. 289 (citing Texas & Pacific Ry. Co. v. Edmisson [Tex.] 52 S. W. 635).

At common law the words "residence" and "domicile" were used interchangeably; a domicile being a residence at a particular place, accompanied with proof of an intent to remain there for an unlimited time, and a residence being the abode of a person or incumbent or his benefice—opposed to nonresidence. State ex rel. Kelly v. Shepperd, 117 S. W. 1169, 1172, 218 Mo. 656, 131 Am. St. Rep. 568.

The terms "residence" and "domicile" have the same meaning as used in the attachment statutes making certain grounds for attachment depend on residence. McDowell v. Friedman Bros. Shoe Co., 115 S. W. 1028, 1031, 135 Mo. App. 276.

The word "residence," in the statute fixing the venue of actions, is synonymous with the word "domicile," and the domicile of a person is the place in which he has voluntarily fixed his abode, not with a temporary purpose, but with the intention of making it his present home. Wyrick v. Wyrick, 145 S. W. 144, 146, 162 Mo. App. 723.

"Residence," as used in the Code of Civil Procedure, excepting those sections relating to attachment and service of process, and as used in other statutes, excepting those relating to taxation, is generally synonymous with "domicile," and means the permanent home and place to which, whenever absent for purposes of business or pleasure, one intends to return. Hislop v. Taaffe, 125 N. Y. Supp. 614, 615, 141 App. Div. 40.

As used in Rem. & Bal. Code, § 1284, subd. 1, providing that wills shall be proved and letters testamentary or of administration shall be granted in the county in which decedent was a resident or had his place of abode at his death, the word "resident" imports a domicile. Buchholz v. Buchholz, 115 Pac. 88, 89, 63 Wash. 213, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 395.

The word "residence," as used in Const. art. 2, §§ 1, 2, providing who are qualified electors, was there used as equivalent to "domicile," and was not intended to be understood in the more restricted sense of actual habitation or abode. State ex rel. Goldsworthy v. Aldrich, 14 R. I. 171, 175.

There is little or no distinction between "residence" of the voter or juror and his "domicile." There is no technical definition as to what constitutes a "residence," but it is chiefly a question of intent. The term "residence" implies permanency, or for an indefinite period. Hence temporary absence of a juror from the parish of his residence will not destroy his qualification for jury service therein, when, though living and working in another part of the state, he had no intention to change his permanent abode. State v. Wimby, 43 South. 984, 985, 119 La. 139, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 98, 121 Am. St. Rep. 507, 12 Ann. Cas. 643 (citing 24 Cyc. p. 200).

The "residence" referred to in Code, art. 16, § 35, providing that a bill for divorce shall be brought in the court where either the plaintiff or defendant resides, is equivalent to "domicile." Harrison v. Harrison, 84 Atl. 57, 58, 117 Md. 607.

"Residence," as used in a statute requiring a specified prior residence in the state as a jurisdictional prerequisite to the commencement of an action for divorce, means "domicile." Beeman v. Kitzman, 90 N. W. 171, 172, 124 Iowa, 86.

"Residence," within 24 Del. Laws, c. 221, § 9, authorizing an action for divorce when, at the time the cause of action arose, either party was a bona fide resident of the state and so continued, denotes a residence within the legal meaning of the word "domicile," which means a place where a person lives, or has his home, and to which, when absent, he intends to return, and from which he has no present purpose to depart; and a bona fide resident, though a subject of a foreign sovereign, may on proper grounds sue for divorce. Cohen v. Cohen (Del.) 84 Atl. 122, 123.

A wife who had been deserted by her husband came from New York to New Jersey in October, 1904, and filed a petition October 9, 1907. She resided in different places to find an inexpensive place, but, not two years before filing her petition, fixed her permanent residence at Asbury Park. Her intention when she came to New Jersey was to make New Jersey her future home in the state. Held, that her residence in the state from the beginning, with her intention to remain here, gave her a domicile within the state within the divorce act (P. L. 1902, p. 508), requiring two years' residence in the state during the time for which the desertion continues; the word "residence" meaning "domicile." King v. King, 71 Atl. 687, 74 N. J. Eq. 824, 135 Am. St. Rep. 731.

The word "residence," as employed in the election statutes, is synonymous with "home" or "domicile," and means a fixed or permanent abode or habitation to which the party, when absent, intends to return. The residence of an unmarried man, within Code, § 1000, declaring that no person shall vote in any precinct but that of his residence, and section 642, providing that each qualified elector may vote at a municipal election who is a resident of the city, etc., and at the time has been ten days a resident of the precinct in which he offers to vote, is the place where he rooms and sleeps, and not the place where he takes his meals. State v. Savre, 105 N. W. 887, 388, 129 Iowa, 122, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 455, 118 Am. St. Rep. 452 (citing Vanderpoel v. O'Hanlon, 5 N. W. 119, 58 Iowa, 246, 36 Am. Rep. 216; Sharp v. McIntire, 46 Pac. 115, 28 Colo. 99; State ex rel. Goldsworthy v. Aldrich, 14 R. I. 171; Chase v. Miller, 41 Pa. 403; Hannon v. Grizzard, 89 N. C. 115).

The words "residence" and "domicile" are synonymous terms under the Wisconsin Statutes, and the domicile, when it is once acquired, is not lost until the party actually acquires another in another locality. For purposes of taxation, a person must have a residence or domicile somewhere, and cannot abandon a domicile once acquired until he has actually acquired another. Kellogg v. Winnebago County Sup'rs, 42 Wis. 97, 107 (citing Hall v. Hall, 25 Wis. 600).

The terms "residence," "abode," "domicile," and kindred terms, though differing somewhat in meaning, when used in inheritance tax laws have been held to be synonymous. In re Molr's Estate, 69 N. E. 905, 907, 207 Ill. 180, 99 Am. St. Rep. 205 (citing Cool. Tax, [2d Ed.] p. 869; Thorndike v. City of Boston, 1 Metc. [42 Mass.] 242; Hayes v. Hayes, 74 Ill. 312, 316; Du Puy v. Wurtz, 53 N. Y. 556, 561).

For purposes of taxation, the word "residence," as used in the statutes, means "domicile." Barhydt v. Cross (Iowa) 136 N. W. 525, 528, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 986.

At common law the words "residence" and "domicile" were used interchangeably and had practically the same meaning. The word "domicile" is defined by Mr. Burrill as being a residence at a particular place, accompanied with positive or presumptive proof of an intention to remain there for an unlimited time; and residence, as defined by Blackstone, is "the abode of a person or incumbent or his benefice opposed to non-residence." Where a person works a farm keeping a furnished room in a house thereon which he occupied when there and claimed his residence there, but generally and continuously lodged with his parents in another school district because they were old and helpless and he considered it his duty to stay with them at night, returning to his farm every morning, the district where his farm was situated was the district of his residence within Rev. St. 1899, c. 149, providing that all personal property shall be assessed in the county and district where the owners reside. State ex rel. Kelly v. Shep- herd, 117 S. W. 1169, 1172, 218 Mo. 656, 181 Am. St. Rep. 568.

Generally speaking, "domicile" and "residence" mean the same thing. And an inhabitant is defined to be one who has his domicile in a place or his fixed residence there. A person's residence is the place of his domicile, or the place where his habitation is fixed without any present intention of removing therefrom. State v. Snyder, 82 S. W. 12, 23, 182 Mo. 462 (citing Crawford v. Wilson [N. Y.] 4 Barb. 504; Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 903, 904).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 984, providing that actions not specified in the two preceding sections must be tried in the county in which one of the parties resided at the time the action was commenced, the word "resided" means a permanent residence. One's home, as distinguished from a mere stopping place for the transaction of either business or pleasure. It is nearly or quite synonymous with the word "domiciled," the permanent home and the place to which, whenever absent, one intends to return. Hence under the statute where defendant lived with his family at a certain place where he kept his horses, carriages, and servants, had business interest, and paid taxes, and maintained an office for the transaction of business at another place where he kept an apartment which he used while at the latter place transacting business, the former place was his residence. Washington v. Thomas, 92 N. Y. Supp. 994, 996, 103 App. Div. 423.

DOMICILE BY OPERATION OF LAW

"Domicile by operation of law" is the domicile which a woman acquired by marriage. Flynn v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 145 Fed. 265, 266.

Where a husband and wife were married and resided in Utah where the husband abandoned the wife, the "domicile of matrimony" continued in the state of Utah. State ex rel. Aldrich v. Morse, 87 Pac. 705, 706, 31 Utah, 213, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1127.

The "domicile of an infant" follows that of the father, notwithstanding the fact that the parents had separated and the father had promised to return the child to the mother at her request. Lanning v. Gregory (Tex.) 101 S. W. 484, 485.

"The 'domicile' of an infant is that of his father. * * * This domicile remains until the infant legally acquires another, and, since the law conclusively disables infants from acting for themselves during minority, their domicile cannot be altered by their own acts before reaching majority. Hence the legal domicile of infant orphans is at the place where the father was domiciled at the time of his death." In the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed that the minor children and heirs of a deceased person were residents of the place of decedent's residence at the time of his death. In re Bunting's Estate, 84 Pac. 109, 112, 30 Utah, 251 (quoting and adopting definition in Woerner, Law of Guardianship, pp. 80, 81).

DOMICILE OF CHOICE

To acquire a "domicile of choice," there must concur two things, an intention to change and a taking up of an actual abode at the place selected as a new domicile; and a new domicile is not acquired until there is not only a fixed intention of establishing a permanent residence, but also the carrying out of the intention by actual residence. Boyd's Ex'r v. Commonwealth, 149 S. W. 1022, 1023, 149 Ky. 764, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 580.

DOMICILE OF CORPORATION

The "domicile of a corporation" is within the jurisdiction that creates it, but it is a well-settled principle that foreign corporations seeking to do business within another jurisdiction, with some exceptions, can only enter it for the purpose of doing business under a permit, when it is required, and the law granting the permission can impose conditions that practically submit such corporation to the jurisdiction of the state, so far as pertains to the business there carried on. State v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 80 S. W. 544, 550, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 214.

Railroad corporations chartered by other states, but owning and operating railroads in this state, have the status of residents of this state, although they are not citizens of it, within the meaning of clause 1 of section 2 of article 3 and clause 1 of section 2 of article 4 of the Constitution of the United States, nor "domiciled" in this state in the technical sense of that term. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Allen, 52 S. E. 465, 472, 58 W. Va. 388, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 608, 112 Am. St. Rep. 975 (criticising Railroad Co. v. Rogers, 44 S. E. 300, 52 W. Va. 450, 82 L. R. A. 178).

The principal office or place of business of a corporation, especially in connection with the taxation of its property at such place, means its "domicile," which is the place where its governing power resides and is exercised, and, under the Tennessee statutes, where its charter is registered, and not where its ordinary business is conducted. Southern Exp. Co. v. Patterson, 123 S. W. 353, 359, 122 Tenn. 279 (citing 1 Desty, Tax'n, p. 341).

Where defendant contended that the plaintiff corporation was subject to the insolvent law because it was "domesticated" in the state, the court presumed the word "domesticated" was intended to convey, in conciliatory form, the information that plaintiff was "domiciled" in the state and therefore barred by the language and legal operation of the act. Bergner & Engel Brewing Co. v. Dreyfus, 51 N. E. 531, 532, 172 Mass. 154, 157, 70 Am. St. Rep. 251.

DOMICILE OF ORIGIN

The "domicile of origin" is defined as the primary domicile of every person subject to the common law. In re McElwaine's Will, 137 N. Y. Supp. 681, 682, 77 Misc. Rep. 317.

The place of one's birth is his "domicile of origin," and during minority he is without power to change the domicile, though it may be changed for him by his parent, guardian, or person having legal custody of him; but after majority he may change the domicile and obtain a domicile of choice. Boyd's Ex'r v. Commonwealth, 149 S. W. 1022, 1023, 149 Ky. 764, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 580.

DOMICILIARY LETTERS

Letters testamentary are of two kinds, "domiciliary letters" and ancillary letters"; the first being issued at the place of the testator's domicile, and the latter at some place, other than domicile, where personality of the testator is found. Such letters depend upon the situs of such personality, and do not authorize the administrator or representative to perform any act or to reduce to possession personality not within territorial authority of the court where issued. Lockwood v. United States Steel Corp. 138 N. Y. Supp. 725, 727, 153 App. Div. 655.

DOMICILIATED

"Domiciliated," in a foreign state, means that residence in such state is intended to be permanent, with no intention of returning to a former residence. A temporary removal, accompanied at all times by an intention to reoccupy the former home, will not forfeit a homestead right once enjoyed in the state. Gaar, Scott & Co. v. Burge, 110 S. W. 181, 184, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 590 (citing Cent. Dict.; Holliman's Heirs v. Peebles, 1 Tex. 689; Hardy v. De Leon, 5 Tex. 235; Lumpkin v. Nicholson, 30 S. W. 568, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 108).

DOMINANT CAUSE

As proximate cause, see Proximate Cause.

DOMINANT ESTATE OR TENEMENT

A "dominant estate" consists in property situated above or higher than that of a lower or subservient estate. Walther v. City of Cape Girardeau, 149 S. W. 36, 38, 166 Mo. App. 467.

"When one part of an estate is dependent for enjoyment on some use in the nature of an easement in the other part, and the owner conveys either part without express provision on the subject, the part so dependent, thence called the "dominant estate," carries or reserves with it an easement of such use in the other, thence called the "servient estate." Where plaintiff, owning a city lot on which two stores were erected separated by a division wall, conveyed the south half of the lot to defendant, which included the whole division wall, and did not reserve any easement in the wall or the property conveyed, no implied easement existed that entitled plaintiff to use the wall to sustain his remaining property, where there was no reason why plaintiff could not construct a new wall on his own property to sustain his building. Cherry v. Brizzolara, 116 S. W. 668, 671, 89 Ark. 309, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 508.

DOMINIO

As defined in the Encyclopedia of Law and Procedure, "dominio" is the right or power to dispose freely of a thing, if the law, the will of the testator, or some agreement does not prevent. Reade v. Lea, 95 Pac. 131, 140, 14 N. M. 442; Castillero v. United States, 2 Black, 1, 17 L. Ed. 360.

DOMINION

See Complete Dominion.

The word "dominion," in the rule that a donor, to make a valid gift inter vivos or causa mortis, must part, not only with the possession, but with the dominion, of the property, means perfect control in right of ownership; and dominion of personalty under a gift from a married woman will not be full in the donee, though the donor had absolute title, if the delivery by the donor was legally imperfect, because acting alone and without her husband's consent to her exercise of the authority of disposition. Biedsoe v. Fitts, 105 S. W. 1142, 1144, 1145, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 578.

"Dominion," as applied to a conveyance, means "to pass the instrument of writing from one man to another, as symbolic of his transferring the land to the person to whom it is delivered." Lancaster v. Lee, 51 S. E. 139, 141, 71 S. C. 280.

An instruction that if, at the time of the execution of the will, testator was so clearly under the "dominion" of any person as to prevent the free exercise of his judgment, he was lacking in testamentary capacity, was not open to the objection that it did not qualify "dominion" by "wrongful," as the element of wrongfulness was imparted to the word "dominion" by the qualification that it must go to the extent of depriving the testator of the free exercise of his judgment. Dowie v. Sutton, 81 N. E. 395, 396, 401, 227 Ill. 183, 118 Am. St. Rep. 266.

DONATE—DONATION

See Onerous Donation; Remunerative Donation.

A "donation" is the act by which the owner of a thing voluntarily transfers the title and possession of the same from himself to another person without consideration.

It is that which is transferred gratuitously, or without a valuable consideration. It is also public and serves some general purpose as distinguished from a "present." It is an act of kindness and courtesy or respect, as distinguished from a "gift," which is private and benefits the individual. State ex rel. Western Const. Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Clinton County, 76 N. E. 986, 994, 166 Ind. 162 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.; Webster's Dict.; Encyclopaedic Dict.; Crabbe).

"Donations" inhibited by Const. art. 1, par. 20, providing that no donation of land shall be made by the state or any municipal corporation to or for the use of any society, association, or corporation, means pure gifts. Trustees of Rutgers College v. Morgan, 60 Atl. 205, 207, 71 N. J. Law, 663. But payment by the city of a recognized moral obligation assumed by it for services rendered at its request is within the legislative power to authorize, and does not constitute a donation or appropriation of public funds within such prohibition. Morris & E. R. Co. v. City of Newark, 70 Atl. 194, 196, 76 N. J. Law, 555.

Const. art. 4, § 46, prohibiting the General Assembly from making any grant of public money to any individual, association, municipal, or other corporation whatsoever, does not prohibit the Legislature from making use of an individual or a corporation as a means through which it may apply appropriations to lawful purposes; and hence an ordinance of a city appropriating money to cover the expenses incurred by a policeman while in the performance of his duties as such officer in removing a nuisance from a public street, as expressly required by law, is not a "donation of public money to an individual" in violation of the Constitution. State ex rel. Applegate v. Taylor, 123 S. W. 892, 914, 224 Mo. 393 (quoting and adopting State ex rel. Crow v. St. Louis, 73 S. W. 623, 174 Mo. 125, 61 L. R. A. 593).

DONATIO CAUSA MORTIS

See Gift Causa Mortis.

DONATIO INTER VIVOS

See Gift Inter Vivos.

According to the lexicographers, a "donation" is a gift, and a gift is something which is freely given, and without consideration, but that is not according to the law of Louisiana. According to the Louisiana Code, there are three kinds of donations, viz., gratuitous donations, the onerous donation, and the remunerative donation; the first being the free gift, the second being a gift burdened with charges imposed by the donor, the third being a gift the object of which is to recompense for services rendered. In either case, the donation must be made by authentic act and it must be accepted by the donee in precise terms. Ackerman v. Larner, 40 South. 581, 587, 116 La. 101.

DONATION (In Civil Law)

See Gift; Onerous Donation; Remunerative Donation.

DONATION DEED

The term "donation deed," as used in Mansf. Dig. § 4475, providing that "no action for the recovery of any lands or the possession thereof against any person or persons, or their heirs or assigns, who may hold such lands * * * under a 'donation deed' from the state shall be maintained unless it appears that the plaintiff's ancestors or predecessors or grantor was seised or possessed of the land in question within two years next before the commencement of such suit or action," means a deed executed by the auditor or commissioner of state lands whereby lands forfeited to the state on account of the non-payment of taxes are conveyed to actual settlers who have made improvements and resided thereon to the extent and in the manner prescribed by the statutes, or who have undertaken to do so. Beasley v. Equitable Securities Co., 84 S. W. 224, 228, 72 Ark. 601.

DONE

See Business Done; Permanently Done.

Under a deed conveying land in consideration that the grantee would cultivate it and give the proceeds to the grantor during her life, and, if the grantee failed to do this and the grantor became dissatisfied, the deed to be null and void and the grantee to have pay "for what she has done," where the grantee failed to perform the agreement, and the grantor thereupon became dissatisfied and brought suit for a cancellation, the grantor was entitled to recover the land and its rental value during the grantee's occupancy, and the grantee was entitled to the enhancement in value of the land from improvements made by her and to the value of her work, labor, and services, but only so far as they were of benefit to the grantor, since the work could not be said to have been "done" for the grantor if of no benefit to her. Jones v. Sandlin, 75 S. E. 1075, 1076, 160 N. C. 150.

Under said implied covenants, an incumbrance upon property at the time the grantor acquired the title to it is not within the covenant against incumbrances "done, made or suffered" by the grantor, unless it appears that he was under personal obligation to pay it. Polak v. Mattson, 128 Pac. 89, 91, 22 Idaho, 727.

The use of the words "done in the presence of" two witnesses, in lieu of "signed and sealed in the presence of," does not render a tax deed void. The word "done" is as broad as, if not broader than, the words "signed and sealed," and may comprehend the idea of the execution as well as the signing and sealing. Smith v. Phillips, 41 South. 527, 529, 51 Fla. 327.

DONEE

As assignee, see Assignee.

While a usufructuary use may be given under a will, without devising the entire estate, an equitable estate given is sufficient to make the person to whom it is granted a "donee," within the statute against perpetuities. Henry v. Henderson, 58 South. 354, 357, 101 Miss. 751.

DOOM

Under an assessment of specific bank stock and money at interest, where defendant had returned no list and the assessors had no knowledge of any particular items of money at interest, but the assessment represented their judgment of the amount for which defendant was liable to be taxed on that account, the assessment of money at interest was a "doom" so called, and included all forms of interest-bearing securities whether represented by bonds, notes, or otherwise. Sweetsir v. Chandler, 56 Atl. 584, 586, 98 Me. 145.

DOOR

See Front Door; Permanent Door.
Doors hung, see On and Hung.

A sheriff's return on an order providing for the surrender and reissue of county warrants, reciting that the sheriff posted notices at each "entrance" to the courthouses in two places specified, sufficiently showed that the notices were posted at the courthouse "door," as required by statute. Yell County v. Wills, 103 S. W. 618, 619, 83 Ark. 229.

DOORWAY

See Principal Doorway.

DOP

A "dop" is an implement for holding a diamond in position to polish the facets, the table, and the culet, in distinction from the harder or more violent processes of cutting the diamond. American Patent Diamond Dop Co. v. Wood, 189 Fed. 891, 892.

DORMANCY—DORMANT

While the statute relative to dormant judgments does not define "dormancy" or apply to a condition arising on the death of a party to the judgment, such condition is constantly spoken of as "dormancy," and a long line of decisions have assimilated this condition to that of a judgment dormant for want of the timely issuance of execution, until they must be regarded as practically identical. Manley v. Mayer, 75 Pac. 550, 556, 68 Kan. 377, 1 Ann. Cas. 825.

DORMANT JUDGMENT

A "dormant judgment" is one that has not been satisfied or barred by lapse of time, but is temporarily inoperative, so far as the right to issue execution is concerned. Gale Mfg. Co. v. Dupree (Tex.) 146 S. W. 1048, 1051 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 2183); General Electric Co. v. Hurd, 171 Fed. 984, 986; White v. Ress, 115 N. W. 301, 302, 80 Neb. 749 (quoting and adopting definition in Draper v. Nixon, 8 South. 489, 93 Ala. 436).*

A "dormant judgment" is one on which execution was not issued within the time allowed by law. Spiller v. Hollinger (Tex.) 148 S. W. 338, 340. It is a judgment without generative vitality. In order that it may have efficiency, it must be awakened revived. It does not authorize the issuance of an execution, and all proceedings based on such judgment are void. Denny v. Ross, 79 Pac. 502, 503, 70 Kan. 720.

The word "dormant," as applied to judgments, is broad enough to cover judgments which have not wholly lost their vitality, but which cannot support an execution for want of necessary parties. Manley v. Mayer, 75 Pac. 550, 556, 68 Kan. 377, 1 Ann. Cas. 825.

Under Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 4022, providing that executions cannot be issued by a justice of the peace after three years without revivor, a judgment not revived within three years is "dormant"; in a state of suspended animation, in which state nothing can be done toward enforcing it. Blick v. Boyd, 100 S. W. 1128, 1129, 124 Mo. App. 58.

A judgment obtained in a justice's court is "dormant," where the execution issued thereon is more than seven years old, and neither the execution nor any official entry thereon has been entered upon the superior court execution docket, although it has, within the period named, been entered on the general execution docket, and under such circumstances will not support garnishment proceedings. Ingram v. Jackson Mercantile Co., 58 S. E. 372, 373, 2 Ga. App. 218.

A decree for alimony is not a judgment within the meaning of Rev. St. § 5380, which provides that a judgment on which execution has not issued for five years shall become "dormant" and shall cease to operate as a lien on real estate; nor within section 5357, which provides for the revivor of a "dormant judgment." Lemert v. Lemert, 74 N. E. 194, 195, 72 Ohio St. 364, 106 Am. St. Rep. 621, 2 Ann. Cas. 914.

A "dormant judgment" is a debt of record, and the rule requiring the defendant to plead the statute of limitations if he desires to take advantage of the bar applies to a proceeding instituted thereon, whether it be an ordinary suit on the judgment, or a scire facias to revive the same. Helms v. Marshall, 49 S. E. 733, 734, 121 Ga. 769 (citing Lewis v. Allen, 68 Ga. 400).

DORMANT PARTNER

with it is unknown. Both secrecy and inactivity are implied thereby. National Bank of Salem v. Thomas, 47 N. Y. 15, 19 (citing Pars. Partn. 33; Winship v. Bank of United States, 5 Pet. [30 U. S.] 573, 8 L. Ed. 216; North v. Bloss, 30 N. Y. 374); Wm. L. Allen & Co. v. Davids, 49 S. E. 846, 848, 70 S. C. 260 (citing Reab v. Pool, 8 S. E. 703, 30 S. C. 140, 144). A partner who, though inactive, was not a secret partner, and hence not a dormant partner, was not relieved of the necessity of giving notice of retirement to escape liability for goods sold to the firm under the old name. Griggs & Co. v. Levy, 117 N. Y. Supp. 116, 117, 63 Misc. Rep. 348.

Where a "partnership" was composed of three persons, but two of them were the sole administrative agents thereof, using their judgment for the judgment and skill of the partnership without consultation with the third partner as to any matters connected with the partnership, the third partner, who permitted the other two to hold themselves out and to act as the sole members of the firm, was a "dormant partner," within the construction given to that term that it implies the quality of secrecy and inactivity, but that it is often used as synonymous with "unknown," and that a "dormant partner" combines in himself the character of both the secret and the silent partners. Kneisley Lumber Co. v. Edward B. Stoddard Co., 109 S. W. 840, 841, 845, 131 Mo. App. 15.

DOSER

A "doser" is a flat car equipped with wings, constructed of steel and wood, which may be raised and lowered, the purpose of which is to improve the railway roadbed close to the ends of the ties. Winter v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 186 N. W. 1089, 118 Minn. 487.

DOTAL PROPERTY

"Dotal property" is that which the wife brings to the husband to assist him in bearing the expenses of the marriage establishment. Extradotal property, otherwise called "paraphernal property," is that which forms no part of the dowry. Nalle v. Young, 16 Sup. Ct. 420, 425, 160 U. S. 624, 40 L. Ed. 560 (citing Fleitas v. Richardson, 13 Sup. Ct. 495, 147 U. S. 550, 553, 37 L. Ed. 276; Rev. Civ. Code La. arts. 2332, 2399, 2334, 2335).

DOUBLE

The word "double," in Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1888, art. 23, § 85 L, as added by Laws 1892, c. 109, providing that every stockholder of a bank or trust company shall be liable to depositors and creditors for double the amount of stock at par value held by such stockholder in the corporation, means twice the par value of the stock held in addition to the amount paid by them on their stock subscription. It is therefore immaterial whether the stockholder has paid his subscription in full or not. Murphy v. Wheatley, 63 Atl. 62, 63, 102 Md. 501.

DOUBLE ASSESSMENT

Where city lots were assessed as acreage property at a certain valuation, and this assessment was not objected to either by the assessor or by the board of equalization, and the owner paid the taxes levied on such assessment, a subsequent assessment of the property by lots and blocks to unknown owners constituted a "double assessment." McMickle v. Rochelle (Tex.) 125 S. W. 74, 75.

DOUBLE BLAST

A "double blast," when used as a signal by meeting vessels under steam, means, "I am directing my course to port." The William Chisholm, 153 Fed. 704, 712, 82 C. C. A. 562.

DOUBLE BOND

See Simplex Obligatio.

DOUBLE COSTS

By "double costs" is meant twice the amount of ordinary costs. Hopper v. Smith, 60 A. 63, 64, 72 N. J. Law, 168.

DOUBLE CUT

When the engine upon the lead track moved back with sufficient force so that the momentum of uncoupled cars, when the train is slackened, is sufficient to carry such cars upon the switch track, the operation is what is known as a "double cut." Griffin v. Minnesota Transfer Ry. Co., 102 N. W. 391, 392, 94 Minn. 191.

DOUBLE DAMAGES

Damages as including, see Damage—Damages.

The word "double" in a statute giving "double" damages for killing any horse in an inclosure not fenced, cannot be construed to mean one-half a unit, or the amount found by the jury, and, where the verdict was for $160, authorizes a judgment for $320. Withington v. Hilderbrand, 1 Mo. 290, 281.

DOUBLE ENTRY

The phrase "double entry," as used in bookkeeping, signifies two entries of the same transaction. United States v. Morse, 161 Fed. 429, 437.

DOUBLE HEADER

The term "double header," as used in the operation of railroads, means a train drawn by two engines. Vencill v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co., 112 S. W. 1030, 1031, 182 Mo. App. 722; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Jenkins, 69 S. W. 233, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 440.

DOUBLE INSURANCE

"Double insurance" or "co-insurance" occurs when several policies are effected for the benefit of the same person on the same subject-matter, while "re-insurance" is effected by the insurer for his own protection. Ocean S. S. Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co., 121 Fed. 882, 887.

The term "double insurance" means an insurance of the same interest, and is entirely different from "reinsurance," which is a contract of indemnity to the person or corporation reinsured for the whole loss sustained in respect to the subject of the insurance to the extent to which he is reinsured. Providence-Washington Fire Ins. Co. v. Atlanta-Birmingham Fire Ins. Co., 166 Fed. 548, 553.

When two or more policies are taken out on the same interest, it is called "double insurance"; and, where the policies in case of double insurance contain no provision that the several insurers shall be liable in case of loss, each for such a proportion of the loss as the several amounts insured bear to each other, the insured may resort to any of the insurers to recover the whole loss; and such insurer, upon the payment of the whole loss, may resort to the other insurers for their respective contributions. Such insurers are regarded in the light of cosureties and identical in interest; but where the policies constituting double insurance provide that the insurer is to be bound to prorate in case of double insurance according to the whole amount insured, whether the same is valid or invalid, the insured cannot recover from any one of the insurers a greater proportion of the loss sustained than the sum insured by that insurer bears to the whole amount insured thereon. A condition in a policy for pro rata payment in case of other insurance, "valid or invalid," does not apply to policies issued at the instance of agents of the first company and without the knowledge, consent, or ratification of the insured. London & L. Fire Ins. Co. v. Turnbull, 5 S. W. 542, 544, 86 Ky. 230.

A towing company insured a cargo of corn under a policy issued to it "on account of whom it may concern." The owner of the cargo also had it insured. Held, that in the absence of adoption by the owner of the towing company's insurance, or unless it was within the contemplation of the towing company that the owner should receive the insurance, the policy issued to such company did not inure to the benefit of the owner, so as to result in "double insurance," within a clause of the policy providing that, if the insured shall have any other insurance upon the property prior in date thereto, then the company shall be answerable only for the deficiency required to fully recover the property insured. Western Assur. Co. v. Chesapeake Lighterage & Towing Co., 65 Atl. 637, 639, 105 Md. 232, 11 Ann. Cas. 956.

DOUBLE-LINE RATES

The distinction in Laws 1905, c. 358, establishing rates for transportation of oil, between "single-line rates" and "double-line rates," is between rates for shipment over a single line and for shipment over more than one line. Tucker v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 108 Pac. 89, 90, 82 Kan. 222.

DOUBLE-TAPE FUSE

One essential difference between a "double-tape fuse" and a "triple-tape fuse" is that the double-tape fuse lacks one outside wrapper that belongs to the triple-tape. The additional wrapper is a greater protection against moisture and makes the triple-tape article safer where dampness is encountered. Another difference is found in the fact that with the absence of the additional wrapper on double-tape fuse it is not as firm as the triple-tape, and in the process of tamping some small pieces of rock or coal may be tamped against it and produce a dent that may break the progress of the fire when ignited. Currans v. Seattle & S. F. Ry. & Nav. Co., 76 Pac. 87, 88, 34 Wash. 512.

DOUBLE TAXATION

"Double taxation" exists only where levied upon the same property in the same jurisdiction, and hence the taxation of shares in a foreign corporation is not obnoxious, as being double, because they have been taxed in another state. Judy v. Beckwith, 114 N. W. 565, 568, 137 Iowa, 24, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 142, 15 Ann. Cas. 890.

"By 'duplicate taxation' is understood the requirement that one person or any one subject of taxation shall directly contribute twice to the same burden, while other subjects of taxation belonging to the same class are required to contribute but once; but, where the same property represents distinct values belonging to different persons, the fact that each is taxed on the value which the property represents in his hands does not constitute 'double taxation.'" Harvey Coal & Coke Co. v. Dillon, 53 S. E. 928, 941, 59 W. Va. 605, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 628.

The taxation of a real estate mortgage in addition to the taxation of the real estate itself is not "double taxation," though the mortgagor may pay the tax both upon the real estate and the mortgage. Stumpf v. Storz, 120 N. W. 618, 619, 156 Mich. 228, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 152.

It is not "double taxation" to impose a license tax on a business and at the same time to tax the capital used by the ad valorem system. Bradley v. City of Richmond, 66 S. E. 872, 874, 110 Va. 521.

"The imposition of a tax twice upon one person for the same purpose because of his ownership of a particular piece of property would be a 'double tax' and invalid." William S. Wilkens Co. v. Mayor, etc., of City of Baltimore, 63 Atl. 562, 565, 103 Md. 293, 7 Ann. Cas. 1192 (quoting and adopting definition in United States Electric Power & Light Co. v. State, 28 Atl. 768, 79 Md. 63).

DOUBLE TRACK

An ordinance granting a street railroad company the right to lay its tracks required the single tracks to be laid in the center of the streets, and authorized double tracks on a certain street, to be laid on either side of the center of the street. The company sought to construct in a certain block of such street two tracks which continued parallel for a short distance on each side of the center line, when they reunited with the single track. Held, that the word "switch" has a meaning in addition to its technical meaning, depending upon its character, the word ordinarily meaning a side track constructed to permit the passage of cars from and to the main track; and the track which the company sought to construct was a "switch," and not a "double track," within the meaning of the ordinance. City of Denison v. Denison & S. Ry. Co., 127 S. W. 804, 103 Tex. 344.

DOUBT

See Fair Doubt; Reasonable Doubt; Simple Doubt.

"Doubt" is a state of mind in which a conclusion cannot be reached upon the question before it. If it is not due to mental inability to co-ordinate facts in evidence, it must arise from the absence of some material fact, or because such a fact has not been sufficiently established by the evidence, and therefore the foundations for belief are insufficient. People v. Bonifacio, 82 N. E. 1098, 1099, 190 N. Y. 150.

By "doubts" arising in the construction of statutes is not meant those which are engendered by the predilection of the court or its own notions of what the law ought to be, but such doubts as are inherent in the nature of the problem to be solved. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Delk, 158 Fed. 931, 934, 86 C. C. A. 95, 14 Ann. Cas. 238.

DOUBTFUL CLAIM

A "doubtful or disputed claim," sufficient to constitute a good consideration for an executory contract or compromise, is one honestly and in good faith asserted, arising from a state of facts on which a cause of action can be predicated, with a reasonable belief on the part of the party asserting it that he has a fair chance of sustaining his claim, and concerning which an honest controversy may arise, though in fact the claim may be wholly unfounded. Sharp v. Bowie, 76 Pac. 62, 65, 142 Cal. 462 (quoting Beach, Contracts, § 175).

DOUBTFUL LANGUAGE

The term "doubtful or ambiguous language," as applied by a court to a contract made with reference to a law, means language whose true meaning can find no exposition by reference alone to the language of the law itself. Hale Bros. v. Millikin, 90 Pac. 365, 371, 5 Cal. App. 344.

DOUBTFUL TITLE

A title is "doubtful" if it exposes the party holding it to the hazard of litigation. A title was so doubtful that the purchaser should not be compelled to accept the same, where it rested on a deed executed by a foreign assignee by order of a court of Iowa, though the vendor obtained judgment quieting title on service by publication against the foreign assignor, the assignee, and the party to whom the assignee had conveyed. McNutt v. Nellans, 108 Pac. 834, 835, 82 Kan. 424.

The term "doubt or supposed flaw," as used in cases relating to salability of land titles, refers to the character of the doubt or flaw as the court views it, and not as it may be viewed by the indeterminate judgment of the real estate market. A title dependent on a fact is not doubtful or unmarketable where the fact is so conclusively proved in a suit by the vendor for specific performance that a verdict against the existence of the fact would not be allowed to stand in a court of law, and where there is no reasonable ground for apprehending that the same fact cannot be in like manner proved, if necessary, at any time thereafter, for the protection of the purchaser. Barger v. Gery, 53 Atl. 483, 485, 64 N. J. Eq. 263.

DOWER

See As Dower; Election Dower; Husband's Dower; Inchoate Right of Dower.

In lieu of dower, see In Lieu of.
Subject to dower, see Subject To.

The word "dower" has a well-defined and generally understood legal meaning. It is that portion of lands or tenements which the wife hath for the term of her life of the lands or tenements of her husband after his decease for the sustenance of herself and the nurture and education of her children. In re Martens, 94 N. Y. Supp. 297, 300, 106 App. Div. 50 (citing 14 Cyc. p. 880).

"Dower" is a right which, inchoate during the coverture, becomes absolutely vested in the wife, as an estate, on the death of her husband; and it is as much beyond his control or power of disposition as her own inheritance. It not being his to give, every devise which he makes of the land upon which the right of dower attaches is presumed to be given subject to the legal estate, unless the contrary appears on the face of the will, in express words or by the strongest kind of implication. Nagle v. Tieperman, 88 Pac. 969, 970, 74 Kan. 82, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 674, 10 Ann. Cas. 977; (quoting and adopting definition in Cunningham v. Shannon [S. C.] 4 Rich. Eq. 135, 140); Chrisman v. Linderman, 109 S. W. 1090, 1094, 202 Mo.

"Dower" accrues to the widow, and not to the wife, and until she becomes a widow her right is inchoate and contingent. Her claim can only become effective on the death of her husband and her survival. Sherman v. Hayward, 90 N. Y. Supp. 481, 482, 98 App. Div. 254.

Statutory allowances to a widow are not part of "dower" proper, although partaking of its nature. Ellis v. Ellis, 96 S. W. 260, 261, 119 Mo. App. 63 (citing Bryant v. McCune, 49 Mo. 546). Dower in land is taken free from the husband's debts. Brown v. Tucker's Estate, 117 S. W. 96, 97, 135 Mo. App. 598.

"Dower" ordinarily means the interest which the law gives to a widow in the lands of her deceased husband, and has no application to the relation of parent and child. Middleworth v. Ordway, 84 N. E. 291, 293, 181 N. Y. 404.

Assignment of dower distinguished

See Assignment of Dower.

Thirds distinguished

The words "dower" and "thirds" in themselves have each a uniform, established meaning both in law and in common usage; the former meaning a widow's life estate in one-third of the inheritable real estate of which the husband was seised during coverture, and the latter meaning her absolute estate in one-third of her husband's personal property remaining after payment of his debts. Shipley v. Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co., 62 Atl. 814-818, 102 Md. 649.

As chose in action

See Chose in Action.

As an estate in land

"Dower" is the right of a wife to an estate for life in one-third of the lands, according to valuation, of which the husband was seised and possessed at the time of his death. Cole v. Cole, 68 S. E. 784, 785, 185 Ga. 19. It is subject to be dealt with as any other life estate. The interest of the life tenant or dowress is subject to levy and sale at the instance of her creditors. Rusk v. Hill, 49 S. E. 261, 121 Ga. 379.

Dower is an interest in land of which the husband is seised during coverture, arising in favor of the wife upon the consummation of marriage and the seisin of the husband. Elder v. McIntosh, 70 S. E. 807, 809, 88 S. C. 286.

"Dower" is a freehold estate which can never be carved out of an estate for years. Moss Point Lumber Co. v. Board of Sup'rs, 42 South. 290, 298, 89 Miss. 448.

"Dower" is not an estate in land, vested or otherwise. McKelvey v. McKelvey, 89 Pac. 663, 666, 75 Kan. 825, 121 Am. St. Rep. 435.

"Dower of use" constitutes a life estate. Goldsboro Lumber Co. v. Hines Bros. Lumber Co., 68 S. E. 929, 930, 153 N. C. 49.

As incumbrance

See Incumbrance.

As interest in property

See Interest (In Property).

As a lien

"Dower" is not a mortgage or lien of any kind, but an estate. It is an incumbrance in the sense that it incumbers a title. Wilson v. Wilson, 105 N. Y. Supp. 151, 153, 120 App. Div. 581.

As applying to personality

The fact that Rev. St. 1909, § 349, giving to a widow a child's part of her husband's personal property, is in the chapter entitled "Dower," does not make such widow's provision dower, nor require its admeasurement in the manner prescribed for the admeasurement of dower in real property. Howard v. Strode, 146 S. W. 792, 794, 242 Mo. 210, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1057.

Where a testator made a devise to his wife, intending that she should receive no other property from his estate, and used the term "dower" to express that, that term will not be given its technical meaning. Zook v. Welty, 137 S. W. 989, 991, 156 Mo. App. 703.

DOWER INTEREST

As estate, see Estate.

During the life of the husband, "dower interest," the statutory interest which a wife has in the real estate of her husband prior to his death, is in no sense a vested one growing out of the marriage contract, but a mere expectancy or possibility incident to the marriage relation, contingent on her surviving the husband. Stitt v. Smith, 113 N. W. 632, 633, 102 Minn. 253, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 723 (citing Randall v. Krieger, 23 Wall. [90 U. S.] 137, 148, 23 L. Ed. 124; Griswold v. McGee, 112 N. W. 1020, 102 Minn. 114, 12 Ann. Cas. 186; Morrison v. Rice, 29 N. W. 168, 35 Minn. 436).

DOWN

See Handed Down.

DOWNRIGHT EVIDENCE

An instruction requiring the jury to determine all disputed facts by a preponderance of testimony covers a requested instruction requiring plaintiff to establish certain facts by "downright evidence." Roe v. Bachelder, 41 Wis. 360, 363.

DOZEN

See Per Dozen.

DR.

"The abbreviations 'Cr.' and 'Dr.' when used in bookkeeping, mean to enter upon the credit and debit sides of the account respectively. They are generally used as adjectives, descriptive of the side of the account. They may also be used as nouns, the first as designating a person to whom an obligation accrues, and the latter the person on whom the obligation rests, as creditor and debtor, and they may be used as words to designate the act of crediting or debiting an item on an account, but in none of these senses are they used to denote a present matured indebtedness. When a statement of account is made out using the term 'Dr.' without more, it simply indicates that the person owes the various items. It does not indicate a matured indebtedness." *Jaqua v. DRAIN

See Natural Drain.

Extension of drain, see Extend—Extension.

The term "drain" has no technical or exact meaning, but, as generally understood, means any artificial channel or drainage for the removal of water. Benzoni Drainage Commission v. Winn, 53 South. 773, 779, 98 Miss. 359.

The word "drain" is synonymous with "water course," as used in the County Ditch Law, and the county commissioners are without authority to convert a living stream of water into a ditch by proceedings for the locating and constructing of a ditch. Greene County Com'rs v. Harbine, 78 N. E. 521, 522, 74 Ohio St. 318.

Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 4309, defining the word "drain" to include any water course or ditch, opened or proposed to be opened and improved for the purpose of drainage and any artificial ditch proposed or constructed for such purpose, and section 4312 declaring that the drain commissioner shall have jurisdiction over all drains within his county, where a railroad originally maintained an open culvert over a water course and afterwards filled up the culvert and inserted an iron pipe for drainage, after which the drainage commissioner established a new drain, crossing the railroad's right of way at the point of the culvert, the commissioner could invoke the aid of the court to assist him in opening a culvert through the railroad fill. Pere Marquette R. Co. v. Wellman, 122 N. W. 303, 305, 157 Mich. 699.

Where the owner of lower lands connects a drain to a drain constructed by the owner of upper lands, the drain so connected is under the direct provisions of Laws 1889, p. 116, §§ 1, 3, a "drain for the mutual benefit of all the lands interested" therein, and none of the parties have the right, without the consent of all the parties interested therein, to fill it up or in any manner interfere therewith so as to obstruct the flow of water therein. Dorman v. Droll, 74 N. E. 152, 154, 215 Ill. 262.

Ditch synonymous

The words "drain" and "ditch" have no exact or technical meaning; they both may mean a hollow or open place in the ground, natural or artificial, where water is collected or conducted off, and if sufficiently defined they may bound land as other natural objects. Sherrod v. Battle, 70 S. E. 834, 836, 154 N. C. 345.

Sewers

The only difference between "drains" and "sewers" is that they are called sewers in cities and closely populated communities, while they are called drains in rural and agricultural communities, and the further difference that sewers are generally covered over to prevent the escape and dissemination of foul odors and noxious gases and conceal the passage of their contents through the streets, while drains are open. There is, however, no difference in the legal principles applicable to the two. Mound City Land & Stock Co. v. Miller, 70 S. W. 721, 724, 170 Mo. 240, 60 L. R. A. 190, 94 Am. St. Rep. 727.

Under the Oregon act (Laws 1909, p. 73) which provides for incorporation of ports, and that where the limits of a port do not include an entire county they shall not extend beyond the natural watershed of any drainage basin whose waters flow into another bay, estuary, or navigable river, the drainage basin of a bay comprises all its arms and inlets, and land situated on the watershed of a slough constituting an arm of the bay was properly included in the territory of a port established on the bay. Hale v. Sengstacken, 192 Fed. 641, 642.

It is a local subdivision of the state, created for the purpose of administering therein certain functions of local government. People ex rel. Wetz v. Hepler, 88 N. E. 491, 492, 240 Ill. 196.

DRAMA

See, also, Play.

DRAMATIC COMPOSITION

A stage performance consisting of the singing of well-known songs by a woman dressed to personate other singers, prefaced by a short and commonplace dialogue having no reference to such performance, and with a kinetoscope exhibition during the intervals when the performer is changing costume, in which she is shown while making such changes by means of moving pictures previously taken photographically on a film, is not a "dramatic composition." Barnes v. Miner, 122 Fed. 480, 490.

A sketch, consisting of a series of recitations and songs, with a very little dialogue and action, and with scenery, and lights thrown upon the singer, is a "dramatico-musical composition," within the provisions of the copyright law. Under Copyright Law, § 5, providing that an error in classification shall not invalidate a copyright, the classification of a dramatico-musical composition as a dramatic composition does not affect the validity of the copyright. Green v. Luby, 177 Fed. 287, 288.

DRAMATIZE

The public exhibition of moving pictures of the incidents of a copyrighted book is an infringement of the exclusive right given to the author by U. S. Rev. St. § 4952, as amended, to dramatize his work. Kalem Co. v. Harper Bros., 32 Sup. Ct. 20, 21, 222 U. S. 55, 56 L. Ed. 92, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1285.

DRAMSHOP

Webster defines a "dramshop" as "a shop or barroom where spirits are sold by the dram." Malkan v. City of Chicago, 75 N. E. 548, 551, 217 Ill. 471, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 488, 3 Ann. Cas. 1104. It is a place where one is engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors as a business. State ex rel. Young v. Minnesota Club, 119 N. W. 494, 496, 106 Minn. 515, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1101.

In some jurisdictions there is a distinction made between a "dramshop" and a "tippling house"; in others no distinction is recognized. Both are places where intoxicating liquors may be purchased at retail. In a legislative sense there is a recognized distinction made between them in Missouri. The Legislature has designated a licensed place for the sale of intoxicating liquors as a dramshop, and to be a dramshop, as known to the law, it must be licensed. The charter of cities of the third class does not authorize the suppression of the dramshop known as such by the general law. Such cities have no power either under the authority to suppress tippling houses, or under the general law regulating dramshops, to adopt an ordinance making it unlawful for a keeper of a dramshop to allow women to enter it and obtain liquor. City of Joplin v. Jacobs, 96 S. W. 219, 220, 119 Mo. App. 184.

A "dramshop," as defined by statute, is a place where spirituous or vinous or malt liquors are retailed in quantities of less than one gallon. The term has in popular acceptance a more restricted meaning, and is commonly used to designate a place where intoxicating liquor is sold at a public bar. The dispensing by a bona fide social club to its members without profit, and as incidental merely to its organization, of intoxicating liquors is a violation of the statute declaring a punishment for whoever, not having a license to keep a dramshop, sells intoxicating liquors to be drunk on the premises. South Shore Country Club v. People, 81 N. E. 805, 806, 228 Ill. 75, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 519, 119 Am. St. Rep. 417, 10 Ann. Cas. 383.

Whether or not a restaurant is a "dramshop" depends upon the character of the business that is carried on therein. Denver City Ordinance 1892, No. 102, § 1, providing that no person or corporation within the city shall directly or indirectly sell or give away any intoxicating or malt liquors, to be drunk on the premises where sold or given away, without a license first obtained from the city, was applicable to a person who was a bona fide restaurant keeper, and who sold liquor only to customers to be drunk only in connection with a meal. Scanlon v. City of Denver, 88 Pac. 156, 157, 38 Colo. 401.

DRAMSHOP KEEPER

A "dramshop keeper" is defined by Rev. St. 1899, § 2990, as a person licensed to sell intoxicating liquors in any quantity not exceeding 10 gallons, and section 2991 provides that no person shall, directly or indirectly, sell intoxicating liquors in any quantity less than three gallons, either at retail or in the original package, without taking out a license as a dramshop keeper. St. Louis City Ordinances, § 2030, defines a dramshop keeper as a person permitted by law or ordinance to sell intoxicating liquors in any quantity less than one gallon, and forbids any one selling intoxicating liquors in less quantities than a gallon without a license under the ordinance. Held, that the words "dramshop keeper," in the ordinance, have a wider significance than that given them by the statute, and that the words should be construed as defined in the statute and the ordinance, respectively, for the particular provisions of each; and hence, there being nothing in the ordinance which impinges on any right of a dramshop keeper under the statute, the ordinance is not in conflict with the statute. City of St. Louis v. Tielkemeyer, 125 S. W. 1123, 1126, 226 Mo. 130; Same v. Glum, 125 S. W. 1128, 226 Mo. 147.

The term "dramshop keeper" implies a license to sell intoxicating liquors. State v. Barnett, 85 S. W. 613, 614, 110 Mo. App. 592 (citing State v. Shafer, 82 Mo. App. 58).

DRAUGHT OR DRIVING VEHICLE

A tramway upon which small cars were operated by gravity, except for a short distance, when sometimes used to haul dirt from the pits to plaintiff's brickmaking machinery would not be included with the provision of an insurance policy exempting the company from losses caused by any "draught or driving animal or vehicle." South Knoxville Brick Co. v. Empire State Surety Co., 150 S. W. 92, 93, 126 Tenn. 402.

DRAW

As depression in land

"In the state of Nebraska, whose surface consists of more or less rolling plains, the action of the elements has caused by erosion a system of natural drainage channels, locally termed 'draws' or 'ravines,' usually beginning with a slight depression in the surface and gradually deepening as they reach well-defined streams and water courses, which are, as compared with those of more humid states, comparatively few in number. These draws form natural drainage channels for surface water and are largely instrumental in promoting the interests of agriculture and the healthfulness and salubrity of the climate by furnishing an unsurpassed natural drainage system, and thus quickly removing from the soil any excess rains or melting snows. These channels are usually dry, but are often deep enough with running water after storms to swim a horse. They afford almost the only means of surface drainage available to the husbandman, and his right to the use of the same, reasonably exercised, should not lightly be impaired. Aldritt v. Fleischauer, 103 N. W. 1084, 1085, 74 Neb. 66, 70 L. R. A. 301.

As applied to warrants

While, under the statute providing that the county supervisor shall "draw" his warrant, he need not personally write the whole warrant, or fill up the blank spaces, the word "draw" being used in the sense of "issue," yet it is his duty before signing them to examine the claims for payment of which they issued, and see that they are proper, and have been itemized, verified, and approved as required by statute, which duty he cannot delegate, except at the peril of himself and bondsman. Richland County v. Owens, 75 S. E. 549, 551, 552, 92 S. C. 329.

DRAWING

See Shop Drawing.

The punishment known as "drawing" consists in tying a culprit's feet to a horse's tail and dragging him along the ground to the place of his execution. State v. Woodward, 69 S. E. 385, 388, 68 W. Va. 66, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1004.

The word "drawings" means a representation of objects made with a point, such as a pen, pencil, or crayon, and may be applied to an incomplete sketch as well as to finished plans. In an action by an architect to recover for his services, an instruction was not improper for referring to incomplete plans as drawings. Atchison v. McKinnie, 84 N. E. 208, 209, 233 Ill. 106.

Where the coal in any division or section of a mine has been exhausted, all the miners are withdrawn from that particular place, and the stumps or pillars of coal supporting the roof over the room in which the miners work are taken out for the coal they contain. In removing them, props of timber are used to support the roof. The removing of these pillars or stumps is called "drawing the stumps." East Jellico Coal Co. v. Golden (Ky.) 79 S. W. 291, 292.

DRAWN IN QUESTION

Where real estate is held by virtue of some right in the property, so that the right of possession cannot be determined without adjusting the right in the property itself, then the "title to real estate" is "drawn in question," within the meaning of the statute, stating that "justice courts cannot try actions which involve title to real estate, or in which such title is drawn in question." Stone v. Blanchard, 126 N. W. 766, 768, 87 Neb. 1.

The validity of a statute or treaty of the United States is not "drawn in question," within Rev. St. U. S. § 709, every time rights claimed under a statute or treaty are controverted, nor is the validity of an authority every time an act done by such authority is disputed. Zikos v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co., 179 Fed. 893, 899.

DRAWN JURY

A jury impaneled by the process provided for by Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, §§ 2221, 2222, was denominated a "drawn jury." Burroughs v. United States, 90 S. W. 8, 9, 6 Ind. T. 164.

Under V. S. 1127, providing that certain jurors shall be disqualified from serving again for two years, a plea in abatement alleging that a particular person was summoned as juror, and attended, qualified, and acted as such through the term, "without this, that said [juror] was during said last-mentioned session of said court summoned as a petit juror to serve at said session of court," was demurrable, because not showing that the juror was not "drawn" as a special or struck juror; the allegation that he was summoned not being sufficient for this purpose, in view of sections 1134, 1137, speaking of a struck jury as "drawn" and calling it a "special jury." State v. Waterman, 62 Atl. 1016, 1017, 78 Vt. 379.

DRAWNWORK

The provision for articles "embroidered," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule J, par. 339, 30 Stat. 181, held to include so-called "drawnwork" goods, consisting of fabrics in which an openwork effect has been produced by drawing out certain of the threads and interjecting different and independent threads, and which have ornamental work and figures in various portions of the goods. Beach v. Sharpe, 154 Fed. 543, 544 (citing J. R. Simon & Co. v. United States, 131 Fed. 649; United States v. B. Ulmann & Co., 139 Fed. 3, 71 C. C. A. 415; Neuss, Hesslein & Co. v. United States, 142 Fed. 281; In re Protests of Homer and Stevens, G. A. 4,643 [T. D. 21, 944]).

DRAW-PLATES

"Draw-plates," so called, consisting, respectively, of bars and blocks with holes for wire drawing, are not dutiable as steel plates. The appellation of "draw-plates" cannot bring articles within the enumeration of "plates," which are not plates in form, nor commercially known as plates, and to which such name has clung inappropriately because plates were formerly used for the same purpose. Newman v. United States, 159 Fed. 123, 86 C. O. A. 511.

DREDGING

DRESS

DRESS GOODS

Wool dress robes or dress patterns, consisting of women's dress goods of wool, embroidered with silk, imported in single patterns in separate lengths and pieces, each pattern comprising the material for the body and trimming of a dress, are "dress goods." Thomas v. Wanamaker, 129 Fed. 92, 93, 63 C. C. A. 594.

Embroidered woolen dress goods are dutiable as "dress goods * * * of wool, and not specially provided for," under paragraph 369, Schedule K, § 1, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 184. Hall & Bishop v. United States, 131 Fed. 648; Hall v. United States, 136 Fed. 774, 69 C. C. A. 494.

Certain woolen goods known as "cravette cloths," which have been subjected to a process intended to make them rain-repellent, which are chiefly used for outer garments to be worn in rainy weather, and which, for all ordinary purposes, are waterproof, are dutiable as "waterproof cloth," under paragraph 369, Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, c. 1244, § 1, Schedule J, 26 Stat. 593, and not under paragraphs 392 and 395, Schedule K, of said act, 26 Stat. 596-97, relating, respectively, to "woolen or worsted cloths" and "dress goods * * * of wool, worsted," etc. Brown & Eadie v. United States, 126 Fed. 446, 447; United States v. Brown & Eadie, 136 Fed. 550, 69 C. C. A. 260.

Silk goods, sold only in the piece, of the class generally known as "taffetas," but having a special soft finish so as to be appropriate for use as a lining, if appropriate for use in making dresses, would seem to be "dress goods," even though generally so used as a lining, and a person having acquired the right to use the word "radium" as a trademark on such goods has a right to protection against its use by another in connection with silk dress goods in the piece of a better grade. Eiseman v. Schiffer, 157 Fed. 473, 474.

DRESSED FURS

Pieces of fur sewn together continuously for convenience or safety, but not intended to be used as articles in that shape, are not "articles made of" fur under Tariff Act March 3, 1883, c. 121, § 2502, Schedule N, 22 Stat.

512, but are dutiable as "dressed furs on the skin," under the same schedule, 22 Stat. 513. Fleet v. United States, 148 Fed. 335.

DRESSED GRANITE

Monuments in sections, consisting of pieces of dressed granite intended to be assembled and erected as monuments without further manipulation, are dutiable as "dressed granite," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 118, 30 Stat. 159, and not as articles composed of mineral substances, under paragraph 97 (30 Stat. 156). Austin Baldwin & Co. v. United States, 144 Fed. 702, 704; Id., 149 Fed. 1022, 79 C. C. A. 531. But imports in the form of pieces of granite dressed, cut, and bored, ready to be assembled as ornamental garden lanterns, cannot be so classified. A. A. Vantine & Co. v. United States, 159 Fed. 289, 290.

DRESSED LUMBER

While lumber planed on one side or both sides may be "dressed lumber," when tongued and grooved it is still dressed lumber and not a new and distinct manufacture. In other words, tonguing and grooving is an additional dressing, but it is not made a different article. Lumber treated in this way is still known, advertised, handled, shipped, and bought and sold by the thousand feet as lumber. United States v. F. W. Myers & Co., 189 Fed. 344, 347 (quoting United States v. Dudley, 19 Sup. Ct. 801, 174 U. S. 670, 43 L. Ed. 1129).

DRESSED POULTRY

The cooked meat of poultry and game, in tins, and goose livers prepared as pâté de foie gras, are not dutiable, either directly or by similitude, as "poultry * * * dressed," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 278, 30 Stat. 172. James P. Smith & Co. v. United States, 168 Fed. 462, 463.

DRESSED UPPER LEATHER

Japanned skins used for uppers are within the provision in paragraph 456, Tariff Act October 1, 1890, c. 1244, § 1, Schedule N, 26 Stat. 601, for "dressed upper leather, including * * * japanned leather," rather than under the provision in the same paragraph for "japanned calfskins." United States v. Bittel, Tepel & Eilers, 155 Fed. 554.

DRIED LYCHEE

As edible fruit, see Edible Fruit.

DRIFT

DRIFT PINS

"Drift pins" are pointed pieces of steel about seven inches long, small at one end and large at the other, used in riveting pipes. These pins are driven into the holes to bring the ends of the pipe together so that the riv-et holes in one would be over the holes in the other, for the insertion of the rivets. Campbell v. T. A. Gillespie Co., 55 Atl. 276, 69 N. J. Law, 279.

DRIFT ROADS

Roads which run through rough and uninclosed lands are often called "drift roads." Mayor, etc., of Borough of South Amboy v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 73 Atl. 852, 855, 76 N. J. Eq. 57.

DRILL

See Occasional Drink; Soft Drinks.

The word "food" and "drink" in common usage and understanding are complementary and associate terms, denoting the two prime necessities of life, but they import a plain and fundamental distinction, as universal as language and as old as the human race. No tongue is so primitive that it lacks different words to indicate them and different words to express the sensations of want of them, as hunger and thirst. Pennsylvania Act June 26, 1895 (P. L. p. 317), entitled "An act to provide against the adulterating of food and providing for the enforcement thereof," which defines in section 2 the term "food" to include "all articles used as food or drink by man, whether simple, mixed, or compound," is unconstitutional, as applied to drink, in not stating the subject of the act in the title, as required by Const. art. 3, § 3. Commonwealth v. Kebort, 61 Atl. 895, 896, 212 Pa. 289.

The word "drinks," in a statute regulating or forbidding the sale of intoxicants, means an alcoholic beverage. Pennell v. State, 123 N. W. 115, 116, 141 Wis. 35.

DRINKING FOUNTAIN

As charity, see Charity.

DRIVE

See Belt Drive; Sprocket Chain Drive.

"Driving," in its popular sense, means more than mere managing or directing a horse. It has at least a dual signification. When it is said a party goes out "driving," it is not usually understood that each member of the party performs the physical act of driving the horse, and a driving party may be referred to collectively. Under Acts 1905, p. 202, c. 123, § 5, providing that any person operating a motor vehicle upon meeting any person driving a horse on any public highway shall, upon signal by putting up the hand from "any such person or persons so driving any horse," etc., immediately bring his motor vehicle to a stop, the signal need not be given by the person who holds the lines but may be given by any occupant of the vehicle; the word "driving" not being limited to the mere physical act of managing or directing the horse. State v. Goodwin, 82 N. E. 459, 460, 169 Ind. 285.

A park regulation that "no person shall ride or drive" at a rate of speed exceeding eight miles an hour is sufficiently definite to support a criminal prosecution for operating an automobile at an excessive speed, as a person may be said to be "driving" an automobile if he is controlling the motive power. Commonwealth v. Crowninshield, 72 N. E. 963, 964, 187 Mass. 221, 68 L. R. A. 245.

The word "drive," as used in a statute imposing a fine on every person who shall drive faster than a certain traveling pace in certain towns, is not confined to animals. Anything capable of being ridden comes within the purview of the act, and the word is apt in the case of bicycles, motorcycles, or automobiles. State v. Smith, 69 Atl. 1061, 1063, 29 R. I. 245 (citing State v. Thurston, 66 Atl. 580, 581, 28 R. I. 265, 268).

In Code, § 1571, requiring that, whenever any engine "driven in whole or in part by steam power" crosses a bridge in a public road, planks must be laid under the wheels, the words quoted were not descriptive of the kind of engine to the exclusion of its manner of operation. These words applied only to engines when actually so driven and not to a steam engine being pulled across a bridge by horses and cable. Young v. Madison County, 115 N. W. 23, 24, 137 Iowa, 515.

Under 1 Mills' Ann. St. §§ 1424, 1425, providing that, if any person shall maliciously drive cattle from their usual range, he shall be liable to the party injured, etc., willful driving to any material extent from public domain within the territory within which cattle are accustomed to range to another locality, within or without such territory, is driving from their usual range. Richards v. Sanderson, 89 Pac. 769, 771, 89 Colo. 270, 121 Am. St. Rep. 167.

DRIVER

The motorman of a street car is not a "driver," within Rev. St. 1899, § 2864, giving an action for death from the negligence of any "driver of any stage coach or other public conveyance." Droishagen v. Union Depot R. Co., 85 S. W. 344, 346, 186 Mo. 258.

DRIVEWAY

See Draught or Driving Vehicle.

The Standard Dictionary defines "driveway" to be "a road for driving," and that is the meaning that at once suggests itself. It doubtless implies that it is over private land and is not a public way, but it does not imply that it is exclusive. Young v. Braman, 75 Atl. 120, 121, 105 Me. 494.

DROITDROIT DE VILLE

The "droit de ville" and an "octroi tax" are internal revenue imposts of France which are not general in their application but vary with the locality and are not collected if the merchandise is exported. United States v. R. F. Downing & Co., 131 Fed. 653, 654.

DROP

Under a city charter providing that teachers in their first or second year should be classified as probationary, and might be dropped on the adverse report of the classification committee, and that teachers who have been assigned for more than two years, other than special teachers, shall be classed as permanent teachers and shall hold their positions until removed, and that no teacher shall be removed save at the close of the year and with at least one month's notice, while there does not appear to be any great difference between "dropping" a teacher from the department and "removing" him, so far as the effect on the teacher is concerned, the section does apply the latter term only to permanent teachers, and the clause protecting teachers from removal without prior notice, except at the end of the school year, was intended to refer only to permanent teachers, but an appointee during the probationary period could be legally dropped only on the adverse report by the classification committee. Barthel v. Board of Education of City of San Jose, 95 Pac. 892, 894, 153 Cal. 376.

DROP SWITCH

A "drop switch" is a switching of cars made in operation of railroads by detaching or cutting loose cars from the engine and permitting them to run or roll of their own momentum down an incline. Birmingham S. R. Co. v. Powell, 33 South. 875, 876, 136 Ala. 232.

DROVER

See Stock Drover.

DROWNDROWNING

Death by "drowning" is caused by the filling of the lungs with water so that air cannot get to them. An accident policy provided in one place that the insurance was against "personal bodily injury leaving upon the body external marks of contusion or wounds"; in another that it was against "bodily injuries, such as dislocations, fractures, * * * drowning," etc.; and in another place limited the liability in case of drowning, when the facts of the accident are not established by testimony of eyewitnesses, and when the body is not recovered and identified, and "in case of injuries, whether fatal or disabling, of which there is no visible mark on the exterior of the body." Held that, under the rule that any doubt arising upon the face of an insurance policy as to its meaning is to be resolved in favor of the insured, the provisions relating to contusions and wounds did not apply to a case of "drowning," so as to exempt liability where insured was drowned and there were no marks on his body. Lewis v. Brotherhood Accident Co., 79 N. E. 802, 804, 194 Mass. 1, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 714.

DRUG

See Crude Drugs.

Use of as intoxication, see Intoxicated—Intoxication.

Public Health Law, art. 3, § 40, provides that the term "drug," when used in the act, shall include all medicines for external and internal use. Cream of tartar is a drug within the statute. State Board of Pharmacy v. Gasau, 107 N. Y. Supp. 409, 410, 122 App. Div. 803.

The term "drug," as used in section 6 of the Acts of 1906, 34 Stat. 768, providing that the term shall include all medicines and preparations recognized in the United States Pharmacopœia or National Formulary for internal or external use, and any substance or mixture of substances intended to be used for the cure, mitigation, or prevention of disease of either man or other animals, is merely a term of description, and, if the Pharmacopœia says medicine is a drug, it is a drug under the meaning of the act, or if it comes under the other description of what a drug is. United States v. Frank, 189 Fed. 195, 199.

The term "drugs" is limited in its common acceptance to medicinal preparations, though broadly it may include besides all preparations used in the arts. Articles used in dyeing or tanning are not dutiable as "drugs." Leber & Meyer v. United States, 135 Fed. 243, 244. Nor are Orchil and Persian berry extracts. G. Siegle & Co. v. United States, 166 Fed. 1015, 1016.

Wai San, an edible root used by the Chinese as a vegetable, is, because edible, removed from the provision for "drugs," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 20, 30 Stat. 151. Wing On Wo v. United States, 175 Fed. 891. But dried lizards, used by the Chinese in compounding a medicine, are dutiable as "drugs." Wing On Wo v. United States, 148 Fed. 334.

Benzine

A "drug" includes any mineral substance used in mechanical operations, and the court cannot say, as a matter of law, that benzine is not included in that term. Wilson v. Union Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 55 Atl. 662, 663, 75 Vt. 320 (citing Carrigan v. Lycoming Fire Ins. Co., 53 Vt. 418, 38 Am. Rep. 687).

Intoxicating Liquors

Intoxicating liquors kept for medicinal purposes being within the general term "drugs," a druggist or pharmacist legitimately engaged in that business, has a right, without express authority of law, to have, keep, possess, and store intoxicating liquors as a part of his necessary drug stock to be sold by him, subject to the conditions, limitations, and restrictions prescribed by an ordinance regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors for medicinal purposes, and could only be subjected to the penalties prescribed therein, on proof that the liquors were dispensed in violation of the prescribed conditions, restrictions, and limitations. Town of Selma v. Brewer, 98 Pac. 61, 63, 9 Cal. App. 70.

Tobacco

Cigars are not "drugs," within the meaning of St. 1896, ch. 434, § 2, prohibiting business transactions on the Lord's Day excepting the retail sale of drugs and medicine. Commonwealth v. Goldsmith, 57 N. E. 212, 176 Mass. 104, 105.

DRUG ADVANCED IN VALUE

Scammony resin, prepared from gum scammony, or scammony root, and used principally in compounding medicines, and chrysarobin are dutiable as "drugs advanced in value or condition," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 20, 30 Stat. 152, rather than as medicinal preparations, under paragraph 67, 80 Stat. 154. United States v. Martin, 155 Fed. 264, 265; Levi v. United States, 140 Fed. 126. And powdered opium is a "drug advanced in value or condition," rather than opium crude or unmanufactured. United States v. McKesson, Robbins & Co., 172 Fed. 168; Merck v. United States, 151 Fed. 14, 15, 80 C. C. A. 510.

Fresh leaves of aconite and belladonna, and fresh roots of bryonia, immersed in their natural condition in alcohol for preservation, are not "drugs advanced in value or condition," as used in paragraph 20. Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, 30 Stat. 151. Boericke & Runyon Co. v. United States, 126 Fed. 1018, 1019.

DRUGGIST

The terms "druggist," "proprietor of a drug store," and "pharmacist" are synonymous, for the business of pharmacist or apothecary, or druggist, is one. An information charging that accused was a druggist and the proprietor of a drug store and a pharmacist, and that he sold intoxicating liquors without a prescription, charges a violation of Rev. St. 1890, § 3047, making it an offense for a druggist, proprietor of a drug store, or pharmacist to sell intoxicating liquors except on a written prescription, and providing that any druggist who shall violate the act shall be punished as prescribed, and it is not duplicitous or multifarious. State

v. Clinkenbeard, 125 S. W. 827, 829, 142 Mo. App. 146.

DRUG STORE

See Proprietor of Drug Store.

As restaurant, see Restaurant.

In an information for burglary, a "drug store" is properly described as a storehouse, commonly called a "drug store." McNutt v. State, 94 N. W. 143, 68 Neb. 207.

DRUMMER

"A traveling salesman is known in modern business parlance as a 'drummer.'" Hibbard v. Stein, 78 Pac. 665, 45 Or. 507.

The word "drummers," as used in Rev. St. Mo. §§ 1024-1026, requiring foreign corporations for pecuniary profit doing business in the state to file articles of incorporation and be subject to local visitation and the payment of taxes on its business, and expressly excepting from the operation of the statute "drummers or traveling salesmen soliciting business in this state for foreign corporations which are entirely nonresident," means employes of such corporations employed to go into other states and communities to drum up and solicit business for the houses they represent. Strain v. Chicago Portrait Co., 126 Fed. 831, 835.

The word "drummer" denotes a traveling agent personally receiving orders to be forwarded to his nonresident principal. One engaged in distributing his principal's letters, soliciting orders for whisky, and price lists containing blank orders on his principal, a nonresident distiller, is, within the statute making it a misdemeanor for any person, acting for himself or as agent, to conduct the business of "liquor drummer," soliciting or receiving orders for liquor for interstate shipment. State v. Davis, 66 S. E. 875, 876, 84 S. C. 512.

DRUMMER FLOATER

A "drummer floater" insurance policy is a policy that covers the goods mentioned therein, while a commercial salesman is on the road selling goods, and the samples and goods carried by him would not be covered by the ordinary insurance carried upon merchandise located in the stores or warehouses of the merchant. When the goods are returned to the starting point and are in the store or not traveling, the drummer floater insurance is suspended, and the same goods are then covered by the general insurance which the merchant carries upon all his goods in his store or warehouse. Jacobson v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co., 135 Ill. App. 20, 22.

DRUNK

The term "drunk" is synonymous with the word "intoxicated" and is of varying degrees. This was recognized by the learned

Chief Justice of the Court of Civil Appeals when this case was first before that court (Paris & G. N. R. Co. v. Robinson, 114 S. W. 661, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 12, 18) in the following language: "Intoxication is of varying degrees. A person so under the influence of liquor as not to be entirely himself is intoxicated; yet he may not betray it by either movement or word, and his condition may not be discernible by his intimate friends. It would hardly be contended that as to such person the carrier must resort to other than the ordinary means for his safety. Again, a person may be 'staggering drunk,' and yet be capable of transacting with intelligence important business, and with great foresight providing under given circumstances for his own safety and comfort." That the term "drunk" is not a well-defined term either in law or in the common acceptance of the meaning of the word is found in the fact that all the standard dictionaries make its meaning synonymous with the word "intoxicated." The fact that the term "drunk" or "intoxicated" is a term of varying degrees is recognized in that standard authority, Words and Phrases (volume 3, p. 2208), as follows: "There are degrees of intoxication or drunkenness. A man is said to be 'dead drunk' when he is perfectly unconscious—powerless. He is said to be 'stupidly drunk' when a kind of stupor comes over him. He is said to be 'staggering drunk' when he staggers in walking. He is said to be 'foolishly drunk' when he acts the fool. All these are cases of drunkenness, of different degrees of drunkenness. So it is a very common thing to say a man is 'badly intoxicated,' and again that he is 'slightly intoxicated.' There are degrees of drunkenness, and therefore many persons may say that a man was not intoxicated because he could walk straight; he could get in and out of a wagon. Whenever a man is under the influence of liquor so as not to be entirely himself, he is intoxicated, although he can walk straight. Although he may attend to his business and may not give any outward and visible signs to the casual observer that he is drunk, yet if he is under the influence of liquor so as not to be himself, so as to be excited, and not to possess that clearness of intellect and control of himself that he otherwise would have, he is intoxicated." In the latest Webster's International Dictionary the term "drunk" is thus defined: "Intoxicated with or as with strong drink, under the influence of an intoxicant, especially an alcoholic liquor, so that the use of the faculties is materially impaired." In Bouvier's Law Dictionary (Rawle's Revision), the term is defined as "the condition of a man whose mind is affected by the immediate use of intoxicating drinks"; and the same author proceeds in his discussion of the meaning of the term "drunk" or "drunkenness" to say: "This condition presents various degrees of intensity, ranging from a simple exhilaration to a state of utter unconsciousness and insensibility. In the popular phrase the term 'drunkenness' is applied only to those degrees of it in which the mind is manifestly disturbed in its operation. In the earlier stages it frequently happens that the mind is not only not disturbed but acts with extraordinary clearness, promptitude, and vigor." Paris & G. N. R. Co. v. Robinson, 140 S. W. 434-436, 104 Tex. 482.

The term "drunk," as commonly understood, means the result of excessive drinking of intoxicants. Paris & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Robinson (Tex.) 127 S. W. 294, 298.

Though one may be said to be under the influence of liquor, he is not necessarily intoxicated, this being far short of "intoxication" which is the synonym of "inebriety" and "drunkenness"; the word "intoxicated" being synonymous with "drunk," and "drunk" being defined in the Standard Dictionary as to have lost the normal control of one's bodily and mental faculties. Freeburg v. State, 138 N. W. 143, 144, 92 Neb. 346 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, pp. 3734, 3735).

An instruction, in an action against a railroad company for wrongfully ejecting a passenger for alleged drunkenness, that for one to be in an "intoxicated condition" he must be under the influence of intoxicating liquors to such an extent as to have lost the normal control of his faculties, and show a disposition to violence, quarrelsomeness, and bestiality, was erroneous, since one may be intoxicated without being violent or quarrelsome, and a man may be said to be "drunk" whenever he is under the influence of intoxicating liquors so as to affect his acts or conduct, so that persons coming in contact with him could readily know that the intoxicants had affected him in that respect. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Waters (Ark.) 152 S. W. 137, 139.

The term "drunk" is properly defined as being under the influence of intoxicating liquor to such an extent as to have lost the normal control of one's bodily and mental faculties, and commonly to evince a disposition to violence, quarrelsomeness, and bestiality. Brooke v. City of Morrilton, 111 S. W. 471, 86 Ark. 364; Hughes v. State ex rel. Sutton, 98 N. E. 839, 841, 50 Ind. App. 617.

DRUNKARD

See Habitual Drunkard.
See, also, Inebriate.

"A 'drunkard' is one with whom drunkenness has become a habit; one who habitually drinks to intoxication; a sot." There may be a habit of intoxication in one who occasionally resists temptation. People v. Radley, 86 N. W. 1029, 1030, 127 Mich. 627.

DRUNKENNESS

See Habitual Drunkenness, or Intoxication; Voluntary Drunkenness.
See, also, Intoxicated—Intoxication.

Though one may be said to be under the influence of liquor, he is not necessarily intoxicated, this being far short of "intoxication" which is the synonym of "inebriety" and "drunkenness"; the word "intoxicated" being synonymous with "drunk," and "drunk" being defined in the Standard Dictionary as to have lost the normal control of one's bodily and mental faculties. Freeburg v. State, 138 N. W. 143, 144, 92 Neb. 346 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, pp. 3734, 3735).

The words "drunkenness" and "in a state of intoxication," as used in the statute punishing drunkenness, are words of ordinary signification, and mean the condition following the taking of liquor in excessive quantities, and the court in its instructions need not define the same. Clark v. State, 111 S. W. 659, 660, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 529.

It may be well doubted whether the terms "drunkenness" and "soberness" are susceptible to any accurate definition for practical purposes, as they sufficiently define themselves. Midland Valley R. Co. v. Hamilton, 104 S. W. 540, 542, 84 Ark. 81.

Intoxication from opiates included

The word "drunkenness," as applied to the use of opium, morphine, or other drugs, is not easily defined. But the evil effects resulting from the continued and excessive use of opium or morphine are well known. They interfere as much, to say the least, with the happiness of married life, and produce other effects upon the marriage relation, as deplorable as those resulting from the excessive use of intoxicating liquors. And it was the state thus resulting from their excessive use which the Legislature intended to describe by the word "drunkenness," as applied to the use of opium, morphine, and other drugs, and from which it intended to afford relief to the innocent party. Gowey v. Gowey, 77 N. E. 526, 527, 191 Mass. 72 (citing and approving Burt v. Burt, 46 N. E. 622, 168 Mass. 204; McCraw v. McCraw, 50 N. E. 526, 171 Mass. 146).

DRY

When a proposition is carried at an election in favor of prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors, the vote is called "dry." Board of Trustees of Town of Newcastle v. Scott, 101 S. W. 944, 948, 125 Ky. 545.

The Supreme Court, in construing section 428, Penal Code 1895, as preventing whisky dealers from selling or contracting to sell, taking orders for, or soliciting the sale of intoxicating liquors in a "dry county, town or district," uses the word "dry" as designating those counties where the sale of liquor is prohibited by law. Rose v. State, 58 S. E. 20, 21, 1 Ga. App. 596.

DRY DOCK

A dry dock differs from an ordinary dock only in the fact that it is smaller, and provided with machinery for pumping out the water in order that the vessel may be repaired. All injuries suffered by the hulls of vessels below the water line, by collision or stranding, must necessarily be repaired in a dry dock. Proceedings in rem to enforce a lien for repairs furnished to a vessel which was at the time engaged in navigating the Erie Canal are no less within the exclusive admiralty jurisdiction of the federal courts because such repairs were made in dry dock. Perry v. Haines, 24 Sup. Ct. 8, 13, 191 U. S. 17, 48 L. Ed. 73.

DRY DOCKAGE

The term "dry dockage," as employed in a libel, is presumed by the court to mean giving dockage in a dry dock. Under B. & O. Comp. Or. 1901, § 5706, giving a lien on vessels for all debts due by virtue of a contract for construction, repairs, etc., a lien in the nature of a maritime lien exists against a domestic vessel of the state, navigating the waters of the United States, for furnishing dockage to such vessel in a dry dock at the request of the owner, which lien is enforceable in the admiralty courts of the United States. The George W. Elder, 159 Fed. 1005, 1009.

DRY GALLON

The "dry (or corn) gallon" is the old English unit of measurement which seems to have fallen into practical disuse. It does not seem to have any common employment in the commerce of this country. J. M. Ceballos & Co. v. United States, 139 Fed. 705 (citing Cent. Dict.).

DRY MORTGAGE

A "dry mortgage" is one under which the mortgagor incurs no personal liability, or there was no debt in the sense of an obligation that could be enforced, and where the mortgagor has merely the right to remove the lien by payment of a certain sum of money within a certain time, but could not be compelled to do so. San Jose Safe Deposit Bank of Savings v. Bank of Madera, 78 Pac. 5, 6, 144 Cal. 574.

DRY PRESUMPTIONS

The rules which impose the burden of proof upon certain parties, when designated as presumptions, are "dry presumptions," having only a technical existence, and barren of all probative character when the case goes to the jury on conflicting evidence. Sheldon v. Wright, 67 Atl. 807, 814, 815, 80 Vt. 298.

DRY RECEIVERSHIP

A receiver takes the property subject to liens upon it and on sale of the property; what he gets is the fund out of which primarily his compensation is paid. If he does not get any fund, he might not get any compensation, it being what is known as a "dry receivership," and complainant may be compelled to give a bond to secure the fees of the receiver whom the court appoints at his expense. Lembeck v. Jarvis Terminal Cold Storage Co., 59 Atl. 565, 566, 68 N. J. Eq. 352.

DRY REFUSE

"Dry refuse," when applied to city garbage, includes ashes and all rubbish accumulated in private houses, stores, market houses, and like places. California Reduction Co. v. Sanitary Reduction Works, 26 Sup. Ct. 100, 104, 199 U. S. 306, 50 L. Ed. 204.

DRY TRUST

A "dry (or simple) trust" is one as to which the trustee has no duties to perform, and the cestui que trust has the entire management of the estate. It is a simple separation of the equitable and legal estates which can be united at the option of the cestui que trust. It is not to be confounded with those trusts which are created upon a declared condition which has passed away by the cessation of the reason for the continuance of the trust, as for instance, a trust established for the benefit of a married woman who becomes discover, thus discontinuing the trust. Carpenter v. Carpenter's Trustee, 84 S. W. 737, 738, 119 Ky. 582, 68 L. R. A. 637, 115 Am. St. Rep. 275 (citing Woolley v. Preston, 82 Ky. 415; Thomas v. Harkness, 13 Bush [76 Ky.] 23).

Where the owner of real estate conveyed it in trust, the trustee to have power of sale and reinvestment of proceeds, but a sale only to be made with the consent of the grantor, who was to be paid all the profits and have a right of testamentary disposition, the trustee took no beneficial interest but a mere "dry (or naked) trust." City of Louisville v. Anderson (Ky.) 84 S. W. 573, 574.

Where a testatrix bequeathed $500 to A., to be kept in trust for her by her daughter, the bequest amounted to a "dry trust," and the cestui que trust was entitled to payment of the legacy, free from any trust. Guild v. Allen, 67 Atl. 855, 858, 28 R. I. 430.

DRY WASH

A natural depression in the ground, below a dam, is called a "dry wash." Howell v. Big Horn Basin Colonization Co., 81 Pac. 785, 786, 14 Wyo. 14, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 596.

DRY WEIGHT

The term "dry weight," in paragraph 415 of the Tariff Act of October 1, 1890, imposing a duty on wood pulp, means not absolute dry weight, but "air dry weight," as understood in commerce. United States v. Perkins, 66 Fed. 50, 51, 13 C. C. A. 324.

DUAL CAPACITY DOCTRINE

The "dual capacity doctrine," applied in Illinois in determining the liability of a master for injury to his servant, is: The mere fact that a master has a foreman over the injured servant does not make the master responsible for the foreman's negligence, nor does the mere fact that the foreman is sometimes, or generally, also a collaborer excuse the master from his negligence; but every case must depend on its circumstances, and if the negligence complained of consists of some act done or omitted by one having such authority, which relates to his duties as a collaborer with those under his control, and which might just as readily have happened with one of them, having no such authority, the common master will not be liable; but when the negligent act complained of arises out of, and is the direct result of, the authority conferred on him by the master over his collaborators, the master will be liable. Fogarty v. St. Louis Transfer Co., 79 S. W. 664, 667, 180 Mo. 490, 1 Ann. Cas. 136.

DUE

DUE (In Commercial Law)

See Become Due; Grow Due; Legally Due; Now Due; Now Due and Payable; Remain Due; Still Due; Taxes Due.

Belonging to and due, see Belong—Belonging.

Ordinarily, the word "due" is a conclusion of law, denial of which raises no issue. Irwin v. Insurance Co. of North America, 116 Pac. 294, 295, 16 Cal. App. 143.

The word "due," as used in section 3880, providing that a petition in attachment in an action on contract shall state that something is "due" and, as nearly as practicable, the amount, and section 3883, authorizing attachments on debts not due, when nothing but time is wanted to fix an absolute indebtedness, refers to the maturity of the claim rather than to the balance of the indebtedness owing from one party to the other, and the landlord is not precluded from attaching for rent accrued by reason of the fact that the tenant has claims against him, arising out of other indebtedness, to an amount exceeding the rent. Smeaton v. Cole, 94 N. W. 909, 910, 120 Iowa, 368.

The word "due," as used in Seattle City Charter, providing that demand must be made for a rebate from an excess in assessments for local improvements within two years from the date on which the assessments become "due," means the expiration of the period in which the assessments can be paid without interest; but, where the final cost of the improvement is not determinable until its completion, the limitation period does not begin until it is ascertained that there will be an excess. State ex rel. McCullough v. City of Seattle, 102 Pac. 770, 772, 53 Wash. 655.

In an action under Rev. St. c. 6, § 175, to recover taxes "due" a city, it is no defense that the assessor made only one valuation for the tax, state, county, and town, and blended together the several sums to be thus levied and made but one assessment for the whole, on the ground that the combined tax, being not alone for municipal purposes, was not "due" the city, since the municipality was the agency through which the state and county taxes were collected, and all the taxes to be assessed and collected through this agency may be said to be "due" to it as such agent or trustee. City of Rockland v. Ulmer, 24 Atl. 949, 950, 84 Me. 503.

The phrase "debt which is to become due," as used in a statute providing that a debt which is to become due shall be liable to the process of garnishment, means an absolute existing debt and does not include an indebtedness contingent on the happening of a future event, so that it is uncertain whether the contemplated garnishee will or will not be indebted to the principal defendant. Smith v. Marker, 90 S. W. 611, 613, 6 Ind. T. 213.

Under Rev. Laws, c. 137, § 8, authorizing an appointment of an administrator de bonis non after the death, resignation, etc., of the administrator, if there are debts to the amount of $20 remaining due from the estate, chapter 141, § 9, making an administrator not liable to the action of a creditor not commenced within two years from the giving of an administration bond, section 10 authorizing the Supreme Court, where an action has not been prosecuted within the time limited, if of opinion that justice requires it, to give a creditor judgment against the estate, and section 13 providing that a creditor, whose right of action does not accrue within two years from administration, may have an order for the retention by the administrator of assets sufficient to satisfy the same, there was no debt due from the estate within the meaning of the statutes, where there were no equitable considerations, and the creditor took no steps under section 13 to preserve his rights, and they became void under section 9; a "debt remaining due from the estate" meaning a debt which is enforceable in such a way that the estate may be legally liable to pay it. In re Hubbard, 69 N. E. 349, 350, 185 Mass. 22.

A claim against an estate for undertaker's services is not a "debt due" from the decedent, and is therefore not referable under Code Civ. Proc. § 2718, providing for reference of disputed claims, and hence, even if the parties consented to a reference jurisdiction to refer would not be conferred as against the subsequent objection of either. In re Mudge, 118 N. Y. Supp. 568, 570.

Under Code, § 321, par. 3, which gives an attorney a lien on money due his client in the hands of an adverse party to the action, there is no money "due" which will support a lien, where the proceeding was under the occupying claimants statute (Code, §§ 2964-2971), which provides that the claim may be satisfied either by the claimant's paying the value of the improvements and taking the property, or, upon a refusal of the claimant to pay such sum, by his permitting the other party to take his interest in the property, or by his becoming a tenant in common of the real estate, including the improvements, with such party, and which gives the court no authority to render a personal judgment against the owner of the land, or to order the land sold under special execution to satisfy the claim. McCormick & McCormick v. Dumbarton Realty Co. (Iowa) 137 N. W. 943, 944.

Rev. St. 1908, § 518, preserves the lien of a chattel mortgage for 30 days after maturity without possession taken, and section 520, subsequently enacted, provides that the lien of any recorded chattel mortgage to secure any indebtedness may "at any time within 30 days after the maturity of the last installment of the indebtedness secured thereby" be extended as to the unpaid portion thereof by filing a sworn statement of the total payments on the debt and the amount remaining unpaid, that it is "still due" the mortgagee or his assignee, and that the mortgagee consents to an extension. Held, in view of section 518, that the word "due" was used in the sense that the debt was subsisting or outstanding. Ferris v. Chambers, 117 Pac. 994, 995, 51 Colo. 368.

As acknowledgment and promise to pay

The word "due," in a writing signed by a party and stating that a certain amount is "due" a person mentioned therein, imports a promise to pay, for the principle is that, where a paper contains a direct acknowledgment of indebtedness in a specified sum, that of itself imports a promise to pay. Locher v. Kuechenmeister, 98 S. W. 92, 97, 120 Mo. App. 701.

"Due" means owed or owing to. It implies an obligation or duty imposed by law—the duty to pay what is owed—but it does not of itself imply a promise to do so." In re McGuire & Hanlein, 132 Fed. 394, 395.

Immatured liabilities

The word "due" does not necessarily mean owing and payable. It is often used to signify merely the present existence of a debt to be paid thereafter; and, an affidavit, annexed to a chattel mortgage, stating that a certain sum was due on the mortgage, the mortgage disclosing that this sum was payable in monthly installments is not defective merely for the reason that no part of it was due at the time the affidavit was made. Metropolitan Store & Saloon Fixture Co. v. Albrecht, 56 Atl. 237, 238, 70 N. J. Law, 149.

The word "due," in its larger sense, is often used to cover liabilities matured or unmatured, or as importing an existing obligation, whether the time of payment has arrived or not. The expression "all taxes due the state and county," as used in the act of August 21, 1905, is not to be construed in the narrow sense of taxes, the time for paying which had arrived or passed. Pope v. Matthews, 54 S. E. 152, 154, 125 Ga. 341 (citing, in support of definition, People v. Vail, 6 Abb. N. C. [N. Y.] 210; United States v. State Bank of North Carolina, 31 U. S. [6 Pet.] 29, 8 L. Ed. 308; Sand-Blast File Sharpening Co. v. Parsons, 7 Atl. 716, 54 Conn. 310; Scudder v. Scudder, 10 N. J. Law, 341).

As legally enforceable

A sum of money being in the obligor's hands as executrix and due to be paid to the obligee by her in that capacity, she agreed in her personal capacity to pay to the obligee the sum "so due." Held, that the phrase "so due" means that which ought to be paid and not that which is legally actionable. Smith v. Weaver, 66 Atl. 941, 942, 75 N. J. Law, 31.

The word "due" is defined as owed, owing, owing and unpaid, 'remaining unpaid, an indebtedness. A debt may therefore be due that is justly and honestly owing, and yet the creditor be without remedy to enforce payment because of the plea of the statute of limitations. So, where a will provided that a debt due from a legatee should be deducted from the legacy, the legatee could not plead limitations to avoid the deduction. In re Gillingham's Estate, 69 Atl. 809, 810, 220 Pa. 353 (citing Fulweller v. Hughes, 17 Pa. 440; 14 Cyc. p. 1107).

As matured

Sess. Laws 1895, p. 67, c. 7, art. 1, § 8, providing for the issuance of bonds by municipal organizations, using the words "due" and "matured," uses them synonymously. Territory ex rel. Jones v. Hopkins, 59 Pac. 976, 981, 9 Okl. 133.

As owing

An amount "due," in the primary sense, means simply "owing." Sather Banking Co. v. Arthur R. Briggs Co., 72 Pac. 352, 355, 138 Cal. 724 (citing and adopting Crocker-Woolworth Nat. Bank of San Francisco v. Carle, 65 Pac. 951, 133 Cal. 409).

The word "due," in its primary sense, means "owing"; hence Code, § 490, providing that a county treasurer shall receive for his services a certain per cent. of all money collected by him as taxes "due any city or town," does not authorize him to retain any sum for collecting money to pay certificates issued by a city to a contractor who has performed paving work. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Woodbury County, 114 N. W. 1044, 1045, 137 Iowa, 287.

The word "due" in Code, §§ 1808, 1809, making credits taxable and defining "credit" as including every claim or demand due or to become due, etc., is synonymous with "owing," and does not have reference to the time of payment or the fulfillment of an obligation. Talley v. Brown, 125 N. W. 248, 249, 146 Iowa, 360, 140 Am. St. Rep. 282.

Pension money

Under Rev. St. U. S. § 4747, providing that no money due or to become due to any pensioner shall be liable to attachment or seizure under any legal or equitable process, but shall inure wholly to the pensioner's benefit, pension money is only exempt "while due, or to become due." In re Ferguson's Estate, 123 N. W. 123, 125, 140 Wis. 583, 17 Ann. Cas. 1189.

As unpaid

While the word "due" is often used synonymously with "owing" or "remaining unpaid," it is not to be so construed when used in a pleading alleging that "there is now due plaintiff from defendant" a certain sum. In this case it is nothing more than a legal conclusion and is therefore not admitted by demurrer. Moriarty v. Cochran, 106 N. W. 1011, 75 Neb. 835.

DUE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

In Rev. St. § 5399, making it a criminal offense, inter alia, to corruptly or by threats or force "obstruct or impede, or endeavor to obstruct or impede the due administration of justice" in any court of the United States, the words "due administration of justice" import a free and fair opportunity to every litigant in a pending cause in a federal court to learn what he may learn (if not obstructed or impeded) concerning material facts, and to exercise his option as to introducing testimony as to such facts, and an offense is committed under such statute if a person corruptly endeavors to induce other persons who have knowledge of facts which may be material to a party to a pending cause to conceal or deny their knowledge, so as to prevent such party from obtaining knowledge or procuring evidence of such facts. Wilder v. United States, 143 Fed. 433, 441, 74 C. C. A. 567.

DUE AND OWING

Within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64a, 30 Stat. 563, which provides that a trustee shall pay "all taxes legally due and owing by the bankrupt to the United States, state, county, district or municipality in advance of the payment of dividends to creditors," taxes on property of a bankrupt are "due and owing" by the bankrupt, although, as in Colorado, an action cannot be maintained for their collection, but resort must be had to the property.

Nor does the fact that the property has been struck off to the county for the taxes for want of bidders, as provided by Rev. St. Colo. 1908, § 5713, or that it was surrendered by the trustee to a mortgagee, deprive the county of the right to their preferred payment. Hecox v. Teller County, 198 Fed. 684, 686, 117 C. C. A. 338.

In an action for the value of work done and materials furnished under a contract terminated by plaintiff for defendant's alleged breach thereof, the complaint in direct terms alleging nonpayment of the sum sued for was not insufficient because not alleging that such sum was "due and owing," such words constituting a mere legal conclusion from the use of which, at most, and then only in the absence of a demurrer, the fact of nonpayment might be implied. Beck v. Schmidt, 110 Pac. 455, 457, 13 Cal. App. 448.

2 Starr. & C. Ann. St. Ill. 1896, c. 74, par. 6, provides that it shall be lawful to agree that 7 per cent. per annum shall be paid for money loaned or in any manner "due and owing," etc. Held, that it was not essential, to entitle a party to recover interest under such section on contracts of guaranty, that there should be a sum "due and owing" at the time the guaranties were executed, but that it was sufficient that the guaranty was made to apply to the principal's obligations as they were incurred; the guarantor's promise being operative whenever there was money "due and owing" by the principal. Bond v. John V. Farwell Co., 172 Fed. 58, 65, 96 C. C. A. 546.

The finding that there was "due and owing" under the contract, though objectionable as in form a conclusion, is a sufficient finding of nonpayment. Trels v. Berlin Dye Works & Laundry Co., 105 Pac. 275, 276, 11 Cal. App. 421.

DUE AND PAYABLE

See Wholly Due and Payable.

The only office of the words "due and payable," as used in Const. art. 8, § 194, is to fix the time when the poll tax can be paid. It cannot affect the liability of the poll to pay the tax. Frost v. State ex rel. Clements, 45 South. 203, 205, 153 Ala. 654.

DUE CARE

See In the Exercise of Due Care.

"Due care" embraces diligence." Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Osborn, 78 N. E. 248, 250, 39 Ind. App. 333.

The standard for determining whether plaintiff has exercised due care is the conduct of an ordinarily prudent person under similar circumstances; and, if plaintiff did not exercise the care which an ordinarily prudent person would have exercised for her own protection under similar circumstances, she was guilty of contributory negligence, irrespective of her actual intelligence or prudence in general. Dobson v. Receivers of Seaboard Air Line Ry., 73 S. E. 875, 877, 90 S. C. 414.

The law contemplates that in any given case a normal adult person shall take "due care" for his own safety and protection, which is such care as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under the circumstances. J. G. Christopher Co. v. Russell, 58 South. 45, 47, 63 Fla. 191, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 564.

"Negligence" is a relative term, and the degree of care varies with the circumstances, and, the greater the danger or importance of the matter in hand, the greater the care required to constitute "due care." Bolton v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 65 S. E. 937, 938, 84 S. C. 67.

"Negligence" is the opposite of 'due care'; where due care is found there is no negligence. If there is a want of due care, then there is negligence." Raymond v. Portland R. Co., 62 Atl. 602, 605, 100 Me. 529, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94.

"Due care" is care according to time and circumstances, and the degree of care required increases as the danger increases. Riggs v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 115 S. W. 969, 974, 216 Mo. 304.

The term "due care," as used in the law of negligence, is a relative term and means a degree of care commensurate with the danger involved. Tackett v. Henderson Bros. Co., 108 Pac. 151, 155, 12 Cal. App. 658.

"Due care," in any business involving the personal safety and lives of others, is nothing less than the most watchful care. Stanley v. Steele, 60 Atl. 640, 641, 77 Conn. 688, 69 L. R. A. 561, 2 Ann. Cas. 342.

General custom is not, as a matter of law, in itself "due care." Wlita v. Interstate Iron Co., 115 N. W. 169, 171, 103 Minn. 303, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 128.

"Due care" ordinarily implies a certain line of conduct, specific acts of watchfulness or caution." Where there is direct evidence as to the circumstances surrounding an accident resulting in the death of the person injured, the presumption that, prompted by the instinct of self-preservation, he was in the exercise of due care does not obtain. Ames v. Waterloo & C. F. Rapid Transit Co., 95 N. W. 161, 165, 120 Iowa, 640.

"Due care" is a duty lying at the root of the social compact. Right early in the history of the human race the question was asked, 'Am I my brother's keeper?' an old old question, but yet new withal. Whatever doubt may have arisen in the mind of the unhappy man who first asked it, no doubt exists in the law on the right answer, then or now." "The law hedges around the lives and persons of men with much more care than it employs when guarding their property, so that, in this particular, it makes, in a way, every one his brother's keeper, and therefore it may well be doubted whether in any supposable case redress should be withheld from an innocent person who has sustained immediate damage by the neglect of another in doing an act which, if carelessly done, threatens, in a high degree, one or more persons with death or great bodily harm." Charlton v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 98 S. W. 529, 537, 200 Mo. 413 (citing Van Winkle v. American Steam-Boller Co., 19 Atl. 475, 52 N. J. Law, loc. cit. 247).

"Due care" is the care commensurate with the instrument or means being used and danger to be apprehended. While a passenger in a freight elevator in a building accepted and acquiesced in the usual incidents and conduct of a freight elevator, yet those in control of the building were bound to exercise, in the repair, guarding from accident, and management of the elevator, that high degree of care which prudent and competent men exercise under like circumstances, and the failure to use that high degree of care which is exercised by prudent and competent men under like circumstances would be a failure to exercise "due care." Orcutt v. Century Bldg. Co., 99 S. W. 1062, 1066, 201 Mo. 424, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 929.

The term "due care," as those words are employed in Rev. Laws, c. 106, § 71, providing that if a personal injury is caused to an employé, who at the time of the injury is in the exercise of due care, by reason of certain specified defects, etc., he may recover damages, means that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent man would use for his own safety, in the light of all the circumstances at the time of the act under inquiry. Curren v. Magee Furnace Co., 94 N. E. 399, 400, 208 Mass. 229.

The standard from which to determine the question as to whether the plaintiff exercised such "care" as a reasonably prudent person would exercise under the like circumstances is the common knowledge and experience of men and not the scientific knowledge and experience possessed by experts. Morrison v. Lee, 113 N. W. 1025, 1028, 16 N. D. 377, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 650.

"Due care," in the case of a railway company, means ordinarily the timely employment of sufficient signals or warnings giving notice of the approach of cars at crossings, etc., the employment of competent motormen or other servants, and the running of cars at a proper and reasonable rate of speed. Boudwin v. Wilmington City R. Co. (Del.) 60 Atl. 865, 866, 4 Pennewill, 381.

Where a railroad engineer approaching a trespasser walking on the track sees her danger, and that she is entirely oblivious thereof, due care on his part means the timely use of the bell and whistle, and, if these are not effective, the use of means at hand to stop the train before striking her. Dutcher v. Wabash R. Co., 145 S. W. 63, 65, 241 Mo. 137.

"Due care" in a child of tender years is such care as its capacity, mental and physical, fits it for exercising in the actual circumstances of the occasion and situation under investigation. Due care according to age and capacity is all the law exacts of a child of tender years. Neither the average child of its own age, nor the prudent man, is a standard by which to measure its diligence with legal exactness. (a) Charges which fixed the standard of care due by a child nine years of age as "what could be expected by a party of [the] age this plaintiff is proven to have been," and which stated that if both parties were at fault, but the jury could find "that the plaintiff, considering his age, could not have avoided the accident by the exercise of ordinary care," then he would not be prevented from recovering, did not correctly state the rule as to due diligence on the part of the plaintiff, there being an allegation in his petition and some evidence tending to throw light on his capacity. Linder v. Brown, 73 S. E. 734, 735, 137 Ga. 352 (citing Civ. Code 1910, § 3474; Western & A. R. Co. v. Young, 7 S. E. 912, 81 Ga. 397, 12 Am. St. Rep. 320; Id., 10 S. E. 197, 83 Ga. 512).

As extraordinary care

The term "due care," when applied to carriers of passengers, is equivalent to the terms "extraordinary care" and "highest diligence." The high degree of care required of carriers is not required of livery stable keepers in letting horses and carriages to customers. Stanley v. Steele, 60 Atl. 640, 642, 77 Conn. 688, 69 L. R. A. 561, 2 Ann. Cas. 342.

As ordinary and reasonable care

The expression "due care" is not the equivalent of "ordinary care." City of San Antonio v. Talerico (Tex.) 78 S. W. 28, 32.

"Due care," "due diligence," and "ordinary care," are convertible terms, and mean the same thing. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Smith (Tex.) 133 S. W. 1062, 1064 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2222; 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5035).

The rule of law now generally recognized is that the legal measure of duty, except that made absolute by law, is better expressed by the phrases "due care," "reasonable care," or "ordinary care," used interchangeably. Raymond v. Portland R. Co., 62 Atl. 602, 604, 100 Me. 529, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94.

"The standard of 'due care' is the conduct of the average prudent man." Cudahy Packing Co. v. Roy, 99 N. W. 231, 233, 71 Neb. 600 (quoting and approving definition in Omaha Bottling Co. v. Theller, 80 N. W. 821, 59 Neb. 257, 80 Am. St. Rep. 673).

"'Due care' is ordinary care, and ordinary care is the care that would be exercised by a reasonably prudent person under the same or similar circumstances." Cornovski

v. St. Louis Transit Co., 106 S. W. 51, 56, 207 Mo. 263.

A traveler crossing a railroad track is bound only to use due care, which is not the highest degree of care possible, but is only ordinary or reasonable care under the circumstances. Colorado & S. Ry. Co. v. Chiles, 114 Pac. 661, 664, 50 Colo. 191.

The care to be exercised by a gas company to prevent escape of gas from its mains to the injury of trees along the street is not ordinary care as distinguished from extraordinary care, but due care or care commensurate with the danger. Gould v. Winona Gas Co., 111 N. W. 254, 258, 100 Minn. 258, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 889.

"Due care" means reasonable care adapted to the circumstances." One who proceeds to cross a street railway track without looking for approaching cars is not in the exercise of due care. Riska v. Union Depot R. Co., 79 S. W. 445, 449, 180 Mo. 168.

DUE CARE AND CAUTION

"Due care and caution" is a relative term, and what is required to constitute it depends upon the surrounding circumstances, so that age, defective vision, hearing, or other infirmity are only circumstances to be considered by the jury, and the existence of one or more of them does not require a higher degree of care and caution than in the case of one having no such infirmity, and, while under one set of circumstances what would meet the requirement would not do under other circumstances, no conditions require more than reasonable care for one's safety. Rosenthal v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 99 N. E. 672, 675, 255 Ill. 552.

DUE CARE AND DILIGENCE

While the word "due" is defined to be "that which is owed" or "that which one has a right to demand or claim," an instruction in an action for assault and battery, the defense being that defendant struck plaintiff thinking he was striking another in self-defense, requiring "due care and diligence" is not sufficient; the law requiring the highest degree of care practicable under the circumstances. Crabtree v. Dawson, 83 S. W. 557, 561, 119 Ky. 148, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 565, 115 Am. St. Rep. 243.

DUE CAUTION

"Due caution" means caution commensurate with existing and surrounding hazards. Van Dyke v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada, 78 Atl. 958, 964, 84 Vt. 212, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 640.

DUE COMPENSATION

"Due compensation," as used in the Constitution providing that property shall not be taken for public use without "due compensation," means what will make the owner whole pecuniarily for appropriating or injuring his property by any invasion of it cognizable by the senses, or by interference with some right in relation to property whereby its market value is lessened as the direct result of the public use. King v. Vicksburg Ry. & Light Co., 42 South. 204, 205, 88 Miss. 456, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1036, 117 Am. St. Rep. 749.

DUE CONSIDERATION

The phrase "due consideration," as used in an ordinance providing that an application for permission to retail intoxicating liquors shall be made by petition in writing to the board of supervisors, and that, if after "due consideration" of the same by the board of supervisors the petition be favorably acted upon, the petitioner shall file a bond, etc., means a consideration of the application on its merits and the return of a judgment based on the evidence heard, and the board has no warrant to arbitrarily refuse an application without a sufficient hearing of evidence. Reed v. Collins, 90 Pac. 973, 974, 5 Cal. App. 494.

DUE COURSE OF BUSINESS

See Holder in Due Course; Indorsee in Due Course.

"In due course of business" involves indorsement to the holder before maturity, where the instrument is payable to order. Cochran v. Stein, 136 N. W. 1037, 1038, 118 Minn. 323, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391.

One who takes negotiable paper in payment of an antecedent debt before maturity and without notice, actual or otherwise, of any defect, receives it "in due course of business," and becomes, within the meaning of commercial law, "a holder for value." Hamiter v. Brown, 113 S. W. 1014, 88 Ark. 97.

Commercial paper may be said to be received in the "usual course of business" when it is indorsed and delivered for value under such circumstances that a business man of ordinary intelligence and capacity would give his money, goods, or credit for it, when offered for the purpose for which it is transferred; and it would not be in due course if he should at once suspect the integrity of the paper itself, or the credit and standing of the party offering it. Matlock v. Scheuerman, 93 Pac. 823, 826, 51 Or. 49, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 747.

A "purchase in due course" means a purchase before maturity for value, without notice, and in good faith. Walters v. Rock, 115 N. W. 511, 513, 18 N. D. 45.

A bank receiving negotiable paper in consideration of credit on its books, which credit is not absorbed by an antecedent indebtedness or exhausted by subsequent withdrawals, is not a "purchaser in due course of business." McNight v. Parsons, 118 N. W. 858, 860, 136 Iowa, 390, 125 Am. St. Rep. 265, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 718, 15 Ann. Cas. 665.

DUE COURSE OF LAW

The expressions "due course of law" and "law of the land" do not mean any act that the Legislature may have passed, if such act does not give to one opportunity to be heard before being deprived of property, liberty, or reputation, or, having been deprived of either does not afford a like opportunity of showing the extent of his injury, and give an adequate remedy to recover therefor. Hanson v. Krehbiel, 75 Pac. 1041, 1042, 68 Kan. 670, 64 L. R. A. 790, 104 Am. St. Rep. 422.

"Due course of law" of the land may not always mean a trial by jury, but it does mean that the citizen's property shall not be taken from him permanently without notice and opportunity to be heard before a judicial tribunal. Pen. Code 1895, art. 402, as amended by Acts 28th Leg. (Gen. Laws, p. 55, c. 40), providing that on the complaint of any person who believes that intoxicating liquor is being sold or given away in violation of law, and on the issuance of a warrant, a sheriff or constable is authorized to search the place described and to seize all intoxicating liquors found therein, containing no provision for the disposition of property so seized, is unconstitutional as a deprivation of property without "due process of law." Beavers v. Goodwin (Tex.) 90 S. W. 930, 932.

"Due course of law" does not mean any act that the Legislature may have passed if such act does not give to one opportunity to be heard before being deprived of property, liberty, or reputation, or, having been deprived of either, does not afford an opportunity of showing the extent of injury and giving adequate remedy to recover therefor. It means due and orderly procedure of courts in the ascertainment of damages for injury to the end that the injured one "shall have remedy"; that is, proper and adequate remedy, thus to be ascertained. N. C. Laws 1901, p. 784, c. 557, § 1, which provides that, before any action for libel shall be brought against a periodical or newspaper, the plaintiff shall serve a written notice on the publisher specifying the articles and the statements which he alleges to be false, and that if it appears on trial that the article was published in good faith, and that its falsity was due to an honest mistake in fact, and that there were reasonable grounds for believing that it was true, and that, within ten days after the notice, a fair and full retraction is published, the plaintiff shall recover only actual damages, does not violate Const. art. 1, § 35, which declares that, for an injury to his person or reputation, every person shall have a remedy by "due course of law," since "actual damages" include all damages which are property. Osborn v. Leach, 47 S. E. 811, 814, 135 N. C. 628, 66 L. R. A. 648 (quoting and adopting Hanson v. Krehbiel, 75 Pac. 1041, 68 Kan. 670, 64 L. R. A. 790, 104 Am. St. Rep. 422).

DUE DILIGENCE

What is "due diligence" chiefly depends on the circumstances of each case. It, however, always involves a "judicious course" or proceeding. A suit, however, is not an essential ingredient to due diligence. Mackie's Ex'r v. Davis (Va.) 2 Wash. 219, 226, 1 Am. Dec. 482.

"Due care," "due diligence," and "ordinary care," are convertible terms, and mean the same thing. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Smith (Tex.) 133 S. W. 1062, 1064 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2222; 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5035).

What is "due diligence" in a case where negligence would be wrongful must be determined from all the surrounding circumstances, for a degree of diligence which might suffice under one set of circumstances might be wholly inadequate under different conditions. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Moore, 68 S. E. 875, 878, 8 Ga. App. 185.

The measure of "due diligence and foresight" is that diligence and foresight which persons of ordinary prudence and care commonly exercise under similar circumstances. And the due diligence and foresight which condition the anticipation and avoidance of the other incidental or unavoidable causes specified in the 28-hour law is that degree of diligence and foresight which reasonably prudent and careful men ordinarily exercise under like circumstances. An "accidental or unavoidable cause" which cannot be avoided by the exercise of due diligence and foresight in the meaning of this law is a cause which reasonably prudent and careful men, under like circumstances, do not and would not ordinarily anticipate, and whose effects under similar circumstances they do not and would not ordinarily avoid. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. United States, 194 Fed. 342, 344, 114 C. C. A. 334.

A passenger in such a stupor that he could not be waked up either by shaking or kicking could not have been found to have been a person "in the exercise of due care and diligence," had an indictment been resorted to, and therefore he could not be found to have been in the exercise of due diligence, as was alleged in an action to recover a penalty for wrongfully causing his death. The court continued: "We use the words 'due diligence' in place of the words 'due care' found in Rev. Laws, c. 111, § 267, merely because those are the words of the count in question, and of St. 1886, p. 117, c. 140, under which the action was brought, and not because there is any distinction between those words and the words of Rev. Laws, c. 111, § 267." Hudson v. Lynn & B. R. Co., 71 N. E. 66, 70, 185 Mass. 510.

Defendants in February, 1905, purchased of plaintiffs 200 barrels of certain flour at $5.35 per barrel, for delivery in fractional lots as requested by defendants within a "reasonable time." Between March 20th and May 16th, defendants accepted 55 barrels, and in July requested further delay. In August plaintiffs notified defendants that if they did not carry out their contract plaintiffs would dispose of the flour on defendant's account, and, receiving no response, plaintiffs tendered the flour to the defendants on September 2, 1905, which defendants refused to receive, whereupon, without further notice, plaintiffs sold the flour on a produce exchange on September 20th for $4.20 a barrel, which was the best price obtainable. Held, that plaintiffs acted with "due diligence," and that the resale fixed the measure of plaintiff's damages. Ford v. Erde, 99 N. Y. Supp. 487, 488, 50 Misc. Rep. 665.

Under Pen. Code, § 686, subd. 3, providing that in a criminal case the testimony of a witness made under the opportunity for cross-examination by both sides may be admitted in evidence where such witness cannot with "due diligence" be found within the state, defendant's reliance upon the sheriff's promise to produce the witness if possible on the state's subpoena for him was not such "due diligence," which means such diligence as the circumstances require, but he should have issued one himself, since the state had the right to withdraw its subpoena at any time. People v. Johnson, 110 Pac. 965, 966, 13 Cal. App. 776.

In making ship seaworthy

The diligence required of vessels to enable them to claim the benefit of the Harter Act (Act Feb. 13, 1893, c. 105, § 2, 27 Stat. 445), with reference to "due diligence," is diligence with respect to the vessels and not in obtaining surveyor's certificates of seaworthiness. The Abbazia, 127 Fed. 495, 496.

"Due diligence" to make a vessel in all respects seaworthy, within the meaning of section 3 of the Harter Act (27 Stat. 445, c. 105), does not require merely due diligence on the part of the owner himself nor in respect to construction only, but also on the part of those to whom the owner has entrusted the duty, and in respect not only to construction but also as to inspection, maintenance, and repair; and where the agents of the purchasers of a vessel tested the deck somewhat with a hammer and small knife, without making a thorough inspection, the owners did not exercise due diligence in inspection to make her seaworthy before the commencement of the voyage. The Ninfa, 156 Fed. 513, 521.

For personal safety

Whatever a person in the exercise of reasonable care might do is "due diligence" within an accident policy requiring insured to use "due diligence" for his self-protection. Tinsman v. Illinois Commercial Men's Ass'n, 85 N. E. 913, 914, 285 Ill. 685.

In securing testimony

Rev. St. 1898, § 3133, requiring for a continuance, because of absence of evidence, a showing that "'due diligence' has been used to procure it," is not satisfied where a subpoena for the absent witness was not placed in the hands of an officer for service till the morning the case was called for trial, though it had been set for several weeks, and the witness had testified on a former trial. Corporation of Members of Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. Watson, 83 Pac. 731, 733, 30 Utah, 126.

DUE EXECUTION

"The 'due execution' of an instrument goes to the manner and form of its execution, according to the laws and customs of the country, by persons competent to execute it." Puritan Mfg. Co. v. Toti & Gradi, 94 Pac. 1022, 1023, 14 N. M. 425.

DUE FORM

For a tax deed to be in "due form," it must have followed the form laid down in the statutes. An abstract which recites that the tax deed was in "due form," but which does not set out the tax deed in full, is insufficient to bring in question the propriety of the action of the court below in admitting the tax deed in evidence. Williams v. Jones, 40 South. 28, 50 Fla. 485.

DUE IN THE SAME RIGHT

A debt is considered as "due in the same right" as one sued on when the plaintiff can sue, and the defendant be sued, in their own names, without specifying any representative character, and the party to the suit has a lien upon, or a legal right to the application or distribution of, the fund when collected. McGehee v. Harrison, 51 Ala. 522, 524.

DUE INVESTIGATION

Section 6 of chapter 67 of the Laws of 1905, entitled "An act to abolish the state board of taxation and to create in lieu thereof a board of equalization, revision, review and enforcement of tax assessments" (P. L. p. 126), authorizes the state board of equalization, "after 'due investigation,'" to increase the assessment made upon any property that has been assessed at less than its true value, and for this purpose, if necessary, to direct a reassessment of such property to be made by an assessor or other taxing officer, or by some other person appointed by the board. Held, that the new assessment, whether made by the board, or by a taxing officer, or some other person, is intended merely for the purpose of carrying into effect a determination previously reached by the board, after "due investigation"; that the property in question has been assessed at too low a valuation; and that the owner of the property is entitled to notice of the investigation. Mayor, etc., of Jersey City v.

Board of Equalization of Taxes of New Jersey, 67 Atl. 38, 41, 74 N. J. Law, 753.

DUE MANNER

See In Due Manner.

An allegation, in an indictment for subornation of perjury, that the witness suborned was in "due manner" sworn was equivalent to an allegation that she was duly sworn, and was sufficient without setting forth the form or manner in which it was done. State v. Jewett, 85 Pac. 994, 996, 48 Or. 577 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, pp. 2259-2264; Anderson's Dict. of Law, 385; 3 Cent. Dict. & Enc. 1795).

DUE NOTICE

As used in the provisions of the Code, regulating sheriff's sales, a notice by advertisement is not due notice to the party in actual possession of the land. Downing v. Stephens, 1 Baxt. (60 Tenn.) 454, 456.

"Due notice," within Rev. St. c. 107, § 8, requiring due notice of a deposition taken out of the state and not under a commission, is that which will reasonably enable the adverse party to be present at the taking, and depends on the circumstances of each case, and must be settled by the sound discretion of the presiding judge, which was not abused by holding good a notice served in Portland (Me.) on the 14th for the taking of a deposition in New Bedford (Mass.), 166 miles distant, on the 24th, where the court adjourned its session on the 16th. Harris v. Brown, 63 Me. 51, 53.

"Due notice," as used in the by-laws of a Trade Union, which provided for fining and otherwise punishing any member violating the law of the association, etc., and provided for a trial with due notice, means notice that the accused is to be put upon trial at a specified time upon specified charges, and the notice must be given in season to afford him reasonable opportunity to make preparation to meet the charges by summoning witnesses in his behalf. Brennan v. United Hatters of North America, Local No. 17, 65 Atl. 165, 168, 73 N. J. Law, 729, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 254, 118 Ann. St. Rep. 727, 9 Ann. Cas. 698.

Under a contractor's bond for city work, providing that, if an action be brought against the city for damages from the contractor's negligence, "due notice" of the action, given the contractor and his surety, should be conclusive against them as to their liability, notice of an action against the city given to the contractor 17 months after it was begun, a year after it was put at issue, and 11 days before the time for trial was prima facie but not conclusively "due notice" within the contractor's bond, and the court should have permitted the contractor and sureties to make their showing that the notice was not in time. Spokane v. Costello, 74 Pac. 58, 60, 61, 33 Wash. 98.

DUE OR TO BECOME DUE

The "debts due or to become due," under Rev. St. 1898, § 2768, relate to such as the garnishee owes absolutely, and have been construed to cover debts which are an absolute liability, though payable at some future date. Mundt v. Shabow, 97 N. W. 897, 120 Wis. 303 (citing Smith v. Davis, 1 Wis. 447, 60 Am. Dec. 390; Bishop v. Young, 17 Wis. 46, 47; Foster v. Singer, 34 N. W. 396, 60 Wis. 392, 2 Am. St. Rep. 745; Vollmer v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 56 N. W. 919, 86 Wis. 305; Evans v. Rector, 83 N. W. 292, 107 Wis. 286).

DUE PRECAUTION

The duty imposed on the owners, masters, and agents of ships bringing alien immigrants to a port of the United States by Act March 3, 1891, c. 551, §§ 8, 10, 26 Stat. 1085, 1086, to adopt "due precautions" to prevent the landing of any alien immigrant at any place or time other than that designated by the inspection officers, and to detain such immigrants as may be rejected on board until they are returned, does not make a shipowner, master, or agent an insurer of the safe-keeping of alien immigrants while detained for inspection in the custody of inspection officers at a place on land designated by such officers, and they cannot be convicted of a violation of such provisions, because of the escape of immigrants, while so held, without their fault or negligence. H. Hackfeld & Co. v. United States, 141 Fed. 9, 11, 72 C. C. A. 265.

DUE PROCESS OF LAW

Deprive of property, see Deprive.

"It is difficult to define with precision the exact meaning of the phrase 'due process of law.' Any definition which could be given would probably fail to comprehend all the cases to which it would apply. It is probably wiser * * * to leave the meaning to be evolved by the gradual process of judicial inclusion and exclusion, as the cases presented for decision shall require, with the reasoning on which such decision may be founded. It may, however, be stated generally that 'due process of law' requires an orderly proceeding, adapted to the nature of the case in which the citizen has an opportunity to be heard and to defend, enforce, and protect his rights." Jones v. Board of Com'rs, Franklin County, 42 S. E. 144, 149, 130 N. C. 451 (quoting and adopting statements in Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, 30 Am. Rep. 289).

The phrase "due process of law" has never been defined so as to draw a clear and distinct line applicable to all cases between proceedings which are by "due process of law" and those which are not. Gaffney v. Jones, 87 Pac. 114, 116, 44 Wash. 158.

"The words 'law of the land' were borrowed from the Magna Charta and have a recognized significance." State v. Barrett, 50 S. E. 506, 514, 138 N. C. 630, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 628.

The constitutional guaranty of "due process of law" prohibits every arbitrary interference with the property of a person, and protects every citizen in the possession, enjoyment, and disposition of his property; but it is not intended to interfere with the government in determining by what remedies or process legal rights may be asserted or legal obligations be enforced, provided the method of procedure adopted for this purpose gives reasonable notice and affords fair opportunity to be heard before the issues are decided. As stated in Taylor v. Porter (N. Y.) 4 Hill, 140, 40 Am. Dec. 274, "due process of law" is "a prosecution or suit instituted and conducted according to the prescribed forms and solemnities for ascertaining guilt or determining the title to property." As stated in Backus v. Shipherd (N. Y.) 11 Wend. 629, it is "a timely and regular proceeding to judgment and execution." As stated in Harbison v. Knoxville Iron Co., 53 S. W. 955, 103 Tenn. 421, 56 L. R. A. 316, 76 Am. St. Rep. 682, it is "the application of the law as it exists in the fair and regular course of administrative procedure." As stated in Ex parte Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 2 Sup. Ct. 569, 27 L. Ed. 552, it is "that kind of procedure which is suitable and proper to the nature of cases, and sanctioned by the established usages and customs of the courts." As stated in Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. Ed. 678, it is "process due according to the law of the land." In re Francis, 136 Fed. 912, 913 (citing Iowa Cent. R. Co. v. Iowa, 16 Sup. Ct. 344, 160 U. S. 389, 40 L. Ed. 487; Simon v. Craft, 21 Sup. Ct. 836, 182 U. S. 427, 45 L. Ed. 1165; Leeper v. Texas, 11 Sup. Ct. 577, 139 U. S. 462, 35 L. Ed. 225; Ludelling v. Chaffe, 12 Sup. Ct. 439, 143 U. S. 301, 36 L. Ed. 313; Wiswall v. Campbell, 98 U. S. 348, 23 L. Ed. 923).

That the Constitution is the "law of the land," in the sense that no act of either department of the government, which violates its provisions or exceeds its powers, can be enforced to deprive the citizen of his life, liberty, or property, is a fundamental truth. To deny it is to assert that constitutional government is a failure, and liberty, regulated by law, has no abiding place in our political system. The Constitution is, of necessity, as well as the declared will of the people, the supreme law, and in no proper legal sense can any act of either department of the government which violates its provisions or exceeds the powers delegated, be by law. State v. Williams, 61 S. E. 61, 62, 146 N. C. 618, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 299, 14 Ann. Cas. 562.

The phrase "due process" has had a well-defined meaning for ages. Putting it in the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution not only granted, but directly defined, certain specific rights which inure to the benefit of every person, alien as well as citizen, and are derived from, dependent upon, or secured by the Constitution of the United States. The right thus created and defined, in a case involving life and liberty, is the right to enjoy the benefits of all proceedings which constitute a trial according to the law of the land. But it cuts deeper than this. The law of the land, applying to all persons impartially, might not afford some of the rights which this clause of the Constitution grants and secures to the citizen and compels the state to afford. If, for instance, the state should deprive a person of the benefit of counsel, it would not be due process of law. If it allowed a private person to pass judgment on him for crime, it would not be due process. Within certain limits the state may change its remedies at pleasure, but it must be "with due regard to the landmarks established for the protection of the citizen." It must not exercise "arbitrary power or depart from the principles of private right and distributive justice." As declared by the Supreme Court, the fourteenth amendment, in its requisition concerning due process, "is not too vague and indefinite to operate as a practical restraint." Hurtado v. California, 4 Sup. Ct. 111, 110 U. S. 516, 28 L. Ed. 232. As there declared, "due process must, in the language of Mr. Webster, be, according to his familiar definition, the general law, or law which bears before it condemns, and which proceeds upon inquiry and renders judgment." Ex parte Riggins, 134 Fed. 404, 418.

"Due process of the law" includes every step from summons to judgment, and, if a party is deprived of any right usually accorded to others, it is not "due process of law." Riglander v. Star Co., 90 N. Y. Supp. 772, 776, 98 App. Div. 101.

What is "due process of law" must be determined by circumstances, and thus, in the military or naval service of the United States, the military law is due process, so that the decision of military tribunal, acting within its scope, is not reviewable by the courts. Reaves v. Ainsworth, 31 Sup. Ct. 230, 233, 219 U. S. 296, 304, 55 L. Ed. 225.

Any legal proceeding enforced by public authority, whether sanctioned by age and custom or newly devised in the discretion of the legislative power, in furtherance of the general public good, which regards and preserves the principles of liberty and justice, is "due process of law." State v. Jack, 76 Pac. 911, 913, 69 Kan. 387, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 167, 2 Ann. Cas. 171 (citing Brown v. New Jersey, 20 Sup. Ct. 77, 175 U. S. 172, 44 L. Ed. 119).

If a statute does not violate the federal constitutional prohibition against the denial of due process of law, it does not violate the state Constitution in that respect, since "due process of law" means the same in both Constitutions. McGarvey v. Swan, 96 Pac. 697, 714, 17 Wyo. 120.

Const. U. S. Amend. 5, prohibiting any person from being deprived of liberty or property without due process of law, is merely a restriction upon the federal power, and does not apply to the states. Inland Steel Co. v. Yedinak, 87 N. E. 229, 234, 172 Ind. 423, 139 Am. St. Rep. 889.

The provision of the state Constitution (article 1, § 6) declaring that no person shall be deprived of his property without "due process of law" has been universally given a large and liberal interpretation, and it has been held that the fundamental principle of free government, expressed in these words, protects not only life, liberty, and property, in a strict and technical sense, against unlawful invasion by the government, but also protects every essential incident to the enjoyment of those rights, including the right to dispose of property without unreasonable restrictions. Wright v. Hart, 93 N. Y. Supp. 60, 67, 103 App. Div. 218.

In criminal cases in a state court, "due process of law" means a trial in a court of competent jurisdiction, before an impartial judge and jury, or judge without a jury, upon an accusation, either by indictment or information, as the state may provide, charging the accused with the violation of some state law, of which accusation the accused must have notice in time to enable him to prepare for trial. This trial must proceed according to the established procedure or rules of practice in such state applicable to all such cases. In other words, the defendant must have his day in court. The admission of evidence for or against the accused must be according to the established rules in such state in all such cases, and the punishment inflicted must be authorized by law. Anderson v. State, 126 Pac. 840, 847, 8 Okl. Cr. 90.

As security against arbitrary action

"Due process of law" is secured by laws operating on all alike, without discrimination." Lamar v. Prosser, 48 S. E. 977, 121 Ga. 153. (Citing and adopting Caldwell v. Texas, 11 Sup. Ct. 883, 141 U. S. 209, 35 L. Ed. 713.)

Due process of law is secured, if the laws operate upon all alike and do not subject the individual to the arbitrary exercise of the powers of government. Miller v. City of Birmingham, 44 South. 388, 389, 151 Ala. 469, 125 Am. St. Rep. 31.

The words "due process of law" as used in the federal Constitution have been held to mean nothing more than the application of the law of the land to a given class of cases, and such application is secured if the law in question operates on all alike and does not subject the individual to an arbitrary exercise of the powers of government. Dela- ware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Board of Public Utility Com'rs, 84 Atl. 702, 703, 83 N. J. Law, 212.

The constitutional safeguard of "due process of law," or its equivalent, "law of the land," "condemns arbitrary, unequal, and partial legislation; and it is equally clear that the right to make contracts and have them enforced as others may is one of the rights so secured to every citizen." State v. Missouri Tie & Timber Co., 80 S. W. 933, 940, 941, 181 Mo. 536, 65 L. R. A. 588, 103 Am. St. Rep. 614, 2 Ann. Cas. 119.

"Due process of law" is secured by laws operating on all alike and not subjecting the individual to arbitrary exercise of the powers of the government, unrestrained by the established principle of private right and justice. People v. Coleman, 79 Pac. 283, 286, 145 Cal. 609 (citing Leeper v. Texas, 11 Sup. Ct. 577, 139 U. S. 467, 35 L. Ed. 225).

There is a substantial distinction between the fifth amendment of the federal Constitution which is obligatory only on the United States, and secures due process of law, and the fourteenth amendment, which is obligatory on the states and prohibits the denial of the equal protection of the laws; the latter expression being broader than the former, though the mere denial of equal protection of the laws may run into the other limitation. Mere discrimination, however, does not necessarily have that effect. United States v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 165 Fed. 742, 745.

The terms "due process of law" and "equal protection of the laws," as used in Const. U. S. Amend. 14, mean practically one and the same thing. State v. Barrett, 50 S. E. 506, 514, 138 N. C. 630, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 626 (dissenting opinion of Brown, J., quoting and adopting definitions in Cooley, Const. Lim. § 335; Westervelt v. Gregg, 12 N. Y. 202, 62 Am. Dec. 160; San Mateo County v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 13 Fed. 722).

There is a diversity of opinion as to the true meaning of the words "law of the land" and "due process of law," as used in the state Constitutions; but the phrases mean the same, and, if they were combined to read "due process of the law of the land," the meaning would be the same. But they must be held to guarantee, not particular forms of procedure, but the very substance of individual rights to life, liberty, and property, and to secure the individual from the arbitrary exercise of the powers of government unrestrained by established principles of private rights and distributive justice. State v. Hodgson, 28 Atl. 1089, 1094, 66 Vt. 134; State v. Stimpson, 62 Atl. 14, 17, 78 Vt. 124, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1158, 6 Ann. Cas. 639.

As based on fundamental and inherent principles of justice

The words "due process of law" imply conformity with natural and inherent principles of justice. Larabee v. Dolley, 175 Fed. 365, 392 (quoting and adopting definition in Holden v. Hardy, 18 Sup. Ct. 383, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. Ed. 780).

As restriction on all branches of government

The term "due process of law" means "the law of the land," or certain fundamental rights which have always been recognized by the common law, and extends to every proceeding which may interfere with life, liberty, or property, whether judicial, administrative, or executive in its nature. People v. Strassheim, 90 N. E. 118, 120, 242 Ill. 359; Risley v. City of Utica, 173 Fed. 502, 507.

"Due process of law" extends to every case which may deprive a citizen of life, liberty, or property whether the proceedings be judicial, administrative, or executive in their nature. Weimer v. Bunbury, 30 Mich. 201. This great guaranty is always and everywhere present to protect the citizen against arbitrary interference with these sacred rights." MacMullen v. City of Middletown, 98 N. Y. Supp. 145, 150, 112 App. Div. 81 (quoting Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, 191, 30 Am. Rep. 289).

As common law, statutes, and constitutional provisions

"Due process of law" does not mean merely according to the will of the Legislature, or the will of some judicial or quasi judicial body upon whom it may confer authority. It means according to the law of the land, including the Constitution with its guaranties and the legislative enactments and rules duly made by its authority, so far as they are consistent with constitutional limitations. It excludes all mere arbitrary dealings with persons or property. It excludes all interference not according to the established principles of justice, one of the most familiar of them being the right and opportunity for a hearing, to meet opposing evidence and oppose with evidence, according to the established principles of fair investigation to determine the justice of the case, before judgment affecting personal or property rights shall be pronounced." State ex rel. Milwaukee Medical College v. Chittenden, 107 N. W. 500, 512, 127 Wis. 468 (citing Selfert v. Brooks, 34 Wis. 443; State ex rel. Flint v. Common Council of City of Fond du Lac, 42 Wis. 287).

Under the Constitution of the United States, and amendment (article 5), providing that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without "due process of law," and the Constitution of Pennsylvania, declaring that the accused cannot be deprived of his life, liberty, or property, without the judgment of his peers, or the "law of the land," the two phrases "law of the land" and "due process of law" are synonymous, and their meaning is that such principles in the administration of law as were in force under the common law in England at the time when the Constitution of the United States or the Constitution of Pennsylvania was adopted became part of the American law by force of these constitutional enactments. State ex rel. Mackintosh v. Superior Court for King County, 88 Pac. 207, 209, 45 Wash. 248.

The term "law of the land" includes law of the state, Constitution of the state, and the Constitution of the United States. Titsworth v. State, 101 Pac. 288, 289, 2 Okl. Cr. 268.

As proceeding according to course of common law

It has been held that the phrase "due process of law" has reference to judicial proceedings according to the course and usage of the common law. People ex rel. Hillel Lodge No. 72, I. O. B. B., v. Rose, 69 N. E. 762, 767, 768, 207 Ill. 352.

The "law of the land" is not simply existing statute law of the state, but is the right of trial according to the process and proceedings of the common law. State v. Learned, 47 Me. 426, 432.

"Due process of law" means a regular trial according to the course of the common law. Trustees of Village of Saratoga Springs v. Saratoga Gas, Electric Light & Power Co., 107 N. Y. Supp. 341, 364, 122 App. Div. 203 (quoting definition in 4 Lincoln's Const. Hist. p. 37).

As exercise of governmental power according to settled maxims

Whether property is taken without due process of law depends upon the nature of each particular case. If it be such an exercise of power "as the settled maxims of law permit and sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the classes to which the one in question belongs," it is due process of law. Leigh v. Green, 24 Sup. Ct. 390, 392, 193 U. S. 79, 48 L. Ed. 623 (quoting Cooley, Const. Lim. [7th Ed.] 506).

When it is declared that a person shall not be deprived of his property without "due process of law," it means such an exercise of the powers of government as the settled maxims of law permit and sanction, under such safeguards as these maxims prescribe for the class of cases to which the one in question belongs. The constitutional guaranty which is as old as Magna Charta, as it is found in this or an equivalent form in every American Constitution, is intended to secure the citizen from the arbitrary exercise of the powers of government, unrestrained by the established principles of right and distributive justice. Kennedy v. State Board of Registration in Medicine, 108 N. W. 730, 731, 145 Mich. 241, 9 Ann. Cas. 125 (quoting and adopting the definition in State v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 26 N. W. 123, 84 Minn. 387; People v. Dickerson, 129 N. W. 199, 200, 164 Mich. 148, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 917, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 688; In re City of Pittsburgh, 66 Atl. 348, 352, 217 Pa. 227, 120 Am. St. Rep. 845.

As general public laws

The phrase "law of the land" includes the general laws of the state. Mix v. Board of Com'rs of Nez Perce County, 112 Pac. 215, 217, 18 Idaho, 695, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 534.

To give a court discretion as to mode of trial on the question of insanity does not deny "due process of law." State v. Lyons, 37 South. 890, 905, 113 La. 959; In re Crosswell's Petition, 66 Atl. 55, 57, 28 R. I. 137, 13 Ann. Cas. 874.

The constitutional phrase, "law of the land," means the general law which requires a hearing before a lawful tribunal before condemnation and judgment. Wichita Electric Co. v. Hinckley (Tex.) 131 S. W. 1192, 1194; People ex rel. Hillel Lodge No. 72, I. O. B. B., v. Rose, 69 N. E. 762, 767, 768, 207 Ill. 352; Dorrance v. Dorrance, 148 S. W. 94, 99, 242 Mo. 625; Clapp v. Houg, 98 N. W. 710, 713, 12 N. D. 600, 65 L. R. A. 757, 102 Am. St. Rep. 589 (quoting definition in Dartmouth College Case); Daniels v. Homer, 51 S. E. 992, 999, 139 N. C. 219, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 997 (dissenting opinion by Connor, J., quoting and adopting the definition of Mr. Webster, in his arguments in the Dartmouth College Case, which definition was adopted with approval in Parish v. Cedar Co., 45 S. E. 768, 133 N. C. 478, 98 Am. St. Rep. 718); Viemelster v. White, 84 N. Y. Supp. 712, 715, 88 App. Div. 44 (citing State Bank v. Cooper, 2 Yerg. [10 Tenn.] 599, 24 Am. Dec. 517, 523; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. [17 U. S.] 518, 4 L. Ed. 629).

The term "law of the land," in a constitutional provision that no person shall be deprived of his rights or privileges, unless by the law of the land or judgment of his peers, means "a general and public law equally binding upon every member of the community. * * * The right to life, liberty, and property of every individual must stand or fall by the same rule of law that governs every other member of the body politic or 'land' under similar circumstances." People ex rel. Kenny v. Folks, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1100, 1105, 89 App. Div. 171 (concurring opinion of Woodward, J., quoting and adopting definition given in Vanzant v. Waddell, 2 Yerg. [10 Tenn.] 260); Rosin v. Lidgerwood Mfg. Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 49, 51, 89 App. Div. 245.

"Due process of law" means ordinary judicial proceedings, or due notice in pursuance of the general law. Jones v. Mould, 182 N. W. 45, 49, 151 Iowa, 599.

A general public law, equally binding upon everybody similarly situated, and administered according to the regular course of judicial proceedings, constitutes "due process of law." Mountain City Mill Co. v. Waller, 1 Tenn. Ch. App. 629, 643.

"Due process of law" means a general public law, binding upon all members of the community under all circumstances, and not partial or private laws affecting the rights of private individuals or classes of individuals. Charles J. Off & Co. v. Morehead, 85 N. E. 264, 266, 235 Ill. 40, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 167, 126 Am. St. Rep. 184, 14 Ann. Cas. 434.

As course of legal proceedings according to established rules and principles

"Due process of law" means in the due process of the legal proceedings according to those rules and forms which have been established for the protection of private rights." Flannery v. People, 80 N. E. 60, 64, 225 Ill. 62; City of Belleville v. St. Clair County Turnpike Co., 84 N. E. 1049, 1052, 234 Ill. 428, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1071; Town of Vidalia v. Falkenhelner, 49 South. 217, 123 La. 625; Hendryx v. Perkins, 114 Fed. 801, 824, 52 C. C. A. 435; Martin v. White, 146 Fed. 461, 467, 76 C. C. A. 671 (quoting and adopting the definition in Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 733, 24 L. Ed. 565); Commissioners of Union Drainage Dist. No. 1 v. Smith, 84 N. E. 376, 377, 233 Ill. 417, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 292; People v. White, 90 Pac. 471, 477, 5 Cal. App. 829 (quoting and adopting definition in Cooley, Const. Lim. 855); Drady v. District Court, 102 N. W. 115, 118, 126 Iowa, 345; People ex rel. Hillel Lodge No. 72, I. O. B. B., v. Rose, 69 N. E. 762, 768, 207 Ill. 352; State v. Buddress, 114 Pac. 879, 882, 63 Wash. 26; State v. Barrett, 50 S. E. 506, 514, 138 N. C. 630, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 626; Rothchild & Co. v. Steger & Sons Piano Mfg. Co., 99 N. E. 920, 924, 256 Ill. 196, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 793.

"Due process of law," guaranteed in both the fifth and fourteenth amendments to the Constitution, implies the administration of equal laws according to established rules by competent tribunals having jurisdiction and proceeding upon notice and hearing. United States v. Billings, 180 Fed. 359, 364.

"Due process of law" means according to established forms of law, and the requirement is satisfied by the grant of a right to proceed in equity. Sisson v. Board of Sup'rs of Buena Vista County, 104 N. W. 454, 461, 128 Iowa, 442, 70 L. R. A. 440 (citing McLane v. Leicht, 29 N. W. 327, 69 Iowa, 401).

"Due process of law," as used in Const. art. 1, § 13, and Const. U. S. Amend. 14, as applied to judicial proceedings, means that every litigant shall have the right to have his cause tried and determined under the rules of procedure, the same as are applied to other similar cases, and, where this is afforded him, he cannot complain that due process of law is not being observed. Eagleson v. Rubin, 100 Pac. 765, 768, 16 Idaho, 82.

"Due process of law" in a criminal case requires a law describing the offense. The offense must be described in the accusation. The accused must be given his day in court. His trial must proceed according to established procedure, consisting of rules of pleading and practice." Jamison v. Wimbish, 180 Fed. 351, 358.

As observance of matter of form

"Due process of law" refers primarily to procedure according to the law of the land, rather than to matters of substantive law. Ong Chang Wing v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 15, 16, 218 U. S. 272, 54 L. Ed. 1040.

The "due process of law" clause of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States does not control mere forms of procedure in the state courts, or regulate practice therein. All its requirements are complied with if sufficient notice and adequate opportunity to defend has been afforded. Hammond Packing Co. v. State, 100 S. W. 407, 413, 81 Ark. 519, 126 Am. St. Rep. 1047 (quoting and adopting Simon v. Craft, 21 Sup. Ct. 836, 182 U. S. 427, 45 L. Ed. 1165).

While the forms of procedure in common use at the time the Constitutions were adopted must be taken to have been understood by the framers as embraced within the term "due process of law," it was not intended that the details of practice and procedure then existing should forever remain unchanged; and the Legislature may provide entirely novel and unprecedented methods of procedure, if they afford the parties affected the substantial securities against arbitrary and unjust spoliation which are embraced within the system of jurisprudence prevailing throughout the land. Title & Document Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 88 Pac. 356, 361, 150 Cal. 289, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199 (citing Hurtado v. California, 4 Sup. Ct. 111, 110 U. S. 516, 28 L. Ed. 232).

"Due process of law" is that constitutional right which provides that no citizen shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, except as provided by law. "It relates primarily to the remedy or means of redress, where rights are invaded, rather than to matters of substantive law," and it ordinarily implies and includes a plaintiff, a defendant, a judge, regular allegations, opportunity to answer, and a trial according to some settled course of judicial proceeding. Mix v. Board of Com'rs of Nez Perce County, 112 Pac. 215, 219, 18 Idaho, 695, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 534 (citing Huber v. Reilly, 53 Pa. 112, Kalloch v. Superior Court of City & County of San Francisco, 56 Cal. 229, and Board of Directors of Alfalfa Irrigation Dist. v. Collins, 64 N. W. 1090, 46 Neb. 411).

As law in regular course of administration

courts of justice. Womach v. City of St. Joseph, 100 S. W. 443, 446, 201 Mo. 487, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140 (citing Jones v. Yore, 48 S. W. 384, 142 Mo. loc. cit. 44); In re Francis, 136 Fed. 912, 918; Trustees of Village of Saratoga Springs v. Saratoga Gas, Electric Light & Power Co., 107 N. Y. Supp. 341, 364, 122 App. Div. 203 (quoting definition in 2 Miller, Const. p. 664); Davidson v. Hartford Life Ins. Co., 132 S. W. 291, 292, 151 Mo. App. 561; People v. Coleman, 79 Pac. 283, 286, 145 Cal. 609; Crane v. Waldron, 94 N. W. 593, 598, 133 Mich. 73; Davidson v. Hartford Life Ins. Co., 132 S. W. 291, 292, 151 Mo. App. 561.

Though "due process of law" means "law in its regular course of administration through the courts of law," it does not mean that the Legislature cannot change the rules of evidence as they existed at common law, nor make one a competent witness who was not such at common law. Statutes making parties and the husband or wife of a party competent to testify, changing the rule regulating challenges to jurors, providing for a special commissioner of jurors and for special juries in criminal cases, authorizing the perpetuation of certain testimony respecting the title to a particular estate, authorizing the physical examination of the plaintiff in actions for personal injuries, declaring what shall be received by the courts as presumptive evidence, provided the fact proved has a fair connection with the main fact to be proved, declaring the effect of recitals in tax deeds and of ex parte affidavits in town bonding acts and statutory foreclosures, and changing in other respects the common-law rules of evidence and common-law competency of witnesses, may be referred to as instances sustained by the courts. People v. Johnson, 77 N. E. 1164, 1167, 185 N. Y. 219.

The general definition of "due process of law" is "law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice"; and, while not necessarily confined to judicial proceedings (as, for instance, the collection of taxes is held to be within the phrase "by due process of law"), yet these words have such a signification when used to designate the kind of an eviction, or ouster, from real estate by which a party is dispossessed, as to preclude thereunder proof of a constructive eviction resulting from the purchase of a paramount title when hostilely asserted by the party holding it. Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Dunmeyer, 19 Kan. 539, 542.

Law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice is "due process," and, when secured by the law of the state, the constitutional requisition is satisfied. Due process of law is so secured by laws operating on all alike and not subjecting the individual to the powers of government, unrestrained by the principles of private right and distributive justice. Kroschel v. Munkers, 179 Fed. 961, 963.

"Process of law," in its broad sense, means law in its regular administration in courts of justice, which is but another way of saying that every man's life, liberty, and property is to be disposed of in accordance with those ancient and fundamental principles which were in existence when the Constitutions were adopted. Ives v. South Buffalo Ry. Co., 94 N. E. 431, 439, 201 N. Y. 271, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 162, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 156.

As legislative enactment

The state cannot make anything "due process of law" which by its own legislation it declares to be such. People ex rel. Hillel Lodge No. 72, I. O. B. B., v. Rose, 69 N. E. 762, 767, 768, 207 Ill. 352 (citing Cooley's Const. Lim. [6th Ed.] pp. 430, 431; Burdick v. People, 36 N. E. 948, 149 Ill. 600, 24 L. R. A. 152, 41 Am. St. Rep. 329; Regents v. Williams [Md.] 9 Gill & J. 365, 31 Am. Dec. 99; Board of Education v. Bakewell, 10 N. E. 378, 122 Ill. 339; Westervelt v. Gregg, 12 N. Y. 202, 209, 62 Am. Dec. 160; Rhinehart v. Schuyler, 2 Gilman [7 Ill.] 473; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. Ed. 616; Cooley's Const. Lim. [5th Ed.] marg. p. 356, top p. 435; Taylor v. Porter [N. Y.] 4 Hill, 140, 40 Am. Dec. 274; Rohn v. Harris, 22 N. E. 587, 130 Ill. 525; Ervine, Appeal of, 16 Pa. 256, 55 Am. Dec. 499; Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 1, 25 Am. Dec. 677; Commissioners of Union Drainage Dist. No. 1 v. Smith, 84 N. E. 376, 377, 233 Ill. 417, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 292.

"The phrase 'law of the land,' as used in the Bill of Rights, is not easy of definition. It does not mean any act that the Legislature may have passed, if such act does not give to one opportunity to be heard before being deprived of property, liberty, or reputation, or, having been deprived of either, does not afford a like opportunity of showing the extent of his injury and give an adequate remedy to recover therefor. Whatever the term may mean, it does mean due and orderly procedure of courts in the ascertainment of damages for injury, to the end that the injured one shall have remedy—that is, proper and adequate remedy—thus to be ascertained. To refuse hearing and remedy for an injury after its infliction is a small remove from infliction of penalty before and without hearing." Osborn v. Leach, 47 S. E. 811, 814, 135 N. C. 628, 66 L. R. A. 648 (quoting Hanson v. Krehbiel, 75 Pac. 1041, 68 Kan. 670, 64 L. R. A. 790, 104 Am. St. Rep. 422).

The expressions "due course of law" and "law of the land" do not mean any act that the Legislature may have passed, if such act does not give to one opportunity to be heard before being deprived of property, liberty, or reputation, or, having been deprived of either, does not afford a like opportunity of showing the extent of his injury and give an adequate remedy to recover therefor. Hanson v. Krehbiel, 75 Pac. 1041,

To say that the "law of the land," or "due process of law," may mean the very act of the Legislature which deprives the citizen of his rights, privileges, or property, leads to a simple absurdity. The Constitution would then mean that no person should be deprived of his property or rights unless the Legislature shall pass a law to effect the wrong, and this would be throwing the restraint away. It follows that a law which, by its own inherent force, extinguishes rights of property, or compels their extinction without any legal proceedings whatever, comes directly in conflict with the Constitution. King v. Hatfield, 130 Fed. 564, 579 (quoting Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378).

As laws of each state

"Due process of law" in the states is regulated by the law of the states. River-Walles Co. v. Fogo, 78 N. W. 767, 769, 102 Wis. 536 (quoting and adopting definition in Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. Ed. 678); Wenham v. State, 91 N. W. 421, 423, 65 Neb. 394, 58 L. R. A. 825.

"Due process of law," as required by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, means only that a man is to be tried, as every other man is tried, in accordance with the law of the land in the state where he is charged with crime." Lamar v. Prosser, 48 S. E. 977, 121 Ga. 153.

Judicial proceeding implied

"Due process of law" is not confined to judicial proceedings, but extends to every case which may deprive a citizen of life, liberty, or property, whether the proceeding be judicial, administrative, or executive in its nature. Jones v. Franklin County Com'rs, 42 S. E. 144, 149, 180 N. C. 451; Board of Education of City of Stillwater v. Aldredge, 73 Pac. 1104, 1105, 13 Okl. 205; Kennedy v. State Board of Registration in Medicine, 108 N. W. 730, 731, 145 Mich. 241, 9 Ann. Cas. 125; Ross v. Board of Sup'rs of Wright County, 104 N. W. 506, 511, 128 Iowa, 427, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 431 (citing In re Bradley, 79 N. W. 280, 108 Iowa, 476; Public Clearing House v. Coyne, 24 Sup. Ct. 789, 194 U. S. 497, 48 L. Ed. 1092; Welmer v. Bunbury, 80 Mich. 201; Spencer v. Merchant, 8 Sup. Ct. 921, 125 U. S. 345, 31 L. Ed. 763; Yeomans v. Riddle, 50 N. W. 886, 84 Iowa, 147; Wulzen v. Board, 35 Pac. 353, 101 Cal. 15, 40 Am. St. Rep. 17; Munson v. Commissioners, 8 South. 906, 43 La. Ann. 15; McMahon v. Palmer, 6 N. E. 400, 102 N. Y. 176, 55 Am. Rep. 796; Cooley's Const. Lim. pp. 354, 355; McKeevers v. Jenks, 13 N. W. 295, 59 Iowa, 300; In re Madera Irr. Dist., 28 Pac. 272, 675, 92 Cal. 296, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106; Hagar v. Rec. Dist. No. 108, 4 Sup. Ct. 663, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. Ed. 590; Ballard v. Hunter, 27 Sup. Ct. 261, 266, 204 U. S. 241, 51 L. Ed. 461; Cunningham v. North- western Imp. Co., 119 Pac. 554, 564, 44 Mont. 180; MacMullen v. City of Middletown, 98 N. Y. Supp. 145, 150, 112 App. Div. 81.

"Due process of law" does not necessarily imply judicial process; constitutional legislation being also comprehended. Board of Water Com'rs of City of Norwich v. Johnson, 84 Atl. 727, 731, 96 Conn. 151, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1024.

The expression "due process of law," as used in the Constitution of the United States, does not require that the assertion of the rights of the public against the individual, or the imposition of burdens on his property for the public use, shall in all cases be done by resort to courts of justice. McMillan v. City of Butte, 76 Pac. 203, 205, 30 Mont. 220 (citing Den ex dem. Murray v. Hoboken Land & Improvement Co., 18 How. [59 U. S.] 272, 15 L. Ed. 372).

"Due process of law" may be said to be satisfied whenever an opportunity is offered to invoke the equal protection of the law by judicial proceedings appropriate for the purpose, and adequate to secure the end and object sought to be attained." Reed v. Reed, 98 N. W. 73, 76, 70 Neb. 775.

"Due process of law," by which parties may be brought within the jurisdiction of the trial court as defendants in a suit, involves a course of legal procedure, which under our system must be summons or by capias. Hubbard v. Montross Metal Shingle Co., 74 Atl. 254, 255, 79 N. J. Law, 208.

"Due process of law" means at least some legal procedure in which the person proceeded against, if he is to be concluded thereby, shall have an opportunity to defend himself. In re Gannon, 18 Atl. 159, 160, 16 R. I. 537.

"Due process of law" means according to the settled course of judicial proceedings." City of St. Louis v. Galt, 77 S. W. 876, 879, 179 Mo. 8, 63 L. R. A. 778.

"Due process of law" requires judicial hearings only in matters of purely judicial nature, and not in matters of taxation, or matters purely administrative in their nature. Anderson v. Ritterbusch, 98 Pac. 1002, 1014, 22 Okl. 761.

"Due process of law" with respect to the imposition of legal penalties requires that the Legislature should prescribe the amount of the penalty or some definite standard for fixing the amount, or else that the amount should be determined in a judicial proceeding instituted against the offender. Cigar Makers' International Union of America v. Goldberg, 61 Atl. 457, 458, 72 N. J. Law, 214, 70 L. R. A. 156, 111 Am. St. Rep. 662.

"Due process of law" or the "law of the land," which means the same thing, is not necessarily a judicial proceeding. Private rights and the enjoyment of property may be interfered with by the legislative or executive, as well as the judicial, department of government. When it is declared that a person shall not be deprived of his property without due process of law, it means such an exercise of the powers of government as the settled maxims of law permit and sanction, under such safeguards as these maxims prescribe for the class of cases to which the one in question belongs. That clause in section 1, art. 14, of the Constitution of the United States, "Nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law," is not a limitation upon the police power of the state to pass and enforce such laws as, in its judgment, will inure to the health, morals, and general welfare of its people. Meffert v. State Board of Medical Registration & Examination, 72 Pac. 247, 251, 66 Kan. 710, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 811 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 26 N. W. 123, 124, 34 Minn. 387, 389, 390).

"It is not essential, in order to constitute 'due process of law,' that a taxpayer shall have the right to a direct proceeding in the courts to review the action of persons, boards, and tribunals empowered to assess property and levy taxes for the purpose of raising revenues for expenses of government. It is not required that judicial proceedings be resorted to in enforcing the levying and payment of taxes. The right to an appeal is purely statutory. These are special officers and tribunals within themselves empowered to do and perform all acts necessary and essential in the accomplishment of the collection of the public revenues. Due process of law is observed if, in the different steps taken by the officers and tribunals created by statute, an opportunity is given to an individual taxpayer who may feel aggrieved to be heard with reference thereto, and power is given to redress such grievance as may be right and just. Personal notice is not always essential. Notice given by statute or by publication may be sufficient. An owner is not deprived of his property without due process of law, if he has an opportunity to question its validity or the amount of such tax or assessment at some stage of the proceedings, either before that amount is finally determined or in subsequent proceedings for its collection. Hacker v. Howe, 101 N. W. 255, 259, 72 Neb. 335 (citing 2 Cooley, Tax'n [3d Ed.] 393; 1 Cooley, Tax'n [3d Ed.] 60).

"Due process of law" does not necessarily imply judicial proceedings, and while orderly proceedings according to established rules which do not violate fundamental right must be observed, there is no vested right in any particular remedy or form of proceeding. A general law administered in its regular course according to the form of procedure suitable and proper to the nature of the case, conformable to the fundamental rules of right and affecting all persons alike, is due process. People v. Apfelbaum, 95 N. E. 995, 998, 251 Ill. 18.

Though the phrase "due process of law" does not necessarily mean a judicial proceeding, neither does it necessarily mean a special tribunal for the express purpose of hearing the merits of a particular controversy, and where ample notice is provided, giving an owner opportunity to have a hearing in a court of competent jurisdiction before his property is affected, he is afforded due process of law. Balch v. Glenn, 119 Pac. 87, 73, 85 Kan. 735, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1080, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 406.

Jury trial not implied

A jury trial is not necessary to constitute "due process of law" in every case. Kirkland v. State, 78 S. W. 770, 772, 72 Ark. 171, 65 L. R. A. 76, 105 Am. St. Rep. 25, 2 Ann. Cas. 242; Marvin v. Trout, 26 Sup. Ct. 31, 34, 199 U. S. 212, 50 L. Ed. 157; Hood v. Tharp, 81 N. E. 861, 862, 228 Ill. 244; Rider-Wallis Co. v. Fogo, 78 N. W. 767, 769, 102 Wis. 536 (quoting and adopting definition in Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. Ed. 678); Anderson v. Ritterbusch, 98 Pac. 1002, 1014, 22 Okl. 761; Ross v. Board of Sup'rs of Wright County, 104 N. W. 506, 511, 128 Iowa, 427, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 431.

"Due process of law" is process due according to the law of the land." The provisions of the federal Constitution prohibiting a state from depriving any person of life, liberty, or property without "due process of law" do not require a trial by jury in suits at common law in a state court. Gunn v. Union R. Co., 62 Atl. 118, 119, 27 R. I. 320, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 362 (quoting and adopting definition in Maxwell v. Dow, 20 Sup. Ct. 448, 176 U. S. 581-594, 44 L. Ed. 597).

Same—in criminal cases and informations in insanity

By "the law of the land" is most clearly intended the general law, a law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial. The meaning is that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, and property and immunities under the jurisdiction of the general rules which govern society. Womach v. City of St. Joseph, 100 S. W. 443, 447, 201 Mo. 467, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140 (quoting and adopting definition in Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. [17 U. S.] loc. cit. 581, 4 L. Ed. 629); Holmes v. Murray, 105 S. W. 1085, 1086, 207 Mo. 413, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 431, 123 Am. St. Rep. 386, 13 Ann. Cas. 845 (citing Mathews v. St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co., 24 S. W. 598, 121 Mo. loc. cit. 322, 25 L. R. A. 161); Jenks v. Stump, 93 Pac. 17, 19, 41 Colo. 281, 124 Am. St. Rep. 137, 14 Ann. Cas. 914 (quoting and adopting in re Lowrie, 9 Pac. 489, 8 Colo. 513, 54 Am. Rep. 558).

The expression "due process of law" does not include the institution and procedure of the grand jury in a criminal prosecution. McKinney v. United States, 190 Fed. 25, 28, 117 C. C. A. 408.

"Due process of law" in a criminal case is a trial according to the rules enacted by the Legislature or adopted by the courts for the prosecution of crimes, and, if there are special rules governing a trial of the particular crime with which accused is charged, then, in addition to the rules prescribed for the conduct of criminal prosecutions in general, he must be given the benefit of such additional rules. Reed v. Commonwealth, 128 S. W. 874, 875, 138 Ky. 568.

Competent tribunal required

"Due process of law," as stated in Re Curry (N. Y.) 1 Civ. Proc. R. 819, is lawful judicial proceedings in a court of competent jurisdiction. In re Francis, 136 Fed. 912, 913.

"Due process of law," as applied to criminal procedure, requires that accused shall be tried in a court of competent jurisdiction. Ong Chang Wing v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 15, 17, 218 U. S. 272, 290, 54 L. Ed. 1040; Anderson v. State, 128 Pac. 840, 8 Okl. Cr. 90.

As notice and opportunity to be heard

"Due process of law" must be based on notice. People ex rel. Hillel Lodge, No. 72, 1 O. B. B., v. Rose, 69 N. E. 762, 767, 768, 207 Ill. 352.

By "due process of law" is meant notice and an opportunity to be heard. Beebe v. Magoun, 97 N. W. 986, 987, 122 Iowa, 94, 101 Am. St. Rep. 259; Daniels v. Homer, 51 S. E. 992, 999, 139 N. C. 219, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 997 (citing Simon v. Craft, 21 Sup. Ct. 836, 182 U. S. 427, 45 L. Ed. 1165); People ex rel. Loughran v. Flynn, 96 N. Y. Supp. 655, 662, 110 App. Div. 279 (citing Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, 30 Am. Rep. 289); Jenks v. Stump, 93 Pac. 17, 18, 41 Colo. 281, 124 Am. St. Rep. 137, 14 Ann. Cas. 914.

"Due process of law" affords a hearing before it condemns, and gives judgment only after trial, being that constitutional right which provides that no citizen shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, except as provided by law. Ong Chang Wing v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 15, 16, 218 U. S. 272, 54 L. Ed. 1040; Mix v. Board of Com'rs of Nez Perce County, 112 Pac. 215, 18 Idaho, 695, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 534; In re Francis, 136 Fed. 912, 913; Darmstatter v. City Council of City of Passaic, 79 Atl. 545, 546, 81 N. J. Law, 162; Money Weight Scale Co. v. Friedman, 74 Atl. 270, 79 N. J. Law, 214; State ex rel. Deems v. Holtcamp, 151 S. W. 153, 157, 245 Mo. 655.

"Due process of law" means an orderly proceeding adapted to the nature of the case, in which the citizen has an opportunity to be heard; and, where such opportunity is granted by the law, the citizen cannot complain of the procedure to which he is required to conform. State ex rel. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. District Court of St. Louis County, 97 N. W. 132, 134, 90 Minn. 457.

"Due process of law" requires that the owner be given an opportunity to be heard at a trial before his private property be taken and adjudged forfeited for his misconduct or for a protection of the public health. He cannot be deprived of the right, either before or after such taking of the property, to have a judicial inquiry whether in fact he has forfeited the right to his property by coming within the condemnation of the law. Lowe v. Conroy, 97 N. W. 942, 944, 120 Wis. 151, 66 L. R. A. 907, 102 Am. St. Rep. 983, 1 Ann. Cas. 341.

The fundamental requirement of "due process of law" is an opportunity for hearing and defense, and no fixed procedure is demanded. The process or proceedings may be adapted to the nature of the case. Ballard v. Hunter, 27 Sup. Ct. 261, 266, 204 U. S. 241, 51 L. Ed. 461 (citing Dent v. West Virginia, 9 Sup. Ct. 231, 129 U. S. 114, 32 L. Ed. 623; Lent v. Tillson, 11 Sup. Ct. 825, 140 U. S. 316, 35 L. Ed. 419; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 4 Sup. Ct. 663, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. Ed. 569; Iowa Cent. Ry. Co. v. Iowa, 16 Sup. Ct. 344, 160 U. S. 389, 40 L. Ed. 467).

It is an essential requisite of "due process of law" that full opportunity be afforded for the assertion and enforcement of the right after it comes within the present or prospective operation of such a statute and before the extinguishment takes effect. A statute which does not afford this opportunity is arbitrary, and violates the constitutional prohibition; but, if the opportunity be afforded, it is no objection to the statute that it has some regard to the past acts and omissions of the parties concerned, or to conditions produced by past occurrences, and is therefore not wholly prospective. Schauble v. Schulz, 137 Fed. 389, 392, 69 C. C. A. 581.

"Due process of law" implies the right of the person affected thereby to be present before the tribunal which pronounces judgment upon the question of life, liberty, or property, to be heard and to have the right of controverting every material fact which bears on the question of right in the matter involved. Wilber v. Reed, 122 N. W. 53, 55, 84 Neb. 767.

"The phrase 'due process of law' includes notice and a hearing before judgment." State ex rel. Riddell v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist., 85 Pac. 367, 33 Mont. 529.

The essential elements of "due process of law" are notice and opportunity to defend, but due process does not require that any particular form of proceedings be observed, but only that the same shall be regular proceedings, in which notice is given of the claim asserted and an opportunity afforded to defend against it. Smith v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 117 N. W. 1116, 1117, 140 Iowa, 66.

"'Due process of law,' guaranteed by the fourteenth amendment, does not require the state to adopt a particular form of procedure, so long as it appears that the accused has had sufficient notice of the accusation and an adequate opportunity to defend himself in the prosecution." The "due process of law" guaranteed by Const. U. S. Amend. 14, does not require that the highest state court for the review of a conviction of capital crimes be held in any particular county of that state, whatever may be the requirement of the state Constitution in that respect. Rogers v. Peck, 26 Sup. Ct. 87, 90, 199 U. S. 425, 50 L. Ed. 256 (citing Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 20 Sup. Ct. 620, 177 U. S. 230, 44 L. Ed. 747; Wilson v. North Carolina ex rel. Caldwell, 18 Sup. Ct. 435, 169 U. S. 586, 42 L. Ed. 885).

"Due process of law," within Const. art. 1, § 8, declaring that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, not only requires that a party shall be properly brought into court, but that he shall have the opportunity in court to establish any facts which, according to the usages of the common law or the provisions of the Constitution, will be a protection to himself or property. Persing v. Reno Stock Brokerage Co., 96 Pac. 1054, 1056, 80 Nev. 342.

"Due process of law," as used in the constitutional guaranty, declaring that a person shall not be deprived of his liberty without "due process of law," requires a hearing or an opportunity to be heard, in which the citizen may defend, enforce, and protect his rights. This principle is followed and enforced by all the courts, and is now so firmly established as to be beyond controversy. So carefully have the courts guarded this constitutional and sacred right of the citizen that statutes omitting it have uniformly been condemned, even where it appears that the party proceeded against was permitted through the courtesy of the court to have and did have notice of the proceeding and an opportunity to be heard. It is not enough that a person may by chance have notice, or that he may as a matter of favor or courtesy have a hearing. The law, to be constitutional, must require notice and give a right to a hearing; nor does it matter on the question of constitutionality that the questions involved have been fairly decided. The essential validity of the law is to be tested, not by what has been done under it, but by what may by its authority be done.

Notice to authorize judgment is indispensable to constitute "due process of law." Cella Commission Co. v. Bohlinger, 147 Fed. 419, 422, 78 C. C. A. 467, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 537 (citing Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 722, 724-727, 730, 733, 24 L. Ed. 565; Webster v. Reid, 11 How. 437, 459, 18 L. Ed. 761; Boswell v. Otis, 9 How. 336, 348, 13 L. Ed. 164; Picquet v. Swan, 5 Mason, 85, 19 Fed. Cas. 609, 612; D'Arcy v. Ketchum, 11 How. 165, 175, 176, 18 L. Ed. 648; Bissell v. Briggs, 9 Mass. 462, 469, 6 Am. Dec. 88; Kilburn v. Woodworth [N. Y.] 5 Johns. 37, 40, 4 Am. Dec. 321; Goldney v. Morning News, 15 Sup. Ct. 559, 156 U. S. 518, 521, 39 L. Ed. 517; Dull v. Blackman, 18 Sup. Ct. 333, 169 U. S. 243, 247, 42 L. Ed. 733; St. Clair v. Cox, 1 Sup. Ct. 354, 106 U. S. 350, 27 L. Ed. 222; Hart v. Sansom, 3 Sup. Ct. 596, 110 U. S. 151, 155, 28 L. Ed. 101; Noble v. Union River Logging R. Co., 13 Sup. Ct. 271, 147 U. S. 165, 173, 37 L. Ed. 123; Millan v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 103 Fed. 764, 769; Ralya Market Co. v. Armour & Co., 102 Fed. 530, 532).

It is not "due process of law" to condemn a party without an opportunity to be heard on a charge of contempt not committed in the presence of the court, but he must be allowed to answer and offer evidence in his own behalf. Hohenadel v. Steele, 86 N. E. 717, 719, 237 Ill. 229.

The guaranty of the Constitution, that an owner shall not be deprived of his property without "due process of law," gives him the right to be heard in its defense against any claim that may be made against him for its possession. Meacham v. Bear Valley Irr. Co., 79 Pac. 281, 145 Cal. 606, 68 L. R. A. 600.

"'Due process of law' requires that the court which assumes to determine the rights of parties shall have jurisdiction, and that there shall be notice and opportunity for hearing given the parties." American Land Co. v. Zeiss, 31 Sup. Ct. 200, 208, 219 U. S. 47, 71, 55 L. Ed. 82 (quoting Twining v. New Jersey, 29 Sup. Ct. 14, 211 U. S. 78, 53 L. Ed. 97).

Same—In assessments for local improvements

What constitutes "due process of law" must be determined by the facts of each case presented for decision, as no statutory definition of the term has as yet been given. The fourteenth amendment does not require that a citizen, before a local assessment can be made by the city council on his property, shall be first served with notice of the proposed assessment, that he may have the privilege of being heard by a tribunal which could entertain hearings according to judicial methods, and which would proceed upon inquiry and render judgment only after final trial, so that a statute conferring the power to make local assessments on a city council, without providing for another tribunal to hear and determine the validity of the council's proceedings at the suit of any owner of abutting property, is not a taking of property without "due process of law." Hutcherson v. Storrie (Tex.) 48 S. W. 785, 789.

Same—In condemnation proceedings

"Due process of law" requires that the owner of any right or interest in property taken upon condemnation should have a reasonable opportunity to be heard upon the question of compensation, before he can be deprived thereof, for public use. Brigham City v. Chase, 85 Pac. 436, 439, 30 Utah, 410. This great guaranty is always and everywhere present to protect the citizen against arbitrary interference with these sacred rights. When the Legislature prescribes a mode by which private property may be taken for public use, notice of the proceedings for condemnation must be provided for, to be given to the party whose property is taken or injuriously affected, in order that he may have an opportunity to be present and protect his rights at some stage of the proceedings, and in order to ascertain the proper measure of compensation to which he is entitled. If such notice is not provided for, the law is void. Board of Education of City of Stillwater v. Aldredge, 73 Pac. 1104, 1105, 13 Okl. 205.

Same—In criminal proceedings

"Due process of law," as applied to criminal procedure, requires that accused shall be proceeded against under orderly process of law, and only punished after inquiry and investigation, on notice to him, with an opportunity to be heard, and a judgment granted within the authority of a constitutional law. Ong Chang Wing v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 15, 17, 218 U. S. 272, 280, 54 L. Ed. 1040.

"Due process of law," within the constitutional command of due process of law, means that a state must afford an accused the due administration of its established course of judicial procedure, and the phrase requires the doing of all things which are essential to the administration of a state's established course of judicial procedure, when a citizen or person is taken into custody and held for trial for crime, and the state is under affirmative duty of affording him the enjoyment of all the rights and privileges which go to make up the due administration of a state's established course of judicial procedure, and it must confront accused with his accusers in open court and give him the opportunity to examine them there. United States v. Powell, 151 Fed. 648, 654.

In criminal cases in a state court, "due process of law" means a trial in a court of competent jurisdiction, before an impartial judge and jury, or judge without a jury, upon an accusation, either by indictment or information, as the state may provide, charging the accused with the violation of some state law, of which accusation the accused must have notice in time to enable him to prepare for trial. This trial must proceed according to the established procedure or rules of practice in such state applicable to all such cases. In other words, the defendant must have his day in court. The admission of evidence for or against the accused must be according to the established rules in such state in all such cases, and the punishment inflicted must be authorized by law. Anderson v. State, 126 Pac. 840, 847, 8 Okl. Cr. 90.

Same—In tax proceedings

"Due process of law," as to tax sale proceedings, means only that due notice of sale shall be given to the delinquent owners. Merchants' Trust Co. v. Wright, 118 Pac. 517, 518, 161 Cal. 149.

Irregularity in the process of taxation can be said not to amount to "due process of law" only when the proceedings are arbitrary, oppressive, or unjust. To constitute "due process of law," it is not necessary that notice be given of each step in the process of taxation. It is sufficient if the taxpayer has an opportunity to appear at some time before a tribunal having jurisdiction, and there procure an adjustment of his liabilities. State v. Several Parcels of Land, 119 N. W. 21, 22, 83 Neb. 13.

As stated in Winona & St. Peter Land Co. v. Minnesota, 16 Sup. Ct. 83, 87, 159 U. S. 526, 40 L. Ed. 247, "a law authorizing the imposition of a tax or assessments upon property according to its value does not infringe that provision of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution which declares that no state shall deprive any person of property without 'due process of law,' if the owner has an opportunity to question the validity or the amount of it either before that amount is determined or in the subsequent proceedings for its collection." Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. State Board of Assessors, 67 Atl. 672, 675, 75 N. J. Law, 120 (citing Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 6 Sup. Ct. 57, 115 U. S. 321, 331, 29 L. Ed. 414; Pittsburg, C. O. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Backus, 14 Sup. Ct. 1114, 154 U. S. 421, 458, 38 L. Ed. 1031).

Same—Nature and sufficiency of notice in general

"Due process of law" must give to defendant notice of the charge or claim against him and an opportunity to be heard respecting the justice of the order or judgment sought. The notice must be such that he may be advised from it of the nature of the claim against him, and of the relief sought from the court if the claim is sustained. Notice of a hearing before a probate court of a petition for the settlement of an account of an executor, for his removal and the appointment of an administrator de bonis non, is not due process of law to sustain a decree against the person and the property of the individual served, to the effect that he pay out of his own property $915,355.08 to the successor administrator on account of his conversion and maladministration of the assets of the estate. Michigan Trust Co. v. Ferry, 175 Fed. 667, 669, 99 C. O. A. 221.

"Due process of law" requires that a person shall have reasonable notice and opportunity to be heard before an impartial tribunal before any binding decree or order can be made affecting his rights to liberty or property. In the case of Reetz v. Michigan, 23 Sup. Ct. 390, 188 U. S. 505, 47 L. Ed. 563, in point here, the following is quoted from the opinion of Mr. Justice Matthews in Hurtado v. California, 4 Sup. Ct. 111, 113, 292, 110 U. S. 516, 28 L. Ed. 232, reviewing at length the authorities and discussing the elements of due process of law: "It follows that any legal proceeding enforced by public authority, whether sanctioned by age or custom, or merely devised in the discretion of the legislative power in the furtherance of the general public good, which regards and preserves these privileges of liberty and justice, must be held to be due process of law." Commission of Fisheries v. Hampton Roads Oyster Packers' & Planters' Ass'n, 64 S. E. 1041, 1048, 1049, 109 Va. 565 (citing Den ex dem. Murray v. Hoboken Land & Improvement Co., 18 How. [59 U. S.] 272, 15 L. Ed. 372; Ex parte Wall, 2 Sup. Ct. 569, 107 U. S. 265, 27 L. Ed. 552).

"Due process of law" requires only that provision shall be made for notice in some form and an opportunity to be heard before some tribunal, not necessarily an organized court or before a jury. Campbell v. State, 87 N. E. 212, 214, 171 Ind. 702.

Code Civ. Proc. § 110, provides for the service of summons against a private corporation by delivering a copy to the president or other officers thereof, except where service is on a foreign corporation, when it may be had only when it has property in the state, or the cause of action arose therein, or when such service shall be made within the state personally upon the president, treasurer, secretary, or duly authorized agent thereof. Personal service had on a treasurer of a domestic corporation residing in another state was objected to as insufficient to confer jurisdiction. Held, that the purpose of the statute is not to bring the nonresident officer within the jurisdiction, but to bring the domestic corporation within the jurisdiction; and, as such service would give sufficient notice of the pendency of the action or proceeding, which is the fundamental principle involved in "due process of law," it was sufficient. Straub v. Lyman Land & Investment

Co. (S. D.) 138 N. W. 957, 958 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, 2251).

Attachment of a nonresident's property within the jurisdiction, without personal service on the defendant, constitutes "due process of law," within the federal Constitution, in so far as it reaches and affects the defendant's property lawfully attached. Lutz v. Roberts Cotton Oil Co. (Del.) 82 Atl. 601, 603.

Notice served on a defendant in the manner and by the officer provided by law, constitutes "due process of law." Smoot v. Judd, 83 S. W. 481, 506, 184 Mo. 508.

Notice of the time and place of making a motion for leave to issue execution is not necessary to constitute that "due process of law" which is guaranteed by the Constitution. The due process of law there guaranteed is obtained by the service of summons on the defendants, or their subsequent appearance in the action before judgment. Harrier v. Bassford, 78 Pac. 1038, 1039, 145 Cal. 529.

A proceeding to secure a distribution of the estate of a decedent is essentially one in rem, in which the parties interested may be bound by constructive notice, the reasonableness of which must be determined with reference to the requirements of ordinary cases; and notice given by posting notices 10 days before the hearing is not unreasonably short, and constitutes "due process of law" as against all parties, without regard to their place of residence. Goodrich v. Ferris, 145 Fed. 844, 859.

Same—Notice by publication

A notice of publication in a newspaper published in a county once a week for three consecutive weeks, required by Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 5232c as notice to foreclose tax liens, where an owner is a nonresident, or his name is unknown, is sufficient to meet the requirement of "due process of law." Young v. Jackson, 110 S. W. 74, 78, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 351.

Publication of notice of the assessment of property of a nonresident for taxes is "due process of law." Johnson v. Hunter, 127 Fed. 219, 223, 224 (quoting and adopting the definition in Huling v. Kaw Valley Ry. & Improv. Co., 9 Sup. Ct. 603, 605, 130 U. S. 559, 563, 32 L. Ed. 1045).

Service by publication on a domestic corporation, which has failed to provide officers or agents upon whom other service may be had, constitutes "due process of law." Clearwater Mercantile Co. v. Roberts-Johnson-Rand Shoe Co., 40 South. 436, 437, 51 Fla. 176, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 117, 120 Am. St. Rep. 153.

The fact that notice of a special assessment for draining and reclaiming swamp land is given by advertisements and by posters as provided by statute, instead of actual service, does not render the tax invalid, as a taking of private property without "due process of law." Hoertz v. Jefferson Southern Pond Draining Co., 84 S. W. 1141, 1143, 119 Ky. 824; Leahy v. Same (Ky.) 84 S. W. 1181.

The constitutional guaranties of "due process of law" are not violated by the provisions for notice in Acts 1895, p. 88, c. 71, providing that notice of the pendency of an action for the enforcement for the collection of levee taxes, etc., shall be given to non-resident owners by publication in some newspaper published in the county where the suit is pending for four weeks prior to the date when final judgment may be entered for the sale of their lands. Ballard v. Hunter, 85 S. W. 252, 253, 74 Ark. 174.

Notice by publication of the special proceeding provided by Laws Pa. 1885, p. 155, for the administration of the estates of absentees satisfies the requirement of the "due process of law" clause of Const. U. S. Amend. art. 14. Cunnius v. Reading School Dist., 25 Sup. Ct. 721, 722, 198 U. S. 458, 49 L. Ed. 1125, 3 Ann. Cas. 1121.

Same—Notice by substituted service

Constructive service of process, provided for in Practice Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 110), par. 5, when taken in connection with sections 12 and 13 of the Chancery Act, constitutes "due process of law," when it appears, as it must before such service can be had, by the return of the officer, that the defendant railroad has no officer or agent in the county in which the suit is brought with whom a copy of the summons can be left to effect service, and it further appears that defendant's principal office is in the state. Nelson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 80 N. E. 100, 113, 225 Ill. 197, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1186, 116 Am. St. Rep. 133.

A notice of appeal in a water permit contest, given as provided by the statute, authorizing such appeal and requiring appellant to deliver personally or by registered mail a copy of the notice in the manner prescribed for the personal service or service of publication of a summons, is "due process of law." Speer v. Stephenson, 102 Pac. 365, 373, 16 Idaho, 707.

Indictment or information necessary

A prosecution for a felony by an information constitutes "due process of law," within the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution. State v. Guglielmo, 80 Pac. 103, 46 Or. 250, 69 L. R. A. 466, 7 Ann. Cas. 976.

The phrase "the law of the land," within Magna Charta, c. 39, which provides that no man shall be imprisoned, etc., unless by lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land, means indictment under procedure at common law. Anderson v. Ritterbusch, 98 Pac. 1002, 1014, 22 Okl. 761.

An indictment in a prosecution for murder committed after statehood is not necessarily required by Const. U. S. Amends. 5, 14, and Const. Okl. Bill of Rights, § 7 (Bunn's Ed. § 16), providing that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without "due process of law." In re McNaught, 99 Pac. 241, 243, 1 Okl. Cr. 528.

As applicable to police regulations

"Due process of law" is the general right to acquire and possess property, and by necessary implication the general right to contract concerning it, that the Constitution protects. But that protection does not make those rights absolute in every particular. If it does, what becomes of the police power, which inheres in every free government, and is based on the maxim, "Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas," which, as the federal Supreme Court says, is of universal and pervading obligation, and a condition on which all property is held, that its application to particular conditions must necessarily be within the reasonable discretion of the legislative power, and that when such discretion is exercised in a given case by means appropriate and reasonable, not oppressive nor discriminatory, it is not subject to constitutional objection. Act Dec. 10, 1906, No. 117, requiring a mining, quarrying, manufacturing, etc., or railroad corporation to pay its employes each week, and that payment shall be in lawful money, is not, as to a railroad corporation whose charter provides that it shall be subject to amendment, alteration, or repeal, and subject also to the general law to the same effect, a deprivation of liberty or property, as to either requirement, without "due process of law," in violation of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, nor is it as to the stockholders of such corporation. Lawrence v. Rutland R. Co., 67 Atl. 1091, 1095, 80 Vt. 370, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 350, 13 Ann. Cas. 475.

Reasonable municipal health regulations under the authority of the state are not void, as taking private property without "due process of law." State v. Robb, 60 Atl. 874-876, 100 Me. 180, 4 Ann. Cas. 275.

The Legislature may form classes for the purpose of police regulations, where it does not arbitrarily discriminate between persons in substantially the same situation, notwithstanding the federal and state Constitutions prohibiting the deprivation of property without "due process of law." People v. Commercial Life Ins. Co., 93 N. E. 90, 94, 247 Ill. 92.

"It is settled law that all property is held subject to the exercise of police power. . . . Declaring that property shall not be taken without 'due process of law' has no application in such cases." In re Newell, 84 Pac. 226, 2 Cal. App. 767 (quoting and adopting Odd Fellows' Cemetery Ass'n v. City & County of San Francisco, 73 Pac. 987, 140 Cal. 226).

The exercise of a police regulation or a power under the general welfare clause of the Constitution is not a denial of "due providing that such debts shall be paid in full before other debts. Lockwood v. Lockwood, 47 S. E. 441, 68 S. C. 328.

DUEBILL

"When the court, in Fleming v. Burge, 6 Ala. 373, said that a 'duebill' was, in legal effect, a promissory note, it only announced a well-recognized principle that from a duebill the law implies an obligation to pay the amount acknowledged by it to be owing, as the law implies from a promissory note an obligation on the part of the promisor to pay the amount promised to be paid; yet a duebill and a promissory note are in many respects unlike. A 'duebill' is not assignable by indorsement; a promissory note is. A duebill is not entitled to days of grace; a promissory note is. A 'duebill' is a brief acknowledgment of a debt; a promissory note is a promise in writing to pay a specified sum at a time therein fixed. They are, however, in legal effect, the same, for the law implies a like obligation from each—the obligation to pay the debt acknowledged to be due by the one, and the debt promised to be paid by the other." In re McGuire & Hanlein, 132 Fed. 394, 395.

DUEL

St. 1909, § 1269, imposes a punishment upon one challenging another to fight in single combat or otherwise, with a deadly weapon, and Const. § 239, prohibits one from holding office who shall directly or indirectly give a challenge to another to fight in single combat with a deadly weapon. Accused, while partially intoxicated, went up to another, and, drawing or partly drawing a gun, said: "God damn you, you started to draw a gun this morning; now, God damn you, shoot." Held that, since a "duel" was a combat with a deadly weapon fought under prescribed rules according to a precedent formal agreement without sudden heat or passion, accused's conduct did not amount to a challenge. Ward v. Commonwealth, 116 S. W. 786, 787, 132 Ky. 636, 19 Ann. Cas. 71.

DUES

The term "dues" refers to obligations into which members of a club enter to pay a sum, to be fixed usually by by-laws, at recurring intervals for the maintenance of the organization. Thompson v. Wyandanch Club, 127 N. Y. Supp. 195, 200, 70 Misc. Rep. 299 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, pp. 2258, 2259).

The word "dues," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 1408, declaring that a fraternal beneficiary association might make provision for the payment of benefits in the case of death, sickness, or disability from a fund to be derived from assessments of "dues" collected from its members, was not used in a technical sense, but to represent sums paid by members of the association toward its support, and did not indicate an intent on the part of the Legislature to permit such society to issue old line life insurance policies not otherwise authorized. State ex rel. Supreme Lodge K. P. v. Vandiver, 111 S. W. 911, 912, 213 Mo. 187, 15 Ann. Cas. 233.

Damages for tort

The provision of Const. art. 12, § 2, repealed in 1906, providing that dues of a corporation shall be secured by the individual liability of the stockholders to an additional amount equal to the stock owned by each stockholder uses the words "dues" in a sense broad enough to cover a judgment against a corporation in an action founded on tort. Henley v. Myers, 93 Pac. 168, 173, 76 Kan. 723, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 779.

DUES AND DEMANDS

The words "dues and demands," as applied in Acts 1875, p. 37, c. 24 (section 7936, Burns' Rev. St. 1901; section 5850, Horner's Rev. St. 1901), authorizing clerks of court to officially receive money in payment of all judgments, "dues, and demands" whatever, of record in their respective offices, together with all funds ordered to be paid into court, and making such clerks liable on their official bonds for the money so received, are sufficiently broad and comprehensive to include money received by the clerks in payment of all fees and costs of record in his office. State ex rel. Board of Com'rs of Tippecanoe County v. Flynn, 69 N. E. 159, 164, 161 Ind. 554.

DUGAS TEST

The "Dugas test" to discover a dislocation of a shoulder consists in placing the patient's elbow against his chest, and then having him place his fingers, if possible, on the opposite shoulder. If the patient is able to raise the fingers of his injured arm to the opposite shoulder while his arm is in this position, there can be no dislocation at the shoulder. Burton v. Neill, 118 N. W. 302, 305, 140 Iowa, 141, 17 Ann. Cas. 532.

DUGOUT

As building, see Building (In Criminal Law).

DULL SEASON

The terms "busy season" and "dull season," unexplained, in a contract for the employment of a fur cutter, in which the employer agrees to give a certain weekly salary for the "busy season" and a certain other sum per week for the "dull season," are ambiguous to those unacquainted with the fur trade, and oral testimony is admissible to show their meaning. Schultz v. Simmons Fur Co., 90 Pac. 917, 919, 46 Wash. 555.

DULY

The word "duly" means "according to law," that is, according to the statute governing the subject, and implies the existence of every fact essential to perfect regularity of procedure. Reynolds v. Harlem Const. Co., 128 N. Y. Supp. 642, 643, 71 Misc. Rep. 446.

The word "duly," in a record stating that the accused was duly arraigned in open court, means according to law. Clements v. State, 40 South. 432, 436, 51 Fla. 6 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2259).

The word "duly," when used in a complaint, is generally a conclusion of law. Denying that an act was duly done raises no issue. Stott v. City of Chicago, 68 N. E. 736, 737, 740, 205 Ill. 281.

"Duly" means in a due, fit, or becoming manner; properly or regularly; in due time or proper manner; in accordance with what is right, required, or suitable; fittingly, becomingly, regularly. Rogers v. Trumble, 125 N. W. 600, 602, 86 Neb. 316 (quoting 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2259).

The word "duly" has acquired a fixed legal meaning, and when used before any word implying action it means that the act was done properly, regularly, and according to law. It is often used in this sense before such words as "convened," "arrested," "qualified," "served," "presented," "discharged," and the like. A motion to quash the indictment on the ground that the record did not show that the grand jury were sworn by the statutory form of oath was properly overruled, where the record recited that the grand jurors were "duly" sworn. O'Donnell v. People, 79 N. E. 639, 640, 224 Ill. 218, 8 Ann. Cas. 123.

"Duly," in legal parlance, means according to law. It does not relate to form merely, but includes both form and substance. Levy v. Cohen, 92 N. Y. Supp. 1074-1076, 103 App. Div. 195 (citing Brownell v. Town of Greenwich, 22 N. E. 24, 114 N. Y. 527, 4 L. R. A. 685); Sherman v. Ecker, 110 N. Y. Supp. 265, 59 Misc. Rep. 216. And the expression "duly adjudged" means adjudged according to law, and implies the existence of every fact essential to perfect regularity of procedure, and to confer jurisdiction of the subject-matter and all parties affected by the judgment. Benedict v. Clarke, 123 N. Y. Supp. 964, 965, 139 App. Div. 242.

A complaint in an action on a note, which states that the note was "duly" presented for payment at the time and place designated thereon and payment thereof demanded and refused, that said note was duly protested, and that due notice of the protest of said note was duly given to the defendants and each of them, is sufficient as against a demurrer by an indorser on the ground that it did not show the giving of notice of presentment, demand, nonpayment, and protest.

Sherman v. Ecker, 110 N. Y. Supp. 265, 266, 59 Misc. Rep. 216.

In the provision of Rev. St. § 5428, making it a criminal offense for any person to falsely represent himself to be a citizen of the United States for any fraudulent purpose "without having been duly admitted to citizenship," the word "duly" applies to regularity and compliance with requirements, rather than to the truth of the facts involved in the admission, and where the person charged was granted a certificate of citizenship by an order of court, both of which are regular in form and have not been vacated, it is impossible to charge "unlawful use" based solely upon a further allegation of knowledge that the certificate had not been "duly" made. United States v. Hamilton, 157 Fed. 569, 570.

DULY ADJUDGED

The expression "duly adjudged" means adjudged according to law, and implies the existence of every fact essential to perfect regularity of procedure, and to confer jurisdiction of the subject-matter and all parties affected by the judgment. Benedict v. Clarke, 123 N. Y. Supp. 964, 965, 139 App. Div. 242.

DULY ADMITTED TO RECORD

If a contract of sale or option to purchase coal in place, which has not been acknowledged or proved by two witnesses, as required by statute, be admitted to record by the clerk of the court, it is not "duly admitted to record." South Penn Coal Co. v. Smith, 60 S. E. 593, 596, 63 W. Va. 587.

DULY AND OFFICIALLY

A protest by a notary, stating that the indorser was "duly and officially" notified of the dissent by written notice sent by mail to him at P., without stating that the indorser's residence was at such place, is prima facie evidence of due notice to the indorser. Legg v. Vinal, 43 N. E. 518, 519, 165 Mass. 555, 557.

DULY APPOINTED

An allegation in a declaration that "W. G. B. was 'duly appointed' as administrator of the estate of said R. B. deceased," is equivalent to an allegation that such administrator was appointed according to law. Bowden v. Jacksonville Electric Co., 41 South. 400, 401, 51 Fla. 152, 7 Ann. Cas. 859 (citing Clements v. State, 40 South. 432, 51 Fla. 6; 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2260; Rockwell v. Merwin, 45 N. Y. 166).

DULY ARRAIGNED

"Duly arraigned" in open court means arraigned according to law. Clements v. State, 40 South. 432, 436, 51 Fla. 6 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2259).

DULY ASSESSED

Under Pol. Code, § 2218, making a tax deed prima facie evidence of the truth of facts recited and the regularity of the proceedings, the prima facie evidence, consisting of the recital that the property was "duly assessed," as effectually establishes the fact, in the absence of contrary evidence, that the assessor made proper oath to his return as would the verbal testimony of the assessor or county auditor. Peters v. Lohr, 124 N. W. 853, 855, 24 S. D. 605.

DULY ASSIGNED

The allegation of the complaint, in an action against guarantors by the assignee of a guaranty, that with the knowledge and consent of defendants the guaranty was "duly" assigned, is a sufficient statement that whatever was necessary to a valid assignment was done. Levy v. Cohen, 92 N. Y. Supp. 1074-1076, 103 App. Div. 195 (citing Brownell v. Town of Greenwich, 22 N. E. 24, 114 N. Y. 527, 4 L. R. A. 685).

DULY AUTHORIZED AGENT

A receiver for collection and enforcement of the liability of stockholders, appointed by the court, pursuant to the statutes of Minnesota, in a suit by creditors of the insolvent corporation against it and its stockholders to charge the stockholders with their liability for its debts, is a "duly authorized agent" of the corporation's creditors to prove their debt against the estate of a bankrupt stockholder. Dight v. Chapman, 75 Pac. 585, 588, 44 Or. 285, 65 L. R. A. 793.

Since corporations act by agents, an allegation that a defendant corporation by a named agent, "who was thereto 'duly authorized,'" entered into an agreement, sufficiently alleges the agency. Duval Investment Co. v. Stockton, 45 South. 497, 498, 54 Fla. 296.

The phrase "duly authorized agent or agents of such owner or owners," used in Liquor Tax Law (Laws 1896, p. 60, c. 112) § 17, subd. 8, as amended by Laws 1897, p. 220, c. 312, § 10, requiring the applicant for a liquor license to file a consent executed by the owner or owners or by the "duly authorized agent or agents of such owner or owners" of at least two-thirds of the total number of dwellings within 200 feet of the premises where the liquor is to be sold, means only such an agent as is authorized by the owner of the property to sign the consent in his behalf. In re McCoy, 93 N. Y. Supp. 401, 404, 104 App. Div. 215.

DULY CALLED AND HELD

An election to select a schoolhouse site, of which notice was not given, is not an election "duly called and held," within Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 122, § 166, as amended by act effective July 1, 1908, legalizing the selection of schoolhouse sites by boards of education. Southworth v. Board of Education of School Dist. No. 131, in Ogle County, 87 N. E. 403, 406, 238 Ill. 190.

DULY CERTIFIED

The words "duly certified," used with reference to the certification of a copy of a foreign death record, should be construed to mean "certified according to law." State v. McDonald, 104 Pac. 967, 976, 55 Or. 419.

DULY COMMENCED

Under How. Ann. St. 1882, § 8723, providing that, in case of an action "duly commenced" within the time limited by the statutes of limitation, a new action may be commenced within one year after reversal of judgment therein, and section 7291, providing for commencement of actions by filing a declaration and entering a rule to plead within 20 days after service of a copy thereof personally on the defendant, an action is not "duly commenced" without personal service. Detroit Free Press v. Bagg, 44 N. W. 149, 150, 78 Mich. 650.

DULY ESTABLISHED

Where, in a prosecution for operating an automobile at a speed in excess of that prescribed by the by-laws of a town, it was agreed that such by-laws were "duly established," such stipulation admitted that the by-laws were advertised and posted as provided by St. 1905, p. 289, c. 366, § 1, and that they were made as authorized by such act, and that the place covered by them was within the thickly settled part of the town. Commonwealth v. Sherman, 78 N. E. 98, 99, 191 Mass. 439.

DULY FILLED

A vacancy in the common council of a city of the third class, occurring after the primary election, so that it was too late to make nominations for the office except by petition, occurs at so short a period before the next annual election that the office cannot be "duly filled" at such election, within Act March 1, 1905 (P. L. p. 26), providing in such case for the filling of the vacancy by the common council. Stewart v. Jones, 71 Atl. 151, 152, 77 N. J. Law, 7.

DULY GIVEN OR MADE

There is no substantial difference between "duly given" and "given after the requirements of law had been duly complied with." Gurnsey v. Northern California Power Co., 94 Pac. 858, 863, 7 Cal. App. 534.

While, in pleading the judgment of an inferior court, the facts showing the jurisdiction must be alleged or the pleader may, under Code Civ. Proc. § 532, state that the judgment was "duly given or made," an allegation in an affidavit for an examination in supplemental proceedings in the New York City Court on a Municipal Court judgment that the judgment was "duly recovered" was equivalent to an allegation that it was "duly given." Hottenroth v. Flaherty, 112 N. Y. Supp. 1111, 1114, 61 Misc. Rep. 108.

Under a statute providing that in pleading a judgment it is not necessary to state the facts conferring jurisdiction, but the judgment may be stated to have been "duly given or made," a complaint alleging that on a certain date certain parties were adjudged bankrupts by the District Court of the United States at a term of the court held in a certain city, in proceedings then pending in the court, under the provisions of the federal bankrupt act, was an insufficient allegation of the rendition of the adjudication, in that it failed to allege that it was "duly given or made." Mears v. Shaw, 81 Pac. 338, 339, 32 Mont. 575.

Under Const. art. 8, § 20, giving a justice court jurisdiction as an examining court in cases of felony, and Code Civ. Proc. § 745, declaring that in pleading a judgment it is not necessary to state the facts conferring jurisdiction, but the judgment may be stated to have been "duly given or made," a complaint in an action on a bail bond which alleges that a certain person was ordered by a certain justice of the peace to be held to answer on a charge of burglary on which he was admitted to bail, the justice then and there having full authority and power to accept and approve the bond, and that he duly approved it and ordered the release of defendant, is insufficient for failing to allege the jurisdictional facts that the accused was charged by a complaint filed with the justice and examined on the charge, or to state the judicial capacity of the justice, and that the order holding accused to answer was "duly given" or "duly made," or "duly given and made." State v. Lagoni, 76 Pac. 1044, 1045, 30 Mont. 472.

DULY HAD

A recital in a commitment of an insane person that a hearing was "duly had" implies that due and lawful notice was given to the insane person and proved to the satisfaction of the court. Ex parte Clary, 87 Pac. 580, 581, 149 Cal. 732.

DULY ISSUED

An allegation of the complaint, in an action against a sheriff for wrongfully levying upon goods under a writ of attachment, that the writ of attachment was "duly issued" means that it was based upon a debt, and upon the affidavit required by statute. Citizens' Securities Co. v. Hammel, 112 Pac. 731, 733, 14 Cal. App. 564.

DULY LAID OUT OR ERECTED

The words "duly laid out or erected," as used in Rev. St. 1887, § 960, providing for the removal of an encroachment on any highway "duly laid out or erected," refers to a road which had been laid out or erected by the proper officers in the manner prescribed by law. They have reference to formal or official action which the law enjoins upon those charged with the duty of establishing public highways. Meservey v. Gulliford, 93 Pac. 780, 788, 14 Idaho, 133 (citing Freshour v. Hihn, 84 Pac. 87, 99 Cal. 443).

DULY LICENSED

Even if a physician, whose license to practice was not recorded with the county clerk as required by Laws 1903, c. 426, § 5, cannot testify as an expert in a criminal case, testimony by such a physician that he was "duly licensed to practice" and was a practicing physician will be construed to mean, in absence of a contrary showing, that he had complied with section 1435e; that section making it unlawful for a physician to practice who has not first recorded his license as required thereby. Smits v. State, 130 N. W. 525, 526, 145 Wis. 601.

DULY MADE

The phrase "duly made," without a statement of the special facts on which it is predicated, has in general no effect, for it is not only indefinite, but affirms matter of law instead of facts, and consequently is not traversable. An allegation in a petition to collect a subscription to the stock of a railroad that certain requisite assessments had been duly made was insufficient. Woonsocket Union R. Co. v. Taft, 8 R. I. 411, 414 (quoting and adopting the rule stated in Gould, Plead.).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 456, providing that in pleading a judgment or other determination of the court it shall not be necessary to state the facts conferring jurisdiction, but such judgment or determination may be stated to have been duly given or made, an averment that an order of appointment of a receiver was "duly made" is equivalent to an averment that all the jurisdictional prerequisites to the appointment existed. Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. Grider, 94 Pac. 601, 602, 152 Cal. 746.

DULY NOTIFIED

When the sufficiency of a defense pleaded depends on whether a person since deceased acted with knowledge of a certain fact, a mere statement in the affidavit of defense that he was "duly notified" of such fact is insufficient. Stephenson v. Supreme Council A. L. H., 127 Fed. 379, 380.

DULY ORGANIZED AND EXISTING

A complaint, alleging that defendant is a domestic corporation "duly organized and existing," and engaged in operating street railroads, means that defendant has been legally organized and existing for the purpose alleged. Hollis v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 113 N. Y. Supp. 4, 6, 128 App. Div. 821.

DULY PAID

A complaint held not demurrable as alleging that the check was properly or lawfully paid, the allegation that it was "duly paid" through the clearing house meaning that it was regularly paid in the manner to make it a proper charge against the bank. Davenport v. Walker, 116 N. Y. Supp. 411, 414, 132 App. Div. 96.

DULY PASSED

In an action on a street assessment, the issue of fact on which plaintiff's right to recover depended was whether the board of supervisors had jurisdiction to pass the resolution ordering the performance of the work. Defendant's answer alleged that this resolution was not "duly passed," which was deemed controverted by plaintiff, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 462. Held, that a finding that the resolution was "duly passed" was a determination that the board had jurisdiction to pass it. "While the averment that an act has been 'duly' performed is ordinarily but a legal conclusion, yet, in the absence of a special demurrer or objection on that ground, it will be held sufficient to authorize the court to receive evidence upon the issue." Pacific Pav. Co. v. Diggins, 87 Pac. 415, 416, 4 Cal. App. 240 (citing Minor v. Baldridge, 55 Pac. 783, 123 Cal. 187).

DULY PROSECUTE

Though plaintiff in replevin is unsuccessful in maintaining his title or right to the property, the condition of his bond to "duly prosecute" the action is satisfied by his prompt trial of the action in the circuit court and in the Court of Appeals. Vallandingham v. Ray, 108 S. W. 896, 897, 128 Ky. 506.

DULY PROTESTED

"Duly protested" is equivalent to an averment that a bill was presented at maturity at the place of payment named in it. Battle v. Weems, 44 Ala. 105, 107.

DULY PROVED

In North Carolina it has been held that, when the clerk of a court of record certifies that an instrument has been "duly proved" in that court, it is implied that everything required by law has been proved, upon the maxim "res judicata pro veritate accipitur." Horton v. Hagler's Ex'r, 8 N. C. 48, 49.

DULY RECORDED

The term "duly recorded," used in Acts 1908, c. 105, providing that all deeds, mortgages, releases, etc., which have not been properly executed and acknowledged shall be valid, if duly recorded, merely requires that the instrument defectively acknowledged must be recorded, and not that the record must be made within the statutory six months after execution, for a deed lawfully registered is valid without any aid from statute. Eden Street Permanent Bldg. Ass'n

No. 1 of Baltimore City v. Lusby, 81 Atl. 284, 286, 116 Md. 173.

Where the record of a married woman's deed conveying her separate property showed that an essential part of the certificate of acknowledgment was omitted, the deed was not "duly recorded" so as to support title by limitations. Merriman v. Blalack, 122 S. W. 403, 408, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 270.

Code 1873, § 1967, as amended by Acts 24th Gen. Assem. p. 68, c. 42, provides that the acknowledgments of all deeds, mortgages, or other instruments in writing, taken and certified previous to the 1st day of February, 1892, and which have been duly recorded in the proper counties in this state, be and the same are hereby declared to be legal and valid in all courts of law and equity in this state or elsewhere, held that the words "duly recorded," as here used mean actually recorded. Parriott v. Incorporated City of Hampton, 111 N. W. 440, 442, 134 Iowa, 157.

DULY RECOVERED

While, in pleading the judgment of an inferior court, the facts showing the jurisdiction must be alleged or the pleader may, under Code Civ. Proc. § 532, state that the judgment was "duly given or made," an allegation in an affidavit for an examination in supplemental proceedings in the New York City Court on a Municipal Court judgment that the judgment was "duly recovered" was equivalent to an allegation that it was "duly given." Hottenroth v. Flaherty, 112 N. Y. Supp. 1111, 1114, 61 Misc. Rep. 106.

DULY RENDERED

In an action based on a foreign judgment, an allegation that the judgment was "duly rendered" was, as against a general demurrer, sufficient as showing the court's jurisdiction. Benedict v. Clarke, 123 N. Y. Supp. 964, 965, 139 App. Div. 242.

In Young v. Wright, 52 Cal. 410, it was held that the expression "duly rendered" is not equivalent to "duly given or made," but the later decisions do not indulge in such subtle refinement. Gurnsey v. Northern California Power Co., 94 Pac. 858, 862, 7 Cal. App. 534.

DULY SCHEDULED

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 7, subd. 8, requiring the bankrupt to file a schedule of his property and a list of his creditors, "showing their residence if known, if unknown that fact to be stated," and section 17a, providing that a discharge in bankruptcy shall release a bankrupt from all his provable debts except such as have not been "duly scheduled," a debt is not duly scheduled when the creditor's office address, instead of his residence, is set forth in the schedule under the designation "residence." Weidenfeld v. Tillinghast, 104 N. Y. Supp. 902, 903.

DULY SERVED

The words "duly served," used by a constable in returning a summons in a case in justice court, do not imply a legal service. So, where a constable returns a summons "duly served," the return is illegal, and does not give the justice authority to try the cause in the absence of defendant, as the time and manner of service ought to appear. Zane v. Pissant, 2 N. J. Law, 319, 320; Budd v. Marvin, 4 N. J. Law, 248.

DULY SIGNED

Under a strict interpretation of an admission in a stipulated agreement of facts that a bill was "duly signed" by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, it might be held that this covered compliance with the constitutional provision as to the manner and time of signing. State ex rel. Hynds v. Cahill, 75 Pac. 433, 439, 12 Wyo. 225.

DULY SUBMITTED

An indictment for violation of the local option law, alleging that the four questions provided by Liquor Tax Law (Laws 1896, c. 112) § 13, were "duly submitted," was sufficient without expressly alleging various preliminary steps requisite to the legal submission of such questions; the terms "duly submitted" implying the existence of every fact essential to the proceedings. People v. Yarter, 137 N. Y. Supp. 462, 464, 152 App. Div. 566.

DULY SUMMONED

The term "duly summoned," applied to a garnishee, signifies that he was properly and regularly served with notice of garnishment. Dodge v. Knapp, 87 S. W. 47, 50, 112 Mo. App. 513 (citing Robertson v. Perkins, 9 Sup. Ct. 279, 129 U. S. 233, 32 L. Ed. 686; Bank of British Columbia of Victoria v. City of Port Townsend, 47 Pac. 896, 16 Wash. 450).

Revisal 1905, § 1645 (9), provides that a deposition may be read if the deposing witness has been "duly summoned," and is absent from the state at the time of the trial, or more than 75 miles from the place of trial, without the procurement of the party offering the deposition. Held, that the words "duly summoned," used in the statute, are equivalent to and mean "subpoena duly issued," implying that due effort has been made to secure the presence of the witness. Tomlinson Chair Mfg. Co. v. Townsend, 69 S. E. 145, 146, 153 N. C. 244.

DULY SWORN

"The words 'in due manner sworn' have the same meaning as the word 'duly.' An indictment alleging that the witness was 'in due manner sworn' sufficiently alleged that she was 'duly sworn.'" State v. Jewett, 85 Pac. 994, 996, 48 Or. 577 (citing the definitions in 3 Words and Phrases, pp. 2259-2264).

DULY WITNESSED

"Duly witnessed" means witnessed according to law. Baughman v. Harvey, 98 Pac. 146, 147, 76 Kan. 797.

DUM FERVET OPUS

Where, in an action for injuries received by an employé in consequence of a fall of a trestle while running a train over it, a right of recovery was based on the employer's negligence in permitting the trestle to become defective, it was shown that it was the duty of the section foreman to require a man to repair it, and the foreman a short time before the accident requested a third person to tell the trestle man to make such repair, as a declaration that the trestle was going down and that it was in bad shape, being illustrative of the notice to the trestle man to repair the trestle, it was admissible as a declaration made "dum fervet opus." Bundy v. Sierra Lumber Co., 87 Pac. 622, 624, 149 Cal. 772.

DUMMY

In land office practice "dummies" are either fictitious persons, or those who, having no interest in the transaction, permit the use of their names for the perpetration of a fraud, and sign papers and make affidavits perfunctorily. United States v. Munday, 186 Fed. 375, 385.

DUMMY DIRECTOR

Where a share of stock in a corporation was transferred to a person for the purpose of qualifying him as a director in the corporation, he constituted what is commonly called a "dummy director." Hoopes v. Basic Co., 61 Atl. 979, 980, 69 N. J. Eq. 679.

DUMP

Where, in an action for injuries to a servant by the derailment of a car, it appeared that the car was "emptied" of its contents by "dumping," which was accomplished by pulling a lever, an instruction that, if plaintiff "emptied" the slate from the car at the place of derailment, he was guilty of contributory negligence, was sufficiently covered by the plea, which alleged that plaintiff "dumped the car." The words "dumped" and "emptied" are synonymous. Redus v. Milner Coal & R. Co., 41 South. 634, 635, 148 Ala. 665.

DUMP CARS

As materials, see Materials.

DUNNAGE

"Dunnage" consists, generally, of loose wood or other material usually placed on the flooring of a vessel for the cargo to rest on, or pieces of wood, mats, etc., jammed between barrels and other cargo to prevent motion. Capuccio v. Barber & Co., 148 Fed. 473, 476.

DUPLICATE

A "duplicate" is an original instrument reproduced, not a new agreement, but merely written evidence of the lost instrument to take its place. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. McFadden, 111 S. W. 1172, 1176, 213 Mo. 269.

"The meaning of the word 'duplicate,' in legal phraseology, is the same as that in its use among business men. It is tersely and correctly stated in 10 Am. & Eng. Encycl. of Law, 818, as follows: "'Duplicate' is defined as a document which is the same in all respects as some other instrument from which it is indistinguishable in its essence and operation.' A substantially like definition is given of the word in all the law dictionaries in common use. In Burrill's Dictionary, verbum 'Duplicate,' is given the following ample definition: 'A duplicate is sometimes defined to be a copy of a thing, but, though generally a copy, a duplicate differs from a mere copy in having all the validity of an original. Nor, it seems, need it be an exact copy. Defined also to be the counterpart of an instrument; but in indentures there is a distinction between counterparts executed by the several parties, respectively, each party affixing his or her seal to only one counterpart, and duplicate originals, each executed by all the parties.'" In paragraph 6 of Schedule A of the War Revenue Act of June 13, 1898, c. 448, 30 Stat. 458 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2304), which requires a stamp to be affixed to each bill of lading, manifest, etc., "and to each duplicate thereof," the word "duplicate" is to be defined, in accordance with the meaning given it generally in business, as one of two instruments, each of which is original, and intended to have the force of an obligation irrespective of the other, and not as meaning merely a copy. Wright v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 130 Fed. 843, 846, 65 C. C. A. 327.

The use of the word "duplicate" across a check signifies that it was made as a substitute for the original and that no new liability was created thereby. Lewis v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 83 S. W. 423, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 241 (citing Benton v. Martin, 40 N. Y. 345).

Copy distinguished

A "duplicate" is sometimes defined to be a copy of a thing; but, though generally a copy, a duplicate differs from a mere copy in having all the validity of an original. Wright v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 130 Fed. 843, 846, 65 C. C. A. 327.

While in grammatical construction of sentences the words "copy" and "duplicate" are never synonymous unless employed as verbs, the practice of indiscriminately using them as such is quite prevalent, and the extrinsic facts presented by the record in this case fully justify the inference that the term "copy" was used only with reference to and to designate the instrument executed by the mortgagor and duly filed for record. Differing from a "copy," a "duplicate" instrument in writing is the exact repetition thereof, and according to judicial lexicographers has all the validity of an original. "A duplicate writing has but one effect. Each duplicate is complete evidence of the intention of the parties." Bouv. Law Dict. "A document the same in all respects as some other document, from which it is indistinguishable in its essence and operation." Anderson's Law Dict. "An original instrument repeated; a document which is the same as another in all essential particulars, and differing from a mere copy in having all the validity of an original." Bur. Law Dict. Cable Co. v. Rathgeber, 113 N. W. 88, 90, 21 S. D. 418.

Within four months subsequent to the commission of an act of bankruptcy, an involuntary petition was filed. On the same day the clerk of the district court made and certified a copy of such petition, which was delivered to the marshal with the summons, and was by him given to the defendant contemporaneously with the service of the summons. Held, that such copy made under such circumstances was a "duplicate" within the requirement that such petition must be filed in duplicate. Millan v. Exchange Bank of Mannington, 183 Fed. 753, 754, 106 C. C. A. 327.

The word "duplicate," in Act May 5, 1892, c. 60, §§ 6, 7, relating to the deportation of Chinese laborers not having certificates of residence, and authorizing the procurement of a "duplicate" on the loss or destruction of certificate of residence, etc., is not synonymous with the words "a true copy"; the law not requiring that the duplicate shall be an exact copy of the original. Dillard v. United States, 141 Fed. 303, 308, 72 C. C. A. 451.

DUPLICATE TAXATION

See, also, Double Taxation.

"Duplicate taxation," as distinguished from "double taxation," contemplates a tax on property assessed to the person owning it under the laws of one state, which is levied in another state for the same year under a tax assessment accruing later in the year than that in the first state upon the owner's removal thereto. Judy v. Beckwith, 114 N. W. 565, 568, 137 Iowa, 24, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 142, 15 Ann. Cas. 890.

"Alike in criminal and civil proceedings 'duplicity' consists in alleging for one single purpose or object two or more distinct grounds of complaint or defense when one alone would be effectual in law." A plea in abatement alleging that the indictment was not found by a legal grand jury (1) because the grand jury did not consist of 23 lawful persons, (2) because the persons from which it was drawn were not legally selected, and (3) because the act under which it was drawn is unconstitutional, is bad for "duplicity." State v. McNay, 60 Atl. 273, 274, 100 Md. 622 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bish. New Cr. Proc. § 432).

"Duplicity" in a declaration consists in joining in one count different grounds of action to enforce a single right of recovery. People's Nat. Bank v. Nickerson, 76 Atl. 987, 938, 106 Me. 502.

"Duplicity" in pleading means double pleading, the joining of two or more causes, or offenses, in one count, etc. It does not include a union of two or more facts which together constitute but one cause, or offense. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. Smith, 52 South. 38, 41, 166 Ala. 437.

"Duplicity in pleading" consists in the tender of issue in the same plea on several points, either of which would be traversable. Bruce v. Mathers (Ky.) 2 Bibb 294, 298.

To constitute "duplicity" in pleading it is not enough that it appears therefrom that the plaintiff has more than one cause of action. It must appear that he relies on more than one as the ground of a single recovery. It is not objectionable because he sets up the terms of a contract as constituting part of the means by which the fraud was consummated, so long as he does not seek to recover upon it. Summers v. Geer, 93 Pac. 133, 135, 50 Or. 249 (citing Bingham v. Lipman, 67 Pac. 93, 40 Or. 363; Raymond v. Sturges, 28 Conn. 134).

Though the term "duplicity" used in Code practice has been given a somewhat enlarged meaning, it still includes all that was comprehended by the definition at common law. Schwindt v. Lane Potter Lumber Co., 107 Pac. 818, 819, 40 Mont. 537, 135 Am. St. Rep. 639.

The term "duplicity," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 613, providing that duplicity in pleading is a substantial objection and any petition or other pleading found subject to such objection shall on motion be stricken out, is synonymous with "multifariousness," and means improper joinder in a single bill of independent matters. It also consists of a joinder of different grounds of action to enforce a single right (quoting 8 Words and Phrases, p. 2267). Scott v. Taylor, 132 S. W. 1149, 1153, 231 Mo. 654.

"Duplicity" in an indictment or information is the joinder of two or more distinct offenses in one count. State v. Sherman, 119 S. W. 479, 480, 137 Mo. App. 70 (citing and quoting 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. [8d Ed.] § 432).

An indictment, to be open to the objection of "duplicity," must charge two distinct and complete crimes, for each of which a separate punishment may be inflicted, and each of which would withstand a demurrer for want of sufficient evidence to constitute a crime. Baysinger v. Territory, 82 Pac. 728, 729, 15 Okl. 386.

"Duplicity" relates to averment or allegation, not to judgments which may be founded thereon; and hence it follows that there cannot be duplicity in a rule calling on defendant attorney to answer two distinct acts which, if they be offenses, may be punished by different and distinct penalties. State v. Hays, 61 S. E. 355, 356, 64 W. Va. 45.

That an information for operating a disorderly house contained several specifications of different ways in which the statute was being violated, did not render it defective for "duplicity." Walt v. People, 104 Pac. 89, 90, 46 Colo. 137.

DURESS

See, also, Coercion.

"Duress" exists when one, by an unlawful act of another, is induced to make a contract or perform some act under circumstances which deprive him of the exercise of his free will." Knight v. Brown, 100 N. W. 602, 603, 137 Mich. 396 (quoting Hackley v. Headley, 8 N. W. 511, 45 Mich. 569); Fred Rueping Leather Co. v. Watke, 116 N. W. 174, 175, 135 Wis. 616; Smithwick v. Whitley, 67 S. E. 913, 914, 152 N. C. 369; Guinn v. Sumpter Valley Ry. Co., 127 Pac. 987, 989, 63 Or. 368.

"To constitute 'duress' sufficient to avoid a contract in this state, the means adopted need only be of a character necessary to overcome the will and desire of the injured party, whether that person be below or above the average person in firmness and courage, and whether the means employed come clearly within the common-law definition of 'duress' or otherwise. In other words, the law extends its protection to an individual, without reference to whether he is strong or weak, intellectually, and refuses to measure his rights by an arbitrary yardstick avowedly applicable only to men of ordinary intellect, firmness, and courage." Nebraska Mut. Bond Ass'n v. Klee, 97 N. W. 476, 478, 70 Neb. 863 (citing First Nat. Bank of David City v. Sargent, 91 N. W. 595, 65 Neb. 594, 59 L. R. A. 296; Galusha v. Sherman, 81 N. W. 495, 501, 105 Wis. 263, 47 L. R. A. 417).

"Duress," in its broader sense, includes every mental condition caused by fear of personal injury, or injury to one's wife, child, or husband, which is sufficient to make the person acted upon incapable of exercising his free will power; the important consideration being whether the means used were, under the circumstances, sufficient to prevent the free exercise of the will power. Price v. Bank of Poynette, 128 N. W. 895, 897, 144 Wis. 190; Woolley v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 136 N. W. 616, 618, 150 Wis. 183.

To constitute "duress," it is sufficient if the will be constrained by the unlawful presentation of a choice between comparative evil, as inconvenience and loss by the detention of property, loss of property altogether, or compliance with an unconscionable demand. Harris v. Cary, 71 S. E. 551, 553, 112 Va. 362, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1350.

To constitute "duress" by threats and intimidation, it must appear that the party coerced was so intimidated and moved by the threats made as to cease to be a free moral agent, and to become so bereft of those qualities of mind essential to the making of a contract, as to be incapacitated to exercise his free will power in that connection. Clement v. Buckley Mercantile Co., 137 N. W. 657, 661, 172 Mich. 243.

"Duress," to be available as a ground to set aside a deed, must be such as to excite an apprehension or fear of great bodily harm or illegal punishment, and the violence or threats must be of such a degree as to cause one of ordinary firmness and courage to yield, but, to avoid a deed on the ground of duress per minas, the threats must be such as to strike with fear one of common firmness and constancy of mind. Kline v. Kline (Ariz.) 128 Pac. 805, 808.

Bouvier defines "duress" as an actual or threatened violence or restraint of a man's person contrary to law to compel him to enter into a contract or to discharge one. It implies a restraint which overcomes the will, and, to constitute it, threats must be used. Roloson v. De Hart, 114 S. W. 1122, 1123, 134 Mo. App. 633.

Civ. Code 1895, § 3536, defines "duress" as any illegal imprisonment, or legal imprisonment used for an illegal purpose, or threats of bodily or other harm, or other means amounting to or tending to coerce the will of another, and actually inducing him to do an act contrary to his free will. Griffin v. Griffin, 61 S. E. 16, 17, 130 Ga. 527, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 937, 14 Ann. Cas. 866; Bond v. Kidd, 57 S. E. 944, 945, 1 Ga. App. 798; Whitt v. Blount, 53 S. E. 205, 206, 124 Ga. 671 (citing 9 Cyc. pp. 444, 451, 452).

Where plaintiff admitted that no threats were made to induce her to sign a chattel mortgage, which was given on an exchange of houses between herself and defendant, but, after holding out for several hours and refusing to sign the mortgage, she did so finally on the insistence of defendant and his brother that a valid trade had been made, and that if she refused to sign she would become liable for a larger amount than that for which the mortgage was given, the mortgage was not void for "duress." Knight v.

Brown, 100 N. W. 602, 603, 137 Mich. 396 (quoting Hackley v. Headley, 45 Mich. 569, 8 N. W. 511).

The common-law doctrine of "duress," divided into duress by imprisonment and duress per minas, which arises when a person is threatened with loss of life or limb, or with mayhem, or with imprisonment, is in force in Missouri as modified by the decisions of the courts, and in its extensive sense duress is the degree of constraint which is sufficient to affect the mind of a person of ordinary firmness, and includes the condition of mind produced by the wrongful conduct of another, rendering a person incompetent to contract with the exercise of his free will power. Wood v. Kansas City Home Telephone Co., 123 S. W. 6, 12, 223 Mo. 537.

"To be 'duress,' the act must be physical violence, threats of violence or harm, or imprisonment or threat of imprisonment." One of three brothers, who owned all their property in a partnership, died, leaving his estate by will to his two brothers equally, and requesting them to adopt his children, which they did. They continued to hold their property in common, and the estate had been largely increased in value, when, more than 20 years later, the second brother died intestate, leaving a widow and children. The surviving brother then proposed the formation of a corporation to take the common property, and that a division be made between the persons in interest, who were then all adults, by the allotment of stock to each. Though there was some opposition, he insisted and declared that otherwise he would administer the estate as surviving partner, and the others would get only what the courts allowed them. After the matter had been under consideration for six months, an agreement for the formation of a corporation and the allotment of the stock was signed by the persons in interest, except one, whose interest was bought by the others. The agreement was carried out, and the common estate was owned, and the business managed, by the corporation with marked success. The agreement for division of the stock as a family settlement would not be set aside, after a lapse of 12 years, on the ground that the acts and threats of the surviving brother amounted to duress. Burnes v. Burnes, 132 Fed. 485, 493.

"Duress" is defined as "a condition of mind produced by the improper external pressure or influence that practically destroys the free agency of a party, and causes him to do an act or make a contract not of his own volition." Duress was not shown where, plaintiffs having obtained certain property from their ancestor by an alleged deed and will, four months after the ancestor's death, on the eve of the trial of an action to set aside such deed and will, a mutual friend caused the settlement to be made by which complainants conveyed certain of the property to defendants, who in the meantime had only avowed their determination to fight for what they insisted were their legal rights; plaintiffs at the time being fully competent to contract. Quigley v. Quigley (Iowa) 115 N. W. 1112, 1113 (quoting 14 Cyc. p. 1123).

To deprive one of his will and understanding by reason of threats or other unlawful means, so that a note thus obtained is not his free and voluntary act, constitutes "duress." Morrow v. Barnes, 116 N. W. 657, 81 Neb. 688.

"Under the modern theory, 'duress' is to be tested, not by the nature of the acts or threats, but rather by the state of mind of the victim induced by such acts and threats." Where a father is coerced into executing a mortgage to secure the payment of a default of his son by threats of the arrest and prosecution of the son for embezzlement if such security is not given, the mortgage may be avoided on the ground of duress. If the threats of the arrest and prosecution of the son operated to deprive the father of his free will power and to constrain the execution of the mortgage, the actual guilt or innocence of the son was not a material question in determining whether there was duress. Williamson-Halsell-Frazier Co. v. Ackerman, 94 Pac. 807, 808, 77 Kan. 502, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 484.

"Duress" and "deceit" are simply different methods by which fraud is consummated. The same remedies are available to the injured party. Neibuhr v. Gage, 106 N. W. 884, 887, 90 Minn. 149.

An instruction in a will contest that the words "fraud," "duress," and "undue influence," as used in the instructions, were used synonymously and generally mean the same thing, was not error. Pickler v. Wise, 182 N. W. 815, 817, 152 Iowa, 644.

"To constitute the 'coercion' or 'duress' which will be regarded as sufficient to make a payment involuntary, there must be some actual or threatened exercise of power possessed, or believed to be possessed, by the party exacting or recovering the payment, over the person or property of another, for which the latter has no means of immediate relief than by making the payment." Where a mortgage provided that on default of interest the mortgagee could treat principal and interest as due, and on such default brought suit for foreclosure, which constituted an election to treat the mortgage as due, and where the mortgagor tendered the amount of the mortgage and interest, and the mortgagee then stated that the foreclosure suit had been discontinued, and insisted on payment of $1,000, which the mortgage provided for in case the mortgagor elected to pay the amount of the mortgage before it was due, and the mortgagor, to procure the discharge of the mortgage, pays such bonus, the pay-

"Duress" is that degree of constraint or danger either actually inflicted or threatened and impending which is sufficient in severity or in apprehension to overcome the mind and will of a person of ordinary firmness. Where a husband whose obligation was about to fall due procured his surety thereon to arrange for a renewal, and the bank having refused to renew unless the wife would sign as surety, the act of such surety of the husband without knowledge of the bank in stating to the wife that, if she did not sign the obligation, it would be a great detriment to her husband and result in damage to him, did not amount to duress available as a defense in an action on the note signed by the wife brought by the bank, the wife being an intelligent woman able to transact business for herself. United States Banking Co. v. Veale, 114 Pac. 229, 230, 84 Kan. 385, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 540.

Civ. Code, § 1569, defines "duress" as (1) the unlawful confinement of a person; (2) unlawful detention of the property of any such person; (3) confinement of such person, lawful in form, but fraudulently obtained. Section 1570 defines "menace" as consisting of the duress specified in subdivisions 1 and 2, and unlawful and violent injury to the person and property of such person, or injury to his character. Defendant demanded the right to purchase boxes from plaintiff at an alleged contract price, which contract, in fact, did not exist, but plaintiff refused to sell at less than practically the market price, which was higher than the alleged contract price. It was practically impossible to then buy the boxes elsewhere, and they were essential to the continuance of defendant's business, and defendant claimed it was coerced into paying the price charged therefor. Held, that some element of compulsion or threatened exercise of power over the person or property to compel payment must be present to constitute duress, and defendant was not compelled by duress to purchase and pay the price charged for the boxes. Standard Box Co. v. Mutual Biscuit Co., 103 Pac. 938, 943, 10 Cal. App. 746.

In an action on a note, a plea that one defendant was the father of another, who had been cashier of a bank, that after his resignation as cashier he and his father were called together by officers and agents of the bank, who knowingly and falsely stated to them that defendant son had violated the criminal laws of the state in using the bank's money with which to speculate, that the bonding company, which was surety upon defendant son's bond, if the son were turned the free exercise of the will power. Price v. Bank of Poynette, 128 N. W. 895, 897, 144 Wis. 190; Woolley v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 136 N. W. 616, 618, 150 Wis. 183.

To constitute "duress," it is sufficient if the will be constrained by the unlawful presentation of a choice between comparative evil, as inconvenience and loss by the detention of property, loss of property altogether, or compliance with an unconscionable demand. Harris v. Cary, 71 S. E. 551, 553, 112 Va. 362, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1350.

To constitute "duress" by threats and intimidation, it must appear that the party coerced was so intimidated and moved by the threats made as to cease to be a free moral agent, and to become so bereft of those qualities of mind essential to the making of a contract, as to be incapacitated to exercise his free will power in that connection. Clement v. Buckley Mercantile Co., 137 N. W. 657, 661, 172 Mich. 243.

"Duress," to be available as a ground to set aside a deed, must be such as to excite an apprehension or fear of great bodily harm or illegal punishment, and the violence or threats must be of such a degree as to cause one of ordinary firmness and courage to yield, but, to avoid a deed on the ground of duress per minas, the threats must be such as to strike with fear one of common firmness and constancy of mind. Kline v. Kline (Ariz.) 128 Pac. 805, 808.

Bouvier defines "duress" as an actual or threatened violence or restraint of a man's person contrary to law to compel him to enter into a contract or to discharge one. It implies a restraint which overcomes the will, and, to constitute it, threats must be used. Roloson v. De Hart, 114 S. W. 1122, 1123, 134 Mo. App. 633.

Civ. Code 1895, § 3536, defines "duress" as any illegal imprisonment, or legal imprisonment used for an illegal purpose, or threats of bodily or other harm, or other means amounting to or tending to coerce the will of another, and actually inducing him to do an act contrary to his free will. Griffin v. Griffin, 61 S. E. 16, 17, 130 Ga. 527, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 937, 14 Ann. Cas. 866; Bond v. Kidd, 57 S. E. 944, 945, 1 Ga. App. 798; Whitt v. Blount, 53 S. E. 205, 206, 124 Ga. 671 (citing 9 Cyc. pp. 444, 451, 452).

Where plaintiff admitted that no threats were made to induce her to sign a chattel mortgage, which was given on an exchange of houses between herself and defendant, but, after holding out for several hours and refusing to sign the mortgage, she did so finally on the insistence of defendant and his brother that a valid trade had been made, and that if she refused to sign she would become liable for a larger amount than that for which the mortgage was given, the mortgage was not void for "duress." Knight v.

Brown, 100 N. W. 602, 603, 137 Mich. 396 (quoting Hackley v. Headley, 45 Mich. 569, 8 N. W. 511).

The common-law doctrine of "duress," divided into duress by imprisonment and duress per minas, which arises when a person is threatened with loss of life or limb, or with mayhem, or with imprisonment, is in force in Missouri as modified by the decisions of the courts, and in its extensive sense duress is the degree of constraint which is sufficient to affect the mind of a person of ordinary firmness, and includes the condition of mind produced by the wrongful conduct of another, rendering a person incompetent to contract with the exercise of his free will power. Wood v. Kansas City Home Telephone Co., 123 S. W. 6, 12, 223 Mo. 537.

"To be 'duress,' the act must be physical violence, threats of violence or harm, or imprisonment or threat of imprisonment." One of three brothers, who owned all their property in a partnership, died, leaving his estate by will to his two brothers equally, and requesting them to adopt his children, which they did. They continued to hold their property in common, and the estate had been largely increased in value, when, more than 20 years later, the second brother died intestate, leaving a widow and children. The surviving brother then proposed the formation of a corporation to take the common property, and that a division be made between the persons in interest, who were then all adults, by the allotment of stock to each. Though there was some opposition, he insisted and declared that otherwise he would administer the estate as surviving partner, and the others would get only what the courts allowed them. After the matter had been under consideration for six months, an agreement for the formation of a corporation and the allotment of the stock was signed by the persons in interest, except one, whose interest was bought by the others. The agreement was carried out, and the common estate was owned, and the business managed, by the corporation with marked success. The agreement for division of the stock as a family settlement would not be set aside, after a lapse of 12 years, on the ground that the acts and threats of the surviving brother amounted to duress. Burnes v. Burnes, 132 Fed. 485, 493.

"Duress" is defined as "a condition of mind produced by the improper external pressure or influence that practically destroys the free agency of a party, and causes him to do an act or make a contract not of his own volition." Duress was not shown where, plaintiffs having obtained certain property from their ancestor by an alleged deed and will, four months after the ancestor's death, on the eve of the trial of an action to set aside such deed and will, a mutual friend caused the settlement to be made by which complainants conveyed certain of the property to defendants, who in the meantime had only avowed their determination to fight for what they insisted were their legal rights; plaintiffs at the time being fully competent to contract. Quigley v. Quigley (Iowa) 115 N. W. 1112, 1118 (quoting 14 Cyc. p. 1123).

To deprive one of his will and understanding by reason of threats or other unlawful means, so that a note thus obtained is not his free and voluntary act, constitutes "duress." Morrow v. Barnes, 116 N. W. 657, 81 Neb. 688.

"Under the modern theory, 'duress' is to be tested, not by the nature of the acts or threats, but rather by the state of mind of the victim induced by such acts and threats." Where a father is coerced into executing a mortgage to secure the payment of a default of his son by threats of the arrest and prosecution of the son for embezzlement if such security is not given, the mortgage may be avoided on the ground of duress. If the threats of the arrest and prosecution of the son operated to deprive the father of his free will power and to constrain the execution of the mortgage, the actual guilt or innocence of the son was not a material question in determining whether there was duress. Williamson-Halsell-Frazier Co. v. Ackerman, 94 Pac. 807, 808, 77 Kan. 502, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 484.

"Duress" and "deceit" are simply different methods by which fraud is consummated. The same remedies are available to the injured party. Neibuhr v. Gage, 108 N. W. 884, 887, 90 Minn. 149.

An instruction in a will contest that the words "fraud," "duress," and "undue influence," as used in the instructions, were used synonymously and generally mean the same thing, was not error. Pickler v. Wise, 132 N. W. 815, 817, 152 Iowa, 644.

"To constitute the 'coercion' or 'duress' which will be regarded as sufficient to make a payment involuntary, there must be some actual or threatened exercise of power possessed, or believed to be possessed, by the party exacting or recovering the payment, over the person or property of another, for which the latter has no means of immediate relief than by making the payment." Where a mortgage provided that on default of interest the mortgagee could treat principal and interest as due, and on such default brought suit for foreclosure, which constituted an election to treat the mortgage as due, and where the mortgagor tendered the amount of the mortgage and interest, and the mortgagee then stated that the foreclosure suit had been discontinued, and insisted on payment of $1,000, which the mortgage provided for in case the mortgagor elected to pay the amount of the mortgage before it was due, and the mortgagor, to procure the discharge of the mortgage, pays such bonus, the pay-

"Duress" is that degree of constraint or danger either actually inflicted or threatened and impending which is sufficient in severity or in apprehension to overcome the mind and will of a person of ordinary firmness. Where a husband whose obligation was about to fall due procured his surety thereon to arrange for a renewal, and the bank having refused to renew unless the wife would sign as surety, the act of such surety of the husband without knowledge of the bank in stating to the wife that, if she did not sign the obligation, it would be a great detriment to her husband and result in damage to him, did not amount to duress available as a defense in an action on the note signed by the wife brought by the bank, the wife being an intelligent woman able to transact business for herself. United States Banking Co. v. Veale, 114 Pac. 229, 230, 84 Kan. 385, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 540.

Civ. Code, § 1569, defines "duress" as (1) the unlawful confinement of a person; (2) unlawful detention of the property of any such person; (3) confinement of such person, lawful in form, but fraudulently obtained. Section 1570 defines "menace" as consisting of the duress specified in subdivisions 1 and 2, and unlawful and violent injury to the person and property of such person, or injury to his character. Defendant demanded the right to purchase boxes from plaintiff at an alleged contract price, which contract, in fact, did not exist, but plaintiff refused to sell at less than practically the market price, which was higher than the alleged contract price. It was practically impossible to then buy the boxes elsewhere, and they were essential to the continuance of defendant's business, and defendant claimed it was coerced into paying the price charged therefor. Held, that some element of compulsion or threatened exercise of power over the person or property to compel payment must be present to constitute duress, and defendant was not compelled by duress to purchase and pay the price charged for the boxes. Standard Box Co. v. Mutual Biscuit Co., 103 Pac. 938, 943, 10 Cal. App. 746.

To constitute "duress," it is sufficient if the will be constrained by the unlawful presentation of a choice between comparative evil, as inconvenience and loss by the detention of property, loss of property altogether, or compliance with an unconscionable demand. Harris v. Cary, 71 S. E. 551, 553, 112 Va. 362, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1350.

over to it, would doubtless prosecute him for the alleged felonies he had committed, and that, if he escaped on a technicality, he could never get a place in a bank again, because his business career would be ruined, and defendants believed such statements, and upon being told by the bank officers that if they would sign certain notes, including the one in suit, such officers would not prosecute defendant son and another defendant, they executed the note in suit, alleged merely a threat, without color of power to make it effective, and was insufficient as a plea of duress, under Civ. Code 1895, § 3536, defining "duress" as consisting in an illegal imprisonment, or legal imprisonment for an illegal purpose, or threats of harm, tending to coerce the will of another, and actually inducing him to do an act contrary to his free will. Mallory v. Royston Bank, 70 S. E. 586, 587, 135 Ga. 702.

As of person or of property

"Duress" is of the person when manifested by imprisonment or threats, and of goods when one is compelled to yield to illegal exactions to obtain possession of his property. Smithwick v. Whitley, 67 S. E. 913, 914, 152 N. C. 369.

"Duress" is a species of fraud in which compulsion in some form takes the place of deception in accomplishing the injury. Duress is either of the person or of the goods of the party. 'Duress of the goods' consists in seizing by force, or withholding from the party entitled to it, the possession of personal property, and extorting something as a condition of release, or in demanding and taking property under color of legal authority which in fact is either void, or for some other reason does not justify the demand." In applying this principle it has been said that "artifice and force differ only as modes of obtaining the assent of a contracting party, and a contract to which one assents through imposition or overpowering intimidation will be declared void on appeal to either a court of law or of equity to enforce it. The question whether one executes a contract or deed with a mind and will sufficiently free to make the act binding is often difficult to determine, but for that purpose a court of equity, unrestrained by the more technical rules which govern courts of law in that respect, will consider all the circumstances from which rational inferences may be drawn, and will refuse its aid against one who, although apparently acting voluntarily, yet in fact appears to have executed a contract with a mind so subdued by harshness, cruelty, extreme distress, or apprehension short of legal duress, as to overpower and control the will," hence where a divorced wife, to whom had been committed the custody of a child instituted proceedings against her former husband, claiming that he was wasting his estate, and obtained the appointment of a temporary guardian for him, and the husband, who was old and enfeebled in body and mind, and was very anxious to procure a dismissal of the proceedings, entered into an arrangement, under the approval of the court, by which a sum of money was paid, and property was conveyed by him for the benefit of the child, the money and property so paid and conveyed comprising the larger part of the husband's estate, and it was obviously paid to procure a dismissal of the proceedings and release of the guardianship, the proceedings being groundless in point of law, and the husband being coerced to make a contract which he would not have made voluntarily, the transaction constituted a form of duress, and could be avoided at the instance of the husband's heirs at law after his death. Foot v. De Poy, 102 N. W. 112, 114, 126 Iowa, 366, 68 L. R. A. 302, 106 Am. St. Rep. 385 (quoting definition by Cooley, Torts, p. 506; Central Bank of Frederick v. Copeland, 18 Md. 305, 81 Am. Dec. 597).

"At common law 'duress' meant only duress of the person, and nothing short of such duress, amounting to a reasonable apprehension of imminent danger to life, limb, or liberty, was sufficient to avoid a contract, or to enable a party to recover back money paid; but courts of equity would unhesitatingly set aside contracts whenever there was imposition or oppression, or whenever the extreme necessity of the party was such as to overcome his free agency. The courts of law, however, gradually extended the doctrine so as to recognize duress of property as a sort of moral duress, which might, equally with duress of the person, constitute a defense to a contract induced thereby, or entitle a party to recover back money paid under its influence. And the modern authorities generally hold that such pressure or constraint as compels a man to go against his will, and virtually takes away his free agency, and destroys the power of refusing to comply with the unlawful demand of another, will constitute duress, irrespective of the manifestation or apprehension of physical force." "The true doctrine of duress, at the present, both in this country and in England, is that a contract obtained by so oppressing a person by threats regarding his personal safety or liberty, or that of his property, or of a member of his family, as to deprive him of the free exercise of his will and prevent the meeting of minds necessary to a valid contract, may be avoided on the ground of duress, whether the oppression causing the incompetence to contract be produced by what was deemed duress formerly, and relievable at law as such, or wrongful compulsion, remediable by an appeal to a court of equity. The law no longer allows a person to enjoy without disturbance the fruits of his iniquity, because his victim was not a person of ordinary courage, and no longer gauges the acts that shall be held legally sufficient to produce duress by any arbitrary standard, but holds him who, by putting another in fear, shall have produced in him a state of mental incompetency to contract, and then takes advantage of such condition, no matter by what means such fear be caused, liable at the option of such other to make restitution to him of everything of value thereby taken from him. Callendar Sav. Bank v. Loos, 120 N. W. 317, 320, 142 Iowa, 1; Joannin v. Ogilvie, 52 N. W. 217, 49 Minn. 564, 16 L. R. A. 376, 32 Am. St. Rep. 581; Galusha v. Sherman, 81 N. W. 501, 105 Wis. 280, 47 L. R. A. 424; Kennedy v. Roberts, 75 N. W. 363, 365, 105 Iowa, 528.

"Duress" consists not merely in the act of imprisonment or other hardship to which the party is subjected, but the state of mind produced by those circumstances and in which the act sought to be avoided was done. According to the weight of modern authority the unlawful detention of another's goods under oppressive circumstances or their threatened detention will avoid a contract on the ground of duress, for the reason that in such cases there is nothing but the form of the agreement without its substance. Whitt v. Blount, 53 S. E. 205, 206, 124 Ga. 671 (citing 9 Cyc. pp. 444, 451, 452).

"Duress" of property, which will constitute a defense to a contract induced thereby, must be such pressure or constraint upon the property as to take away the free agency of the person contracting; and where one threatens nothing that he has not a legal right to perform there is no duress. Kansas City, M. & O. Ry. Co. v. Graham & Price (Tex.) 145 S. W. 632, 633.

Civ. Code, § 1567, provides that an apparent consent is not real or free when obtained through "duress" and section 1569 declares that any unlawful detention of the property of any person constitutes duress. Held that, where plaintiff held possession of the property of the drawer of an order sued on under an attachment issued by a justice without jurisdiction, an order executed by the drawer to relieve his property from such writ was subject to rescission for duress under section 1566, providing that a consent which is not free is nevertheless not absolutely void, but may be rescinded, etc. Harlan v. Gladding, McBean & Co., 93 Pac. 400, 402, 7 Cal. App. 49.

Refusal to pay full claim or amount due

A mere threat to withhold payment of a debt, except on the giving of a receipt that the amount paid was all that was due, is not "duress." Earle v. Berry, 61 Atl. 671, 675, 27 R. I. 221, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 867, 8 Ann. Cas. 875.

Refusal to surrender property

"The 'duress' for which a person may avoid any contract of business made or recover back any money paid under its influence exists where one by the unlawful act of the beneficiary or his authorized agent, or by the act of some person with his knowledge, is constrained under circumstances which deprive him of the exercise of free will to agree or perform the act sought to be avoided." It involves illegality. Payment by a consignor as a condition of obtaining his goods from the possession of the general assignee of a factor, who claimed and was legally entitled to a lien thereon for the factor's advances, made under protest and claim of a right to offset against such lien the amount of accommodation notes not then due, but paid by the consignor, was not made under "duress," so as to be recoverable by the consignor. In re Meyer, 106 Fed. 828, 831.

Where mortgaged cattle were in the possession of an agister, who had no lien thereon, and no right to detain them, but who nevertheless imposed on the mortgagee, as a condition of peacefully surrendering them, that the mortgagee should guaranty a note of the mortgagor for pasturing or caring for the cattle, and the mortgagee complied with the condition to peacefully get possession of the cattle, the guaranty was obtained by "duress" and was unenforceable. Tandy v. Elmore-Cooper Live Stock Commission Co., 87 S. W. 614, 617, 113 Mo. App. 409.

Threats in general

A threat of arrest, imprisonment, and prosecution does not constitute "duress," unless the person so threatened is charged with having committed an act constituting a crime or a misdemeanor. Bond v. Kidd, 57 S. E. 944, 945, 1 Ga. App. 798.

Ordinarily, when no proceedings have been commenced, threats of arrest, prosecution, or imprisonment do not constitute legal "duress" to avoid a contract, unless the threats are made under such circumstances as to excite fear of imminent and immediate imprisonment. While under both the civil and common law threats did not constitute "duress" unless they were of such a character as to induce a well grounded fear in the mind of a firm and courageous man, the rule now is that any contract produced by actual intimidation is void whether arising from or resulting merely from personal infirmity or from circumstances which might produce a like effect on persons of ordinary firmness. That plaintiff assigned certain corporate stock to defendants because of their threats to procure the arrest of plaintiff's son, plaintiff having been afforded ample time in which to consult an attorney, did not constitute such duress as would avoid the transfer. Sulzner v. Cappeau-Lemley & Miller Co., 83 Atl. 103, 105, 284 Pa. 162, 89 L. R. A. (N. S.) 421.

A threat by officers of a union of musicians that, unless a member paid an illegal fine imposed, he would be expelled, causing the member to fear that, unless he paid the fine, he would be expelled and deprived of his means of earning a living, amounts to "duress," entitling him to maintain an action for the fine paid. Fuerst v. Musical Mut. Protective Union, 95 N. Y. Sup. 155, 160.

Threats of arrest

Legal imprisonment, actual or threatened, not used for an illegal purpose, is not "duress," although in the given case it may be inflicted or threatened under such circumstances as to be shocking to the instincts of humanity. White v. City of Tifton, 57 S. E. 1038, 1039, 1 Ga. App. 569.

Under the modern rule of law, actual or threatened use or misuse of criminal process, legal or illegal, sufficient to overpower and overcome the will of the party threatened, constitutes "duress." Wilbur v. Blanchard, 126 Pac. 1069, 1070, 22 Idaho, 517.

Threats of attachment

Under Civ. Code 1895, § 3536, defining "duress" as any illegal imprisonment or legal imprisonment for an illegal purpose, or threats of bodily or other harm, or other means tending to coerce the will of another and actually inducing him to act contrary to his free will, and section 3723, providing that the payment of a claim, where the facts are known and there is no fraud, is deemed voluntary, and cannot be recovered unless made under immediate necessity therefor, or to release personal property from detention, or to prevent an immediate seizure, the payment of a claim, unfounded in law or fact, and known by the person making it to be so, to avoid a threatened seizure of the baggage of the person paying the claim, was a payment under duress, and may be recovered. Fenwick Shipping Co. v. Clarke Bros., 65 S. E. 140, 141, 133 Ga. 43.

Threats of civil suit

A threat of litigation by one who has a legal right to sue is not generally held to be "duress" within the meaning of the law. Walla Walla Fire Ins. Co. v. Spencer, 100 Pac. 741, 743, 52 Wash. 369.

Threats of foreclosure

To constitute "duress," avoiding a deed, there must either be imprisonment or threats thereof, or of personal violence; the mere fear of losing property by foreclosure of a lien not being sufficient. Ward v. Baker (Tex.) 135 S. W. 620, 624.

Threats of prosecution

The obtaining of a note through the payee's threat to prosecute the maker for a criminal offense not relating to or injuring the payee, though the maker be guilty, constitutes "duress." Thompson v. Hicks (Tex.) 100 S. W. 357, 358.

"Duress" may be said to exist when one person is, by threats of a criminal prosecution of such a character as to deprive him of his own free will and agency, induced to make a contract or perform some act that he would not otherwise make or perform." Lacks v. Butler County Bank, 102 S. W. 1007, 1012, 204 Mo. 349.

Threats of prosecution of another

In order to constitute "duress," the threat must be of such a nature, and made under such circumstances, as to constitute a reasonably adequate cause to control the will of the threatened person, and must have that effect, and the act sought to be avoided must be performed by such person while in such condition. "Duress which consists of threats of imprisonment of a husband or a child is a species of fraud, which renders the contract made under its influence voidable only, and not void." Proof that a note and mortgage by a wife upon her individual property were executed under threats of criminal prosecution of her husband for embezzlement, and that she was greatly excited and alarmed at these threats, and had fainting spells before and after she executed the mortgage, and only consented to execute it to prevent her husband being sent to jail, is sufficient evidence of "duress" to invalidate the note and mortgage, as between the wife and the mortgagee. Mack v. Prang, 79 N. W. 770, 771, 104 Wis. 1, 45 L. R. A. 407, 76 Am. St. Rep. 848.

DURESS BY IMPRISONMENT

"Duress by imprisonment" is when a person is actually imprisoned for an improper purpose without just cause, or for a just cause without lawful authority, or for a just cause and under proper authority, but for an improper purpose. Code Civ. Proc. § 3670, declares that "duress" either of imprisonment or by threats or other acts by which the free will of the party is restrained or his consent induced, will avoid the contract, but that legal imprisonment, if not used for illegal purposes, is not duress. Whitt v. Blount, 53 S. E. 205, 206, 124 Ga. 671 (citing 9 Cyc. pp. 444, 451, 452); White v. City of Tifton, 57 S. E. 1038, 1039, 1 Ga. App. 569; Bailey v. Devine, 51 S. E. 603, 604, 123 Ga. 653, 107 Am. St. Rep. 153.

In order for "duress of imprisonment," either actual or threatened, to be available at common law as a defense to a contract, the imprisonment must have been unlawful. Bailey v. Devine, 51 S. E. 603, 604, 123 Ga. 653, 107 Am. St. Rep. 153.

DURESS PER MINAS

"Duress per minas" arises when a person is threatened with loss of life or limb, or with mayhem, or with imprisonment. Wood v. Kansas City Home Tel. Co., 123 S. W. 6, 12, 223 Mo. 537; Whitt v. Blount, 53 S. E. 205, 206, 124 Ga. 671 (citing 9 Cyc. pp. 444, 451, 452).

DURING

"During" is a proper word to be used in creating a limitation upon the term granted by a lease. Vanatta v. Brewer, 32 N. J. Eq. 263, 270.

The word "during," used to designate time for the performance of an act as during a certain term of court, would be an apt expression of an intention to include the whole term. Bloch Queensware Co. v. Smith, Saxton & Co., 80 S. W. 592, 593, 107 Mo. App. 13.

Defendant purchased certain oil from plaintiff, to be taken at defendant's option "during" the months of October, November, and December, 1901. Later another contract was made for delivery at defendant's option "between" October 1, 1901, and January 30, 1902, and still later another contract was made for delivery at defendant's option "during" the period from October 1, 1901, to June 30, 1902. In construing these contracts, it was held that defendant was entitled to call for deliveries at his option within the time specified in amounts to suit his convenience, and was therefore entitled to demand a delivery of all the oil at any time within the dates named. American Linsseed Co. v. Ebersson, 104 S. W. 121, 124, 126 Mo. App. 426.

In an indictment for perjury alleging that on the trial of a criminal case it was a material inquiry whether the defendants were in a certain town "during the day and night of December 28th, and early in the morning of December 29th," the word "during" means at any time during the day or night of the 28th and the morning of the 29th. United States v. Ammerman, 176 Fed. 635, 636.

As on

See On—Upon.

As throughout the course of

While one meaning ascribed to the word "during" is "throughout the course of," it also means "in time of," "in course of," and hence where defendants, who had a contract to construct locks in a river for the United States, wrote plaintiff, stating that they would put on their work any number of teams plaintiff cared to furnish during the construction of the locks, the word "during" did not necessarily mean that the employment would extend over the whole period of construction. Christie, Lowe & Heyworth v. Patton, 42 South. 614, 616, 148 Ala. 324.

DURING APPOINTMENT

Under Rev. St. U. S. § 5136 et seq., the directors of a national bank are to be chosen annually, and one of the directors is to be chosen as president of the board. A bond given to a national bank by its president, for the faithful performance of his duties "during his appointment," covers only the year for which he was elected, and his sureties will not be liable for his misconduct after the expiration of that time. First Nat.

Bank v. Samuelson, 118 N. W. 81, 82, 82 Neb. 582.

DURING COVERTURE

See also, During Marriage.

"During coverture" means while the marriage lasts. United States v. Ammerman, 176 Fed. 635, 636 (quoting and adopting definition in State, to Use of Gentry, v. Fry, 4 Mo. 159).

DURING DISABILITY

Where, in consideration of wages "during disability," necessary nurse hire and doctor's bills resulting from present disability, and employment when recovered, plaintiff released defendant from liability for an injury sustained, which consisted of a broken leg, making plaintiff a cripple, the term "during disability" was not limited to the time that a nurse and doctor were required. American Quarries Co. v. Lay, 73 N. E. 608, 609, 37 Ind. App. 386.

DURING EXAMINATION

The surety on an undertaking that the principal should personally appear "during the said examination" for an alleged criminal offense "on each and every day to which the examination may be adjourned, until the same is fully completed," is not excused for failure to produce the principal at an adjourned hearing after the magistrate had ordered the principal to furnish surety in a larger sum for a further examination, but which he failed to do, and was permitted to leave the court without having furnished it. People v. Newman, 81 N. Y. Supp. 811, 813, 100 App. Div. 436.

DURING EXISTENCE

Where defendant, the general agent of a life insurance company, employed a special agent, and obligated himself to pay the agent an agreed percentage of such renewal premiums as might be paid on policies procured by the agent, provided such renewals should be paid "during the existence of this contract," and the contract provided it was to terminate on the termination of defendant's contract with the company, and the latter contract terminated before any renewal premiums were paid, by giving effect to every part of the contract as required by Civ. Code, § 1641, the agent's right to renewal premiums ceased on the termination of the contract. In no other way than as thus interpreted can effect be given to the words quoted. Nelles v. MacFarland, 99 Pac. 980, 981, 9 Cal. App. 534.

St. 1898, § 1789, relating to the voluntary dissolution of corporations, requires the adoption of a resolution of dissolution, and that a certified copy thereof be recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the corporation's home county, and also in the office of the secretary of state, and provides that thereupon it shall cease to exist, except for winding up its affairs. Section 1791e, as amended by Laws 1905, c. 504, makes it the absolute duty of the state treasurer to receive and retain in custody "during the existence" of the company securities thereby required to be deposited by trust companies for the benefit of depositors and creditors. The state treasurer on the day previous to the recording of such resolution, with the register of deeds of the proper county, on presentation of a certificate of dissolution of the trust company, which had been filed with the secretary of state, released such securities to the amount of $45,000. Held, that the corporation had not ceased to exist, and the release of the securities was a breach of the treasurer's duty for which he was liable on his official bond. State ex rel. Sheldon v. Dahl, 135 N. W. 474, 477, 150 Wis. 73.

DURING FURTHER TIME

See Further Time.

DURING GOOD BEHAVIOR

The phrase "during good behavior" means "while conducting oneself conformably to law." United States v. Hraskey, 88 N. E. 1031, 1034, 240 Ill. 560, 130 Am. St. Rep. 288, 16 Ann. Cas. 279.

DURING LAST SICKNESS

The dictation of instructions for a will, which was not executed, many months before decedent's death, is not "during the last sickness," within Revisal 1908, § 3127, subd. 3, relating to nuncupative wills, though there was no recovery from the sickness. Kennedy v. Douglas, 66 S. E. 213, 217, 151 N. C. 336.

DURING LIFE OF AGREEMENT

Defendants executed a note, binding themselves to pay plaintiff $300, with interest, on or before November 14, 1903. Defendants also executed a deed to plaintiff to secure the note, and plaintiff executed a defeasance agreement reciting that, one of the defendants desiring to sell from time to time "during the life of this agreement" certain portions of the property conveyed, plaintiff would convey to any purchaser so obtained on receipt of $50 per lot, to be applied on the note. Held, that the phrase "during the life of this agreement" was limited to the time prior to the mortgagors' default in paying the note secured by the deed at maturity, and that plaintiff was not bound after such default either to accept less than the full amount due on the note or to convey a portion of the mortgaged property. Bartels v. Davis, 85 Pac. 1027, 1028, 34 Mont. 285.

DURING LIFE OF CONSPIRACY

"During the life of the conspiracy," as used in determining whether acts and declarations are admissible to prove a conspiracy, is meant after the conspiracy has been formed and before its accomplishment or abandonment. State v. Allen, 87 Pac. 177, 179, 34 Mont. 403.

DURING MARRIAGE

See, also, During Coverture.

The phrase "during marriage," in a statute providing that "during marriage" the husband shall have the sole management of all the separate property of his wife, means as long as the marriage relation exists, and at no time during the marriage relation can the wife deprive the husband of his right of control and possession; he being present in the marriage relation. Bledsoe v. Pitts, 105 S. W. 1142, 1144, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 578.

Property acquired by the husband after his abandonment of the wife and her marriage to another, believing him divorced from her, is property acquired "during the marriage," and hence the wife was entitled to share in the community. Merrell v. Moore, 104 S. W. 514, 516, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 200.

DURING NATURAL LIFE

See Quarterly During His Natural Life.

Under the rule in Shelley's Case, a deed to the grantee "during his natural life and then to his heirs" conveys to the grantee title to the land in fee simple. Doyle v. Andis, 102 N. W. 177, 180, 127 Iowa, 36, 69 L. R. A. 953, 4 Ann. Cas. 18.

Testator gave his widow the income from his property for life, and provided that after her death, his daughter should become the owner of all that might remain after his widow's funeral expenses and just debts were paid during her natural life, then the property to go to his daughter's heirs. Held, that the clause "during her natural life" referred to the duration of the estate in testator's daughter, thus limiting it to a life estate, and did not refer to the period within which such debts should be paid. Deaton v. Dorsey, 73 Atl. 239, 240, 78 N. J. Law, 229.

In a will giving to testator's wife all his personal and real estate, "to have and to hold for her use and benefit during her natural life, with the right to dispose of the same by gift or will at her decease," the limitation of the wife's estate during her natural life describes the estate, which terminates at her death and creates in the wife a life estate with power of disposition, and not an estate in fee. Collins v. Wickwire, 38 N. E. 365, 366, 162 Mass. 143, 145.

A bequest of real and personal property to a wife "during her natural life and at her decease to be left to my son A." vests immediately in the son as an executory devise. Farley v. Gilmer, 12 Ala. 141, 142, 46 Am. Dec. 249.

DURING OCCUPANCY OF BUILDING

Under a lease for a term of two years, containing a covenant by the lessee to pay a specified rent "during occupancy of the building," the expression "during occupancy of the building" meant during the term, and did not give the lessee an option to surrender possession and relieve himself from liability for rent. Bickford v. Kirwin, 75 Pac. 518, 520, 30 Mont. 1.

DURING PENDENCY OF ACTION OR PROCEEDINGS

A petition to set aside a divorce decree for fraud may be properly considered as filed "during pendency of the action" for divorce, so far as relates to the court's power to make allowance for maintenance and expenses of the litigation, under Kirby's Dig. § 2679, providing that during the pendency of action for divorce the court may allow the wife maintenance and a reasonable fee for her attorneys. Stewart v. Stewart, 141 S. W. 193, 194, 101 Ark. 86.

In Comp. St. 1911, c. 25, § 12, providing that, in every suit brought, either for a divorce or a separation, the court may in its discretion require the husband to pay any sum necessary to enable the wife to carry on or defend the suit during its pendency, the term "during its pendency" means any time from the commencement of the suit until and including the final order of dismissal thereof. Kiddle v. Kiddle, 133 N. W. 181, 182, 90 Neb. 248, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1001, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 796.

DURING PROGRESS OF SETTLEMENT

The expression "during the progress of the settlement of the estate," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 2562, providing for the allowance to the widow of a decedent, means during the time reasonably necessary for that purpose, and does not warrant a continuance of the allowance for an indefinite time until the whole estate is consumed and nothing left to be distributed. In re Dougherty's Estate, 86 Pac. 38, 41, 34 Mont. 386.

DURING SEASON

The phrase "during the season of the year 1905," as used in a contract to perform "certain services" of labor to work and pull a crop of turpentine boxes during the season of 1905, means through the course, existence, or continuance of the turpentine season of that year, and does not mean "at some period in the turpentine season of the year 1905." Taylor v. State, 53 S. E. 320, 124 Ga. 798.

DURING TERM

See Day During the Term.

A covenant of a landlord to make certain repairs "during the term" of a lease requires only that the landlord shall act on notice on the part of the tenant. Gerzebek v. Lord, 33 N. J. Law, 240, 245.

DURING TERM OF CHARTER

Privileges granted by a city ordinance to a street railroad company "during the term of its charter" are meant to be granted during the period named in the charter, so that, where that period is 50 years, the privileges cannot be held to have expired because the company must have organized under an act limiting the corporate life to 30 years. City of Minneapolis v. Minneapolis St. R. Co., 30 Sup. Ct. 118, 122, 215 U. S. 417, 427, 54 L. Ed. 259.

DURING TRIAL

"During such trial" includes all of the proceedings from the impaneling of the jury to the receiving and recording of the verdict. United States v. Ammerman, 176 Fed. 635, 636 (quoting and adopting definition in State, to Use of Gentry, v. Fry, 4 Mo. 159).

The phrase "during the trial" means every substantive step taken by the court in the cause after the indictment is presented, up to and including the final judgment. An order authorizing the sheriff to summon a jury to be present at a subsequent date fixed for the trial is a mere administrative function of the court and is not a part of the trial of the cause at which the presence of the accused is required. State v. Barrington, 95 S. W. 235, 257, 198 Mo. 23.

DURING WIDOWHOOD

A devise to a widow "during her widowhood" gives her a life estate only. Sink v. Sink, 64 S. E. 193, 194, 150 N. C. 444.

Where a testator, after devising a homestead to his wife for her life, directed that at her death the executor should sell it, it could not be said that his sole object was to provide a house for his widow, so that, where she parted with her interest therein during her lifetime in consideration of an annuity, the homestead could not be sold before her death for the benefit of the purchaser, but the testator's intent as expressed in the will should be enforced. Stewart v. Jones, 118 S. W. 1, 3, 219 Mo. 614, 181 Am. St. Rep. 595.

DURING YEAR

The expression "during a year" in Rev. St. 1898, § 1550, punishing illegal sales of liquor and declaring that in case of a second conviction during any year the punishment shall be increased, means within 365 days after the first conviction, and not within the same calendar year. Paetz v. State, 107 N. W. 1090, 1092, 129 Wis. 174, 9 Ann. Cas. 767.

Where a letter of a guaranty was dated August 1, 1903, and recited that the writer would guaranty purchases made by a third party "during this year," the guaranty should be construed as limited to the remainder of the year 1903. Whitehead v.

American Lamp & Brass Co., 62 Atl. 554, 555, 70 N. J. Eq. 581.

DUST

The word "dust," as used in the factory act, requiring exhaust fans of sufficient power to be provided for the purpose of carrying off dust from emery wheels and grindstones and dust-creating machinery, may include particles of iron and crystals created by and thrown off by an emery wheel in operation. Indianapolis Foundry Co. v. Lackey (Ind.) 97 N. E. 349, 350.

The factory act, requiring exhaust fans to be provided to carry off dust from emery wheels, includes particles of emery and iron thrown and blown off the wheels while in operation, as well as any dust likely to be present in rooms in which dust-creating machines are operated; the word "dust" meaning fine, dry particles of matter that may be raised and carried by the wind, there being no rule to determine the size of the particles, nor the matter of which they are composed. Indianapolis Foundry Co. v. Bradley, 89 N. E. 505, 506, 45 Ind. App. 530.

DUTCHMAN

A spliced rail is called a "dutchman," in the vernacular of railroad employes. Galveston, H. & N. Ry. Co. v. Wallis, 104 S. W. 418, 419, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 120.

DUTIABLE MERCHANDISE

The rule that fruit imported in a rotten and wholly worthless condition does not constitute "dutable merchandise" applies as well to fruit in packages as to fruit in bulk; and in the assessment of duty on fruit imported in packages allowance should be made for the decayed portions, even though not separated from the sound, but all being sold together at auction. United States v. Villari, Mitchell & Co., 160 Fed. 77, 78, 87 C. C. A. 233.

DUTIES

See Domestic Duties; Tonnage Duties. Excise duty, see Excise.

"Duties" are terms commonly applied to levies made by governments on the importation and exportation of commodities. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 342, 349, 220 U. S. 107, 55 L. Ed. 389, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1312.

"Duties" or imposts are taxes levied on articles brought into the country. The power to collect such duty necessarily implies that there must be some article imported into the country on which the duty is imposed. Alexander D. Shaw & Co. v. United States, 141 Fed. 469, 471.

DUTY

See Absolute Duty; Additional Duty; Breach of Duty; Death Duty; Die in Performance of Duty; Executive Duties; Governmental Duty; Gross Violation of Professional Duties; Imposed Duties; Judicial Duty; Lawful Duty; Line of Duty; Ministerial Duty; Moral Duty; Official Duty; On Duty; Positive Duty; Private Duty; Probate Duties; Public Duty; Right, Debt, or Duty; Special Duty; Statutory Duty; Unfit for Duty; While on Discharge of Official Duty. Discharge of official duty, see Discharge. Other Duties, see Other.

"Duty" is defined to be a human action which is exactly conformable to the laws which require us to obey them. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Filson, 128 Pac. 298, 299, 35 Okl. 89.

There are instances where the word "duty" may be used in a pleading, although perhaps not with the utmost propriety, in characterizing the nature of the plaintiff's employment, as where the word is used as descriptive of an ultimate fact as to the character of the work which he was required to do, as that one of the duties which plaintiff was employed to perform was to inspect his locomotive. In such an instance the allegation is one of ultimate fact, and is partially descriptive of what his contract was. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Light-helser, 71 N. E. 218, 220, 163 Ind. 247; Chicago & El. I. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 85 N. E. 1044, 1046, 42 Ind. App. 512.

"The expression 'duty' properly imports a determinate person to whom the obligation is owing, as well as the one who owes the obligation, and there must be two determinate parties before the relationship of obligor and obligee of a duty can exist." McGehee v. Norfolk & S. Ry. Co., 60 S. E. 912, 914, 147 N. C. 142, 24 L. E. A. (N. S.) 119.

As legal obligation

In an indictment against a railroad station agent who was authorized to hire and pay extra help required at his station, taking receipts therefor which were turned in as a part of his accounts as cash, for forgery of such a receipt, an allegation that it was a part of his duty to have the party to whom the money was paid sign a receipt, and when signed it was his duty to turn it in as cash, imported a legal obligation in the performance of his services for the company. Felton v. State, 132 S. W. 480, 481, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 412, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 86.

As obligation

"Duty" is that which one is bound or under obligation to do. Bankers' Deposit Guaranty & Surety Co. v. Barnes, 105 Pac. 697, 698, 81 Kan. 422 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2284); Taylor v. White (Tex.) 113 S. W. 554, 556.

"The 'duty' of a husband to love and support his wife is a practical duty and is not performed by a manifestation of sentiment without corresponding conduct." Foote v. Foot, 65 Atl. 206, 207, 71 N. J. Eq. 273 (quoting and adopting definition in Coe v. Coe, 59 Atl. 1059, 68 N. J. Eq. 157).

"In reference to the payment of taxes," the terms "duty" and "obligation" are used in two senses; the first being with reference to the sovereign imposing the tax, the second being in reference to individuals. The matter of duty to the sovereign is fixed by the legislative enactments imposing the tax. The matter of obligation to individuals arises from the legal or equitable relation of the parties. In neither case is the measure of obligation fixed by the mere fact of an interest or an estate in the land. It is settled by the authorities that the party under obligation to pay taxes cannot acquire a title at a tax sale. Shrigley v. Black, 71 Pac. 301, 303, 66 Kan. 213 (dissenting opinion, quoting Spratt v. Price, 18 Fla. 289).

DUTY AND BUSINESS

The words "duty and business" refer to the work of the operator and engineer, under a complaint in an action for the death of a railroad engineer in a collision with a standing train at a station, which shows a fully equipped telegraph office and signal station at the station with an employé in charge, whose business it was to give signals, and which avers that decedent approached the station under orders to meet a train there, that he checked the speed of his engine and sent his brakeman to throw the switch preparatory to taking a siding, when he received from the operator at the station a signal calling him to come down the main track, that it was the duty and business of the operator to give proper signals, and of the engineer to obey signals, and that on decedent proceeding down the track his train collided with a train standing at the station, causing his death, and hence the complaint states a cause of action under Employer's Liability Act, § 1, cl. 4. Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Hamerick, 96 N. E. 649, 651, 50 Ind. App. 425.

DUTY AS FIREMAN

In mandamus to compel the employment of an injured fireman in some position in the city of New York in accordance with the provisions of Greater New York charter, an allegation in defendant's answer that the relator was disqualified for service other than "duty as fireman" was to be interpreted as meaning "active duty in the uniformed service," as distinguished from "light duties," defined in another section of such charter. People ex rel. Young v. Sturgis, 82 N. Y. Supp. 953, 955, 85 App. Div. 20.

DUTY OF WATER

"Duty of water" means the quantity essential to the irrigation of any given tract. Hough v. Porter, 98 Pac. 1063, 1102, 51 Or. 318; Id., 95 Pac. 732, 51 Or. 318.

DUTY TO CONSTRUCT

Laws 1870, p. 14, appropriated funds to a corporation for the improvement of the Willamette river, section 2 providing that it should be the duty of the corporation to construct a canal and locks, and, after completion, to pass without delay all steamboats at a charge not greater than 50 cents a ton. Held, that the term "duty to construct" was more comprehensive than a grant of authority, while including it, and that the requirement that the company should not "charge a greater rate" than 50 cents a ton was equivalent to authority to charge such rate. State v. Portland General Electric Co., 98 Pac. 160, 162, 52 Or. 502.

The phrase "dwelling house," in the statutes against larceny in a dwelling house, has the same significance as in burglary, and where there is no allegation in an indictment therefor of the ownership of the house, or any other or further identification thereof, it is insufficient. State v. Lawler, 119 S. W. 639, 641, 220 Mo. 26.

Additions

An owner of an adjoining lot sued a church corporation to enforce a building restriction in defendant's deed providing that no building or part of a building should be erected in the rear end of the lot conveyed to be used other than a dwelling house, and that no building should be erected within 10 feet of the line of the north side of a 34 feet wide street. The rear end of the lot was the north side of the 34 feet wide street. To the east of the church was a parish building. The church began to build an addition to such building, no portion of which was within the 10 feet back of the line of such street. The building contained living rooms, bedrooms, and studies for the clergy, and was to be used as their residence. Held, that the addition was not a "dwelling house" within the language of the restriction. Crofton v. St. Clement's Church, 57 Atl. 570, 572, 208 Pa. 209.

Attached building

A fire was set at night in a house in which fodder was stored. The house was joined to a dwelling house by an uninclosed gallery and roof. The fire was quickly communicated to the dwelling house, which was occupied. Held, that the house in which the fodder was located was a part of the dwelling house, within Code 1906, § 1036, punishing the burning in the nighttime of any house in which there shall be a human being, etc. Spears v. State, 46 South. 166, 167, 92 Miss. 613, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 285.

Barn

A barn inclosed by a fence disconnected from the dwelling, and no portion of which is applied to purposes of a dwelling house, is not a "dwelling house," within the terms of the statute against burglary. Hutchins v. State, 59 S. E. 848, 849, 3 Ga. App. 300.

Boarding house

"The term 'dwelling house' does not always have the same sense in all cases. It may mean one thing under an indictment for burglary or arson, another under a home-stead law, another under a pauper law, and another in a contract or devise. A boarding house certainly is a dwelling house." Robbins v. Bangor R. & Electric Co., 62 Atl. 136, 140, 100 Me. 496, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 963.

Where lots in a town plat were sold under a form of deed common to all sales from the plat, and containing a restriction that no building except residences, to be used exclusively as dwelling houses for private families and necessary outbuildings, should ever be erected thereon, such restriction prohibited the use of one of the buildings as a boarding house. Sayles v. Hall, 96 N. E. 712, 713, 210 Mass. 281, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 625, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 475.

The word "public," in the phrase "public boarding house," does not expand the term "boarding house" so as to make it nominative of a class of buildings not used as dwellings. In a boarding house the guest is under an express contract at a fixed rate for a certain period of time. Where a municipal water contract provided specified rates for service to dwellings, and defendant water company refused to furnish certain boarding houses at such rates, a plea alleging that such houses were "public boarding houses" did not show that they were the less boarding houses nor excluded them from the class of buildings known as dwellings, within the contract. Mayor, etc., of Birmingham v. Birmingham Waterworks Co., 44 South. 581, 582, 152 Ala. 306, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 613.

Buildings in curtilage

The words "dwelling house," as used in Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 7104, defining burglary as the unlawful breaking and entering any dwelling house, use the words in their ordinary sense, and do not include disconnected buildings which are not occupied by a member of the family. "Under the common law the term 'dwelling house' included the building or cluster of buildings in which a man, with his family, resided." State v. Randall, 78 Pac. 998, 36 Wash. 438 (quoting Bish. St. Cr. [3d Ed.] § 278).

"A 'dwelling house' is a permanent building or cluster of buildings, in which a man with his family resides." It cannot be fairly understood as a part of a contract of insurance that "a two-story frame building and its additions," used as a dwelling house, includes a servant's house 150 feet distant. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Tye, 58 S. E. 110, 111, 1 Ga. App. 380.

Character of building as affecting

An owner of land conveyed a part by deed, retaining the rest; the deed providing that no dwelling house should be erected upon the premises. The grantee built a structure thereon, on the first floor of which was a garage and a boiler house, and on the second floor bedrooms and a bathroom, occupied by the servants of a lessee. Held, in an action to enjoin the use of the building as a dwelling house or habitation, and to compel it to be torn down and removed, that the four walls and the roof of the structure constituted a "house," and that the interior arrangement determined that a portion of it was a "dwelling house," and that complainant was entitled to enjoin the use of any part of the house as a dwelling house, although not to compel its removal. Goater v. Ely, 82 Atl. 611, 612, 80 N. J. Eq. 40.

An awning in front of a building extending thirteen feet from the house line to the curb, supported by five posts and covered with a roof of transparent glass, is not covered by the words "dwelling house or other building" in a deed providing that the front line of any messuages, dwelling houses, or other buildings shall recede eight feet from the street line. Olcott v. Sheppard, Knapp & Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 201, 202, 96 App. Div. 281.

Owners of land platted it, and then conveyed it to a third person as trustee, who afterwards deeded back to each original owner a number of lots representing his interest in the unplatted tract. The plat, the deed from the owners to the trustee, and the deeds from the trustee contained no restrictions. The original owners subsequently executed deeds of many lots, 16 of which contained no restrictions, while others contained restrictions to the effect that no structure but dwellings costing at least $2,500. should be erected thereon. There was an understanding that the land should be used for residences. Double houses were built thereon without objection. Held that, if it be conceded that there was a valid restriction limiting each lot owner to a "dwelling" to be erected on his premises, the parties had construed it to mean a double house, or a house of two stories, to be occupied for dwelling purposes by two families, as a compliance with the restriction. James v. Irvine, 104 N. W. 631, 632, 633, 141 Mich. 376.

A railroad car may be treated as a dwelling house, and may be the subject of burglary, when it is used exclusively for habitation. Gibbs v. State, 68 S. E. 742, 8 Ga. App. 107.

Character of use of building as affecting

Where a policy insured a building "while occupied as a dwelling house," the insurance ceased when the premises were used as a house of ill fame. Bastian v. British American Assur. Co., 77 Pac. 63, 65, 143 Cal. 287, 66 L. R. A. 255.

"A 'dwelling' is a 'place or house in which a person lives.'" A restrictive building covenant, stipulating that the buildings erected on the premises shall be first-class "private houses," prohibits the use of a private dwelling on the premises for a private sanitarium, for a "private house" is a "private dwelling" intended for private living, and a private dwelling is a "dwelling house" in which a person or family lives in an individual or private state. Barnett v. Vaughan Institute, 119 N. Y. Supp. 45, 46, 134 App. Div. 921 (quoting and adopting definition in Webst. Dict.).

Different use of part of building as affecting

A fire policy, describing the property insured as a "dwelling house," did not cover a building in which the basement was used as a shoe store, the first floor as a dry goods store, and the upstairs for dwelling purposes. Bowditch v. Norwich Union Fire Ins. Soc., 79 N. E. 788, 789, 193 Mass. 565 (citing Dougherty v. Greenwich Ins. Co. of New York, 42 Atl. 485, 46 Atl. 1099, 64 N. J. Law, 716).

As domicile or residence

One's "dwelling house" is the building in which he lives. East Montpelier v. City of Barre, 66 Atl. 100, 79 Vt. 542, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 874.

In common parlance a house intended to be occupied as a residence is a "dwelling house," and the term means more than a house that is actually occupied as such. People v. Mix, 112 N. W. 907, 909, 149 Mich. 260, 12 Ann. Cas. 393.

A clause in a deed restricting the location of "dwellings" applies to business buildings and other structures, where the neighborhood is a residential section and it appears that the original owners never contemplated the erection of business buildings on the street. Hyman v. Tash (N. J.) 71 Atl. 742, 744.

The phrase "the dwelling," in Tax Law (Laws 1896, c. 908) § 10, which provides that, if land is divided by a line between two tax districts, it shall be assessed in the district where "the dwelling" house or other municipal buildings are located, means, it seems, the dwelling occupied by the owner of the farm, or at least one erected and intended for the owner's occupancy, as distinguished from houses erected and intended for tenants and employés. Chamberlain v. Sherman, 103 N. Y. Supp. 239, 242, 53 Misc. Rep. 474.

"The words 'dwelling house' involve the idea of a house, a residence, where a person lives in settled abode. A dwelling house is a 'house intended to be occupied as a residence in distinction from a store, office, or other building.'" A restrictive building covenant, stipulating that the buildings erected on the premises shall be first-class "private houses," prohibits the use of a private dwelling on the premises for a private sanitarium, for a "private house" is a "private dwelling" intended for private living, and a private dwelling is a "dwelling house" in which a person or family lives in an individual or private state. Barnett v. Vaughan Institute, 119 N. Y. Supp. 45, 46, 134 App. Div. 921 (quoting and adopting definition in Webst. Dict.).

The word "dwelling" is one of multiple meanings, but the particular meaning intended to be expressed by it when used in a given instance may be rendered obvious by the context or attendant circumstances, and usually resort must be had to those aids to interpretation to ascertain what is meant. In its broadest sense the word denotes a building used as a settled human abode, and in common parlance, when not qualified, conveys the notion of a home, though a suite of rooms occupied by one man may be his dwelling house. Sanders v. Dixon, 89 S. W. 577, 582, 114 Mo. App. 229.

"Dwelling house," as used in Civ. Code, § 1237, providing that the homestead consists of the dwelling house in which the claimant resides and the land on which it is situated, means the building which is occupied as a dwelling house by the family, and not such portion of the building as may be actually used by the family for residence purposes. In re Levy's Estate, 75 Pac. 301, 302, 141 Cal. 646, 99 Am. St. Rep. 92.

"A person has his 'dwelling' where he resides permanently or from which he has no present intention to remove." Under act July 9, 1901, authorizing a summons to be served by handing a copy to a member of defendant's family at his "dwelling" house, the service was good, though the "dwelling" house was that of the father of defendant.

Yerkes v. Stetson, 61 Atl. 113, 114, 211 Pa. 556 (quoting And. Law Dict.).

Garage and storeroom

A "dwelling house" does not include a garage and storeroom, and hence the restriction in a deed against the erection of any "flat building" or tenement house and against any residence or other dwelling house on the premises within a certain distance to the street line is not violated by the erection of a garage and storeroom beyond such line. Jones v. Williams, 106 Pac. 166, 168, 56 Wash. 588.

Hotel

A hotel is a "dwelling house." Robbins v. Bangor R. & Electric Co., 62 Atl. 136, 140, 100 Me. 496, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 963.

A hotel is a "dwelling house" when continually used as a place of habitation, within the statute, under which a dwelling house includes all buildings attached to and used in connection with the house usually lived in, and embraces a pool room adjoining the main hotel building and connected by a large archway, when both businesses are operated together. Simpson v. State, 113 Pac. 549, 551, 5 Okl. Cr. R. 57.

A room in an inn occupied by a guest is not, in a legal sense, his "dwelling house," the innkeeper having a right of access thereto at all reasonable times and for all reasonable purposes, e. g., to extinguish fire, to remedy leakage of water or gas, or any other emergency calling for immediate action, and to comply with his contract to furnish the guest with such convenience and comfort as the inn affords. De Wolf v. Ford, 86 N. E. 527, 530, 193 N. Y. 397, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860, 127 Am. St. Rep. 909.

A house used for years as a hotel, and which was sold at auction as such, is not a "dwelling house," within the terms of a fire policy, even though the owner, when he purchased it, put a caretaker in charge who slept in one of the rooms. Thomas v. Commercial Union Assur. Co., 37 N. E. 672, 673, 162 Mass. 29, 44 Am. St. Rep. 323.

Houseboat

A houseboat drawn upon the beach may properly be called a water craft and need not be called a "dwelling house" or other building in describing it in an indictment. Nagel v. People, 82 N. E. 315, 318, 229 Ill. 598.

Piazza, veranda, or porch

A veranda is a part of a dwelling house, within the meaning of a covenant not to erect any dwelling house nearer than 25 feet to the front street line, and the house, including the veranda, should be set back 25 feet therefrom. McDonald v. Spang, 105 N. Y. Supp. 617, 620, 55 Misc. Rep. 332.

The front porch of a dwelling house, covered by a roof, is a part of the dwelling house, and the larceny of property from the front porch is, in contemplation of law, a larceny from the dwelling house. Downer v. State, 74 S. E. 301, 302, 10 Ga. App. 827.

Schoolhouse

A school building, one part of which is occupied as a habitation, with interior communication between the parts, is a "dwelling house," within the meaning of the term as used in the law of arson. United States v. Cardish, 145 Fed. 242, 247.

Single room

The different rooms of a house, with doors and entry common to all, constitute each room the "dwelling house" of the particular occupants. Therefore an illegal entry into part of the house may be made by one who has a right to be in another part. State v. Descant, 42 South. 486, 488, 117 La. 1016 (citing Clark Cr. Law, c. 10, pp. 236, 237).

It not being necessary for an indictment for burglary to describe the premises in the exact language of the statute, an indictment charging the burglarious entry of the "room of S. in the M. Hotel" sufficiently charges entry of her "dwelling house," as it was if she dwelt therein, as is inferable from the language. People v. Carr, 99 N. E. 357, 358, 255 Ill. 203, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1209, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 864.

"The authorities are somewhat at variance as to what is embraced in the word 'dwelling.' Some hold that it means the dwelling house alone in some instances, some that it means the house in which one resides, the house of his present abode, the apartment, building, or cluster of buildings in which a man resides with his family, and a few hold that it includes the curtilage.

* * * Our own statutes seem to separate the outhouses from the main building in cases of arson, and yet the common law prevails in burglary. But we cannot hold that 'dwelling' in its general acceptation includes the garden, lawn, or a park within the curtilage.

* * * As the word can be either contracted or elastic, as the occasion may arise, in ascertaining the meaning thereof we should consider the facts and circumstances." Where a contract between a city and a water company provided certain rates for domestic consumption, and a single house was divided into resident apartments by different families or persons, the company was entitled to treat each part, room, or apartment as a distinct "dwelling." City of Birmingham v. Bir- irmingham Waterworks Co. (Ala.) 42 South. 10, 13.

Temporary absence as affecting

"A house occupied as a place of residence by a man and his family is an 'occupied dwelling house,' * * * though every member of the family may be temporarily absent." Andrus v. Davis, 89 S. W. 772, 774, 99 Tex. 303 (quoting and adopting the definition in Meeks v. State of Georgia, 27 S. E. 679, 102 Ga. 572).

Though a house broken into and entered was at the time unoccupied, it is a "dwelling house" within Ky. St. § 1162, which makes felonious breaking into a dwelling house a crime, and prescribes the punishment therefor. Thomas v. Commonwealth, 150 S. W. 376, 377, 150 Ky. 374.

Tenement building

The requirement, contained in Civ. Code, art. 2637, concerning the expropriation of the "dwelling house, yard, garden and other appurtenances," is not intended to be applied to a tenement bought, and held merely as an investment, and which the owner himself has never occupied as a dwelling. Louisiana & A. Ry. Co. v. Moseley, 41 South. 585, 586, 117 La. 313.

Unfinished building

Uncompleted buildings not furnished with either doors or windows, and not occupied nor reasonably capable of occupancy for dwelling purposes, are not "dwelling houses" within Gen. St. p. 2838, § 167, providing that nothing in the act (the road act) shall be construed to extend to pulling down or removing any dwelling house which may encroach on any highway. Whittingham v. Hopkins, 57 Atl. 402, 404, 70 N. J. Law, 322.

A structure, intended for a dwelling house when completed, consisting of one main room, with a piazza and a shed room, covered as to the piazza and about half way up the rafters on the front part of the main room, and as to the balance of the main room and shed room uncovered, and in which structure there were window and door openings, but no windows or doors therein, and which had an opening for a chimney, which had not been commenced, and which had never been occupied, is not a dwelling house, within Code 1907, § 6296. Davis v. State, 44 South. 1018, 153 Ala. 48, 127 Am. St. Rep. 17, 15 Ann. Cas. 547.

As usual place of abode

As used in R. & C. Comp. §§ 55, 896, 400, subd. 2, providing that "the summons shall be served by delivery of a copy thereof * * * to the defendant personally or, if he be not found, to some person of the family above the age of fourteen years at the dwelling house or usual place of abode of defendant," the terms "dwelling house" and "usual place of abode" are synonymous and evidently mean a domicile. McFarlane v. Cornelius, 73 Pac. 325, 328, 43 Or. 513.

Vacancy of building as affecting

A "dwelling house" is a building which, by the mode of its construction or reconstruction, is suitable for a habitation, and a building does not cease to be a dwelling house because the owner, a school-teacher by profession, closed the house during the school vacation and lived elsewhere. State v. Mason, 77 N. E. 283-285, 74 Ohio St. 65.

A building was erected for a dwelling house, and was occupied by a tenant for some time, who removed therefrom. At the time of the removal the tenant's son left in the house his wearing apparel and other articles, and continued to claim the house as his place of residence. The tenant retained the keys. Held, that the building, the day after the tenant's removal, was a dwelling house, within Ky. St. 1903, § 1162, providing that, if any person shall "feloniously break into any dwelling house" and take anything of value, he shall be punished. Commonwealth v. Woolfolk, 89 S. W. 110, 111, 121 Ky. 164 (quoting and adopting the definition in Cyc. 1226).

DWELLING IN THE UNITED STATES

An alien minor child who has been born and remained abroad does not, when coming to join an individual parent, come within the provisions of Rev. St. § 2172, providing that minor children of naturalized citizens shall, if "dwelling in the United States," be considered as citizens thereof. Zartarian v. Billings, 27 Sup. Ct. 182, 183, 204 U. S. 170, 51 L. Ed. 428.

DWELLER'S CASTLE

"It is often said that every man's house is his castle. In early days men were compelled to protect themselves in their habitations by preparing them against attacks, and thus in time the dwelling came to be known as the 'dweller's castle'; the name probably having its origin in feudal times. If attacked in his home, he did not have to retreat but could use necessary force to eject the intruder. It was not lawful to kill for a bare trespass on property. It must have been at least forcible." Freeney v. State, 59 S. E. 788, 791, 129 Ga. 759.

DYE

An article which contains all the essential elements and determining characteristics of a color or dye, needing only to have its coloring properties rendered accessible by dropping it into water containing an alkali, is a color or dye within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 15. Bromofluorescic acid is dutiable as a coal tar color or dye under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 15, 30 Stat. 152. United States v. Kuttroff, Pickhardt & Co., 147 Fed. 758, 759.

DYERS' STICKS

"Dyers' sticks" are used by dyers for hanging on dyeing material. Bamboo dyers' sticks, rounded at the ends and smoothed off at the joints, are covered by the enumeration of bamboo in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 700. United States v. Knipscher & Maas Silk Dyeing Co., 152 Fed. 590, 591.

DYING DECLARATIONS

Consciousness of impending death

In order to render a declaration admissible as a dying declaration, it must be made under a sense of impending dissolution, and after a hope of recovery has been entirely abandoned. State v. Kelleher, 100 S. W. 470, 477, 201 Mo. 614; State v. Baldwin, 71 S. E. 212, 218, 155 N. C. 494, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 479; Brown v. State, 69 S. E. 45, 47, 8 Ga. App. 382.

The essential element of a "dying declaration" is that a person making it does so under a belief of impending death, and when entertaining no hope of recovery. Consequently where a person in answer to categorical questions states that she believes she is about to die, and that she hopes God would let her recover, there is no such a belief of impending death and abandonment of hope of recovery necessary to constitute her statements "dying declarations." People v. Brecht, 105 N. Y. Supp. 436, 438, 120 App. Div. 769.

"Dying declarations" derive their sanction as testimony from the fact that they are made under the apprehension of approaching dissolution in the view and expectation of speedy death; the situation of the party under such solemn circumstances creating a sanction equally impressive with that of an oath administered in a court of justice. It is essential to the admissibility of these declarations, and is a preliminary fact to be proved by the party offering them, that they were made under a sense of impending death." State v. Monich, 64 Atl. 1016, 1017, 74 N. J. Law, 522 (quoting and adopting definition in Green in Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. Law, 463, at page 497).

"It is the impression of almost immediate dissolution, and not the rapid succession of death, in point of fact, that renders the statement of decedent admissible as a 'dying declaration.' The mere belief of the decedent that he will not get well, but that he will ultimately die from his injuries, is not sufficient to admit his declaration. The fact of impending death and consciousness of it on the part of a wounded person may be proven by circumstances. In a prosecution for murder, in which it is sought to introduce a dying declaration, the court should, in the absence of the jury, hear evidence as to the circumstances under which the declaration was made to determine what statements, if any, were made in extremis, and should permit these only to be introduced, allowing defendant to introduce any statements made afterwards for the purpose of lessening or destroying the force of the dying declaration." Coyle v. Commonwealth, 93 S. W. 584, 587, 122 Ky. 781 (quoting and adopting 1 Greenl. Ev. § 158).

Dying declarations must be made when the party making them realizes his impending death and motives for falsehood may be presumed to have been lost in the despair of life. Where one who received two ugly and severe wounds, from which he died within a week, twice expressed the belief that he would never recover, declarations made by him concerning the homicide were admissible. Patterson v. State, 54 South. 696, 699, 171 Ala. 2.

The admissibility of dying statements is not affected by the means by which decedent became conscious that he is dying, provided that he is really conscious of the fact and impressed with the solemnity of his situation. Smith v. State, 71 S. E. 606, 607, 9 Ga. App. 403.

A statement, made by one making a dying declaration, that he entertained no hope of recovery; that he made the declaration in that frame of mind—was competent and sufficient to show that he was without hope of recovery, though he also stated that he did not know what the future had in store for him. The fact that one who had been fatally wounded had not been told by his physician that his wound was fatal did not render a dying declaration inadmissible, when it was made under the belief that he could not recover. Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, providing that in criminal actions the declaration of a dying person, made under a sense of impending death, may be admitted in evidence, is declaratory of the existing law that the belief that a fatal wound had been received, and that death was about to ensue, was sufficient to render a dying declaration admissible, and a person who had been fatally wounded, and who was in sore distress therefrom, and who believed that he would not recover, and who was soon about to die, was a "dying person," and a statement made in that belief relating to the cause of his injury is admissible, where it appears that he subsequently died from the direct effects of the wound, though he may have revived after making the statement, or may have lived a considerable time thereafter, and may have again begun to hope for recovery. People v. Cord, 106 Pac. 511, 513, 157 Cal. 562.

Where deceased, who died nine or ten days after he was wounded, on the day before his death said to his brother in reply to a question as to how he was: "Same as a dead man. I will never get out of here"—his declarations as to what he was doing when wounded, as to how he was wounded, and that he had been shot in the knee, were properly admitted as dying declarations. Kennedy v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 100 S. W. 242, 243.

Where deceased stated just before a declaration as to the shooting that it was "all off with him," and that he was a "dead one," and asked for a priest, the declaration was admissible as a dying declaration. State v. Kelleher, 100 S. W. 470, 477, 201 Mo. 614.

On a trial for homicide, decedent died within a fraction of a day after having made declarations with respect to the manner in which her injuries were received. She had disposed of her only child in expectation of her approaching death, and had received the last rites of her church in the belief that death was imminent. Her attending physician held out some hope to her that she might ultimately recover. Held, that the court correctly received the declarations as her dying declarations. People v. Stacy, 104 N. Y. Supp. 615, 618, 119 App. Div. 743.

Decedent, after being shot, lived for several days, during which time he remained hopeful of his recovery, but on the day of his death, and about 10 or 15 minutes before he died, he stated to his physician that he was going to die, and asked him to send for his family. Held, to constitute a sufficient predicate for the admission of his statement as to the circumstances of the shooting as a dying declaration. Rice v. State, 103 S. W. 1156, 1165, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 255.

Contradictory statements as to expectation of impending death may prevent the admission of a statement as a dying declaration. It will not be presumed that a man who has been injured, though seriously, must necessarily feel that he is about to die so as to render his declaration admissible as a dying declaration. A statement by decedent that he was of the opinion that he was not going to get well is expressive of uncertainty and doubt, and produces the conviction that decedent had not lost all hope of recovery, so as to render his declaration of the circumstances of the homicide admissible as a dying declaration. Bilton v. Territory, 99 Pac. 163, 168, 1 Okl. Cr. R. 566.

Where decedent, having been cut by defendant, lingered nearly two weeks, suffering from peritonitis, when he had a chill, and the next day was worse and he then made an alleged dying declaration that defendant had cut him to death, three days after which he died, the surrounding circumstances constituted a sufficient predicate for the admission of such declaration. McEwen v. State, 44 South. 619, 621, 152 Ala. 38.

The rule requiring proof that declarations offered as "dying declarations" were made by declarant when in extremis does not require that it be shown that they were made while he was literally breathing his last, but is satisfied when it is shown that the declarant died from the wound from which he was suffering at the time they were made, and that such wound was the direct and proximate result of the act which the declarations tend to describe. State v. Byrd, 111 Pac. 407, 415, 41 Mont. 585.

Where deceased was shot in the stomach at close range, and, when lying down, with all his entrails hanging outside of his body, he said, "I have been shot to death by Isidore for nothing," and died a few hours after, the statement was admissible as a dying declaration; it being one made under sense of impending death. State v. Augustus, 56 South. 551, 552, 129 La. 617.

In the trial of a murder case, if at the time of making declarations the condition of the wounded party making them, the nature of his wounds, the length of time after making the declarations before he expired, and all circumstances, make a prima facie case that he was in the article of death and conscious of his condition when he made the declarations, such declarations are admissible in evidence under proper instructions, though the person may not have expressed his consciousness of impending dissolution. Jefferson v. State, 73 S. E. 499, 501, 137 Ga. 382.

Evidence that deceased, on being asked if she knew she was fatally wounded, said she did, and that she knew she was going to die, is a sufficient predicate for admission as dying declarations of her statements then made. Henninburg v. State, 43 South. 959, 151 Ala. 26.

Where, on a prosecution for murder, it appeared that, on the morning before deceased died, he called his brother to his bedside and told him he could not get well and that he then called a certain woman and asked her to make him a cigarette, stating it would be the last one she would ever make him, such fact constituted a sufficient predicate for a "dying declaration." Brown v. State, 43 South. 194, 196, 150 Ala. 25 (citing Gregory v. State, 37 South. 259, 140 Ala. 16; McQueen v. State, 10 South. 423, 94 Ala. 50).

Where the court charged that, before dying declarations might be considered as evidence, the jury should be satisfied that the declaration of decedent was actually made by him while in the article of death and conscious of his condition, it was not error to charge, in immediate connection therewith, that it was not necessary that the decedent should have expressed himself as believing that he was in a dying condition, but that consciousness of his condition might be inferred from the nature of the wound or from other circumstances. Barnett v. State, 70 S. E. 868, 869, 136 Ga. 85.

Subject of statement

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, a dying declaration contains unimportant expressions of opinion, which, taken in connection with the entire declaration are not prejudicial, the entire declaration is admissible. Cleveland v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 101 S. W. 931, 932.

"Dying declarations" are such as are made by a party, relating to the facts of the injury of which he afterwards dies, under the fixed belief and moral conviction that his death is impending and certain to follow almost immediately, without opportunity for repentance, and in the absence of all hope of avoidance, when he has despaired of life, and looks to death as inevitable and at hand. Brom v. People, 74 N. E. 790, 792, 216 Ill. 148 (quoting and adopting definition in Starkey v. People, 17 Ill. 17, 21).

"Dying declarations" are admitted as an evident exception to the rule that hearsay evidence is inadmissible and must be confined to the circumstances immediately connected with the fatal injury." The statements admitted must be limited to the res gestae, and the deceased must be permitted to speak only of the transactions causing the death with such accompanying statements and conduct as may throw light upon it. State v. Doris, 94 Pac. 44, 49, 51 Or. 136, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 660.

On a prosecution for murder, statements of deceased that a certain person had requested him to arrest defendant, who was drunk and crazy and had run his family out of the house, and that deceased had shot defendant in self-defense, such statements constituting a part of a dying declaration, were incompetent. State v. Horn, 103 S. W. 69, 74, 204 Mo. 528.

It is not error to admit evidence of dying declarations of decedent that "he shot me for nothing," over objection that this was a mere expression of opinion by decedent, and not a declaration of fact. Washington v. State, 73 S. E. 512, 515, 137 Ga. 218.

A dying declaration in these words, "Oh, Lordy! Willie shot me for nothing, without any cause," was not objectionable as a statement of a conclusion rather than a fact. McMillan v. State, 57 S. E. 309, 128 Ga. 25.

A dying declaration that defendant deliberately shot decedent, while general in its nature, was not objectionable as being a mere conclusion of declarant. State v. Fielding, 112 N. W. 539, 540, 135 Iowa, 255.

Time of death

On a prosecution for murder, the declarations of decedent made in view of death and within two hours of her death as to the details of the crime were admissible. Bricker v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 102 S. W. 1175.

Written or oral

A competent "dying declaration" can be made by acts instead of words, as by nodding the head and pointing, where declarant is unable to speak. People v. Madas, 94 N. E. 857, 859, 201 N. Y. 349, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 229.

A "dying declaration" need not be reduced to writing in order to render it competent, but may be evidenced partly by writing and partly by parol. Kirby v. State, 44 South. 38, 41, 151 Ala. 66.

The fundamental rule governing the admissibility of "dying declarations" is that it must appear by proof by the party offering such declarations that they were made under a sense of impending death, and it is sufficient if it satisfactorily appears, in any mode, that they were made under that sanction. No particular form in the statement of dying declarations is required, and, where a dying declaration taken down in writing shows that the declarant "states and declares that he is now sick and nigh unto death and is fully aware that his death is now certainly approaching him in his present condition from a mortal wound inflicted upon his person," the disclosure of the record furnishes a reasonably proper foundation for the introduction of the declaration, especially where death soon followed the making of the declaration. State v. Brown, 87 S. W. 519, 522, 188 Mo. 451.

Where a witness testified that decedent repeatedly told her that he was going to die, it was proper to permit the state to prove the declarations decedent made to the witness as to the circumstances surrounding the infliction of the fatal wounds as a dying declaration, though decedent had previously made a dying declaration to another person which had been reduced to writing. Pate v. State, 43 South. 343, 344, 150 Ala. 10.

DYKE

Where occurrences are not intrusions of igneous rocks or matter between sedimentary beds, characteristic of dykes, but, according to the testimony, the fractures are filled with minute angular fragments of sedimentary bed rock, limestone, and clay, brecciated material, in places, recemented with calcite, it is inappropriate to term the occurrences "dykes," but the more appropriate term would be "faulting fracture." Grand Central Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., 83 Pac. 648, 681, 29 Utah, 490.

DYNAMITE

An information for the malicious placing of an explosive near a dwelling house, describing the explosive as "nitroglycerin," commonly known as "dynamite" or "giant powder," was not objectionable for indefiniteness as to the explosion charged, the substances all being nitroglycerin explosives. People v. Swails, 107 Pac. 184, 186, 12 Cal. App. 192.

DYNAMO

A "dynamo" or "generator" is a mechanism which generates electromotive force by moving a closed circuit in a magnetic field. In re Charles Town Light & Power Co., 188 Fed. 160, 165.

A "dynamo" is a machine for generating or converting mechanical energy into electricity. Angola Ry. & Power Co. v. Butz (Ind.) 98 N. E. 818, 819.

E. & O. E.

The letters "E. & O. E.," as used in a receipt, mean "errors and omissions excepted." Where one has an unliquidated demand and the debtor sends a check to his attorney with a receipt to be signed by the creditor, and the latter receives the check, though protesting that a much larger sum is due him, and signs a receipt under seal containing the stipulation that in consideration of the amount of the check he releases the creditor from all claims and demands whatsoever, the receiving and retaining of the sum offered and the signing of the receipt constitute a good accord and satisfaction binding on the creditor, though he entered on the receipt the letters "E. & O. E." T. B. Redmond & Co. v. Atlanta & Birmingham Air Line Ry., 58 S. E. 874, 877, 129 Ga. 133.

EACHAs all or every

The word "every" is not always synonymous with the word "each." Griffin v. Interurban St. R. Co., 72 N. E. 1142, 180 N. Y. 538.

In a tax deed reciting the sale of several tracts, the use in the granting clause of the words "and each and every separate tract and parcel thereof," in addition to the statutory form designating the property conveyed as "the real property last hereinbefore described," indicates a purpose to convey all the land sold. Gibson v. Kueffer, 77 Pac. 282, 283, 69 Kan. 534.

Where the record shows that a party excepted to the giving of "each" of several instructions, and likewise excepted to the refusal to give, "each" of several requested instructions, his exceptions were properly reserved; the word "each," though not appropriate to designate several collectively without considering them severally, being sufficient to raise objections to instructions severally when designated by it as objected to. Delaney v. Johnson, 128 S. W. 859, 860, 95 Ark. 131.

As apiece

The word "each," in a bequest to testatrix's two children of 20 shares of stock and 12 shares of other stock or the value of $5,000 "each," should a change be made in the investments, applies not only to the cash bequest but to the stock bequest, and under the bequest the legatees are each entitled to the designated number of shares of stock. Palmer v. Palmers' Estate, 75 Atl. 130, 132, 106 Me. 25, 19 Ann. Cas. 1184.

Both distinguished

A majority of "both" boards, as used in a statute providing that a majority of members elect of both the board of aldermen and the general council shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business in joint session, means a majority of the members taken as a whole, and not a majority of each board considered separately. The word "both" is not synonymous with the word "each." Davis v. Claus, 100 S. W. 263, 264, 125 Ky. 4.

As each one individually

"Each," as used in an instruction that a reasonable doubt is not a mere possible doubt, but a fair doubt, growing out of the evidence or lack of evidence, and exists when "each" juror is unable to say that he has an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge, etc., is a distributive adjective, and means "when the same thing is to be predicated of all the individuals considered distributively, or one by one." It denotes or refers to either one of the persons mentioned, or every one of any number separately considered. State v. Thompson, 87 Pac. 709, 712, 31 Utah, 228 (citing Standard Dict.; 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2299).

Joint or several obligation created

The word "each," in a contract by which four guarantors guaranteed to plaintiff, "each" to the amount of $5,000, the payment of a note, imports severality in the ordinary acceptance of the term, and the liability of the guarantors under contract is several, and an action against one guarantor alone for $5,000 is maintainable as against the objection of defect of parties in not joining the remaining guarantors. Delaware County Nat. Bank v. King, 95 N. Y. Supp. 954, 955, 47 Misc. Rep. 447.

EACH AND EVERY PART

Though an insurance policy, providing that the entire policy shall be void for breach of warranty or condition, may be a divisible contract, the addition of the words "each and every part" renders it susceptible to but one construction, and that is that it is indivisible. Sullivan v. Mercantile Town Mut. Ins. Co., 94 Pac. 676, 680, 20 Okl. 460, 129 Am. St. Rep. 761.

EACH CAR

Where a municipal ordinance provides for a specified tax per year on street cars "for each car running within the said borough," the borough may collect the tax on each car running having a separate number, and such car need not be scheduled and run every day, nor for the whole of any particular day. Borough of Braddock v. Monongahela St. Ry. Co., 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 262, 264.

EACH DAY ACTUALLY ENGAGED

See Actually Engaged.

EACH LINE OF TAX ROLL

The phrase "each line of the tax roll actually extended," as used in Laws 1892, p. 1750, c. 686, § 23, authorizing each supervisor to charge one cent for each line of the tax roll actually extended by him, refers to the extension of the tax into each of the columns of the roll set apart for the various taxes levied, so that, if there are three special taxes levied by the same assessment roll as the general taxes, there are as many extensions of a line as additional columns provided for for each special and general tax. Pearsall v. Brower, 105 N. Y. Supp. 207, 208, 120 App. Div. 584.

EACH LOCATION

Where goods are insured in store No. 2, a rider on the policy allowing removal to a store in B., and stipulating that during removal the policy shall attach in "each location" in proportion to the value in each, and after removal in new location only, does not insure the goods while in transit. The rider by the words "each location" meant the store No. 2 and the designated storehouse, and under its operation the policy covered none of the goods except such as should be in one or the other of those storehouses. Goodhue v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 67 N. E. 645, 184 Mass. 41.

EACH OFFENSE

The phrase "each offense," in an act making it unlawful for any corporation operating an electric street railway to permit the operation of cars without providing screens for the protection of motormen, and making any corporation violating the act liable to the state for a certain penalty for each offense, is uncertain as to what constitutes a violation, whether each trip of each car or each day's operation, and the statute cannot be enforced. Beaumont Traction Co. v. State, 122 S. W. 615, 618, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 605.

EACH PARTY

In Code Civ. Proc. § 1176, allowing each party six peremptory challenges, the words "each party" do not mean each individual litigant, but mean each side to the controversy to be decided by the jury, so that, if there are only two sides in the case, viz., the prosecution and defense, there should be only six challenges allowed to defendants collectively; but, where there are many defendants conflicting claims or interests which may be determined one way or the other by the jury, duplicate peremptory challenges should be allowed. Lane v. Fenn, 120 N. Y. Supp. 237, 243, 65 Misc. Rep. 336.

EACH VIOLATION

For marking as "pure cider vinegar" barrels containing artificial coloring matter, in violation of Agricultural Law, cumulative penalties are recoverable under section 53, imposing a penalty for "each" violation, though the barrels are sold or kept for sale as a single lot. People v. Albion Cider & Vinegar Co., 118 N. Y. Supp. 15, 16, 133 App. Div. 865.

EARLIEST POSSIBLE

In a contract of sale, defendant's requirement that the shipment of goods should be the "earliest possible" must be construed as meaning that the goods should be sent as soon as plaintiff could possibly send them, and signified rather more than that the goods should be sent within a reasonable time. Robinson Clay Product Co. v. American Locomotive Co., 107 N. Y. Supp. 69, 71, 56 Misc. Rep. 589.

EARLY AS CONVENIENT

A release which expresses a promise to cancel and return the note itself as "early as convenient" is not rendered executory by the quoted words. Lowrey v. Danforth, 69 S. W. 39, 41, 95 Mo. App. 441.

EARLY SPRING

Where a preliminary statement alleged conception of an invention "in the early spring" of 1900, such phrase necessarily means not earlier at the utmost than March 1st, and probably not that early. Richards v. Melasner, 24 App. D. C. 305, 308.

EARNEARNED AND COLLECTED

The phrase "earned and collected," as used in a partnership agreement or dissolution that the second party shall transfer all gains of said business other than moneys "earned and collected," does not include outstanding uncollected accounts. Scudder v. Perce, 114 Pac. 571, 572, 159 Cal. 429.

EARNED LAND

Land conveyed to a railroad company after its fulfillment of the conditions of a grant, is spoken of as "earned land." United States v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 170 Fed. 854, 855.

EARNEST

The term "earnest money" is used to distinguish a payment made to bind the bargain on the sale of property. Hillyard v. Banchor, 118 Pac. 67, 70, 85 Kan. 516 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2302).

"Earnest," in the civil law, is the money which one of the contracting parties delivered to the other at the time of the contract, and is presumed to be a forfeit, in the absence of evidence that the parties intended to bind themselves by an irrevocable contract. Legier v. Braughn, 49 South. 22, 23, 123 La. 463.

The original idea of "earnest," in the Roman law, signified the conclusion of the contract, and it is that idea which obtains in the common-law jurisdictions, and under the statutes of fraud of England, and of some of the states of this Union. But now the giving and receiving of earnest money though evidence of a completed bargain, is considered of no importance, or of the smallest importance, in ascertaining whether property has passed by virtue of such bargain; that question being determined by the nature of the bargain, concluded by the giving of the earnest. Under Justinian, the effect of the giving and receiving of "arrha" was to enable the contractants to retain the privilege of withdrawing from the contract on certain conditions, and the same effect is attributed to the giving and receiving of the equivalents "arrhes" and "earnest," by the Codes of France and of Louisiana, respectively. An agreement for the sale of real estate, therefore, which contemplates the passing of property, not immediately and by virtue thereof, but by an act to be executed at a later date and which in other respects contains the elements essential to a sale, is a "promise of sale," and when made with the giving of earnest may be receded from by either of the parties; "he who has given the earnest, by forfeiting it, and he who has received it, by returning the double," as expressly provided by article 2463, relating to when a "promise to sell amounts to a sale." (Civ. Code. arts. 2462, 2463). Smith v. Hussey, 43 South. 902, 904, 119 La. 32 (citing Statutes of Fraud of Eng. [29] Car. 11, c. 3, § 17; Elgee Cotton Cases, 22 Wall. [90 U. S.] 195, 22 L. Ed. 863; Benj. Sales [2d Ed.] pp. 280, 262; Howe v. Hayward, 108 Mass. 55, 11 Am. Rep. 806; Gut. Brac. [Am. Transl.] 145; Just. Institutes, III. 24; Marcade, art. 1590, Code Napoléon [our Code, art. 2463]; 6 Marcade, p. 172; 24 Laurent, p. 37).

"Earnest" means a part payment of the purchase price of property. It is a term taken from the civil law and was more generally used in connection with sales of personalty "to bind the bargain." A contract to convey certain described land for a certain sum per acre, provided that the money was paid within three years of the date thereof and reciting the payment in cash of $25 "by way of earnest," was not a mere option but a contract of sale which could be specifically enforced. Davis v. Martin, 59 S. E. 700, 148 N. C. 281.

The statutory meaning of the word "earnest" is part payment, and it must be a real payment. Groomer v. McMillan, 128 S. W. 286, 287, 148 Mo. App. 612.

The term "earnest money," as used in a contract by the owner of land with a broker for its sale providing that commissions should be due and payable "on the settlement of all sales (for instance, after a purchaser signs a proposition and puts up earnest money with the contract to settle the balance, cash required on the first payment March 1st, 1910, then the commissions will be due and payable on that settlement, but where a purchaser settles at once and pays the cash required which otherwise would be due March 1st, 1910, and the contract is * * * signed up, in that event, commissions are due on that settlement)," was used synonymously with "first payment," and not technically. Kurtz v. Payne Inv. Co. (Iowa) 135 N. W. 1075, 1078.

A broker having authority to sell certain land, his agent made a contract of sale, and received a $50 check from the purchaser as a part of the price. The check was laid on the broker's desk with a memorandum showing what it was for, and the broker thereafter transferred the check to his principal in settlement of his monthly account, and the principal collected the check. Held, that the check became earnest money sufficient to bind the contract under the statute of frauds. Chouteau Land & Lumber Co. v. Chrisman, 102 S. W. 973, 975, 204 Mo. 371.

EARNING CAPACITY

See Capacity to Earn Money.

As property, see Property.

In determining one's "earning capacity," in assessing damages for his death the amount of his income is an important element of consideration, but the final inquiry is as to what he is capable of earning. Memphis Consolidated Gas & Electric Co. v. Letson, 135 Fed. 969, 976, 68 C. C. A. 453.

EARNINGS

See Based on Actual Earnings; Future

Earnings; Future Loss of Earnings;

Gross Earnings; Loss of Earnings;

Net Earnings; Traffic Earnings.

The word "earnings" means the fruit or reward of labor, the price of services performed. Mitchell v. Chicago, B. I. & P. Ry. Co., 114 N. W. 622, 625, 138 Iowa, 283; Jones v. Nicoll, 131 N. Y. Supp. 841, 343, 72 Misc. Rep. 483.

The word "earnings," as used in Gen. St. 1902, § 836, declaring that no assignment of future earnings shall be valid as against an attaching creditor of the assignee, unless made to secure a bona fide debt or unless recorded, is used in the same sense as the word "wages." Berlin Iron Bridge Co. v. Connecticut River Banking Co., 57 Atl. 275, 276, 76 Conn. 477.

The term "wages," as distinguished from salary, is commonly understood to apply to compensation for manual labor, skilled or unskilled, paid at stated times, and measured by the day, week, month, season, or piece, but not by the job. It is not so broad as "earnings," which comprehends returns from skill and labor in whatever way acquired. First Nat. Bank of Wilkes-Barre v. Barnum, 160 Fed. 245, 247.

The word "earnings" embraces a larger class of credits than the term "wages." It covers all compensation for services and may even include expenditures, as well as labor; and where an employé receives fixed wages and board, the board is a portion of his earnings. Burns v. Maurer, 131 N. Y. Supp. 344, 345, 72 Misc. Rep. 481.

The words "interest or earnings" in a will whereby testator gave property to trustees to control and pay the interest or earnings to his children for life, with gift over to their heirs, and whereby he provided that on the death of a child leaving no living heirs the spouse of the child might, if living, receive annually a specified sum of the interest money due the deceased, and in case of the death of a child leaving no living heirs his estate, principal and interest, should be divided equally with the grandchildren, are synonymous with each other, and with the word "income" in its ordinary sense. Ex parte Humbird, 80 Atl. 209, 211, 114 Md. 627.

Where a salesman is employed on a commission basis, with a provision that he shall be allowed a drawing account of $60 per week for living expenses, to be deducted from any earnings on the commission basis, such installments, in the absence of a breach of contract by the employé, are "earnings," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1391, making earnings, to the extent of 10 per cent. thereof, subject to execution. Hollender v. Friedenberg, 112 N. Y. Supp. 467, 468, 60 Misc. Rep. 568.

A salary is "earnings," for it is the direct fruit, or is supposed to be, of labor; and evidence that one earned a salary of a certain amount, though years before he was injured, if it be shown that he possessed the same qualities just before he was injured as he did when he made such earnings, is, we think, admissible as tending to show what his earning capacity was when he was injured; its weight and probative force to be determined by the jury. El Paso Electric Ry. Co. v. Murphy, 109 S. W. 489, 491, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 586.

Dividends or net earnings

The "earnings" of a corporation organized for the sale of property mean the net proceeds of the property converted into money. Baldwin v. Miller & Lux, 92 Pac. 1030, 1034, 152 Cal. 454.

"The word 'earnings' may mean either gross or net receipts of a business, or of the income of a laborer, according to the connection in which it may be used, and which of these two meanings is to be given the word" as used in a contract "is a question of construction. If the meaning to be given it is not ascertainable from the context, and if it is doubtful what was meant and intended by the parties, resort may be had to parol testimony to ascertain the surrounding circumstances and from such facts ascertain the intention of the parties which must prevail. * * * A contract providing that whereas guarantor had sold all the tools used in operating a log boom, together with the management thereof, and guaranteed that vendee should be secure in continuing the management thereof, until the sum specified should be earned to vendee, and therefore guarantor and his surety agreed to pay vendee such sum, less the amount earned, and signed by guarantor and his surety alone, meant that the net earnings of the management of the log boom and not the gross earnings were guaranteed to amount to the sum specified. Loomis v. MacFarlane, 91 Pac. 466, 467, 50 Or. 129.

A statute requiring railroads to make statements giving the amount of the capital stock, annual gross and net earnings, etc., when considered in the light of the history of legislation on the subject of railroad taxation and the construction placed on such legislation, requires the ascertainment of the value of railroad property for taxation, which valuation includes all the property of the railroad, except that specifically exempt, and the state board of tax commissioners in assessing the property of a railroad must take into consideration its money on hand or on deposit, and the money on hand cannot be retaxed as money; the word "earnings" signifying money, and "net earnings" the sum received in excess of operating expenses. Clark v. Vandalla R. Co., 86 N. E. 851, 854, 172 Ind. 409.

Earnings by mental effort

"Earnings" mean the gains of a person derived from services or labor without the aid of capital. Earnings imply more than labor. One has relation to mental effort, and the other to physical endeavor. Jones v. Nicoll, 131 N. Y. Supp. 341, 343, 72 Misc. Rep. 483.

Profits

As profit, see Profit.

Where a bank contracted to sell its entire capital stock and bills of discount at a stipulated time, but to retain its earnings up to that date, the word "earnings" meant the profits of the bank in the ordinary course of its business, and did not include a recovery under a judgment. Livingston County Bank v. First State Bank, 121 S. W. 451, 453, 136 Ky. 546.

It has been said that the "profits" derived from capital invested in business cannot be considered as earnings, but in many cases profits derived from the management of a business may properly be considered as measuring earning power. This is especially true where the business is one which requires and receives the personal attention and labor of the owner. Mitchel v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 114 N. W. 622, 625, 138 Iowa, 288.

EARNINGS OF VOYAGE

The "earnings of the voyage," which a shipowner is required by the statute to surrender in order to obtain a limitation of liability for losses occurring on such voyage, are those only of the particular voyage which exposed the passengers or property to risk; and where a steamship was engaged in making regular trips across the Atlantic from Havre to New York and return, discharging her passengers and cargo at each terminal port, each of the trips between such ports constitutes a voyage, within the meaning of the statute, and, in proceedings for limitation of liability for claims arising out of the sinking of the ship in collision while on her way from New York to Havre, the owner is not required to surrender the earnings of the preceding trip from Havre to New York. La Bourgogne, 139 Fed. 433, 436, 71 C. C. A. 489.

"An 'easement' is a right, without profit, created by grant or prescription which the owner of one state may exercise in or over the estate of another for the benefit of the former." Rodefer v. Pittsburg, O. V. & C. R. Co., 74 N. E. 183, 186, 72 Ohio St. 272, 70 L. R. A. 844 (quoting and adopting definition in Greenwood Lake & P. J. R. Co. v. New York & G. L. R. Co., 81 N. E. 874, 875, 134 N. Y. 435, 439); Reeve v. Duryee, 129 N. Y. Supp. 748, 750, 144 App. Div. 647; Yeager v. Tuning, 86 N. E. 657, 658, 79 Ohio St. 121, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 700, 128 Am. St. Rep. 679; Manheimer v. Gudat, 106 N. Y. Supp. 461, 55

Misc. Rep. 330 (quoting and adopting definition in Greenwood Lake & P. J. R. Co. v. New York & G. L. R. Co., 81 N. E. 875, 134 N. Y. 439).

An easement is defined as a right which one proprietor has to some profit, benefit, or lawful use out of or over the estate of another proprietor. Henslee v. Boyd, 107 S. W. 128, 129, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 494; Consolidated Gas Co. of Baltimore v. City of Baltimore, 61 Atl. 532, 533, 534, 101 Md. 541, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263, 109 Am. St. Rep. 584.

An "easement" is a charge or burden upon the land of one for the benefit of another. Blake v. Boye, 88 Pac. 470, 472, 38 Colo. 55, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 418.

An "easement," though only an incorporeal right, is an interest in land created by grant or agreement, expressed or implied, conferring a right on the owner thereof to some profit, benefit, dominion, or lawful use out of or from the estate of another. Oates v. Town of Headland, 45 South. 910, 911, 154 Ala. 503.

An easement implies necessarily a fee in another, and it follows that it is a right by reason of such ownership to use the land for a special purpose, and one not inconsistent with the general property in the land of the owner of the fee; his property rights, however, to be exercised in such way as not to unreasonably interfere with the special use for which the easement was acquired. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Wachter, 70 N. E. 974, 975, 70 Ohio St. 113.

An easement "in a public street or highway is the public and common right to use the same for the passage of persons and property, and purposes incidental thereto." L. Realty Co. v. Johnson, 100 N. W. 94, 95, 92 Minn. 363, 66 L. R. A. 439, 104 Am. St. Rep. 677 (citing Newell v. Minneapolis, L. & M. Ry. Co., 27 N. W. 839, 35 Minn. 112, 59 Am. Rep. 303; Ellsworth v. Lord, 42 N. W. 389, 40 Minn. 337).

"Strictly speaking, a right to cut and take ice is perhaps more in the nature of a profit à prendre than an easement, though it comes within the definition of an 'easement' which was given by Chief Justice Shaw in Ritger v. Parker, 8 Cush. (62 Mass.) 145, 54 Am. Dec. 744, and which was quoted with approval by the court in Owen v. Field, 102 Mass. 90." A lease, for a round sum, of premises on the shores of a pond, to be used for a dwelling house, and other buildings for the ice business, and providing that the lessor leases to the lessee the right to cut and take ice from the pond, and that the lessee, in addition to the rent, shall deliver to the lessor as much ice as shall be required for two families during the lease, annexes the right to take ice to the leased premises as an easement or a profit à prendre. Walker Ice Co. v. American Steel & Wire Co., 70 N. H. 937, 939, 185 Mass. 463.

An easement is a privilege without profit which the owner of one neighboring tenement has of another, existing in respect to their several tenements, by which the servient owner is obliged to suffer or not to do something on his own land for the advantage of the dominant owner; and it may be affirmative in its nature, permitting an active use of the servient tenement to the benefit of a dominant estate, or it may be negative only, as for the right of light and air, in which case an active use is not allowed. Bernero v. McFarland Real Estate Co., 114 S. W. 581, 594, 134 Mo. App. 290.

An "easement" is a right in one person to do certain acts on another's land, or to compel such other to refrain from doing certain acts thereon. In strictness the term does not include the authority of a landowner to use a way from her residence over land the legal title to which she retained. German Savings & Loan Society v. Gordon, 102 Pac. 736, 787, 54 Or. 147, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 331.

A claim by the owner of cutting-stone rights of the right to have tracks kept on the land, to be used for the shipment of his freight, is the claim of "easement" in the land. Oman v. Bedford-Bowling Green Stone Co., 134 Fed. 64, 69, 67 C. C. A. 190.

The actual occupation of a street by gas pipes under a franchise amounts to the acquisition of an "easement." Consolidated Gas Co. of Baltimore v. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore, 61 Atl. 532, 534; 101 Md. 541, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263, 109 Am. St. Rep. 584.

Apparent, continuous, and discontinuous easements

An "easement of way" is not an apparent and continuous easement and does not pass upon the severance of the tenement unless it is a way of necessity, or the operative words of the conveyance are sufficient to grant it de novo. Young v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 62 Atl. 529, 531, 72 N. J. Law, 94.

As appurtenant to land

A right of way for an irrigation ditch, and the right to receive water from or discharge the same on land, constitute "easements," which may attach to other lands as incidents or "appurtenances." A deed providing that the grantee should not use an irrigation ditch except to convey water to the north half of a certain section for use thereon, unless by the consent of the grantor, created an easement which by use became "appurtenant" to such section, and was not a mere easement in "gross" personal to the grantee. Jones v. Deardorff, 87 Pac. 213, 215, 4 Cal. App. 18 (citing Hopper v. Barnes, 45 Pac. 874, 113 Cal. 636).

A grant to a power company and its successors and assigns forever of the right to go on land on the bank of a river and construct an abutment for a dam and keep the same in repair is the grant of an "easement in fee" appurtenant to the grantee's plant and the realty on which it is situated, so as to pass to its successors, where at the time it was made the grantee was constructing, on the opposite side of the river, a plant to be operated by water power and a dam for that purpose, to the knowledge of the grantor. Sweetland v. Grants Pass Power Co., 79 Pac. 337, 340, 46 Or. 85.

Where the parties to a conveyance of a water right treated it as a right which might be transferred from one piece of land to another and as possessing the nature of a profit à prendre, which might or might not be annexed as an appurtenant to a particular piece of land and might become an estate in fee, it was not a pure "easement," which is not subject to transfer independent of the land to which it is appurtenant. Crane v. McMurtrie (N. J.) 63 Atl. 892, 898.

Where the owner of a tract of land had constructed a ditch prior to the sale and conveyance of a portion of the land, and at the time of the sale the ditch was a benefit to the land retained by the vendor because it drained it, and a benefit to the land sold in that it furnished water for irrigation for which the vendor charged in fixing the price of the land, the right to the water and the ditch was a quasi "easement" which passed to the grantee as an appurtenance to land. Fayther v. North, 53 Pac. 742, 746, 30 Utah, 156, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 410.

Under Civ. Code, § 1104, providing that a transfer of real property passes all easements attached thereto, and section 662, providing that a thing is deemed appurtenant to land when it is by right used with the land for its benefit, and section 801, providing that the right to receive water from or discharge water on another's land is an "easement," a conveyance of a water ditch, with a right to convey water therein, and "all the rights, privileges, immunities, franchises, and easements" thereto belonging, conveys an extension of the ditch made by the grantor for the purpose of using the same as an easement and as an appurtenant to the ditch, and the extension was not subject to levy under an execution against the grantor. Pogue v. Collins, 80 Pac. 623, 624, 146 Cal. 435.

Creation

An easement can be created only by deed or by prescription. Yeager v. Tuning, 86 N. E. 657, 658, 79 Ohio St. 121, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 700, 128 Am. St. Rep. 679.

An easement is not capable of manual delivery, being an incorporeal right acquired by grant or prescription. Le Blond v. Town of Peshtigo, 123 N. W. 157, 160, 140 Wis. 604, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 511.

An easement is an interest in land capable of creation or transfer only by operation of law, by grant, or by prescription. Prentice v. McKay, 98 Pac. 1061, 1063, 38 Mont. 114.

An "easement" is a species of corporeal hereditament, and is such as interest in land as may come within the statute of frauds, and can be acquired only by grant, express or implied, or by prescription, which presupposes a grant to have existed. An alleged "easement," consisting of a passageway through certain doors from the rotunda of a hotel to a saloon, was within the statute of frauds and could be acquired only by express grant, or by prescription presupposing a grant to have existed. Belser v. Moore, 84 S. W. 219, 221, 73 Ark. 296.

Essentials—Dominant and servient estates

The essentials of an "easement" are the dominant and servient tenements, and the right of fishery is an "easement" if it is the servitude which the servient tenement must yield to the dominant tenement, the upland," and if an easement may be gained by prescription. Hume v. Rogue River Packing Co., 92 Pac. 1065, 1073, 51 Or. 237, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 396, 131 Am. St. Rep. 732 (quoting and adopting the definition in 2 Black. Com. 39).

"In every instance of a private 'easement' (that is, an easement not enjoyed by the public), there exists the characteristic feature of two distinct tenements—one dominant, and the other servient." Consolidated Gas Co. of Baltimore v. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore, 61 Atl. 532-534, 101 Md. 541, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263, 109 Am. St. Rep. 584.

As incorporeal hereditament

An "easement" of a right of way is an incorporeal hereditament. Dahlberg v. Haeblerle, 59 Atl. 92, 93, 71 N. J. Law, 514.

All "easements" are incorporeal: mere rights, invisible, and intangible. They are incorporeal hereditaments. Kansas & C. P. Ry. Co. v. Burns, 79 Pac. 238, 239, 70 Kan. 627.

An "easement" is only an incorporeal right. Oates v. Town of Headland, 45 South. 910, 911, 154 Ala. 503; Le Blond v. Town of Peshtigo, 123 N. W. 157, 160, 140 Wis. 604, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 511; Consolidated Gas Co. of Baltimore v. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore, 61 Atl. 532-534, 101 Md. 541, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263, 109 Am. St. Rep. 584.

"That a valid appropriation of water from a natural stream constitutes an 'easement' in the stream, and that such easement is an incorporeal hereditament, the appropriation being in perpetuity, cannot well be disputed." Wiley v. Decker, 73 Pac. 210, 225, 11 Wyo. 496, 100 Am. St. Rep. 939 (quoting and adopting definition in Wyatt v. Larimer & Weld Irrigation Co., 33 Pac. 144, 18 Colo. 298, 36 Am. St. Rep. 280).

As incumbrance

See Incumbrance.

As an interest in land

An "easement" is an estate in real property, and its grant is within the statute of frauds. Howes v. Harmon, 81 Pac. 48, 49, 11 Idaho, 64, 69 L. R. A. 568, 114 Am. St. Rep. 255.

An "easement" is a servitude upon and differs from an interest in or lien upon the land. It is not a part of but is so much carved out of the estate in the land, and is as much a thing apart from such an estate, as a parcel of the land itself conveyed from it. Jackson v. Smith, 138 N. Y. Supp. 654, 656, 158 App. Div. 724.

An "easement" is essentially and inherently an interest in land, being an estate imposed upon a servient tenement. Consolidated Gas Co. of Baltimore v. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore, 61 Atl. 532, 534, 101 Md. 541, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263, 109 Am. St. Rep. 584.

An "easement" is an interest in land, and the title is said to lie in grant. Shaw v. State, 28 South. 390, 392, 125 Ala. 80; Belser v. Moore, 84 S. W. 219, 221, 73 Ark. 296; Prentice v. McKay, 98 Pac. 1081, 88 Mont. 114; Consolidated Gas Co. of Baltimore v. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore, 61 Atl. 532-534, 101 Md. 541, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263, 109 Am. St. Rep. 584.

A perpetual right reserved in a contract to have carried by a ditch and furnished the owner of certain lands sufficient water to irrigate them constitutes an "easement" in the ditch, which is real estate. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. New Hampshire Real Estate Co., 92 Pac. 290, 294, 40 Colo. 467.

As irrevocable license

An express oral license, becoming irrevocable by execution, by expenditures in permanent improvements in reliance thereon, inuring to the benefit of the licensor, if relating to the use or occupation of real estate, becomes an easement. Shaw v. Proffitt, 110 Pac. 1092, 1093, 57 Or. 192, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 63.

As land

See Land.

License distinguished

"A license is an authority given to do some act or acts on the land of another, without giving any estate in the land itself. It differs from an easement in that the latter is a permanent interest, with a right at all times to enter and enjoy it, while the continuance of the former depends on the will of the person who has created it." There is a distinction between an easement and a license, although in some cases it is difficult to see a substantial difference between them. An easement is a privilege in land founded upon a deed or other writing, or upon a prescription. It is a permanent interest in another's land, with the right to enjoy it fully and without objection. It may attach to the land, and pass with the dominant tenement as an appurtenant thereto. Asher v. Johnson, 82 S. W. 300, 301, 118 Ky. 702 (quoting 5 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 2668).

The distinction between an "easement" and a "license" is well settled. "An 'easement' * * * is a liberty, privilege, or advantage in land, without profit, and existing distinct from the ownership of the soil; and it has appeared also that a claim for an easement must be founded upon a deed or writing, or upon prescription which supposes one. It is a permanent interest in another's land, with a right to enjoy it fully, and without obstruction." Hazelton v. Putnam (Wis.) 3 Chand. 117, 121 (quoting and adopting Ang. Water Courses, 316).

The right of an "easement" must be founded upon a grant by deed, or upon prescription, for it is a permanent interest in another's land with a right of enjoyment, whereas a mere license is but an authority to do a particular act or series of acts upon another's land without possessing any estate therein. Dawson v. Western Maryland R. Co., 68 Atl. 301, 305, 107 Md. 70, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 809, 126 Am. St. Rep. 337, 15 Ann. Cas. 678.

The modern cases distinguish between an "easement" and a "license." A claim for an easement must be founded upon grant by deed or writing, or upon prescription, which supposes one, for it is a permanent interest in another's land, with a right at all times to enter and enjoy it. But a license is an authority to do a particular act or series of acts upon another's land, without possessing any interest therein. It is founded in personal confidence, and is not assignable. This distinction between a privilege or easement, carrying an interest in land, and requiring a writing within the statute of frauds to support it, and a license which may be parol, is quite subtle, and it becomes quite difficult, in some of the cases, to discern a substantial difference between them. The marked and leading distinctions between easement and license are that in the former there is a permanent interest in the land for some specified period, amounting to an estate in the land, which is assignable, is irrevocable, and gives a right at all times to enter and remain in possession, during its continuance, while the latter is a mere authority to enter upon the land of another for a temporary purpose and to do a particular act or series of acts upon the land, is revocable at pleasure before acted on, is not assignable, and gives no estate or interest in the land upon which the act or acts are to be done. Another incident of a technical license is that no consideration is necessary to its validity as such. It should therefore, on that ground, be distinguished from an agreement, the breach of which would entitle the party injured to an action or other legal remedy. A parol license to cut and carry away standing timber, when fully executed before revocation, constitutes a good defense to an action of trover, brought by the person giving the license, to recover the value of the timber. Pierrepont v. Barnard, 6 N. Y. 279, 288.

With reference to real estate, "license" is a permission or authority to do a particular act or series of acts on the land of another without possessing any estate therein. So, with reference to personal property, "license" implies and carries the power to do some act upon or in reference to or to do something with the property of another. Herein it differs from an easement. The word "easement" always implies an interest in the land. Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, 139 Fed. 155, 188 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4183); Borough Bill Posting Co. v. Levy, 129 N. Y. Supp. 740, 742, 144 App. Div. 784.

An "easement" is distinguished from a license in that an easement confers an interest in the land and invests the owner with privileges that he cannot be deprived of at the mere will or wish of the proprietor of the servient estate, while a license confers no interest in the land, is generally granted by parol, and may be revoked by the licensor at pleasure, and, being a personal privilege, is not assignable, and usually amounts to an excuse for what would otherwise be a trespass. Rittenhouse v. Swango (Ky.) 97 S. W. 743, 744 (citing Wilkins v. Irvine, 33 Ohio St. 138).

A license in respect of real property is authority to do a particular act or series of acts on the land of another without possessing an estate or interest therein, while an easement always implies an interest in the land involving two distinct elements, a dominant tenement to which the right is appurtenant, and a servient tenement upon which the servitude is imposed; but a license is in the nature of a personal privilege which may be revoked before any rights have been asserted under it, or money expended on the faith thereof. Where an easement is granted specifically or by language from which such an interest is implied under settled rules of construction, the covenant will be enforced accordingly, but, where the language used is of doubtful meaning, it is for the court to construe the grant and determine whether it is of a permanent interest running with the land, or only a personal privilege affecting the rights of the parties. Lehigh & N. E. R. Co. v. Bangor & P. R. Co., 77 Atl. 552, 554, 228 Pa. 350.

"An 'easement' is a privilege, without profit, which the owner of one neighboring tenement has of another in respect of their several tenements by prescription or by grant by which the servient owner is obliged to suffer or not to do something on his own land for the advantage of the dominant owner, while a 'license' is an authority to do a particular act or series of acts on another's land without possessing any estate therein. A 'license,' when executed, will prevent the owner of the land from maintaining the case or trespass for the acts done under it, but it is revocable at pleasure and will not be a defense to an act done after it is revoked." Rodefer v. Pittsburg, O. V. & C. R. Co., 74 N. E. 183, 185, 72 Ohio St. 272, 70 L. R. A. 844 (quoting and adopting definition in Wolfe v. Frost [N. Y.] 4 Sanf. Ch. 72).

A reservation in a deed of the right to connect wash lines from the adjoining yard owned by the grantor with the yard of the property conveyed was a reservation of an "easement" in favor of the actual tenants and occupant of the adjoining yard and not a reservation of a mere personal privilege or license. Steiner v. Peterman (N. J.) 63 Atl. 1102, 1103 (citing Gale, Easem. [Gibbons' 4th Ed. 1868] pp. 20, 21).

A siding or switch constructed by a railroad company from its road to a manufactory at the expense and over the land of the latter, solely for its benefit, and for the sole purpose of affording it facilities for receiving and shipping freight, and under a written agreement silent as to the length of time it is to remain, may not be maintained by the railroad company against the objection of the owner of the manufactory. The agreement, so far as the right of the railroad company is concerned, is not an "easement" but merely a license revocable at the option of the licensor or his grantee. Rodefer v. Pittsburg, O. V. & C. R. Co., 74 N. E. 183, 184, 72 Ohio St. 272, 70 L. R. A. 844.

A permission, given without consideration by an owner for the use by a township of his land for the discharge across his land of the surplus water of an artesian well sunk by the township on its land for irrigation purposes for the inhabitants of the township, and not given in the form of a grant or conveyance in writing, is a mere license, subject to revocation by the owner or his grantee; a "license," in real estate, being an authority to do a particular act on the land of another without possessing any estate therein, and being founded in personal confidence, revocable at will; and an "easement" being a privilege in land, without profit, existing distinct from the ownership of the land, founded on a grant in writing, within the statute of frauds (Civ. Code, § 1238). Butz v. Richland Tp., 134 N. W. 895, 897, 28 S. D. 442.

Right of way

See Right of Way.

Right of way in gross distinguished

To the creation of a right of way that amounts to an "easement," and not merely to a right of way in gross, two tenements are necessary, the dominant, to which the right of way belongs, and the servient, upon which the obligation rests. The principal distinction between a right of way in gross and an easement is found in the fact that in the first there is, and in the second there is not, a dominant tenement. The right of way is in gross, and personal to the grantee, because it is not appurtenant to other premises. The owner of premises may grant the right of way in either form, and, if it is the intention to grant a right of way in gross, there is no mention of dominant premises. If the grant is of an easement, it is always made for the benefit of other premises, and the premises to which the way becomes appurtenant are described in the grant. Where B. gave P. an option on land by an agreement, providing that P. should open a highway across such lands, and other land not then owned, but to be acquired, by P., and such contract was recorded, the option exercised, and a deed given, making no reference to the highway, but with a collateral undertaking continuing the agreement to open the highway, and P. acquired the other land, it was held that the agreement as to the highway was only an executory undertaking, wholly collateral to the land, and entirely personal, creating no easement. Houston v. Zahm, 76 Pac. 641, 644, 44 Or. 610, 85 L. R. A. 799 (citing Wagner v. Hanna, 38 Cal. 111, 116, 99 Am. Dec. 354).

Riparian rights

As between the grantor retaining the bed of a stream and the grantee of the ripa, with restrictions or limitations by contract as to boundaries or other express limitations of the natural riparian rights, the rights conveyed may perhaps be strictly called "easements" or "privileges," and not "riparian rights." But as between the grantee of these rights from the riparian owner, who retains title to the bed of the stream and to lands overflowed, and an upper riparian owner or occupant, as to whom the grantor and those claiming under him are only riparian owners of lower riparian lands with their incidents, the grantee, as deriving title to certain riparian rights from such lower riparian owner, may be, by reason of such grant, a riparian owner and entitled as against upper riparian owners or diverters to all the rights of a riparian owner conferred upon him by his grantor, the true riparian owner. Technically and legally, perhaps, such rights, which are described to be of the character of riparian rights, arise by nature, by reason of the ownership of riparian lands; but they are easements which, as against upper riparian owners, are effective only to the extent that their exercise comes within the limits of the natural riparian rights of the lower owner. City of Paterson v. East Jersey Water Co., 70 Atl. 472, 480, 74 N. J. Eq. 49.

Servitude distinguished

Though "servitude" and "easement" are often used indiscriminately, the latter term generally refers to a burden imposed. Scudder v. Watt, 90 N. Y. Supp. 605, 608, 98 App. Div. 228.

As title

The enjoyment of an "easement" requires the use of land, and to use is to possess. An easement, therefore, involves possession, though the title and broader right of possession may be in another. In a technical sense, the claim of an easement in property admits title in another, but asserts in the claimant such right of possession as may be necessary to the enjoyment of the easement. A judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action for trespass, in which defendant rested his right to the land on the claim of title, was a bar to a subsequent action by defendant to establish his right to the use of the land on the ground of an easement. Sumrall v. Maninai, 98 S. W. 301, 302, 124 Ky. 67.

EASEMENT IN GROSS

The right of profit à prendre, the right to take a part of the soil or produce of the land, such as sand, clay, etc., in which there is a supposable value, may exist in "gross" (that is, unattached to any dominant estate), but is usually attached to such an estate. Hopper v. Herring, 87 Atl. 714, 715, 75 N. J. Law, 212.

A deed whereby for value one grants the right to lay pipes to convey petroleum, together with all rights and privileges necessary to the enjoyment of the grant and to the removal of the pipes, the pipes to be laid within ten feet of the line of the grantor's property, does not convey a mere "easement in gross." Standard Oil Co. v. Buchl, 66 Atl. 427, 429, 72 N. J. Eq. 492.

A right of way for an irrigation ditch, and the right to receive water from or discharge the same on land, constitute easements which may attach to other lands as incidents or "appurtenances." A deed providing that the grantee should not use an irrigation ditch except to convey water to the north half of a certain section for use thereon, unless by the consent of the grantor, created an "easement" which by use became "appurtenant" to such section, and was not a mere easement in "gross," personal to the grantee. Jones v. Deardorff, 87 Pac. 213, 215, 4 Cal. App. 18 (citing Hopper v. Barnes, 45 Pac. 874, 113 Cal. 686).

A landowner leased to a bill posting company the exclusive privilege of erecting a signboard on certain lots for bill posting purposes; such owner reserving the right, if the property was sold or required for building purposes, to cancel all privileges on returning to defendant a pro rata amount of the yearly rent, the signboards erected by the company to remain its property, and it to have the right to remove the same at the expiration of the lease with the privilege of renewal. Held, that such instrument was neither a lease nor a mere license, but was an easement in gross for the term specified, and was therefore not revocable by the landowner during such term. Borough Bill Posting Co. v. Levy, 129 N. Y. Supp. 740, 144 App. Div. 784.

Where the owner of land and his relatives and descendants were buried in a small portion of the land, which was inclosed and used as a family burying ground, the presence of the bodies in that spot did not establish a prescriptive right in favor of his later descendants to use the land as a burying ground, and to restrain the disturbance of the graves by third persons, who had since acquired the land; the right to bury in a given tract not being an easement appurtenant, there being no dominant estate, and if a right in gross in favor of persons or individuals it did not pass by descent. Wooldridge v. Smith, 147 S. W. 1019, 1020, 243 Mo. 190, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 752.

EAST

The term "east" in the call, "thence east to the lands of" a person named, used in defining the limits of a city (Act Feb. 3, 1882; Acts 1881-82, p. 52, c. 57), has a well-established legal meaning, and means due east, and is to be so understood; other words not being used qualifying that meaning. City of Roanoke v. Blair, 60 S. E. 75, 76, 107 Va. 639.

EAST HALF

Where there is nothing to suggest the contrary, the word "half," in connection with the conveyance of a part of a tract of land, is interpreted as meaning half in quantity. The words "east half" and "west half" in a deed, while naturally importing an equal division, may lose that effect when it appears that at the time some fixed line or known boundary or monument divides the premises somewhere near the center, so that the expression more properly refers to one of such parts than to a mathematical division which never has been made. Gunn v. Brower, 105 Pac. 702, 703, 81 Kan. 242.

EASTERLY

The word "easterly" is a somewhat indefinite term. In deeds and like instruments, the expression, when unqualified and where there is nothing else to show or vary the direction, has sometimes been construed to mean due east. If the termini of the line described are fixed, or there are other qualifying words, the term "easterly" will not be held to mean due east. The use of the word in describing the direction of a proposed railroad will not be held to require the construction of the road due east from the beginning point, especially where to do so would prevent the road from entering a city named as one of the termini. Bridwell v. Gate City Terminal Co., 56 S. E. 624, 631, 127 Ga. 520, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 909.

EASTERLY HALF

The words "easterly half" in a tax certificate, though naturally implying an equal division of land, may lose that effect when it appears that, at the time the certificate was made, there was well-known boundary dividing the premises somewhere near the center. People v. Hall, 88 N. Y. Supp. 276, 278, 43 Misc. Rep. 117.

EASTERN ONE-HALF

The term "eastern one-half" in a deed conveying one-half of a tract of land, in the absence of admissible parol evidence disclosing a different intention, would mean the eastern half, formed by a line to be run due north and south through the tract; but if it appears that before the deed was executed a division into two parts, supposedly equal in area, had been made by a line, having a different bearing, actually marked on the ground by stakes and fences, according to which possession had been held for a number of years, and the parties have since held possession according to such line, the words must be taken to mean the eastern one-half as so laid off and held in severalty. Bank v. Catzen, 60 S. E. 499, 500, 68 W. Va. 535.

EASY TERMS

An option to purchase real property "purchase price to be five thousand five hundred dollars. Int. 5% easy terms," is insufficient under the statute of frauds for indefiniteness as to the terms and time of payment, since no inference can be drawn that the purchase price is to be paid in cash, and the expression "easy terms" has no well-defined and accepted meaning, but is absolutely indefinite. Hilberg v. Greer, 138 N. W. 201, 202, 172 Mich. 505.

EATING HOUSE

The sale of soda water and ice cream in a drug store does not bring the proprietor thereof within the statute providing that keepers of "eating houses, restaurants, and saloons" cannot be lawfully granted permits for the sale of liquor. In re Henery, 100 N. W. 43, 44, 124 Iowa, 358.

Under Civil Rights Act, declaring that all persons shall be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of all eating houses, etc., if the object and practice of persons is to serve meals to whomsoever apply, at prices charged to all, the place is an "eating house." Brown v. J. H. Bell Co., 123 N. W. 231, 235, 146 Iowa, 89, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 407, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 852.

A place where meals are served to whomsoever applies, at prices charged to all, is an "eating house," within the civil rights statute prohibiting discriminations by eating houses; but if meals are served only in pursuance of previous arrangement as to particular individuals, rather than to any who may apply, it is a private boarding house only, not within the provisions of the statute. Humbard v. Crawford, 105 N. W. 330, 331, 128 Iowa, 743.

EAVES

As building, see Building.

EAVESDROPPER

"Eavesdroppers" are such as listen under the walls or windows or eaves of houses to hearken to discourse and thereupon proclaim slanderous and mischievous tales." (4 Blk. 168.) Mr. Wharton, in his work on Criminal Law, says of the offense that: "In order to be indictable at common law, it should be habitual, and combine the lurking about dwelling houses and other places where persons meet for private discourse, secretly listening to what is said, and then tattling it abroad." State v. Davis, 51 S. E. 897, 139 N. C. 547, 111 Am. St. Rep. 816.

"Eavesdroppers," or such as listen under walls or windows or the eaves of a house to hearken after discourse and thereupon to frame slanderous mischievous tales," were a nuisance at common law and indictable, and were required, in the discretion of the court, to find sureties for their good behavior. Pavesich v. New England L. Ins. Co., 50 S. E. 68, 71, 122 Ga. 190, 69 L. R. A. 101, 106 Am. St. Rep. 1042, Ann. Cas. 561 (quoting and adopting the definitions in 4 Blackstone, 168).

ECCLESIASTICAL

An "ecclesiastical matter" is one that concerns doctrine, creed, or form of worship of the church, or the adoption and enforcement within a religious association of needful laws and regulations for the government of membership, and the power of excluding from such associations those deemed unworthy of membership by the legally constituted authorities of the church; and all of such matters are within the province of church courts and their decisions will be respected by civil tribunals. Clark v. Brown (Tex.) 108 S. W. 421, 433.

ECCLESIASTICAL COURT

See General Assembly.

EDGE

The words "along" and "edge," referring to a sidewalk, are relative terms and do not, with any definiteness, describe the location of the stone which caused the obstruction to the sidewalk. The words used, and the connection in which they are used, will not bear the construction that they convey the thought that the stone was in or upon the sidewalk. City of Vincennes v. Spees (Ind.) 72 N. E. 531, 532; Id., 74 N. E. 277, 279, 35 Ind. App. 899.

EDGER

An "edger" used in a sawmill is an apparatus which takes off the uneven edges from lumber to which logs have been reduced by being sawed in one direction or plane. Carter v. Fred W. Dubach Lumber Co., 36 South. 952, 953, 113 La. 239.

An "edger" is a machine used to rip off the edges of lumber or rip the boards into desired widths. The one operated by plaintiff in defendant's sawmill had several saws fixed on a shaft nine or ten feet long, which were movable and were adjusted by the operator to any desired width. There were rollers to carry lumber to the saws and rollers beyond to carry it after it had passed through the saws to the place of deposit, and there were rollers called dead rollers to bear down on the lumber and hold it firm against the saws. These last-named rollers weighed 100 or 115 pounds and could be raised or lowered by the operator by means of a lever so as to adjust them to lumber of any thickness. Trigg v. Ozark Land & Lumber Co., 86 S. W. 222, 223, 187 Mo. 227.

EDIBLE

EDIBLE FRUIT

Dried lychee, which is a Chinese fruit having, when dry, a thin shell inclosing an edible pulp, is dutiable under Tariff Act 1897, par. 262, as an "edible fruit," dried, and not entitled to free entry under paragraph 559, as a fruit not specially provided for. United States v. Wing Wo Chong, 98 Fed. 602, 603, 39 C. C. A. 172.

Cherries, which have been washed, pitted, and packed in salt water to preserve them in transit, are not dutiable as "fruits preserved * * * in their own juices," under Tariff Act 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 263, 30 Stat. 171, but as "edible fruits * * * prepared in any manner," under paragraph 262. Cause Mfg. Co. v. United States, 151 Fed. 4, 6, 80 C. C. A. 461.

Berry jams are dutiable under Tariff Act 1897, par. 263, 30 Stat. 171, as sweetmeats or preserved fruits, rather than as "jelly" under the same paragraph, or as "edible fruits prepared," under paragraph 262, 30 Stat. 171. Bogle v. United States, 175 Fed. 889, 891.

The article commercially known as "chutney," which consists of various fruits preserved with sugar and spices, is dutiable as "fruits preserved," under Tariff Act, 1897, par. 263, 30 Stat. 171, rather than as "edible fruits * * * prepared," under paragraph 262, 30 Stat. 171. Park & Tilford v. United States, 164 Fed. 910, 911, 912.

In construing Tariff Act 1897, pars. 262, 263, 30 Stat. 171, which paragraphs relate respectively to "edible fruits * * * prepared in any manner" and to "fruits preserved in * * * spirits or in their own juices," held, that fruit in maraschino is dutiable under the former, rather than the latter, provision. Reiss & Brady v. United States, 163 Fed. 65.

EDITION

Where a legal publication consisting of digest paragraphs is copyrighted, an "edition" of the book should be held to consist of any divisible part of which the copyright could consistently be entered by itself, though from the standpoint of an individual paragraph, a subsequent "edition" would consist of any such portion of the book as might be consistently held suitable for a copyright, if it included the paragraph in question; thus, while no one paragraph, when reprinted in a different volume, would in itself be considered a different "edition" of the entire original volume, nor would an entire subsequent volume be considered an "edition" of some one paragraph in an earlier copyrighted publication, yet, if any appreciable portion is republished indicating the use of the material of the earlier publication in a later work, the later work must carry a notice of the earlier copyright. West Publishing Co. v. Edward Thompson Co., 169 Fed. 833, 880.

EDUCATE—EDUCATION

See Board of Education; Complete Education; Tax for Education.

As charity, see Charity; Public Charity.

A bequest of a sum of money "to pay the tuition or education" of orphans or poor children under a certain age meant "to pay for the instruction or school training of orphans; that is, to pay the fee charged by teacher or school for instruction." Crow ex rel. Jones v. Clay County, 95 S. W. 369, 379, 106 Mo. 234.

Moral and physical training

Education includes moral as well as intellectual and physical instruction. In its broadest sense, the word "education" comprehends not merely the instruction received at school or college, but the whole course of training, moral, intellectual, and physical. People ex rel. Board of Trustees of Mt. Pleasant Academy v. Mezger, 90 N. Y. Supp. 488, 489, 98 App. Div. 237 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.; Ruohs v. Backer, 6 Heisk. [53 Tenn.] 395, 19 Am. Rep. 598).

"Education" of a child means much more than merely communicating to it the contents of a book. The physical and mental powers of the individual are so interdependent that no system of education would be complete which ignored bodily health. State ex rel. Stoltenberg v. Brown, 128 N. W. 294, 295, 112 Minn. 370.

Subsistence and personal care

Kirby's Dig. § 3803, requiring a guardian to give bond to faithfully conduct a sale, etc., applies only to sales for reinvestment, and a sale to discharge a mortgage on other land was not a sale for reinvestment, though the petition and order for sale designated it as such; the words "education" and "maintenance" in another statute authorizing sales being broad enough to authorize a sale to protect the ward's estate. Harper v. Smith, 116 S. W. 674, 675, 89 Ark. 284, 131 Am. St. Rep. 93.

EDUCATIONAL CORPORATION

As private corporation, see Private Corporation.

The word "educational," as used in Tax Law, § 221, exempting bequests to educational corporations from transfer tax, is not used in the meaning of instruction by school, college, or university, which is a narrower or more limited meaning of the word; but in its broader signification as the act of developing and cultivating the various physical, intellectual, and moral qualities towards the improvement of the body, the mind, and the heart. In re Moses' Estate, 123 N. Y. Supp. 443, 446, 138 App. Div. 525.

A devise of a residuary estate to the city of Yonkers, in trust, to found a trades school under the direction of the board of education and as a part of the school system, providing that all payments and investments of the fund are to be under direction of the board of education, is a devise to an educational corporation within Tax Law, § 220, and is not subject to a transfer tax. In re Saunders' Estate, 137 N. Y. Supp. 438, 440, 77 Misc. Rep. 54.

A library corporation is not an "educational" corporation within the tax laws, providing that any property bequeathed to an educational corporation shall be exempt from the transfer tax. In re Francis' Estate, 105 N. Y. Supp. 643, 645, 121 App. Div. 129.

The Metropolitan Museum of Art, incorporated "for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a museum and library of art, of encouraging and developing the study of fine arts, and the application of arts to manufacture and practical life, of advancing the general knowledge of kindred subjects, and to that end of furnishing popular instruction and recreation," and which has consistently used the property solely to encourage and develop the study of the fine arts and to advance the general knowledge of kindred subjects, is an "educational corporation," within Tax Law, providing that any property devised or bequeathed to any educational corporation shall be exempt; the exemption not being confined to corporations exclusively incorporated for educational purposes. In re Mergentime's Estate, 113 N. Y. Supp. 948, 949, 129 App. Div. 387.

A corporation organized to receive a testamentary gift to maintain an art gallery to which the public shall have free access under reasonable regulations, and to establish and maintain a free public reference library, is an educational corporation within Tax Law, § 221, exempting such corporations from transfer taxes. In re Arnot's Estate, 130 N. Y. Supp. 499, 501, 502, 145 App. Div. 703.

A school district is an "educational corporation" within Const. art. 11, § 2, providing that no charter of incorporation shall be granted, extended, or amended by special law, except for such educational corporations, etc., as are or may be under the state's control. Howard v. Independent School Dist. No. 1 of Nez Perce County, 106 Pac. 692, 694, 17 Idaho, 537.

Tax Law, § 221, provides that property devised to any religious, educational, charitable, missionary, or benevolent corporation shall be exempted from the transfer tax, and that there shall also be exempted from the provisions of the act personal property other than moneys or securities bequeathed to a corporation or association organized exclusively for the moral or mental improvement of men or women, or for the enforcement of laws relating to children or animals, and used exclusively for carrying out one or more of such purposes. The charter of the Young Men's Christian Association states that the object of the corporation shall be, primarily, the improvement of the moral and spiritual condition of young men and the improvement of their intellectual, physical, and social condition, and there was evidence to show that the association carried on this work by religious meetings and educational classes. The Young Women's Christian Association is organized under Laws 1891, c. 167, the first section of which provides for the formation of an association by any 20 or more women being desirous of associating themselves for the improvement of the spiritual, moral, or mental condition of young women. Held, that a devise to the Young Men's Christian Association and one to the Young Women's Christian Association was exempt from the payment of the transfer tax, but that a devise of $3,000 to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is not exempt, as that association must be classified under the partially exempt class. In re Moses' Estate, 123 N. Y. Supp. 443, 446, 138 App. Div. 525.

The state board of control created by Laws Fla. 1905, c. 5384, No. 13, given supervision of matters relating to educational institutions in the state, is not an educational company or association within Const. art. 3, § 25, providing that the Legislature shall provide by general law for the incorporation of such companies, but is a mere public agency created in aid of public purpose. State ex rel. Moodie v. Bryan, 39 South. 929, 959, 50 Fla. 293.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTION

Acts 28th Gen. Assem. 1900, p. 83, c. 110, authorizes the acquirement and use of books by school townships and the establishment of small libraries. Code, § 48, par. 2, provides that words and phrases shall be considered according to the context and the approved usage of the language, etc. A public library is an "educational institution" within the meaning of Acts 32d Gen. Assem. 1907, p. 65, c. 54, providing, however, that real estate owned by an educational institution of this state, as part of its endowment fund, shall not be taxed. Webster City v. Wright County, 123 N. W. 193, 194, 144 Iowa, 502, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1205.

Real property of a private corporation organized for the purpose of avoiding taxation to operate a business college affording courses in bookkeeping, etc., intended solely for the profit of the founders and stockholders, was not exempt from taxation under Pub. Laws 1909, No. 309, § 7, par. 4, providing that real estate owned by an incorporated educational institution with the buildings and other property thereon while occupied solely for the purposes for which they are incorporated shall be exempt. Parsons Business College v. City of Kalamazoo, 181 N. W. 553, 554, 166 Mich. 305, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 921.

The word "educational" does not necessarily describe a public or charitable institution. In re Sutro's Estate, 102 Pac. 920, 922, 155 Cal. 727; In re Shattuck's Will, 86 N. E. 455, 456, 193 N. Y. 446.

A gymnastic association where regular gymnastic exercises are taught and a teacher in physical culture is constantly employed is an "institution of education" within Const. § 170, exempting such institutions from taxation. German Gymnastic Ass'n of Louisville v. City of Louisville, 80 S. W. 201, 117 Ky. 958, 65 L. R. A. 120, 111 Am. St. Rep. 287.

A pharmacy college whose charter provided that, should the corporation be dissolved, its funds and property, after payment of debts, should be paid into the state treasury for the benefit of the common school fund, which is without stockholders, and whose entire income, which is derived from nominal membership fees, an initiation fee, small tuition fees, and the rental of a portion of its building, is applied to the purposes of the institution, is an "institution of education" within a constitutional provision exempting from taxation institutions of education not used for gain. Louisville College of Pharmacy v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 82 S. W. 610, 611.

EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES

Exclusively used for educational purpose, see Exclusively Used.

Solely used for educational purpose, see Solely.

EDUCATIONAL SOCIETIES

25 St. at Large, p. 731, amending 20 St. at Large, p. 246, creating the school district of Yorkville, by extending its boundaries, is not in violation of Const. art. 3, § 34, subd. 4, prohibiting the General Assembly from enacting local laws to incorporate educational societies; that section applying to institutions of learning, and not to school districts. State ex rel. Spencer v. McCaw, 58 S. E. 145, 77 S. C. 351.

EFFECT

The words "to that effect" in Rev. St. Tex. 1895, § 3785, declaring that when the board of medical examiners shall be satisfied as to the qualification of an applicant to practice medicine they shall grant him a certificate "to that effect," indicated that it was intended that if a certificate was given indicating the intention of the board it should be valid and would be a sufficient compliance with the law, but when a female after having been duly examined was granted a certificate reciting that the board had examined her as required by the laws of the state of Texas, and found her qualified to practice, such certificate was "to that effect" in the sense that she was qualified to practice in any of the branches of medical science, notwithstanding it also recited that she was qualified to practice the branches of obstetrics and diseases peculiar to women and children; such words being without force if intended to designate the branch or department of medicine which the applicant was entitled to practice. Board of Medical Examiners for State of Texas v. Taylor, 120 S. W. 574, 576, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 291.

EFFECT DEATH

The words "to effect death," in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 2167, defining murder as "homicide when perpetrated without authority of law and with a premeditated design 'to effect the death' of the person killed," means to take life, to kill, or to deprive of life. Walcher v. Territory, 90 Pac. 887, 888, 18 Okl. 528.

EFFECTED

The word "effected," though used ordinarily in the meaning of consummated or carried to completion, as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 5480, providing for the punishment of any person devising a scheme to defraud "to be 'effected' by either opening or intending to open correspondence or communication with any person by means of the post office department of the United States," means merely that there is an intent to use the mails as a channel of communication in carrying out the scheme or artifice; that is to say, the use of the mails is a means, though not the sole means, of carrying out such scheme. Brown v. United States, 143 Fed. 60, 64, 74 C. C. A. 214.

The expression "effects, or aids in effecting," an illegal entry of imports, in section 5445, Rev. St., includes aid in carrying out the fraud, rendered either after or before entry at the custom house. United States v. Mescall, 164 Fed. 587, 588.

As enforced

It has been held that the word "effected," as used in Code, § 2993, providing that a landlord's lien may be "effected" by commencement of an action for the rent alone, has the same meaning as "enforced." Staber v. Collins, 100 N. W. 527, 528, 124 Iowa, 543 (citing Nickelson v. Negley, 32 N. W. 487, 71 Iowa, 546).

As procured

An agent's commission for effecting a sale or trade of property is not shown to have been earned until a contract of sale or trade binding on the property owners is proven as having been entered into through procurement of his agent. Jacobson v. Rotzlen, 127 N. W. 419, 420, 111 Minn. 527.

EFFECTIVE HEIGHT

The "effective height" of a milldam is the height at which the dam in good condition will flow land, unaffected by changes in seasons or the occasional leakage of the dam. Carr v. Piscataquis Woolen Co., 85 Atl. 497, 498, 110 Me. 184.

EFFECTIVE PATENT

See Perfect and Effective Patent.

EFFECTIVE POSSESSION

Defendants in error being in actual possession of part of the tract by their tenant living in a house built upon the tract holding under color of title and claiming the land as their own at the time the timber was felled and the logs taken away, their possession extended to the limits or boundaries contained in their title papers, which covered the space where the trees grew. This possession was an "effective possession" or "virtual possession" and was an "adverse possession" in the sense in which that term is used in the law. Lieberman, Loveman & O'Brien v. Clark, 85 S. W. 258, 264, 114 Tenn. 117, 69 L. R. A. 732.

EFFECTS

See Household Effects; Household Furniture and Effects; Personal Effects.

The word "effects" is of very general significance, and is equivalent at least to personal property. Gallager v. McKeague, 103 N. W. 233, 234, 125 Wis. 116, 110 Am. St. Rep. 821.

Under Revisal 1905, § 8127, providing that to be probated a holographic will must be found among the valuable papers and effects of decedent, the word "effects" is broad enough to include policies of insurance, which are both valuable papers and effects. In re Jenkin's Will, 72 S. E. 1072, 1073, 157 N. C. 429, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 842.

The word "effects," as used in article 985, Civ. Code, relating to the place of opening of successions, was a translation of the word "biens," used in the French text of article 929, Civ. Code, 1825; both meaning property in its general sense. Randolph v. Kraft, 55 South. 340, 342, 128 La. 748.

Where a will devises certain land described and then disposes of all the testator's personal property, money and effects of every description, the word "effects" does not include the testator's homestead, which was not part of the real estate described. "The word 'effects' in its primary and ordinary meaning includes only personal estate, goods, movables, and chattel property. Webster's International Dict.; Standard Dict.; Century Dict. It denotes property in a more extensive sense than goods, and includes all kinds of personal property, such as shares of capital stock. Union Nat. Bank of Chicago v. Byram, 131 Ill. 92, 22 N. E. 842. The word is frequently found in wills, and, as a general thing, means personal property, and not real property. Adams v. Akerlund, 168 Ill. 632, 48 N. E. 454; Camfield v. Gilbert, 8 East, 510; Doe v. Dring, 2 M. & S. 448. Unless the context of a will shows the intention of a testator to dispose of his realty by the use of the word, it will not include real estate, but in its broadest sense of property or worldly substance it may include land and should be so construed when it appears from other parts of the will that such was the testator's intention. Words used in a will are to be given the meaning which the testator intended, they should have, and the word 'effects' is capable of carrying real estate if it appears to have been used with the intent, just as the word 'children' may mean 'heirs' or 'heirs' may mean 'children.'" Andrews v. Applegate, 79 N. E. 176, 177, 223 Ill. 585, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 661, 7 Ann. Cas. 126.

A contract for the sale of an interest in timber lands provided that, if the garnishees did not exercise an option to purchase defendants' interest in the land, they should loan defendants $15,000 to be secured by defendants' interest in the land and pay when the land was sold. A writ of garnishment having been served on June 8, 1907, the garnishees elected not to exercise their option, and on August 31st procured a draft payable to one of the garnishees for $15,000, which he retained until September 13, 1907, when he indorsed and delivered it to defendants in performance of the contract. Held, that such draft while in the hands of the garnishee did not constitute "effects" in the hands of the garnishee belonging to the defendants subject to the writ. Maury v. McDonald, 118 S. W. 812, 816, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 50.

Article 6 of the Treaty of Amity and Commerce of 1783, as revived by article 17 of the Treaty of Commerce & Navigation of 1827, between Norway and Sweden and the United States, provides that the subjects of the contracting parties in the respective states may freely dispose of their goods and effects by testament or otherwise in favor of such persons as they think proper and their heirs in whatever place they shall reside shall receive the succession, even ab intestato, either in person or by their attorney without having occasion to take out letters of naturalization. Held, that the words "goods and effects" in the treaty include real as well as personal property. In re Stixrud's Estate, 109 Pac. 343, 346, 58 Wash. 339, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 632, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 850.

EFFECTUAL RESISTANCE

Where, on a trial for rape on a female imbecile, punishable by Code, § 4758, punishing rape on a female of such imbecility of mind as to prevent effectual resistance, the evidence showed imbecility, requested instructions that, if prosecutrix was an imbecile, a conviction was not warranted, unless such imbecility was of such an extent that by reason thereof she was unable to offer such resistance as would ordinarily be offered by the average girl of her age, and that effectual resistance in the statute did not mean such entire resistance as would prevent accused from ravishing her, but meant simply ordinary, usual, and fair resistance, were properly refused because introducing elements not in the statutory offense; the word "effectual" being defined as adequate, effective, and efficient, and "effectual resistance" meaning more than mere resistance. State v. McKinnon (Iowa) 138 N. W. 523, 526.

EFFECTUALLY

"Effectually" means in an effectual manner, with complete effect, so as to produce or effect the end desired thoroughly. In a decrece ordering a sheriff to "effectually" close a building against the use for the keeping or sale of intoxicating liquors, the word "effectually" means "in an effectual manner; with complete effect; so as to produce or secure the end desired; thoroughly." Such a decree requires the building to be closed for all purposes. Lewis v. Brennan (Iowa) 117 N. W. 279, 280; Id., 120 N. W. 832, 141 Iowa, 585.

EFFICIENT

Though a statute requires motor vehicles to be provided with "a good and efficient" brake, an instruction that "a good and sufficient" brake must be supplied was not improper, as "efficient" means that which causes an effect, and "sufficient," as used in the instruction, meant that the brake should be reasonably sufficient for the purposes for which it was intended, and it was therefore practically synonymous with "efficient." Fox v. Barekman (Ind.) 99 N. E. 989, 991 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6763).

The words "proper," "properly," and "efficient" are not necessarily relative terms, but may be definite and specific when used in connection with a definite subject-matter, as, for example, the "proper" county, used in connection with other statutes as to the county in which a suit is brought, where a specific statute fixes the proper county. State v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 96 N. E. 840, 343, 177 Ind. 553.

EFFICIENT CAUSE

By "efficient cause," within the rule preventing negligence being proximate of any injury if there was an intervening efficient cause, is meant that cause which produces effects or results. Crandall v. Consolidated Telephone, Telegraph & Electric Co. (Ariz.) 127 Pac. 994, 996.

In actions for injuries to employes, the "proximate cause" of the injury is not necessarily the immediate cause, but it must be the "efficient cause," which is that cause that sets in motion the general circumstances leading up to the injury. Columbia Creosoting Co. v. Beard (Ind.) 99 N. E. 823, 825.

It is only when something occurs subsequent to the defendant's act which makes it result in what would not otherwise have happened that the latter or intervening cause is said to be the "efficient cause," and for the result of which the original actor is not responsible in law. Central Coal & Iron Co. v. Pearce (Ky.) 80 S. W. 449, 450.

"First cause," "initial cause," "efficient cause," and "proximate cause" all mean the same thing in the law of negligence. They mean the cause acting first and immediately producing the injury, or setting other causes in motion, all constituting a natural and continuous chain of events each having a close causal connection with its immediate predecessor; the final event in the chain immediately effecting the injury as a natural and probable result of the cause which first acted, and the person responsible for the first event having reasonable ground to expect at the moment of his act or default that a personal injury to some person might probably result therefrom. There may be pre-existing conditions or events without which the final injury could not have happened, such as the momentary shying of a horse on a defective highway, the inadvertent and nonnegligent misstep of a traveler into a dangerous excavation close to the sidewalk, or the nonnegligent misstep or slip upon the floor or passage; but none of these is to be deemed a cause of the final injury any more than the mere presence of the injured person on the scene of the accident. They are not links, either initial or otherwise, in the legal chain of responsible causation, and should not be referred to as such, even though in ordinary nonlegal parlance they might broadly be termed causes. They are mere circumstances or conditions either existing, or to be expected in the natural order of things to occur at any time; and they do not enter into the chain of responsible causation. Winchel v. Goodyear, 105 N. W. 824, 827, 126 Wis. 271.

Where a servant was informed by his master that a certain lever would stop the machine he was operating, when in fact it would not stop it when materials were passing through the rollers of the machine, and the servant, while causing materials to pass through the rollers, slipped on lubricating oil on the floor, and his hand was caught in the rollers, and he was injured before the machine could be stopped, he having made unavailing efforts to stop it by means of the lever, the presence of the oil on the floor was not the "efficient cause" of the injury. Yess v. Chicago Brass Co., 102 N. W. 932, 934, 124 Wis. 406.

EFFICIENT PREPARATION OF CASE

Under Gen. St. 1901, § 5137, authorizing the court after a petition has been filed in an action for divorce and alimony or for alimony alone to make such order relative to the expenses of the suit as will insure to the wife "efficient preparation of her case," the quoted phrase does not mean that her case must be made upon a petition and in the capacity of plaintiff, as preparation is just as important to her in establishing her case as against a plaintiff upon an answer or cross-petition. Day v. Day, 80 Pac. 974, 975, 71 Kan. 385, 6 Ann. Cas. 169.

EGG COAL

Where coal is run over one screen with a three-inch mesh, and another screen with a 1½-inch mesh, that passing through the three-inch screen and over the 1½-inch screen is known as "egg coal." Indiana Fuel Supply Co. v. Indianapolis Basket Co., 84 N. E. 776, 777, 41 Ind. App. 658.

EGGS OF BIRDS

Paragraph 549, Free List, § 2, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 197, relating to "eggs of birds," does not include eggs of the domesticated duck, which are dutiable under paragraph 244, Schedule G, § 1, 30 Stat. 170, as "eggs, not specially provided for." Sun Kwong On v. United States, 143 Fed. 115, 74 C. C. A. 309.

EIGHT-FOOT HEAD OF WATER

Grant of right to maintain a "dam to a height as to have at no time a head of water at said dam of more than eight feet," etc., does not permit maintenance of a dam eight feet high, if the water flows over the crest at a depth of two or more inches. Tebbel v. Spencer Electric Light & Power Co., 138 N. W. 1073, 1075, 173 Mich. 136.

EIS

The Greek word "eis" means "into" and is not equivalent to the Greek word "dia," meaning "through." State v. Williams, 61 S. E. 61, 68, 146 N. C. 618, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 299, 14 Ann. Cas. 562.

EITHER

As any

Any construed as either, see Any.

The "extremities of the body" are four in number, and "either" is one indifferently, any one of them; and the permanent paralysis of a hand resulting from a cut on the arm brings the plaintiff suing on the policy within the term "permanent paralysis of either extremities" as expressed in the constitution of the association. Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen v. Aday, 134 S. W. 928, 930, 97 Ark. 425, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 126.

It was error to instruct that the law presumes that parties in their dealings intend to conduct them honestly, and where a transaction which is challenged will admit "either" of an honest or a dishonest construction it is the duty of the jury to accept the former, though it was probable that the word "either" was used when it was intended to use the word "equally." Had the word "equally" been used, the charge would not have been objectionable. Detroit Electric Light & Power Co. v. Applebaum, 94 N. W. 12, 13, 132 Mich. 555.

One of any number

"Either" does not mean every, but one indifferently. Brown v. Rushing, 66 S. W. 442, 446, 70 Ark. 111.

In the use of the word "either" one or the other of two is meant. Common definitions of the word are "one of two"; the "one or the other." The word when used in a connection which implies a choice of action on the part of the person using it indicates that the option is in the person who is to do the act involving the choice. Aldrich v. Bay State Const. Co., 72 N. E. 53, 54, 186 Mass. 489.

EITHER, ANY, OR ALL

The act of April 19, 1898, defining trusts and prohibiting them under penalties (93 Ohio Laws, p. 143) declares (section 1) that a "trust" is a combination of capital, skill, or acts by two or more persons, firms, partnerships, corporations or associations of persons, or of any two or more of them for "either, any, or all" of the following purposes, which are thereafter recited. Held, that by the use of the distributive terms "either, any, or all," these purposes are as completely separated as though each subdivision constituted the subject of a different statute. State v. Gage, 73 N. E. 1078, 1080, 72 Ohio St. 210.

EITHER BEFORE OR AFTER TRIAL

The words "either before or after trial," in Code Civ. Proc. § 1209, providing that a final judgment dismissing the complaint "either before or after trial" does not prevent a new action, etc., refer to the dismissal of the complaint and the rendering of a judgment thereon, in an action brought on for trial, either on issues of law or of fact, and either before evidence is taken or afterwards, and such a judgment is final and appealable under section 1346, defining what judgments are appealable. Jones v. Sabin, 107 N. Y. Supp. 508, 510, 122 App. Div. 668.

EITHER PARTY

EJECT

The leaving of a train by a passenger whose ticket the conductor had refused to accept, in obedience to the conductor's command to the porter to see that she got off at the next station, is an "ejection." Boling v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 88 S. W. 35, 40, 189 Mo. 219.

For a passenger, whose ticket the conductor had refused to accept, to leave the train of her own accord, and against his advice that she remain, and allow him to hold her baggage check as security for passage, to be paid if the company agreed with him that the ticket was not good, is not an "ejection." Boling v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 88 S. W. 35, 40, 189 Mo. 219.

Where several cars were waiting at a station to be loaded with passengers, and a passenger, after voluntarily leaving one car, was told by the conductor that he could not ride on that car, but was directed to take passage on another car, there was no "ejection." Dobbins v. Little Rock Ry. & Electric Co., 95 S. W. 794, 797, 79 Ark. 85, 9 Ann. Cas. 84.

EJECTMENT

See Justice Ejectment.

Under the statute, "ejectment" is stripped of all of the fictions of the common-law actions. The persons in interest must be the real parties to the suit, and the judgment is a finality. It stands on the same footing as other actions, and whatever may be set up in a court of law as to fraudulent procurement of an instrument in writing may be set up. If therefore the statutory action of unlawful detainer is analogous to ejectment, and is governed by the same rules, the fraudulent execution of a lease may be shown by parol in an action of unlawful detainer. Sass & Crawford v. Thomas, 89 S. W. 656, 660, 6 Ind. T. 60, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 260.

EJUSDEM GENERIS

See, also, Other; Otherwise.

"The rule, 'ejusdem generis,' ordinarily limits the meaning of general words to things of the same class as those enumerated under them." Gallagher v. McKeague, 103 N. W. 233, 234, 125 Wis. 116, 110 Am. St. Rep. 821 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2328); Gillette v. Peabody, 75 Pac. 18, 20, 19 Colo. App. 356; Pein v. Miznerr, 83 N. E. 784, 785, 41 Ind. App. 255 (citing Black, Interp. Laws, p. 141; Maxw. Interp. St. p. 469; Sedg. St. & Const. Law, p. 360); Williams v. Vincent, 79 Pac. 121, 122, 70 Kan. 595, 68 L. R. A. 634, 109 Am. St. Rep. 469.

The maxim "ejusdem generis" is but a rule of construction to aid in ascertaining the meaning of a statute or other written instrument. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Motz, 61 S. E. 1, 5, 6, 130 Ga. 414.

"Ejusdem generis" means of similar character or species. Ex parte Lingenfelter, 142 S. W. 555, 569, 64 Tex. Cr. R. 30.

The rule that, where general words follow enumeration of particular things, the general words include only such things as are of the same kind as those specifically enumerated does not apply to a statute where there are no specific terms followed by general terms, or where the terms are unlike and antagonistic in meaning and kind; the literal meaning of "ejusdem generis" being of the same kind, class, or nature. Jones v. State, 149 S. W. 56, 57, 104 Ark. 261.

By the rule "ejusdem generis," where there is an enumeration of particular things, followed by general words, the latter shall be construed as having reference only to things of the same kind or class with those specifically mentioned. Cutshaw v. City of Denver, 75 Pac. 22, 25, 19 Colo. App. 341.

"Ejusdem generis" means of the same kind or species. The words are used to designate a rule of construction that when an author makes use first of terms, each evidently confined and limited to a particular class of a known species of things, and then, after such specific enumeration, subjoins a term of very extensive signification, this term, however general and comprehensive in its possible import, yet, when used, embraces only things ejusdem generis—that is, of the same kind or species—with those comprehended by the preceding limited and confined terms. Pulom v. Jacob Dold Packing Co., 182 Fed. 356, 359 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2328).

The doctrine of "ejusdem generis" is only a rule of construction to be applied as an aid in ascertaining the legislative intent, and does not control where it clearly appears from the statute as a whole that no such limitation was intended, nor does it apply where the specific words of a statute signify subjects greatly different from another, nor where the specific words embrace all objects of their class, so that the general words must bear a different meaning from the specific words or be meaningless. State v. Eckhardt, 133 S. W. 321, 322, 232 Mo. 49.

Where one granted a right of way to a railroad over certain land, together with the right to take and use all the timber, earth, stone, and mineral existing or to be found within the right of way granted, the right to take the minerals must, under the principle of ejusdem generis, which limits general terms by particular preceding terms, be confined to surface minerals, as the grantor in referring to timber and stone had limited his grant to surface mineral. Gladys City Oil, Gas & Mfg. Co. v. Right of Way Oil Co.

(Tex.) 187 S. W. 171, 178 (citing 3 Words and Phrases).

"The rationale of the principal of ejusdem generis seems to be that, if the Legislature has intended the general words to apply, uninfluenced by the preceding particular words, and without restriction, it would, in the first instance, have employed a compendious word to express its purpose. * * * One of these rules of construction is that general words may be limited to the same genus or class as the specific words which precede them. In Sutherland on Statutory Constr. § 268, it is said that, 'where there are general words following particular and specific words, the former must be confined to things of the same kind.' In Broom's Legal Maxims (side page 651) the rule is laid down as follows: 'Where a particular class (of persons or things) is spoken of, and general words follow, the class first mentioned is to be taken as the most comprehensive, and the general words treated as referring to matters "ejusdem generis" with such class; the effect of general words, where they follow particular words, being thus restricted.' Sedgwick, in his work on Construction of Statutes (page 361), says: 'Where general words follow particular words, the rule is to construe the former as applicable to things or persons particularly mentioned.' The decision of the courts fully sustain the text-writers that this is the true rule of construction in such cases, subject to certain limitations, not necessary to be mentioned here." Gates & Son Co. v. City of Richmond, 49 S. E. 965, 966, 103 Va. 702 (citing American Manganese Co. v. Virginia Manganese Co., 21 S. E. 466, 91 Va. 272; City of Lynchburg v. N. & W. R. Co., 80 Va. 237, 56 Am. Rep. 592; Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. American Exch. Bank, 23 S. E. 935, 92 Va. 495, 44 L. R. A. 449).

"The 'rule of ejusdem generis' is not in and of itself a rule of interpretation but an aid to interpretation, when the intention is not otherwise apparent." "It is a rule of application of the rule of ejusdem generis that when the prior or specific words exhaust the class of genera there is nothing for the terms to qualify, and, following the rule that all parts of a statute shall if possible be given effect if that can be done, and that rule shall not be invoked to restrict the operation of the act within narrower limits than the Legislature intended." Strange v. Board of Com'rs of Grant County, 91 N. E. 242, 248, 173 Ind. 640.

The rule of "ejusdem generis," restricting the meaning of general words following specific words to things of the same kind as the specific words, is only one of a number of rules of construction intended to aid in finding the true meaning of a statute; and where, considering the act as a whole, the evil to be remedied, and public sentiment at the time of its passage, the purpose of the act clearly appears, the rule should not be arbitrarily applied to limit the meaning of general words, nor should it be applied when the specific words embrace all objects of their class, so that general words must bear a meaning different from the specific words or be meaningless, thus violating the rule that all the words of a statute must be given effect, if possible. United States Cement Co. v. Cooper, 88 N. E. 69, 72, 172 Ind. 599.

The rule "ejusdem generis" involves the idea that the particular governs the general, and is a mere auxiliary and subordinate formula, intended to assist in the application of the basic rule that the intent of the parties governs, as neither in law nor in ordinary logic can there be any inflexible rule by which parties are arbitrarily held to forego a general requirement merely because they also state a particular one. Drainage Commission of New Orleans v. National Contracting Co. of New York, 136 Fed. 780, 794 (citing Bock v. Perkins, 11 Sup. Ct. 677, 189 U. S. 628, 35 L. Ed. 814).

The words "other paper," as used in Kirby's Dig. § 3490, allowing the clerk of the circuit court 10 cents each "for filing complaint, answer, reply, petition, demurrer, affidavit, or 'other paper'" in a cause, is a general term; but according to the old and settled rule of statutory construction must be confined in its meaning to that class of papers to which the preceding words belong. Hempstead County v. Harkness, 84 S. W. 799, 73 Ark. 600 (citing Eastern Arkansas Hedge Fence Co. v. Tanner, 53 S. W. 886, 67 Ark. 156; Matthews v. Kimball, 66 S. W. 651, 69 S. W. 547, 70 Ark. 451; Sedg. St. & Const. Law [2d Ed.] pp. 360, 361; End. on Interp. St. §§ 400-407; Suth. St. Const. 268-276; State v. Blackburn, 33 S. W. 529, 61 Ark. 407).

Where words of specific and limited signification in a statute are followed by general words of more comprehensive import, the general words, under the rule of "ejusdem generis," should be construed as embracing only such persons, places, or things as are of like kind or class to those designated by the specific words, unless a contrary intention is clearly shown by the statute. Wiggins v. State, 87 N. E. 718, 172 Ind. 78 (citing Miller v. State, 23 N. E. 94, 121 Ind. 294; Nichols v. State, 26 N. E. 839, 127 Ind. 406; State v. Sopher, 61 N. E. 785, 157 Ind. 360-373; State ex rel. Shanks v. Board of Com'rs of Carroll County, 70 N. E. 138, 162 Ind. 183; Laporte Carriage Co. v. Sullender, 75 N. E. 277, 165 Ind. 290-302; State ex rel. Beard v. Jackson, 81 N. E. 62, 168 Ind. 384-389).

While, under the doctrine of "ejusdem generis," when general words in a Constitution or statute follow particular words, the things contained within the general words must be of the same class or kind as those particularly mentioned, and general words will not be held to include anything which is of a class superior to the class mentioned in the particular words, the doctrine is only a rule of construction to aid in arriving at the intent of the lawmaker, and cannot be applied to override the fundamental principles that all words in a law must, if possible, be given their ordinary meaning, and that the intention of the lawmaker must be gathered from the language employed in the light of the context and of the subject-matter to which it is applied, and that when the intention is clear it must prevail, except that courts cannot assume that the lawmaker really intended to enact either absurd or unjust laws. Const. art. 13, § 4, provides that all mines and mining claims, etc., containing or bearing gold, silver, copper, lead, coal, or other valuable mineral deposits shall be taxed, etc., and the net annual proceeds of all mines and mining claims shall be taxed, etc. At the time the Constitution was framed, the specified metals were the only ones mined in large quantities in the territory, and coal, with the exception of lime and common rock, was the only nonmetallic product mined in quantity sufficient to justify the method of taxation proposed. Held, that the classification was not intended as a limitation, but an enumeration of substances then produced in quantity sufficient to warrant the method of taxation imposed and, under the exception to the rule of ejusdem generis that where the particular things enumerated are complete, so that there remain no others of like kind, then the things that fall within the general words must be assumed to be of a different kind and not ejusdem generis with those enumerated, the phrase "other valuable mineral deposits" embraces all mineral deposits, including a deposit of gypsum, and the net annual profits from the sale of products manufactured therefrom are taxable under the section. Nephi Plaster & Mfg. Co. v. Juab County, 93 Pac. 53, 54, 56, 58, 33 Utah, 114, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1043.

The maxim "ejusdem generis" is only an illustration or specific application of the broader maxim "noscitur a sociis." From its application is a deduced rule that, "when general words follow an enumeration of particular cases, such words apply only to cases of the same kind as those expressly mentioned." Under the charter of the city of Chicago, authorizing the city to regulate and prescribe the compensation of hackmen, cabmen, omnibus drivers, and "all others pursuing a like occupation," the city had power to enact Rev. Code Chicago, §§ 1723, 1725, limiting the rate of fare to be charged by street railway companies, inasmuch as the phrase "others pursuing a like occupation," when construed ejusdem generis, includes street railway companies. Chicago

The doctrine of ejusdem generis yields to the rule that an act should be so construed as to carry out the object sought to be accomplished by it so far as that object can be collected from the language employed. So the restriction of general words to things ejusdem generis must not be carried to such an excess as to deprive them of all meaning. The enumeration of particular things is sometimes so complete and exhaustive as to leave nothing which can be called ejusdem generis. If the particular words exhaust a whole genus, the general words must refer to some larger genus. The general words are not to be rejected, and the maxim of ejusdem generis must yield to the maxim that every part of a statute should be upheld and given its appropriate effect if possible. To deny any word or phrase its known and natural meaning in any instance, the court ought to be quite sure that they are following the legislative intention. In Ky. St. 1903, § 2971, being a part of the laws relating to the government of cities of the first class, and providing that so much property in the city which from "alienage, defect of heirs, failure of kindred, or other causes," shall escheat to the commonwealth, shall vest in the board for the benefit of schools, and that board may in the name of the commonwealth sue for and recover the same, the particular words used exhaust the genera specifically named, so that under the provision "or other causes" the school board might recover escheats on the happening of events of a different class, as land escheated by a corporation. Commonwealth, for Use of Louisville School Board, v. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co., 99 S. W. 596, 599, 124 Ky. 497 (quoting and adopting definition in South. St. Const. § 437).

The rule that, where a general term in a statute follows specific words of a like nature, it takes its meaning from the latter, and is presumed to embrace persons or things of the kind designated by the specific words, is what is usually called the "ejusdem generis rule" of statutory construction. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. State, 40 South. 991, 145 Ala. 99 (citing Johnson v. State, 32 Ala. 588; Prim v. State, 36 Ala. 244).

Under the rule of ejusdem generis it is not a crime under Pen. Code, making it an offense to operate any banking game or percentage game played with any device for money, checks, credit, or other representative of value, to set up and operate a slot machine in which games are played unless played for money, checks, or other representative of value. "The word 'election' may be said to be 'the act of choosing; choice; the act of electing one or more from others; power of choosing or selecting.' Webster's Dictionary. Yet 'an "election" to be held in such precinct,' according to the custom of this state, has a certain definite meaning which does not include a choice by petition." Hudgins v. State ex rel. A. T. Hicks & Co., 39 South. 717, 718, 145 Ala. 499.

The word "elect" as used in a statute providing for the submission of a proposed amendment to a Constitution and providing that upon the ballot there shall be written or printed the words, "for the constitutional amendment or against the constitutional amendment," as the voters shall "elect," is equivalent to the word "wish." Warfield v. Vandiver, 60 Atl. 538, 544, 101 Md. 78, 4 Ann. Cas. 692.

The means by which the will of the people is ascertained and their consent obtained to the making of a contract is merely by accommodation called an "election," and this is also true as to cases in which it is sought to ascertain the same thing in respect of a proposition to remove a county seat. Where a question is subsequently raised as to whether the people really consented to the proposed action, it is necessary that the court, having jurisdiction, should investigate the operation of the means adopted in order to learn whether the consent was truly obtained. Adcock v. Houk, 122 S. W. 979, 981, 122 Tenn. 269.

"There is a particular distinction between the words 'elected and qualified' and that of 'qualified' alone. The distinction is based upon the consideration that the word elected has a well-defined and universally recognized meaning, and that when used it may not be assumed that the Constitution framers intended it should have no significance, and might therefore be ignored." Hence it cannot be said that the word "elected" was accidentally omitted from Const. art. 3, § 12, providing that all judicial officers shall hold their offices until their successors shall have qualified. State v. Andrews, 67 Pac. 870, 877, 64 Kan. 474.

The constitutional provision that persons possessing certain qualifications may vote at all "elections prescribed by law" applies to the election of all officers, whether provided for by the Constitution or by a law authorized thereby, in the absence of a contrary constitutional provision. Livesley v. Litchfield, 83 Pac. 142, 145, 47 Or. 248, 114 Am. St. Rep. 920.

Under Civ. Code, § 805, providing that corporate powers must be exercised by a board of directors "to be elected" from among the holders of the stock of the corporation, a mortgage executed by a corporation's president and secretary, in pursuance of a resolution of its board of directors who were named in the articles of incorporation as its board of directors for the first year, is valid. Middletown v. Arastraville Min. Co., 79 Pac. 889, 890, 146 Cal. 219.

Const. art. 3, § 1, provides that the executive department shall consist of a Governor, * * * Secretary of State, etc., who shall be severally chosen by the qualified electors at the same time and place of voting as for members of the Legislature. Section 3 provides that the Lieutenant Governor, Secretary of State, etc., shall hold their offices for four years, and until their successors are elected and qualified. Section 13 provides that when, during a recess of the Legislature, a vacancy happens in any office, the appointment to which is vested in the Legislature, or when at any time a vacancy shall have occurred in any other state office, for the filling of which vacancy no provision is made elsewhere in this Constitution, the Governor shall fill such vacancy by appointment, "which shall expire when a successor shall have been elected and qualified." Article 6, § 8, provides that the first election of all state officers shall be on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, 1892, and the election of such officers shall be held in every fourth year thereafter on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday in November. No direct provision is made for elections to fill vacancies in state offices, except as such vacancies may occur in the offices of Supreme or superior court judges. Held, that the words "which shall expire when a successor shall have been elected and qualified," do not relate to the next general election, and an appointment to fill a vacancy in the office of Secretary of State does not expire until the expiration of the regular term, and when the regular election for the office occurs. State ex rel. Fish v. Howell, 110 Pac. 386, 387, 59 Wash. 492.

Appointment distinguished

See Appoint—Appointment.

As appointed

The word "election," in New York City Charter, § 382, providing that any vacancy in the office of borough president, caused by removal from the borough or otherwise, shall be filled for the unexpired term by an election to such vacancy made by a majority vote of all the members of the board of aldermen of such borough, is equivalent to the word "appointment." People v. Ahearn, 89 N. E. 930, 196 N. Y. 221, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1153.

Organic Act, § 8, declares that all county officers shall be appointed or elected in such manner as shall be provided by the Governor and legislative assembly of the territory. Act July, 1851, provided for the election of sheriffs. Held, that a contention that the words "elected" and "appointed" had the same meaning, and that when the people were authorized by the Governor and assembly to "elect" certain officers they were merely empowered to act in so doing as agents, possessing a mere revocable authority and incapable of binding their principles, who retained the right to be exercised through the Governor, as the executive, of removing at his discretion all the officers whom the people should thus choose, was without merit; but the words were used to distinguish one method of selection from another, and the Governor did not have the right to remove a sheriff elected in accordance with the statute, as an incident to appointive power. Territory ex rel. Hubbell v. Armijo, 89 Pac. 267, 272, 14 N. M. 205.

Under Pol. Code, § 58, providing that, except where otherwise specially provided, an elector is eligible to an office for which he is an elector, and that no person is eligible who is not such an elector, and County Government Act, § 54, providing that no person shall be eligible to a county office who, at the time of his election, is not an elector of the county in which the duties of the office are to be exercised, a person who is not an elector of a county is not eligible to any office of that county, whether filled by election or appointment, the term "at the time of his election" not being limited in meaning to an election in the popular sense, in which all electors participate, but also including an appointment to office; and hence, prior to the constitutional amendment extending the elective franchise, a woman was not eligible to the office of assistant probation officer of a county. Reed v. Hammond, 123 Pac. 346, 347, 18 Cal. App. 442.

The words "elected" and "appointed" ordinarily are not synonymous. In its limited sense the word "elected" is usually employed to denote the selection of a public officer by the qualified voters of a community. On the other hand, "appointed" is generally understood to mean the selection of a public officer by one person who is empowered by law to make the appointment. In its broadest sense, however, the word "elected" means merely "selected." When used in that sense, the word "elected" is synonymous with the word "appointed." Odell v. Rihn, 127 Pac. 802, 805, 19 Cal. App. 713.

As authorized election

"There can be no 'election' where there is no warrant for holding it. Hence, where the notices prerequisite to a valid election are not given, there is no election." School Dist. No. 2 v. Pace, 87 S. W. 580, 582, 113 Mo. App. 134.

A void local option election is not an "election" within Ky. St. § 2563, providing that a local option election shall not be held oftener than once in three years. Taylor v. Cook, 143 S. W. 1055, 1057, 147 Ky. 215.

As choice by plurality

"Election" means choice. Holding an "election" in this country has always been considered to be the ascertainment of the will of the majority, upon a given question. Nall v. Tinsley, 54 S. W. 187, 191, 107 Ky. 441.

Under State Prohibition Law, § 13, providing that the prohibition law should go into effect January 1, 1908, in all counties where an election has been held on or before the 12th day of December, 1907, under the provisions of the county local option law, at which election it has been determined that liquor shall not be sold, the word "election" means an expression of the will of the majority, and not a valid election. Hence the constitutionality of the local option law is immaterial in determining when the prohibition law would go into effect. State ex rel. Woodward v. Skeggs, 46 South. 268, 269, 154 Ala. 249.

As choice by popular election

Const. art. 10, § 2, provides that all officers whose "election" or appointment is not provided for, and all officers whose offices may thereafter be created by law, shall be elected by the people or appointed as the Legislature may be direct. Held, that the word "election" contemplates an election by all the legal electors of the state or locality, and does not apply to members of the State Board of Pharmacy, which board was created since the Constitution by Public Health Law (Consol. Laws, c. 45) art. 11, which for determining its individual membership divides the state into three sections, five members being selected from each, and provides for the "election" of the members from each section, not by the citizens generally, but by a restricted electorate, consisting in some sections of licensed pharmacists, members of incorporated pharmacy associations, and in other sections by licensed pharmacists generally; the word "election" amounting in legal effect to an appointment according to the direction of the Legislature. State Board of Pharmacy v. Bellinger, 122 N. Y. Supp. 651, 654, 138 App. Div. 12.

As choice by those qualified

In Pierce's Code, § 4224, fixing the term of the county treasurer's office at two years "and until his successor is elected and qualified," the word "elected" means elected by the same electoral body that elected the incumbent whose term of office is thus fixed, and does not permit the qualification as such successor by a person appointed by the county board because of the failure to qualify of the person elected as such. State ex rel. Vanderveer v. Gormley, 102 Pac. 435, 436, 53 Wash. 543.

As choice of eligible person

The term "election" implies a choice by an electoral body, at the time and substantially in the manner and with the safeguards provided by law, of a qualified person to an office. State v. Hays, 45 South. 728, 730, 91 Miss. 755 (citing Foster v. Scarff, 15 Ohio, 532).

The word "elected," as used in Rev. Codes 1905, § 764, relating to the election of a county superintendent of schools, signifies an election of a qualified successor to the incumbent. Jenness v. Clark, 129 N. W. 357, 358, 21 N. D. 150, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 675.

The word "election," as ordinarily used and understood, means the choice or selection of one man amongst more to fill a certain office, and it does not always necessarily involve the question of eligibility. State v. Cahill, 105 N. W. 691, 692, 181 Iowa, 155.

As time when ballots were cast

The word "election," as used in Rev. St. 1895, arts. 1804t, 1804u, authorizing a contest of an election to remove a county seat, means the act of casting and receiving the ballots from voters, counting ballots, and making return thereof; and hence an election contest is no bar to an equitable proceeding after the contest to enjoin the issuance of bonds relating to the county seat removal, brought by parties other than plaintiff in the election contest, on the ground that the preparatory proceedings were void. Kilgore v. Jackson, 118 S. W. 819, 822, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 99.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 3397, provides that, after the result of an election under the liquor law has been declared, the election may be contested, and, if it appear that it was illegally or fraudulently conducted, another election shall be ordered. Held, that the term "election" means the act of casting and receiving the ballots from voters, counting such ballots, and making returns thereof, and a petition, in a proceeding to contest a local option election, in which the grounds alleged are not based on any irregularity in holding the election, falls to state a cause of action. Lowery v. Briggs (Tex.) 73 S. W. 1062 (quoting and adopting definition in Norman v. Thompson, 72 S. W. 62, 96 Tex. 250).

As election on question submitted

"The word 'election' signifies any choice, whether it be by an officer, by a vote of the people, or by a board having the power of appointment, or otherwise; and it applies to a choice in other matters than the selection of an officer, as where other questions are submitted to the vote of the people." Newton v. Ogden, 102 S. W. 865, 126 Ky. 101 (citing 1 Words and Phrases; 15 Cyc. p. 279; Webst. Dict. Title "Elections").

Under the provisions of Const. § 147, declaring that the word "elections" shall include the decision of questions submitted to the voters as well as the choice of officers by them, and under section 148, providing that not more than one election in each year shall be held in any town or county, except as otherwise provided, and that all elections of state and other municipal officers shall be on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, the question of issuing municipal bonds in excess of the yearly revenue not being otherwise provided for was an "election" within the definition given, and must be submitted at the general election in November. Belknap v. Louisville, 36 S. W. 1118, 1119, 99 Ky. 474, 34 L. R. A. 256, 59 Am. St. Rep. 478.

Under the primary election law, providing for a general primary election for all political parties, for party candidates for public office, declaring what the ballots shall contain, and providing that a qualified elector shall be furnished with a ballot of the political party with which he is enrolled, etc., and directing that the provision of the general election law relative to the furnishing of ballots, arrangement of booths, powers and duties of inspectors, etc., shall be applicable thereto, except so far as the provisions thereof may be inconsistent with the primary law, voting machines cannot be used at primary elections, though the general election law provides that at all state, county, city, village, and township "elections" voting machines may be used; such provision referring only to elections to public office. Line v. Board of Election Canvassers of Menominee County, 117 N. W. 730, 731, 154 Mich. 329, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 412, 16 Ann. Cas. 248.

The word "elections," as used in Const. art. 2, § 1, providing that all elections by the people shall be by ballot, includes every expression of choice by voters of a body politic, whether it be for a particular individual or in favor of a stated proposition, and is not confined to elections of officers and the special elections provided for in the Constitution. In this broader sense it includes local option elections. State ex rel. Birchmore v. State Board of Canvassers, 59 S. E. 145, 147, 78 S. C. 461, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 850, 13 Ann. Cas. 1133 (citing 15 Cyc. p. 280).

An election in a city to determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be authorized or denied therein is an election, within Comp. Laws 1907, § 914, authorizing the contesting of the election on any proposition submitted to the vote of the people, the official ballot at the election being "For Sale" and "Against Sale," with a circle after each phrase to enable the voters to indicate their preference by placing a mark in either circle. Hardy v. Beaver City (Utah) 125 Pac. 679, 680.

Const. art. 2, § 1, providing that every male citizen having the therein prescribed qualifications shall be entitled to vote at all elections, by "elections" has reference to the choice of officers alone, and hence Code, § 1181, authorizing women to vote on the issuance of bonds, borrowing money, or increasing the tax levy, is not inimical thereto. Coggeshall v. City of Des Moines, 117 N. W. 309, 310, 138 Iowa, 730, 128 Am. St. Rep. 221.

The word "election" means the act of choosing; choice; and whether it is a choice between alternative policies or a choice between persons, it is equally an "election." And so an "election," within the meaning of the statutes of this state, includes a referendum vote to decide a question of policy such as the issuance of bonds, the issuance of saloon licenses, or the amount thereof, just as well as it includes an ordinary "election" to choose between candidates for public office. Hall v. City of Madison, 107 N. W. 81, 83, 128 Wis. 132.

The word "election" is generally used as indicating the expression of choice by vote, regardless of whether the choice to be made is as to the selection of an officer or the adoption of a proposition. The word "election" as used in Code, § 1900 providing that each member of a building and loan association shall have one vote for each $100 of stock, par value, owned or held by him at any election, refers to the selection of the stockholders or adopting a proposition submitted to them, and need not be limited to the selection of officers, and the proposition for voluntary liquidation and the appointment of a trustee is an election. McKee v. Home Savings & Trust Co., 98 N. W. 609, 610, 122 Iowa, 731.

As sworn

The use of the phrase "who were 'elected' according to law to well and truly try and true deliverance make between the state of West Virginia," etc., was inadequate as a statement that a juror was sworn. State v. Moore, 49 S. E. 1015, 57 W. Va. 146.

Primary election

The word "election," as used in Pen. Code, § 41xxx, includes general and special elections, but does not apply to primary elections. People v. Foster, 112 N. Y. Supp. 706, 708, 60 Misc. Rep. 3.

The word "election," as used in a statute which declares that bets on any election authorized by the Constitution and laws of the state are gaming, is used in its political sense, and not in the same sense in which it is used in the Constitution, and means an election for public office, and does not include a primary election for the purpose of nominating a candidate for public office. Dooley v. Jackson, 78 S. W. 330, 334, 104 Mo. App. 21.

A primary election is an election within article 7, § 1, of the Constitution, defining who shall be entitled to vote at elections. People ex rel. Phillips v. Strassheim, 88 N. E. 821/822, 240 Ill. 279, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135; People ex rel. O'Connor v. Haas, 89 N. E. 792, 241 Ill. 575.

Compulsory Primary Election Law 1909, c. 102, did not provide for an "election," as that term is used in Const. art. 1, § 5, declaring that elections shall be free and equal, and that the right of suffrage shall never be denied to any person entitled thereto, except on conviction by a jury of an infamous crime, and article 4, § 1, prescribing the qualifications of electors; such primary election being more in the nature of a caucus than an election for a political office. Ledgerwood v. Pitts, 125 S. W. 1036, 1039, 122 Tenn. 570.

The word "election," in Const. art. 8, § 5, as amended in 1891, conferring on the district court jurisdiction of "contested elections," includes a primary election held under and regulated by statute, though such elections were not authorized at the time of the amendment. Anderson v. Ashe (Tex.) 130 S. W. 1044, 1046.

The word "election," as used in Const. § 6, declaring that all elections shall be free and equal, does not apply to primary elections, which are not in fact elections of officers, but merely a means of selecting candidates, so that the Primary Election Law is not in violation of the Constitution. Hodge v. Bryan, 148 S. W. 21, 22, 149 Ky. 110.

A general primary election held under Primary Election Law, providing for party nominations by direct vote, and declaring that the statutes in relation to the holding of elections shall apply to all primaries, is an "election authorized by law" within Rev. St. 1899, § 2116, punishing the making of fraudulent returns of ballots cast at any election authorized by law. State ex rel. Von Stade v. Taylor, 119 S. W. 373, 374, 220 Mo. 618.

The word "election," in Rev. St. 1899, § 3430, providing that bets on any election authorized by the Constitution and laws of the state are gaming, does not include a primary election; such elections not being authorized by the Constitution, but merely permitted because not forbidden thereby. Dooley v. Jackson, 78 S. W. 330, 333, 104 Mo. App. 21.

Rev. St. 1899, § 3027, prohibits local option elections held in counties from being held on any general election day or within 60 days of an election held under the Constitution and laws, and provides that elections held under such article shall be special elections separate from all other elections. Section 3028 provides that such election shall not be held in any city of a certain population within 60 days of any municipal or state election. Rev. St. 1899, § 4160, provides that the term "general election" refers to the election required to be held on Tuesday succeeding the first Monday in November. Held, that sections 3027 and 3028 prohibited the holding of a local option election within 60 days of any general election for the election of officers or any other purpose; but a local option election may be held within 60 days of an election under the state primary law; the word "election," as used therein, not including primary elections. Haas v. City of Neosho, 123 S. W. 473, 474, 139 Mo. App. 293.

Primary Election Law 1907, c. 209, § 33, as amended by Laws 1906, c. 82, § 10, declaring that statute as to the holding of elections, the solicitation of voters, the challenging of voters, the manner of conducting elections, and all other kindred subjects, including the sale of intoxicating liquors while the polls are open, shall apply to all primaries in so far as they are consistent with the act, did not adopt as part of the primary election law Rem. & Bal. Code, § 4967, which is a general statute not a part of the primary election law, declaring that every person charged with the performance of any duty under any law relating to elections, who willfully neglects to perform such duty, or who in the performance thereof knowingly acts in contravention of any law as to such duty, shall on conviction thereof be fined, etc. Rem. & Bal. Code, § 4967, provides that every person charged with the performance of any duty under the provisions of any law of the state relating to elections, who willfully neglects or refuses to perform such duty, or who while in the performance thereof knowingly or fraudulently acts in contravention or violation of the provisions of such law relating to such duty, shall on conviction be fined, etc. Held, that such section was general in its application, and, if enacted prior to laws providing for primary elections, such primaries were nevertheless elections within the section, so that a primary election officer guilty of malfeasance in office was punishable under section 4967. State v. Robinson, 124 Pac. 379, 380, 69 Wash. 172.

Town meeting

A complaint alleging that accused illegally voted at a meeting of electors of a specified town, duly and legally held to choose town officers, etc., sufficiently described an "election" within a statute prohibiting illegal voting. State v. Custer, 66 Atl. 306, 307, 28 R. I. 222.

Under general law

Code 1899, c. 8, § 6, relating to change or consolidation of election precincts, provides that no change, division, or consolidation shall be made by the county court within 90 days preceding an election, and that none shall be valid without notice of at least 1 month before any election by publication. Held, that the word "election" means an election held under the general law, and not an election under a special act of the Legislature, establishing an independent school district, on the question of consenting to the creation of such school district. Rader v. Board of Education of Beaver Dist., 50 S. E. 240, 241, 57 W. Va. 220.

The word "election," as used in the Bill of Rights, providing that no religious test or property qualification shall be required for any office of public trust, nor for any vote at any election, applies only to elections contemplated by the Constitution, and does not prevent the Legislature from authorizing the location of drainage districts, the powers of which are to be exercised by directors who are required to be freeholders elected by the resident taxpayers. State v. Monahan, 84 Pac. 130, 131, 72 Kan. 492, 115 Am. St. Rep. 224, 7 Ann. Cas. 661.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 1119, providing that the election provided for in the act relating to the removal of county seats shall be understood in the same manner as general elections are understood, etc., an election for the removal of a county seat is an "election" within the general election laws and is governed thereby. Walsh v. Hampton, 132 S. W. 214, 215, 96 Ark. 427.

ELECTION

See Fail to Elect; Failure to Elect.

In criminal law

Different felonies or misdemeanors may be stated in several counts in an indictment. In cases of felony, indeed, the judge in his discretion may require the counsel for the prosecution to select one of the felonies, and confine himself to that. That is what is technically termed "putting the prosecutor to his election." But this practice has never been extended to misdemeanors. "We have seen, however, that, where a count for larceny and a count for receiving the same goods are joined in the same indictment, the prosecutor shall not be put to his election." State v. Rountree, 61 S. E. 1072, 1073, 80 S. C. 387, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 833 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Archb. Cr. Prac. & Pl. 295-298, and citing and adopting State v. Nelson, 14 Rich. 169, 94 Am. Dec. 130; State v. Smith, 18 S. C. 149).

A submission by the court of certain counts in an indictment and the elimination of the others is equivalent to an "election" by the state to prosecute on the mentioned counts. Burk v. State, 95 S. W. 1064, 1065, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 185.

In equity

The ordinary meaning of "elect" is to choose between alternatives. City and County of Denver v. New York Trust Co., 187 Fed. 890, 897, 110 C. C. A. 24.

"Election" is a choice shown by an overt act between two inconsistent rights, either of which may be asserted at the election of the chooser alone. Brown v. Fletcher, 182 Fed. 963, 972, 105 C. C. A. 425 (citing definition in Bierce v. Hutchins, 27 Sup. Ct. 524, 205 U. S. 346, 51 L. Ed. 828); Bierce v. Hutchins, 27 Sup. Ct. 524, 525, 205 U. S. 340, 51 L. Ed. 828.

An "election" is the choice between two or more courses of action, rights, or things by one who cannot enjoy the benefit of both. Allis v. Hall, 56 Atl. 637, 644, 78 Conn. 322.

"Election," says Judge Story, "is the obligation imposed on a party to choose between two inconsistent or alternative rights or claims, in cases where there is a clear intention of the person from whom he derives one that he should not enjoy both." Howard v. J. P. Paulson Co. (Utah) 127 Pac. 284, 286 (quoting and adopting definition in 8 Words and Phrases, p. 2336); Potomac Lodge No. 31, I. O. O. F., v. Miller, 84 Atl. 554, 556, 118 Md. 405.

"Equitable election" is the obligation imposed on a party to choose between two inconsistent or alternative rights, where there is a clear intention that he should not enjoy both. Walker v. Bement, 94 N. E. 339, 344, 50 Ind. App. 645.

An "election" in equity is the choice which a party is compelled to make between the acceptance of a benefit under an instrument and the retention of property already his own, which is attempted to be disposed of to a third person by the same instrument. The doctrine rests upon the principle that a person claiming under an instrument shall not interfere by title paramount to prevent another part of the same instrument from having effect according to its construction. "The doctrine of election may be thus stated: That he who accepts a benefit under a deed or will must adopt the whole contents of the instrument, conforming to all its provisions, and renouncing every right inconsistent with it. If therefore a testator has affected to dispose of property which is not his own, and has given a benefit to the person to whom that property belongs, the devisee or legatee accepting the benefit so given to him must make good the testator's attempted disposition; but if, on the contrary, he choose to enforce his proprietary rights against the testator's disposition, equity will sequester the property given to him, for the purpose of making satisfaction out of it to the person whom he has disappointed by the assertion of those rights." McDonald v. Shaw, 121 S. W. 935, 937, 92 Ark. 15, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 657 (quoting Gregory v. Gates, 30 Grat. [71 Va.] 83; Fitzhugh v. Hubbard, 41 Ark. 64).

A mortgage of a specified number of cattle on a certain farm is good, to the number specified, against a purchaser from the mortgagor, although there are more cattle of the same description on the farm, which fact is not disclosed by the mortgage, since the mortgagee is permitted, by what is called the doctrine of selection or election, to select the specified number from the whole number. Sparks v. Deposit Bank of Paris, 78 S. W. 171, 115 Ky. 461.

"The doctrine of election is founded upon the principle that there is an implied condition that he who accepts a benefit under an instrument must adopt the whole of it, conforming with all its provisions, and renouncing every right inconsistent with them. The principle is recognized and established in this country almost precisely the same as in England, and rests upon the equitable ground that no man can be permitted to claim inconsistent rights with regard to the same subject, and that any one who claims an interest under an instrument is bound to give full effect to that instrument as far as he can. A person cannot accept and reject the same instrument or having availed himself of it as to part, defeat its provisions in any other part; and this applies to deeds, wills, and all other instruments whatever." Stone v. Cook, 78 S. W. 801, 803, 179 Mo. 534, 64 L. R. A. 287 (citing Fox v. Windes, 30 S. W. 323, 325, 127 Mo. 502, 511, 48 Am. St. Rep. 648); Royster v. Heck (Ky.) 94 S. W. 8, 11.

This fundamental principle is of wide application in the law of estoppel. Creditors who did not formerly become parties to a debtor's conveyance of property for the benefit of creditors, but who presented their claims and obtained their pro rata share of the debtor's property, are estopped from proceeding against land reserved by the conveyance. Royster v. Heck (Ky.) 94 S. W. 8, 11 (quoting and adopting definition in Herman on Estoppel and Res Judicata, §§ 1028, 1039-1049).

The term "quasi estoppel" has been applied to certain legal bars which are in some respects analogous to estoppel in pais, and which have the same practical operation as an estoppel in pais, but which nevertheless differ from that form of estoppel in essential particulars. The term includes the doctrine of "election," the principle which precludes a party from asserting to another's disadvantage a right inconsistent with a position previously taken by him, and certain forms of waiver. Humes Const. Co. v. Philadelphia Casualty Co., 79 Atl. 1, 3, 32 R. I. 246, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 906.

The obligation imposed upon a party to choose between inconsistent or alternative rights or claims, in cases where there is a clear intention of the person from whom he derives one that he should not enjoy both. Every case of election, presupposes a plurality of gifts or rights, with an intention, express or implied, of the party who had the right to control one or both, that one should be a substitute for the other. Gainer v. Gates, 84 N. W. 798, 799, 73 Iowa, 149; Holland v. Coutts, 98 S. W. 236, 237, 100 Tex. 232 (citing 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1075).

In law of wills

The principle of election applies only where a testator by his will disposes of some interest or estate that does not belong to him. Smith v. Smith, 77 Atl. 975, 979, 113 Md. 495, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 922, 140 Am. St. Rep. 435.

"Election" is defined as "where one legatee under a will insists upon something by which he would deprive another legatee under the same will of the benefit to which he would be entitled if the first legatee permitted the whole will to operate." Where bequests were made on condition that the legatees acquiesce in the will with bequests over of the shares of any who should dispute it, a claim set up by a legatee to the ownership of property which the testator assumed to dispose of by the will as his own was an election not to acquiesce in the will, and the gift over took effect. Smithsonian Institution v. Meech, 18 Sup. Ct. 396, 402, 169 U. S. 398, 42 L. Ed. 793.

No general rule can be formulated defining what acts of acceptance or acquiescence will constitute an election between a devise in a will and a right inconsistent with the will, but there must be an intention to make an election, or some decisive act that will prevent restoring the parties affected to the same situation as if such act had not been performed. An attempt to take both the property given by a will and a right inconsistent with the will does not constitute an election, but if one is taken and the other rejected there is an election, and if one is taken and the situation of the parties affected is so changed with reference to the property or rights involved that they cannot be restored to their former situation, the election is complete. Cobb v. MacFarland, 127 N. W. 377, 379, 87 Neb. 406.

The equitable doctrine of "election" between inconsistent benefits applies where a testator attempts to devise A.'s property to B. and at the same time gives his own property to A. It is not applicable where a mortgagee holding the legal title to land devised part of it to one holding the equity of redemption, especially where the devisee was a feme covert, and thus entitled, before being put to her election, to a full disclosure of the value of the land and of her right to redemption. Rich v. Morisey, 62 S. E. 762, 763, 149 N. C. 37.

The acceptance by children of a testatrix from her husband, to whom she devised all her property, of deeds of property, the title to one half of which he obtained through the will and the other half of which he owned in his own right, constituted an election barring their right to set aside the will. Holland v. Coutts, 98 S. W. 236, 237, 100 Tex. 232 (citing 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1075).

Of remedies

Election goes not to the form, but to the essence, of the remedy. It applies only where the law supplies to a party two or more modes of procedure predicated upon inconsistent and conflicting theories. If the remedies afforded are predicated upon consistent theories, the suitor may use one or all of the remedies. There can be but one satisfaction. Sweet v. Montpelier Sav. Bank & Trust Co., 77 Pac. 538, 539, 69 Kan. 641.

The word "election," as applied to remedies, is but another term for "estoppel." The bringing of an attachment suit is not an election of remedies barring another action; it having, by stipulation of the parties, been dismissed without prejudice, the position of the parties not having been changed by commencement thereof, and there being no intervening rights. First Nat. Bank of Crockett v. George R. Barse Live Stock Commission Co., 64 N. E. 1097, 1098, 198 Ill. 232.

"The whole doctrine of 'election' is based on the theory that there are inconsistent rights or remedies of which a party may avail himself, and a choice of one is held to be an election not to pursue the other. The principle does not apply to coexisting and consistent remedies." As regards what have been termed consistent remedies, the suitor may, without let or hindrance from any rule of law, use one or all in a given case. He may select and adopt one as better adapted than the others to work out his purpose, but his choice is not compulsory or final, and, if not satisfied with the result of that, he may commence and carry through the prosecution of another. But no suitor is allowed to invoke the aid of the courts on contradictory principles of redress upon one and the same line of facts. Standard Sewing Mach. Co. v. Owings, 53 S. E. 345, 346, 140 N. C. 503, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 582, 6 Ann. Cas. 211 (quoting and adopting 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2338).

A party is never put to an "election" except where two or more inconsistent remedies are open to him and may rightfully pursue either. If there be but one available remedy, and he mistakenly pursues another which is not available, it does not operate as an election. Moon v. Hartsuck, 114 N. W. 1043, 1044, 137 Iowa, 236; Greenhall v. Carnegie Trust Co., 180 Fed. 812, 821.

"Election of remedies," in its generic sense, is the act of choosing between the different modes of procedure and relief allowed by the law on the same state of facts, which modes may be termed "coexisting remedies." In its technical and more restricted sense, election of remedies is the adoption by one of two or more coexisting remedies with the effect of precluding a resort to others. The remedies herein intended are known as exclusive or alternative remedies. A plaintiff in a suit in equity for whose benefit an action at law is pending, for the recovery of the demand set up in his bill, cannot be compelled to elect as to which suit he will prosecute, if there appears to be jurisdiction of such demand in the equity court and none in the law court. Dudley v. Barrett, 66 S. E. 507, 511, 66 W. Va. 363 (quoting and adopting definition in Bouv. Law Dict.).

Where a party has two remedies inconsistent with each other, the bringing and prosecution of a suit based on one theory, with knowledge of his rights and of the facts, is an "election of remedies," and he cannot thereafter maintain a suit to enforce the alternative remedy. A. Kilpstein & Co. v. Grant, 141 Fed. 72, 72 C. C. A. 511.

"Election of remedies" is the adoption of one or two or more existing exclusive or alternative remedies, the effect of which is to preclude a resort to the others. To make a case for the application of the elective principle the party must have actually at command two inconsistent remedies. Southern Ry. Co. v. City of Attalla, 41 South. 664, 665, 147 Ala. 653 (citing Morris v. Rexford, 18 N. Y. 552; McNutt v. Hilkins, 29 N. Y. Supp. 1047, 80 Hun, 235; Kinney v. Kiernan, 49 N. Y. 164); Calhoun County v. Art Metal Const. Co., 44 South. 876, 877, 152 Ala. 607.

Election exists where a party has alternative and inconsistent rights, and is determined by the choice, but a mistaken selection of a remedy that never existed and its fruitless prosecution until adjudged inapplicable does not prevent the exercise of another, if appropriate remedy, even if inconsistent with that first adopted. Marsh Bros. & Co. v. Bellefeur, 81 Atl. 79, 80, 108 Me. 354.

The doctrine of "election of remedies" applies only where there are two or more appropriate ways to vindicate the right of a controversy, but the relations between the parties necessary to the pursuit of one successfully are such that concurrent existence of those necessary to the pursuit of the other or others is impossible. Unsuccessful use of a remedy, supposed to be, but in effect not, appropriate to vindicate the right of a particular matter, either because the facts turn out to be different than plaintiff supposed them to be, or the law applicable to the facts is found to be different than supposed, though the first action proceeds to judgment, does not preclude plaintiff from thereafter invoking the proper remedy. Rowell v. Smith, 102 N. W. 1, 4, 123 Wis. 510, 3 Ann. Cas. 773.

Under Comp. Laws 1897, c. 306, § 25, providing that if the complainant in proceedings to recover possession of land obtain restitution of the premises he may at his election sue and recover on the bond given by defendant or bring his action against defendant under section 24, in trespass or trespass on the case to recover treble damages for the unlawful detainer and all other damages to which he may be entitled, a landlord has an "election of remedies," and where he has successfully maintained a suit on the bond he has not the right to also sue under section 24, though he may be entitled to items of damages not recoverable in an action on the bond. Schellenberg v. Frank, 102 N. W. 644, 645, 139 Mich. 183.

"There is a difference between an 'election of remedies' and a mistake of remedy, and the law has not gone so far as to deprive parties of meritorious claims merely because of attempts to collect them by inappropriate actions on which recovery could not be had." Zimmerman v. Robinson & Co., 102 N. W. 814, 816, 128 Iowa, 72, 5 Ann. Cas. 960 (quoting and adopting definition in Sullivan v. Ross' Estate, 78 N. W. 309, 113 Mich. 311; and citing Glover v. Radford, 79 N. W. 803, 120 Mich. 542; McLaughlin v. Austin, 62 N. W. 719, 104 Mich. 491; Morris v. Rexford, 18 N. Y. 552; Miller v. Hyde, 37 N. E. 760, 161 Mass. 472, 25 L. R. A. 42, 42 Am. St. Rep. 424; Snow v. Alley, 30 N. E. 691, 156 Mass. 193; Johnson-Brinkman Commission Co. v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 28 S. W. 870, 126 Mo. 344, 26 L. R. A. 840, 47 Am. St. Rep. 675; Bunch v. Grave, 12 N. E. 514, 111 Ind. 351; Kittredge v. Holt, 58 N. H. 191; Standard Oil Co. of Ky. v. Hawkins, 74 Fed. 395, 20 C. C. A. 468, 33 L. R. A. 739; Gibbs v. Jones, 46 Ill. 319; White v. Whiting, 8 Daly [N. Y.] 23; Powell v. Dayton, S. & G. R. R. Co., 16 Pac. 863, 16 Or. 33, 8 Am. St. Rep. 251).

"An election exists only where two or more inconsistent remedies are open to a party, and he is at liberty to pursue any one of them. It cannot exist between consistent concurrent remedies, or between a rightful remedy and one which the party may mistakenly suppose to be applicable." Zimmerman v. Robinson & Co., 102 N. W. 814, 815, 128 Iowa, 72, 5 Ann. Cas. 960 (quoting and adopting definition in Redhead Bros. v. Wyoming Cattle Inv. Co., 102 N. W. 144, 126 Iowa, 410, and citing Klocow v. Patten, 61 N. W. 926, 93 Iowa, 432; Thensen v. Bryan, 85 N. W. 802, 113 Iowa, 496; Elliott v. Merchants' & Bankers' Fire Ins. Co., 79 N. W. 452, 109 Iowa, 39).

"If plaintiff was mistaken and undertook to avail himself of a remedy that he was not entitled to, this does not prevent him from subsequently availing himself of a remedy which he is entitled to under the facts in the case. * * * No case has been called to my attention, nor do I believe any can be found, which holds that a person is estopped from pursuing a remedy that he is entitled to because he has attempted to avail himself of another remedy that he was never entitled to." Zimmerman v. Robinson & Co., 102 N. W. 814, 816, 128 Iowa, 72, 5 Ann. Cas. 960 (quoting and adopting definition in Fulmer-Warren Co. v. Harter, 85 N. W. 698, 110 Wis. 80, 53 L. R. A. 606, 84 Am. St. Rep. 867, which quoted and adopted from Agar v. Winslow, 56 Pac. 422, 123 Cal. 587, 69 Am. St. Rep. 84).

An unsuccessful action to recover the price paid for property on the theory of a rescission of the purchase does not prevent action for a breach of warranty; the former action being a mistake of remedy, and not an election between remedies, either of which was open. Zimmerman v. Robinson & Co., 102 N. W. 814, 815, 128 Iowa, 72, 5 Ann. Cas. 960.

Defendant was induced to purchase a house and lot by fraudulent representations of the vendor as to the condition of the inside of the house, and as to other matters concerning the property, and after she had taken a deed, and paid the purchase price, and examined the house, she demanded possession of the tenant. She had not then been informed of her legal rights or of the untruth of other representations; but a few days later she demanded rescission and never took possession. Held, that she was not barred on the ground that she had made an "election." Annis v. Ferguson (Ky.) 84 S. W. 553, 555.

Any unequivocal act whereby a seller, with knowledge of the buyer's fraud in procuring the sale, elects to treat the sale valid, whether made in court or not, is a sufficient "election" to prevent him from subsequently rescinding the sale on the ground of the fraud. Seeley v. Seeley-Howe-Le Van Co., 105 N. W. 380, 382, 130 Iowa, 626, 114 Am. St. Rep. 452.

Of widow

"Election," as applied to the election of a widow provided for by will, means a choice between two courses of action, acquiescence by the widow in her husband's disposition of his property, or disregard of it and assertion of the rights the law gives her. There is no third or mixed course. A widow provided for by her husband's will has the choice of two rights, one under the statute of descents and distributions, and one under the will; but she cannot have both, except in cases where such is the purpose of the will. She may take either, but the election of one is a relinquishment of the other. Ashelford v. Chapman, 105 Pac. 534, 536, 81 Kan. 312 (citing Cunningham's Estate, 20 Atl. 714, 715, 137 Pa. 621, 627, 21 Am. St. Rep. 901; 2 Story, Equity Jur. [13th Ed.] § 1075, p. 415).

The "election" provided for in Rev. St. Ohio, § 5963, declaring that a widow shall not be entitled to both dower and the provisions of the will in her favor unless it plainly appears that was the intention of the testator, means a choice between two courses of action—either acquiescence by the widow in her husband's disposition of his property, or disregard of it and assertion of the rights given her by law. Geiger v. Bitzer, 88 N. E.

184, 186, 80 Ohio St. 65, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 285, 17 Ann. Cas. 151 (citing In re Cunningham's Estate, 20 Atl. 714, 187 Pa. 621, 21 Am. St. Rep. 901).

ELECTION BY BALLOT

"The expression 'election by ballot' had been expounded and construed by various courts of last resort, and, with entire unanimity, they had declared it meant a secret ballot, and that the essential principle of this manner of voting was that the elector might conceal from every person the name of the candidate for whom he voted." City of Detroit v. Board of Inspectors of Election for Fourth Election Dist. of Second Ward of City of Detroit, 102 N. W. 1029, 1031, 139 Mich. 548, 69 L. R. A. 184, 111 Am. St. Rep. 430 (quoting and adopting definition in State ex rel. Smith v. Anderson, 8 South. 1, 26 Fla. 240, and citing Ex parte Arnold, 30 S. W. 769, 1036, 128 Mo. 260, 33 L. R. A. 386, 49 Am. St. Rep. 557; Williams v. Stein, 38 Ind. 90, 10 Am. Rep. 97; Ritchie v. Richards, 14 Utah, 345, 47 Pac. 670; Brislin v. Cleary, 1 N. W. 825, 26 Minn. 107).

ELECTION DAY

The day of a school election is within the statutory provision that saloons shall not be open on any "election day." Hammond v. King, 114 N. W. 1062, 1063, 137 Iowa, 548.

ELECTION DOWER

The "election dower" provided for by a statute to the effect that, if a husband dies without any descendants capable of inheriting, the widow is entitled to one-half of the real and personal property belonging to the husband at the time of his death absolutely, subject to the payments of his debts, being a creature of statute, differs from the dower allowed under another statute entitling a widow to one-third of the land owned by the husband, free from liability for her husband's debts. The principal difference is that ordinary dower is one-third of the estate for life, freed from liability for debts, while election dower is one-half absolutely, subject to debts, which may turn out to be so great as to wipe out the election dower absolutely. Adams v. Adams, 82 S. W. 66, 69, 183 Mo. 396.

"Election dower" is a wife's dower taken from choice, as distinguished from a dower without choice. Rev. St. 1899, §§ 2943, 2945, authorize a widow to elect to take dower, etc., by filing an election within 12 months after the granting of letters of administration, and prescribes the manner of making such election, etc. An owner died seised of land leaving a widow and an infant granddaughter his sole heir. The widow and granddaughter occupied the mansion house and enjoyed the fruits of the plantation for over twenty years without applying for the administration of his estate. The widow, within a year after the issuance of letters of administration, elected to take a child's share in the real estate of the decedent. Held, that the right of the widow to elect to take a child's share was not barred by laches in view of sections 2967, 3480, 3485-3487, relating to the appointment of a guardian, and authorizing a suit by an infant, etc., by virtue of which the infant could have instituted proceedings for administration. Keeney v. McVoy, 103 S. W. 946, 949, 206 Mo. 42 (citing Newton v. Newton, 61 S. W. 881, 884, 162 Mo. 187; Adams v. Adams, 82 S. W. 66, 69, 183 Mo. 407; McFadin v. Board, 87 S. W. 948, 949, 188 Mo. 688).

Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 3621, providing that, when the interest of intestate's widow in the homestead shall equal or exceed one-third interest for and during her life in and to all the real estate of which her husband shall have died seised, no dower shall be assigned to such widow, applies only to common-law dower, and not to the estate which the widow may elect to take in lieu of dower, which has been aptly called "election dower." Chrisman v. Linderman, 100 S. W. 1090, 1095, 202 Mo. 606, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1205, 119 Am. St. Rep. 822.

ELECTION IN CITY

The city election act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1900, c. 46, §§ 155-287d), regulating elections in cities, includes town elections, so far as the territory of the town is within the boundaries of the city, since to that extent the joint election is an "election in a city." Bolles v. Prince, 95 N. E. 40, 41, 250 Ill. 36.

ELECTION LAW

A law providing for the nominations of candidates for public office by primary is an "election law," and primaries are "elections" within the constitutional provisions fixing the qualifications of voters. People ex rel. Phillips v. Strassheim, 88 N. E. 821, 823, 240 Ill. 279, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135.

ELECTION OFFICER

Ky. St. § 1442, defines the term "officer of election" as a judge, clerk, sheriff, or person acting as sheriff at an election, or a member of the board for canvassing the returns. An inspector is not an election officer. Commonwealth v. Goulet, 125 S. W. 1083, 1084, 187 Ky. 464 (citing Ky. St. 1442).

St. 1898, c. 548, § 173, providing that no person shall be eligible or act as an election officer at a state, city, or town election in a voting precinct in which he is a candidate, and if the person appointed an election officer becomes a candidate at a town election, and does not resign, he shall be removed, and providing that the term "election officer" shall apply to moderators, etc., when taking part in the conduct of elections, does not apply to moderators in town elections, though officers thereof, since their duties as election officers are merely incidental to their other duties. Wheeler v. Carter, 62 N. E. 471, 472, 180 Mass. 382.

ELECTION PERTAINING TO SCHOOL MATTERS

An election to determine whether bonds shall be issued by a city, for the construction of a school building is an "election pertaining to school matters," at which women may vote, as authorized by statute. Hall v. City of Madison, 107 N. W. 81, 33, 128 Wis. 132.

ELECTION RETURNS

ELECTIVE FRANCHISE

The exercise of the elective franchise is not a natural right, but is a right conferred by the state or body politic. Savage v. Umphries (Tex.) 118 S. W. 893, 900.

ELECTIVE OFFICE

"Elective," as used with reference to officers in a civil service act, meant officers who are elected by the people or those whom the people are or have been accustomed to elect. Ayers v. Hatch, 56 N. E. 612, 613, 175 Mass. 489.

The word "elective" has diverse meanings, when applied to public officers. Act March 17, 1904, amending sections of the Revised Statutes relative to the tenure of municipal or other officers, extends the official terms of clerks of municipal councils in office at the time of the passage of the act until the election of their successors in January, 1906. State ex rel. Gunn v. Witt, 74 N. E. 1075, 1076, 72 Ohio St. 584.

Within the meaning of Civil Service Law (Laws 1899, p. 802, c. 370), § 12, providing that one clerk of each elective judicial officer shall be exempt from civil service, a coroner is an "elective judicial officer." People ex rel. Schulum v. Harburger, 116 N. Y. Supp. 994, 997, 132 App. Div. 260.

The offices of justices of the Municipal Court of the city of New York are elective within Const. art. 10, § 5, providing, in relation to filling vacancies in office, that, in case of elective officers, no person appointed to fill a vacancy shall hold his office under such appointment longer than the commencement of the political year next succeeding the first annual election after the happening of the vacancy. In re Markland, 132 N. Y. S. 735, 737, 73 Misc. Rep. 363.

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 4805, provides that candidates for "elective" offices, state, county, municipal, precinct, or "congressional" shall be nominated at a direct primary election. Section 4813 gives the order of arranging positions on the ballot, first congressional, next state, next preferences for United States senators; and gives a form of ballot directing a vote for first choice, and a vote for second choice for representative in Congress, and a vote for one choice only for United States senator. Section 4822 provides that, where there are four or more candidates of any political party for a state or congressional position, every voter at the primary election shall designate a first choice and a second choice for each such position. Held, that a United States senator who is elected by the Legislature does not hold an "elective" office or a "congressional position" within the meaning of the primary election law, so as to make the provision for second choice voting applicable to him. State ex rel. Duryee v. Howell, 110 Pac. 543, 544, 59 Wash. 634.

ELECTOR

See Organization of Electors; Qualified Elector; Submitted to Electors.

"Citizen" and "elector" are not synonymous, for the qualifications of a voter are prescribed by the laws of the different states. In re Rousos, 119 N. Y. Supp. 34, 36.

The word "elector," in a statute in relation to the issuance of bonds by municipalities, and providing that they shall not be issued unless authorized by a majority of the electors, means voters who have registered so as to be entitled to vote at any election held under the Constitution and laws of the state. Greene v. Village of Rienzi, 40 South. 17, 19, 87 Miss. 463, 112 Am. St. Rep. 449.

The word "elector" is a technical term, descriptive of a citizen having constitutional and statutory qualifications to vote. Greenough v. Board of Police Com'rs of Town of Tiverton, 74 Atl. 785, 788, 30 R. I. 212, 126 Am. St. Rep. 953.

Const. art. 20, § 1, requiring "a majority of the electors" to ratify an amendment to the Constitution, requires a majority of the electors to adopt an amendment, and not merely a majority of those actually voting thereon; the word "electors" meaning as defined by article 6, § 2, those entitled to vote. State ex rel. Blair v. Brooks, 99 Pac. 874, 875, 17 Wyo. 344, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 478.

Rev. St. 1898, § 943, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 486, c. 312, provides that no bonds shall be issued by any city until the proposition shall be submitted to the "people" of the municipality, and adopted by a majority voting thereon, and that when any such bond issued is contemplated, a special election for the purpose of submitting such question to the "electors" shall be called and held. Held, that the term "electors" referred to all persons legally entitled to vote on the proposition submitted, and therefore did not exclude women from voting on a proposition to issue bonds for the construction of a schoolhouse; such election being an election at which women are authorized to vote, under Rev. St. 1898, § 428a. Hall v. City of Madison, 107 N. W. 31, 33, 128 Wis. 132.

In Const. § 121, as amended, providing who shall be a qualified elector, the word "qualified" neither adds to nor detracts from the meaning of the word "elector." It follows that the word "electors," as used in section 168, providing that all changes in the boundaries of organized counties shall be submitted to the electors at a general election means all persons who are qualified to vote. State v. Blaisdell, 119 N. W. 360, 362, 18 N. D. 81.

St. 1898, § 959—52, relating to municipal elections, requiring the petition for referendum to be signed by at least 20 per cent. of the "electors of a village as appears by the poll list" of the last general election, means 20 per cent. of the identical electors whose names appear on the last poll list, rather than 20 per cent. of the number of electors appearing on the poll list. State ex rel. Hanlon v. Russell, 102 N. W. 1052, 124 Wis. 548.

Voter distinguished

There is a distinction between an "elector" and a "voter," the former being one who legally has the right to vote, and the latter, not only possessing the right, but exercising it; and hence a statute authorizing the issuance of municipal bonds if two-thirds of the qualified voters shall vote therefor has reference to persons actually voting at the election. Fabro v. Town of Gallup, 103 Pac. 271, 275, 15 N. M. 108.

The word "voter," like the word "elector," is used in various senses; but, when used in opposition to or in contrast with the word "elector," it has but one meaning. A voter in this sense is an "elector" who exercises the privilege of voting. An "elector" is not a voter unless he votes, yet he still retains his qualifications as an "elector." State v. Blaisdell, 119 N. W. 360, 363, 18 N. D. 31.

The word "voters," as ordinarily used, has two meanings—persons who perform the act of voting, and persons who have the qualifications entitling them to vote. Its meaning depends on the connections in which it is used, and is not always equivalent to "electors." Mills v. Hallgren, 124 N. W. 1077, 1079, 146 Iowa, 215.

"Voter" is not synonymous with citizen or "elector," as persons who cannot vote may be eligible to citizenship. In re Rousos, 119 N. Y. Supp. 34, 36.

ELECTRIC CAR

Ordinances making it unlawful to operate or run any "street car" unprovided with a car fender of the most improved design and construction, and providing that no "electric car" shall be propelled or operated without having one conductor and one motorman thereon, require a fender, conductor, and motorman only on motor cars, and not on trailers. *Von Diest v. ELECTRIC LIGHT PLANT

See Waterworks and Electric Light Plant.

An "electric light" station with the necessary incidents attending its operation is a factory, within a restrictive building covenant. At one time an electric light plant might have been regarded as a manufactory of a fluid. More recently it might be deemed to be turning out electrons or ions. Scrymser v. Seabright Electric Light Co., 70 Atl. 977, 74 N. J. Eq. 587.

ELECTRIC RAILROAD

As railroad, see Railroad—Railway.

ELECTRIC SHUNT

An "electric shunt" is an additional course or side track established for the passage of part of an electric current. A metal of greater electrical resistance is introduced into the wire or vehicle carrying the electric current, and the two terminal portions of such metal are connected by wires with a measuring instrument. A portion of the current is thus shunted off and passed through the measuring instrument. Western Electrical Instrument Co. v. Empire Electrical Instrument Co., 181 Fed. 82.

"Electricity is an invisible, impalpable force highly dangerous to life and property and those who make, sell, distribute, use, or handle it are bound to exercise care in proportion to the danger involved." Elning v. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co., 66 S. E. 237, 238, 133 Ga. 458 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Cooley, Torts [3d Ed.] 1492, 1493).

"The art of insulating electric wires has been known almost as long as that of conducting electricity for practical purposes by means of wires." Ansonia Brass & Copper Co. v. Electrical Supply Co., 12 Sup. Ct. 601, 604, 144 U. S. 11, 36 L. Ed. 327.

"Electricity" is a powerful and subtle force, and its nature and manner of use not well understood by the public, nor its presence easily determined or ascertained. Those manufacturing and using electricity are required to use the utmost care to protect others from danger. Mangan's Adm'r v. Louisville Electric Light Co., 91 S. W. 708, 705, 122 Ky. 476, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 459.

ELECTROCUTION

ELECTRODE

"Electrodes" are the sparking points of an open electric circuit. Jackson v. Porter Land & Water Co., 90 Pac. 122, 124, 151 Cal. 32.

ELECTROLYSIS—ELECTROLYTE

"Electrolysis" is the decomposition of a metal solution in water, liquid ammonia, etc., accompanied by decomposition of the water into oxygen and hydrogen, or of a mass of molten metal, by having an electric current passed through it. The solution or melted mass is known as "electrolyte." Peoria Waterworks Co. v. Peoria R. Co., 181 Fed. 990, 1001.

ELECTRO-MAGNETISM

"Electro-magnetism" is developed whenever a current of electricity passes through a coiled wire, the space within the coil becoming a magnetic field, which will magnetize an iron core placed therein, or, even if there be no core, will attract a piece of iron so as to draw it into the coil. The magnetic attraction increases with an increase of the volume of electric current. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Cutter Electric & Mfg. Co., 136 Fed. 217, 218.

ELEEMOSYNARY

Charitable synonymous, see Charity.

The words religious and "eleemosynary," when used to designate institutions, may necessarily imply that the institutions are engaged in public and not private charitable work. In re Shattuck's Will, 86 N. E. 455, 456, 193 N. Y. 446.

The word "eleemosynary," as used in Const. art. 20, § 9, forbidding perpetuities except for eleemosynary purposes, is synonymous with "charitable." In re Sutro's Estate, 102 Pac. 920, 922, 155 Cal. 727.

ELEMENTS

In the popular acceptance of the phrase "injuries by the elements" are such injuries as result from the operation of the most common destructive forces of nature against which buildings need to be protected. Injuries to buildings by wind, rain, frost, and heat are spoken of as injuries by the elements, and all the ordinary decay from natural causes is classed in the same category. An express covenant on the part of a landlord to repair and restore the demised premises to their former condition in case they are injured by the elements, etc., includes injuries resulting from the action of the elements causing natural and gradual decay. Hanchett v. O'Reilly, 68 Atl. 1066, 76 N. J. Law, 212 (quoting Van Wormer v. Crane, 16 N. W. 686, 51 Mich. 363, 47 Am. Rep. 582).

A provision in a lease that, in case the building on the leased premises is destroyed or rendered untenable by "the elements or act of God," the lessor shall rebuild the same, does not require the lessor to restore the building where it became so dilapidated from age, gradual decay, and frequent alterations made by the lessee and tenants who preceded him that it was condemned, and destroyed by municipal authorities as unsafe, since such destruction of the building did not result from the "elements" or the "act of God." Kirby v. Wylie, 70 Atl. 213, 215, 108 Md. 501, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 129, 129 Am. St. Rep. 451.

The expression "damage by the elements" as used in a lease exempting a tenant from repairing such damage includes all injury by wind, rain, frosts, and heat, as well as all ordinary decay from natural causes. Sweezy v. Collins Northern Ice Co., 137 N. W. 84, 86, 171 Mich. 75.

ELEVATED TRAIN

Surface cars belonging to an elevated railway, which run up an incline to a junction platform, used to discharge passengers from the elevated trains to the surface cars and vice versa, are not elevated trains, within St. 1908, c. 420, which provides that an employé shall, for the negligence of a servant in charge of an "elevated train," have the same rights as if he were not an employé;

therefore a conductor of such a surface car, who was injured by the negligence of the motorman of another such car, cannot recover against the company. Dow v. Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 93 N. E. 655, 207 Mass. 496.

ELEVATING MACHINE

A gin pole to which was attached a block and fall used to haul beams to the third floor of a new building, the walls and girders of which had not yet been constructed, was not an "elevating machine," within Laws 1897, c. 415, § 20, as amended by Laws 1899, c. 192, providing that, where elevating machines or hoisting apparatus are used within buildings in process of construction, contractors or owners shall cause the shafts or openings in each floor to be inclosed by a barrier. McNeill v. Bottsford-Dickinson Co., 112 N. Y. Supp. 867, 869, 128 App. Div. 544.

ELEVATION

"Elevation" of grain consists in unloading it from cars or vessels into elevators, and the loading of the grain out again into cars or other vehicles. Elevator allowance or payment limited by carriers' schedules to grain unloaded out of cars from the west and loaded into cars for points east, north, and south, is "elevation" and "transfer in transit" within the meaning of Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 1, 24 Stat. 379 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3154), declaring that "all services in connection with the * * * 'elevation' * * * of the property transported" are transportation, as amended by Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 1, 34 Stat. 584, to provide that transportation shall include "all services in connection with the receipt, delivery, 'elevation' and transfer in transit." *F. A warehouse, standing within 2½ feet of an elevator building and about the same size as the elevator, to which it is fastened by strips of boards nailed upon each building, used as a part of the elevator, is so connected with it that, in view especially of this use, it must be construed as having been intended by the parties to be included in the designation "elevator building and additions." A policy on a laundry in course of construction, describing the property covered as a two-story basement and brick building, with metal roof, and its additions adjoining and communicating, including foundations, included a boiler house situated about 4 feet distant connected with the main building only by a steam pipe conveying power for the main building, a partially completed platform, and overhead archway between the two buildings. Guthrie Laundry Co. v. Northern Assur. Co. of London, 87 Pac. 649, 651, 17 Okl. 571, 10 Ann. Cas. 936 (citing and adopting Cargill v. Millers' & Manufacturers' Mut. Ins. Co., 22 N. W. 6, 33 Minn. 90).

ELIGIBLE

See Ineligible.

The word "eligible," used in Const. art. 9, § 5, and Laws 1907, c. 135, § 21, providing that the county superintendent of schools shall be elected for two years, and shall not be eligible for more than four years in succession, means that a person who had served for two terms was not legally qualified for election or appointment to another term only, and did not preclude a county superintendent who had served for two successive terms from holding over until a de jure superintendent was elected or appointed in his place on it being determined that the person elected to succeed him was ineligible. Jones v. Roberts County, 131 N. W. 861, 862, 27 S. D. 519, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1170.

Under Laws 1879, p. 243, § 10, declaring the county treasurer "ineligible" to office for more than two consecutive terms, an appointment to complete the term of another is not an election to office for a term, and such appointment and holding for ten months thereunder does not make one ineligible to be elected for the office for the two consecutive terms immediately following the term during which he was so appointed. Dodson v. Bowlby, 110 N. W. 698, 700, 78 Neb. 190.

Though Const. art. 2, § 19, and Rev. St. 1909, § 11,446, provide that no collector or receiver of public money shall be eligible to any office of trust or profit until he shall have accounted for and paid over all public money for which he may be accountable, a collector of revenue may, before the expiration of his term of office, become a candidate for and be elected to another office of trust or profit, since the word "eligible," as so used, has reference to the actual assumption of the duties of an office, and it is sufficient if the condition is complied with before the functions of the new office are to be taken up, though in other cases the word may be used in reference, sometimes to the one date and sometimes to the other. State ex inf. Major ex rel. Ryors v. Breuer, 138 S. W. 515, 516, 235 Mo. 240.

The word "eligible," as used in the state Constitution, relates to the capacity of holding as well as the capacity of being elected to an office. McComas v. Krug, 81 Ind. 327, 334, 42 Am. Rep. 135 (citing Carsons v. McPhetridge, 15 Ind. 327).

As capable of being chosen

The word "eligible," as used in the Constitution and statutes concerning election to office, means capacity to hold office at the time of the election; and, if disqualified at that time, a subsequent removal of the disability will not qualify. Finklea v. Farish, 49 South. 366, 368, 160 Ala. 230.

As capable of holding office

Section 1597, Comp. Laws 1909, provides: "Nor shall any county attorney, while in office be eligible to or hold any judicial position whatever." Held, that the word "eligible," as used in the statute, means "legally qualified to hold office," and does not mean "eligible to be elected or appointed to a judicial office." Under this statute, a county attorney may be either elected or appointed to a judicial position, while holding the office of county attorney, and will be eligible to qualify for such judicial position, if his term as county attorney has expired by law, or been terminated by resignation, prior to the time it is necessary to qualify for the judicial office. State ex rel. West v. Breckinridge, 126 Pac. 806, 808, 34 Okl. 649; State ex rel. Reynolds v. Howell, 126 Pac. 954, 956, 70 Wash. 467, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1119.

Where the words in a statute prescribing the qualifications for a public office are "eligible to office," or the equivalent, the eligibility must exist at the time of entering on the office, and need not exist at the time of election. State v. Huegle, 112 N. W. 234, 235, 135 Iowa, 100.

Where the constitution of an association provided that any persons, eligible to vote might become members, the word "eligible" has reference to the qualification necessary to membership, and does not require prospective members to be actual voters or to be registered as such. Parker v. Oliver, 84 N. E. 860, 862, 198 Mass. 488.

The phrase "eligible to any office," used in a statute, providing that no officer of any corporation having any contract with the city shall be "eligible to any office," refers to the beginning of the term of office, and not to the election, and so one whose disability may be removed before the beginning of the term may be properly elected. Hoy v. State ex rel. Buchanan, 81 N. E. 509, 513, 168 Ind. 506, 11 Ann. Cas. 944.

The word "eligibility," as used in connection with an office, or the person to be elected to fill an office, where there are no explanatory words indicating that it is used with reference to the time of election, has reference to the qualification to hold office, rather than to be elected to the office. Rev. Codes, § 585, declaring that no person shall be eligible to the office of county superintendent of public instruction except a first-grade teacher, with not less than two years' experience in the state, one of which must have been while holding a valid first grade certificate issued by a county superintendent, relates to the time when the person so elected is inducted into office, and, though he does not possess such qualification when elected, yet, if the disqualification is removed at the time he is inducted into office, he is eligible. Bradfield v. Avery, 102 Pac. 687, 688, 16 Idaho, 769, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1228.

ELIMINATED

Where an appellant's brief states that he has "eliminated" from the "argument practically all other points" except a certain point, it amounts to an abandonment of all other grounds. Merritt v. Crane Co., 80 N. E. 103, 106, 225 Ill. 181.

ELLIOTT

An "Elliott" or closed cup is a device used in determining the "flash point" or temperature of heated oil at which the vapor arising therefrom flashes momentarily into a perceptible flame upon the application to it of fire and then immediately goes out, and the "fire point" or temperature of the heated oil at which upon the application of fire combustion continues uninterruptedly until the oil is entirely consumed. It was for the jury to determine whether this cup was a proper and reliable one to be used for this purpose. State v. Boylan, 65 Atl. 595, 596, 79 Conn. 463.

ELSE

See Or Elsewhere.

The fact that a policy of insurance provided that the property was insured while contained in the specific premises "and not elsewhere" did not cause the insurance to cease ipso facto upon the removal and did not vary the effect of the insurer's waiver. The words "and not elsewhere" did not convey any further or different meaning to the other words locating the place where the goods were located, as without their use it is plain that the goods were insured while in the place described and nowhere else. McIntyre v. Liverpool, London & Globe Ins. Co., 110 S. W. 604, 605, 131 Mo. App. 88.

EMANCIPATION

See Express Emancipation; Implied Emancipation.

Complete emancipation is an entire surrender of all the rights to the care, custody, and earnings of the child, as well as a renunciation of parental duties, and the test to be applied is that of the preservation or destruction of the parental and filial relations. Broslus v. Barker, 136 S. W. 18, 19, 154 Mo. App. 657.

"Emancipation" of a child is the relinquishment by a parent of control and authority over his child, conferring on the child the right to his earnings and extinguishing the parent's legal duty to maintain and support the child. Emancipation is "express" when the parent voluntarily agrees with the child, who is able to take care of and provide for himself, that he may go from home, earn his own living, and control his earnings, or when the father voluntarily transfers the custody and keeping of the child to another. An express emancipation cannot be renounced by the parent. An "implied emancipation" results where the parent, by his acts or conduct, impliedly consents that the minor may leave home and shift for himself; the father, under these circumstances, however, being authorized to renounce the same within a reasonable time. Rounds Bros. v. McDaniel, 118 S. W. 956, 958, 133 Ky. 609, 184 Am. St. Rep. 482, 19 Ann. Cas. 828.

As applied to the relinquishment of the claim to the services of a minor child, to "emancipate" means to release, to set free, and to free a child for all the period of minority, from care, custody, control, and service would be a general emancipation, but to free him from only a part of the period of minority, or from only a part of the parent's rights, would be limited. Bristol v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 104 N. W. 487, 488, 128 Iowa, 479.

A judgment for defendant in an action by a parent as next friend of a minor child for injuries received by the child, in which evidence of loss of services of the child during minority and of money expended on account of the injuries was introduced, is a bar to an action by the parent for loss of services of the child and expenses incurred on account of the injuries; the act of the parent in the action by him as next friend constituting an "emancipation" of the child, or at least a relinquishment of his right to damages. Bowring v. Wilmington Malleable Iron Co., 67 Atl. 160, 162, 6 Pennewill, 332 (citing Farrell v. Farrell [Del.] 3 Houst. 633; Armstrong v. McDonald [N. Y.] 10 Barb. 300; Gooden v. Rayl, 52 N. EMBANKMENT

An "embankment" is defined as a mound, bank, or dike of earthwork raised for any purpose, as to carry a canal, road, or railway over a valley. Cent. Dict. But so far as the danger to highway travel is concerned, it cannot matter whether the raised condition above the adjoining soil is produced by filling the roadway or digging away the soil adjoining. A road along the side of an excavation may be a dangerous embankment within the statute. Wilder v. City of Concord, 56 Atl. 103, 196, 72 N. H. 259.

The words "embankment" and "dike," when used to represent the means employed to prevent the inundation of land, are synonymous, and mean a structure of earth or other material usually placed upon the bank of a stream, or near the shore of a lake, bay, etc., the ends of which extend across low land to higher ground forming a continuous bulwark or obstruction to water, designed to keep it within the inclosure thus formed. Morton v. Oregon Short Line Ry. Co., 87 Pac. 151, 153, 48 Or. 444, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 344, 120 Am. St. Rep. 827.

The word "embankment," as used in Mills' Ann. St. § 2272, making the owners of reservoirs liable for all damages from leakage or overflow of the waters or by floods caused by breaking of the embankments, and Laws 1899, c. 126, § 9, providing that none of its provisions shall relieve the owner of any such reservoir from the payment of damages caused by the breaking of the embankments thereof, but in the event of any such reservoirs overflowing, or the embankments, dams, or outlets breaking or washing out, the owners thereof shall be liable for all damages occasioned thereby, must be construed as including barriers. Hence the owners of reservoirs are liable absolutely for all damages from leakage or overflow of the water, or by floods caused by the breaking of an embankment, and they are not relieved from such liability by the fact that they have omitted nothing that human skill and foresight could suggest in the construction and maintenance of the reservoir to render it absolutely safe, and their liability is the same, even if they have used a natural hillside as a part of the retaining wall and it washes out. Garnet Ditch & Reservoir Co. v. Sampson, 110 Pac. 79, 80, 1136, 1137, 48 Colo. 285.

EMBARGO

An "embargo" is a notice, issued by a common carrier, refusing to receive or carry certain kinds of freight on its line, or between certain points, and may be for a limited and definite period, or for an unlimited or indefinite period. It is the result of a congestion of business that makes it impossible for a road to carry all the freight that is offered it. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. O'Gara, King & Co., 139 S. W. 803, 806, 144 Ky. 561.

EMBELLISHMENTS

Where a lessor and a lessee agreed that all "improvements" made by the lessee or "embellishments and reconstructions" were to remain in the building, articles which did not enter into and form a part of the property leased separate therefrom and not attached to the lessee's property belonged to the lessor. Morris v. Pratt, 38 South. 70, 71, 114 La. 98.

EMBEZZLE—EMBEZZLEMENT

See, also, Bailee; Bailment.

Embezzlement means to appropriate fraudulently to one's own use. State v. Dudenhefer, 47 South. 614, 616, 122 La. 288; United States v. McClure, 107 Fed. 268, 271.

Embezzlement is the fraudulent and felonious appropriation of another's property by persons to whom it has been intrusted, or into whose hands it has lawfully come. Hanna v. Minnesota Mut. Life Ins. Co., 145 S. W. 412, 418, 241 Mo. 383; Vansant v. State, 53 Atl. 711, 713, 96 Md. 110; State v. Casey, 105 S. W. 645, 647, 207 Mo. 1, 123 Am. St. Rep. 367, 13 Ann. Cas. 878; State v. Seeney (Del.) 59 Atl. 48, 49, 5 Pennewill, 142 (citing Ketchum v. Corse, 81 Atl. 486, 65 Conn. 89).

The crime of "embezzlement," as generally defined by the statutes, consists essentially of the fraudulent conversion or misappropriation of property received in a fiduciary capacity. State v. Carmean, 102 N. W. 97, 98, 126 Iowa, 291, 106 Am. St. Rep. 352.

It is "embezzlement" where one collects money for another and neglects or refuses to turn it over but uses the money himself. State v. Conklin, 84 Pac. 482, 484, 47 Or. 509.

"Embezzling" is the wrongful and felonious appropriation to himself by a servant, employé of a civil corporation, or other person designated in the statute of property intrusted to him by his employer. State v. Sullivan, 21 South. 688, 689, 49 La. Ann. 200, 62 Am. St. Rep. 644 (Bishop's Cr. Proc. § 322; State v. Wolff, 34 La. Ann. 1154; State v. O'Kean, 35 La. Ann. 903; State v. Roubles, 9 South. 435, 43 La. Ann. 201, 26 Am. St. Rep. 179).

"Embezzle" is defined by Webster to mean "to appropriate fraudulently to one's own use, as property intrusted to one's care; to apply to one's private use by a breach of trust, as to embezzle money held in trust." United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Sexton, 67 S. E. 649, 651, 134 Ga. 53.

Embezzlement contemplates the appropriation by one of the property of another with the intent wrongfully to convert it to his own use, and such appropriation of the goods of another and their unlawful conversion may be of goods or personal property which were lawfully received in the first instance. State v. Lyons (Del.) 80 Atl. 976, 977.

Under Code, § 834, declaring embezzlement to consist in the wrongful conversion to one's own use of property which has come into his possession by virtue of his employment, or in the fraudulent taking, making way with, or secreting with intent to convert such property, an allegation in an indictment for embezzlement, that a railroad conductor failed to punch tickets when collected, and to deliver them to his employer, and thereafter converted them to his own use in the District of Columbia, is sufficient. Gassenhelmer v. United States, 26 App. D. C. 432, 440.

Rev. Codes, § 7068, defines the crime of "embezzlement" as follows: Every trustee, banker, merchant, broker, attorney, agent, assignee in trust, executor, administrator, or collector, or person otherwise intrusted with or having in his control property for the use of any other person, who fraudulently appropriates it to any use or purpose not in the due and lawful execution of his trust or secretes it with a fraudulent intent to appropriate it to such use or purpose, is guilty of embezzlement. State v. Sage, 126 Pac. 403, 405, 22 Idaho, 489.

Comp. Laws 1897, § 1125, provides that if any person to whom is intrusted money shall convert to his own use any part of said money or neglect or refuse to pay it over "or any part thereof" according to the provisions of law, so that he shall not be able to meet the demands of any person lawfully demanding the same, he shall be deemed guilty of "embezzlement." Held that in order to constitute the crime the money must not only have been converted, but defendant must have been unable to meet the demands of any person lawfully demanding the same. Territory v. Abeyta, 89 Pac. 254, 255, 14 N. M. 56.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 950-952, requiring an indictment to be direct and certain, and to contain such a statement of the facts that a person of common understanding may know what is intended, an indictment charging that an agent and servant did "willfully, unlawfully, and fraudulently," "appropriate to his own use" certain money of his employer, does not charge an "embezzlement" under section 504, which requires the appropriation to be a "use or purpose not in the due and lawful execution of his trust." As said in People v. Shearer, 143 Cal. 166, 76 Pac. 813: "'Embezzlement' is purely a statutory offense. Under the provisions of our statutes it is essential to the commission thereof that there should be a fraudulent appropriation of property to some use or purpose not in the due and lawful execution of his trust by one to whose possession it has come by reason of some relation of trust or confidence mentioned in the statute, and existing between him and another and it is therefore necessary that an indictment or information for embezzlement should allege the trust relation, in order that it may be determined therefrom whether there has been any such violation of a trust or confidence reposed in the defendant." People v. McMahill, 87 Pac. 404, 405, 4 Cal. App. 225 (citing People v. Terrill, 59 Pac. 836, 127 Cal. 99).

"Embezzlement," speaking generally, is a breach of trust or duty with respect to moneys, properties, or effects in possession of a party and intrusted to him by another, and the appropriation of such moneys, properties, or effects, or a part thereof, to the use of the party so intrusted. Embezzlement is a technical expression, and applies only to cases in which the party charged occupies a trust or fiduciary relation, and takes the money or properties so intrusted and unlawfully applies the same to his own use. It is different from every other form of taking the property of another, in that it embraces the fact of having the same in possession and in trust when it is taken, and misapplied to the private use of the person charged. United States v. Breese, 173 Fed. 402, 405, 406.

Under Rev. St. § 6842, defining "embezzlement," the offense consists in converting to his own use "anything of value which comes into his possession by virtue of his employment, as . . . agent, . . . servant or employé." The statutory definition of the offense regards the actual relation of the agent, servant, or employé, and not the legality of the mode in which it was created, nor the extent of the authority conferred. State v. Pohlmeier, 52 N. E. 1027, 1028, 59 Ohio St. 491.

Under Pen. Code, § 461, declaring that a bailee's fraudulent conversion of property, or the proceeds thereof, to his own use, with a fraudulent intent, is "embezzlement," and section 463, providing that no person shall be adjudged guilty of embezzlement until a demand for return of the property converted shall have been made, "embezzlement" is complete when the property is fraudulently and feloniously converted. Territory v. Monroe, 85 Pac. 651, 652, 10 Ariz. 53.

Under Rev. Codes 1899, § 7462, defining the crime of embezzlement as the fraudulent appropriation of property or secreting it with intent to fraudulently appropriate it, an information charging defendant with fraudulently appropriating property or secreting it with fraudulent intent to appropriate it is bad on demurrer as not showing whether the embezzlement was by fraudulent approprition or fraudulent secretion. State v. Lonne, 107 N. W. 524, 525, 15 N. D. 275.

"Embezzlement" is a fraudulent appropriation of the property of another by a person to whom it has been intrusted. There is no settled mode by which this appropriation must take place, and it may occur in any one of the numberless methods which may suggest itself to the particular individual. Henderson v. State, 117 S. W. 825, 828, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 640.

As breach of trust—By bank officer

The crime of "embezzlement" from a national bank by an officer, clerk, or agent, within Rev. St. § 5209, involves two general elements: First, a breach of trust or duty with respect to the moneys, funds, or credits of the bank embezzled, which must have been lawfully in the custody or possession of the accused by virtue of his office or employment, although such possession need not have been exclusive of that of other officers, clerks, or agents; and, second, the wrongful appropriation of such moneys, funds, or credits to his own use, with intent to injure or defraud the association or others. United States v. Breese, 131 Fed. 915, 919, 920, 921 (quoting and adopting definition in United States v. Harper, 33 Fed. 474-476).

Same—By public officer

The crime of embezzlement is committed by a public officer under Rev. St. 1887, §§ 7065, 7066, where he fraudulently appropriates to his own use any money or property which he has in his possession or under his control by virtue of his trust as such officer. State v. Steers, 85 Pac. 104, 106, 12 Idaho, 174.

Pen. Code, § 458, is as follows: "Every officer of this territory or of any county, city, or other municipal corporation or subdivision thereof, and every deputy, clerk or servant of any such officer, and every officer, director, trustee, clerk, servant, or agent of any association, society or corporation (public or private) who fraudulently appropriates to any use or purpose not in the due and lawful execution of his trust, any property which he has in his possession or under his control by virtue of his trust, or secretes it with a fraudulent intent to appropriate it to such use or purpose, is guilty of 'embezzlement.'" Sias v. Territory, 89 Pac. 539, 540, 11 Ariz. 175.

Rev. St., § 5490, declares that every officer charged with the safe-keeping of public money who fails to safely keep it without loaning, using, or converting it to his own use is guilty of "embezzlement" of the money so loaned, used, or converted. United States v. Mason, 81 Sup. Ct. 28, 30, 218 U. S. 517, 54 L. Ed. 1138; State v. Hogg, 58 South. 225, 126 La. 1053, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 830, 21 Ann. Cas. 124.

Under the act of the Twenty-Sixth General Assembly, amending Code, § 4840, by providing that any officer receiving money belonging to the county of which he is an officer shall be deemed to have received it by virtue of his office, and in case he fails or neglects to account therefor, on demand of a person entitled thereto, he shall be deemed guilty of embezzlement, adds an additional ground on which the charge of embezzlement may be based, and does not add an additional element to each of the acts previously named by section 4840, as constituting embezzlement. State v. McKinney, 106 N. W. 931, 932, 130 Iowa, 370.

Under Pen. Code 1901, §§ 398, 457, providing that every officer of any county charged with the safe-keeping of public moneys who, without authority of law, appropriates the same to his own use shall be punished, and defining embezzlement as the fraudulent appropriation of property by one to whom it has been intrusted, the appropriation by a county treasurer to his own use without authority of law of public moneys in his official possession is fraudulent and is embezzlement. Storm v. Territory, 94 Pac. 1099, 1102, 12 Ariz. 26.

As common-law offense

"Embezzlement" is a statutory and not a common-law crime. McInnis v. State, 52 South. 634, 636, 97 Miss. 280; Smedley v. Commonwealth, 127 S. W. 485, 486, 138 Ky. 1; State v. Browning, 82 Pac. 955, 956, 47 Or. 470; Williams v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 66 Atl. 495, 496, 105 Md. 490.

The crime of "embezzlement" is purely of statutory origin, intended to cover the misappropriation of property not punishable as larceny. State v. Finnegan, 103 N. W. 155, 156, 127 Iowa, 286, 4 Ann. Cas. 623.

"Embezzlement" was first made a criminal offense by 21 Henry VIII, c. 7. State v. McDonald, 45 S. E. 582, 583, 133 N. C. 680.

"Embezzlement" is not a common-law crime, but one created by a statute of Louisiana, and in determining whether the acts charged to have been committed constitute embezzlement the terms of the statute are controlling. State v. Sullivan, 21 South. 688, 689, 49 La. Ann. 200, 62 Am. St. Rep. 644.

As descriptive of offense

Under Code § 834, declaring embezzlement to consist in the wrongful conversion to one's own use of property which has come into his possession by virtue of his employment, the words "convert to his own use" have a legal signification, and it is not necessary in indictments for embezzlement to allege the particular way or means by which the conversion was effected. Gassenheimer v. United States, 26 App. D. O. 432, 438.

It was not essential to the validity of an information against the treasurer of a labor organization, under Rev. St. 1899, § 1918, making it embezzlement for an officer or member of any trade organization to convert to his own use any money that may have come into his hands by virtue of his office or any trust reposed in him, to allege that the money was converted by defendant to his own use without the consent of the owners and with the intent to deprive the owners of the use of the money permanently. State v. Skinner, 106 S. W. 88, 40, 210 Mo. 373.

The word "embezzles," as used in the statute relating to embezzlement, has a technical meaning which suggests the character and scope of the proof required, and involves two general elements: First, a breach of duty or trust in respect of money, property, or effects in the party's possession, belonging to another; second a wrongful or fraudulent appropriation thereof to his own use. Wall v. State, 56 South. 57, 60, 2 Ala. App. 157.

The fraudulent appropriation of property or the secreting of it with a fraudulent intent to appropriate it as described in Rev. Codes 1899, § 7462, defining "embezzlement," are different acts or facts that may constitute the crime of "embezzlement," and are not the means of committing the offense. State v. Lonne, 107 N. W. 524, 525, 15 N. D. 275.

As fraudulently convert

Comp. Laws, § 11,562, provides that if any cashier, or other officer, agent, or servant of any incorporated bank, shall embezzle or fraudulently convert to his own use any money, etc., or any other effects or property belonging to and in possession of such bank, or belonging to any person and deposited therein, he shall be deemed to have committed larceny in such bank, etc. Held that, though the statute creates two species of larceny, one defined by the word "embezzle," the other by the words "fraudulently convert to his own use," an information charging that defendant, as cashier of a certain bank, did feloniously embezzle and fraudulently convert to his own use certain moneys, etc., charged embezzlement larceny, and that the use of the words "and fraudulently convert to his own use" did not make the count uncertain or double; the words, while also found in the statute as describing a different phase of the offense, being nevertheless likewise appropriate to the description of the offense of embezzlement. People v. Messer, 111 N. W. 854-857, 148 Mich. 168.

While "embezzlement" is a statutory offense, yet the word "embezzle" has now acquired a technical meaning, as has the synonymous or kindred phrase "fraudulently convert to his own use," and it is sufficient to charge the crime in the language of the statute which provides that if any officer, agent, etc., "embezzles or fraudulently disposes of, or converts to his own use, or takes or secretes with intent so to do, anything of value which has been intrusted to him, or has come into his possession, care, custody, or control by reason of his office, employment or membership, he shall be punished as if he had been convicted of larceny." Teston v. State, 39 South. 787, 788, 50 Fla. 138.

Intent to defraud

In "embezzlement" the intent to defraud is necessary to be shown by the state before defendant can be convicted. State v. Seeney, 59 Atl. 48, 49, 5 Pennewill. 142.

Under a statute making the fraudulent conversion of a right of action "embezzlement," a managing agent who sold grain and instead of receiving the money due thereon caused the proceeds to be applied by the purchaser on the agent's personal account, is guilty of embezzlement. To constitute embezzlement there must be a fraudulent intent to convert the property. Higbee v. State, 104 N. W. 748-750, 74 Neb. 331.

Under U. S. Comp. St. 1901, § 4046, making every postmaster guilty of embezzlement who converts to his own use any money order funds, any appropriation of such funds by a postmaster to his own use is embezzlement, regardless of the intent or purpose of the conversion. Griffin v. Zuber, 113 S. W. 961, 962, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 288.

Under Code, § 834, declaring embezzlement to be the unlawful conversion to his own use, by the accused, of property which has come into his possession by virtue of his employment, an indictment is sufficient which alleges such wrongful conversion; and an allegation of an intent to defraud is not necessary. O'Brien v. United States, 27 App. D. C. 263, 265.

To constitute embezzlement under the statute, the appropriation of another's money or choses in action must be with intent to defraud. State v. Lanyon, 76 Atl. 1095, 1097, 83 Conn. 449.

An instruction, defining "embezzlement" by an agent, which fails to include the element that the conversion by the agent was without the assent of his employer, is erroneous. State v. Lentz, 83 S. W. 970, 972, 184 Mo. 223.

The gravamen of the offense of embezzlement, as defined by Ky. St. 1903, § 1202, to be a "fraudulent conversion by an agent to his own use of money or property belonging to another which shall have come into his possession * * * as such agent," is the criminal intent, which must be gathered from the acts of the agent and the circumstances surrounding the case. National Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Gibson (Ky.) 101 S. W. 895, 897, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717.

The gravamen of embezzlement is that one who has come rightfully into possession of property as agent, etc., not being capable of committing a trespass, which is a necessary element of larceny, fraudulently converts it to his own use, or fraudulently secretes it with intent to convert it to his own use, or the use of another. To constitute embezzlement, there must at least be some act indicating an intent to segregate the property from that held by the embezzler as agent and hold it for himself, or deprive the owner of the same, or convert it to his own use, and he must assume personal dominion of the property. Knight v. State, 44 South. 555, 556, 152 Ala. 56.

Lawful possession or custody

"Embezzlement" cannot be committed unless defendant is in the lawful possession of the property at the time of the conversion. State v. Browning, 82 Pac. 955, 956, 47 Or. 470.

"Embezzlement" is predicated on a wrongful conversion of property rightfully in possession. Axtell v. State, 91 N. E. 354, 355, 173 Ind. 711.

"Where the property is taken forcibly or furtively, or when the possession is gained by a trick or artifice, and the owner had no intent to yield possession and intrust the property to another, in such cases there is no embezzlement." People v. Dougherty, 77 Pac. 466, 143 Cal. 593 (citing People v. Johnson, 27 Pac. 663, 91 Cal. 265).

Defendant obtained possession of money and personal property belonging to another under an agreement to hold it as security for the performance of certain duties connected with a contract of employment entered into between the parties, and upon the termination of such employment he refused to return the property in his possession and appropriated it to his own use. Held, that the crime of "embezzlement," as defined by Pen. Code, § 508, was made out. People v. Ward, 111 Pac. 265, 266, 14 Cal. App. 143.

Under the statute defining "embezzlement" as the fraudulent appropriation of property by a person to whom it has been intrusted, to constitute embezzlement it must be shown that the property was received by the taker as a bailment, or the right of possession was intrusted to him by the owner, with intent to confer on the taker the present use or possession of the property, to be afterwards redelivered to the owner, and that the taker received the same, intending to comply with the terms under which he received it, and after he received it with such intent he converted it to his own use, intending to deprive the owner thereof. Flohr v. Territory, 78 Pac. 565, 570, 14 Okl. 477.

Section 121 of the Criminal Code defines "embezzlement," generally, and prescribes the punishment therefor, and in other cases not covered by this section, if one obtains possession of property with the consent of the owner, so that he does not become a trespasser in so doing, and afterwards converts the property to his own use with intent to steal the same, he may be prosecuted under the act of 1875 (Laws 1875, p. 26). Under the information in this case, charging that the defendant did steal the property in question, there could be no conviction without proof that the owner did not consent that the defendant should take and remove from its hiding place such secreted valuables as he might find on the premises. If the owner consented that the defendant should take possession of the property found for the purpose of delivering it to some other person, or for any purpose whatever, such taking of the property would not be unlawful, and there can be no larceny without an unlawful taking. Cohoe v. State, 113 N. W. 532, 533, 79 Neb. 811.

"Embezzlement" is the fraudulent conversion of property by the person to whom it has been intrusted, and to constitute the crime there must be a conversion, either actual or constructive, so that where no time is fixed for the delivery of property, a demand is necessary to terminate a lawful possession, but where the time of delivery and the person to whom the delivery shall be made are fixed, the retention of the property after such time amounts to a conversion and no demand is necessary. State v. Ensley, 97 N. E. 113, 115, 177 Ind. 483.

The crime of embezzlement as defined by St. 1898, § 4418, embraces the fraudulent conversion of the property embezzled, and such conversion may be proved without a demand, which is necessary only where proof thereof is essential to establish a conversion, notwithstanding section 4419 making the refusal of a person to pay over moneys in his custody prima facie evidence of the embezzlement thereof. Prinslow v. State, 121 N. W. 637, 638, 140 Wis. 131.

Under Acts 1902, p. 151, c. 66, providing that any person who shall sell or dispose of or convert to his own use any money or property or other things of value, without the consent of the owner thereof, shall be punished, where a trustee fraudulently converts to his own use the personal property of his cestui que trust, the indictment need not allege a demand for payment or refusal on the part of accused to pay over, for, under the statute, the offense of "embezzlement" is complete when the trustee fraudulently and feloniously misappropriates the trust fund by wrongfully converting it to his own use. Commonwealth v. Kelley, 101 S. W. 315, 316, 125 Ky. 245, 15 Ann. Cas. 573.

Nature of possession

To constitute "embezzlement," defendant should stand in a fiduciary relation to another person named, within the terms of the statute; that he was a servant, clerk, treasurer, or employé. State v. Ives, 54 South. 796, 128 La. 273, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 901.

In "embezzlement" it is necessary to prove that defendant came into possession of the property as bailee. State v. Seeney, 59 Atl. 48, 49, 5 Pennewill, 142.

Where no fiduciary relation of principal and agent existed between prosecuting witness and accused, the latter was not guilty of "embezzlement." Bryant v. State (Tex.) 122 S. W. 543, 544.

Under Pen. Code, § 426, providing that every clerk, agent, or servant, who fraudulently appropriates any property of another which has come into his control by virtue of such employment, is guilty of "embezzlement," there are three essentials of the crime: (1) The act of fraudulent appropriation of money; (2) the relation of clerk, agent, or servant, on the part of the appropriator, at the time of such appropriation, and the owner of the property thus appropriated; and (3) the acquirement by the appropriator of the care or control of the money or property appropriated by virtue of his employment as such clerk, agent, or servant. And hence an indictment alleging that defendant, as agent of a certain person, received a sum of money, and that, on another date, he unlawfully appropriated it to his own use, was fatally defective for failure to allege that defendant was an agent or clerk, at the time of the appropriation. Thomas v. Territory, 80 Pac. 320, 321, 9 Ariz. 180.

In order to constitute "embezzlement" under Cr. Code, § 75, declaring guilty of larceny an agent who "embezzles" any property of his employer, the fraudulent conversion must be of the property of another, and where an agent or employé has possession of money from which she had a right to deduct commissions belonging to her, she was a joint owner and not guilty of "embezzlement" for its conversion. McElroy v. People, 66 N. E. 1058, 1059, 202 Ill. 473.

Under Pen. Code, § 460, providing that every broker, agent, or person otherwise intrusted with, or having in his control, property for the use of another party, who fraudulently appropriates it to any use or purpose not in the due or lawful execution of his trust, is guilty of "embezzlement," an indictment which charges that a person has been intrusted with the property in question for the use of another person, and that he has fraudulently appropriated it to some use or purpose not in the due and lawful execution of such trust, is sufficient description of the offense. De Leon v. Territory, 80 Pac. 348, 350, 9 Ariz. 161.

Pen. Code, § 458, declaring that every officer of this territory, or of any county, city, etc., and every deputy clerk, or servant of any such officer, and every officer, director, trustee, clerk, etc., of any association, society, or corporation, who fraudulently appropriates to his own use or purposes, not in the due and lawful execution of his trust, any property which he has in his possession or under his control by virtue of his trust, or secretes it with a fraudulent intent to appropriate it to such use or purpose, is guilty of embezzlement, was meant to apply to persons having fiduciary relations, such as public officers, and officers and agents of corporations, public and private, and to sustain a conviction thereunder, three facts must be shown: (1) The trust relation; (2) the possession or control of property by virtue of the trust; and (3) the fraudulent appropriation of the property, not in the due and lawful execution of the trust. Hinds v. Territory, 76 Pac. 463, 470, 8 Ariz. 372 (citing Territory v. Meyer, 24 Pac. 183, 3 Ariz. 199).

While the essential elements of "embezzlement" are the fiduciary relations arising where one intrusts property to another and the fraudulent appropriation of the property, an information for embezzlement of the proceeds of a certificate of deposit alleging, in the language of Pen. Code, § 507, prohibiting embezzlement by a bailee, that defendant received the certificate of deposit as bailee, is sufficient without allegations of a fiduciary relation. People v. O'Brian, 97 Pac. 679, 680, 8 Cal. App. 641 (citing People v. Gordon, 65 Pac. 746, 133 Cal. 328, 85 Am. St. Rep. 174; People v. Goodrich, 75 Pac. 793, 142 Cal. 216).

2 Rev. St. (1st Ed.) pt. 4, c. 1, tit. 3, § 59, punishes in the manner prescribed for felonious stealing any corporate officer, etc., who shall embezzle without his employer's consent any money, etc., which shall have come into his possession by virtue of such employment, which section was further amended and extended in 1874, as shown by 3 Rev. St. (6th Ed.) pt. 4, c. 1, tit. 3, § 73. Pen. Code, § 528, subd. 2, makes any person guilty of larceny, who, having in his possession, custody, or control, as officer of any corporation, etc., any money, etc., appropriates it to his own use. Defendants were president and vice president, respectively, of a bank. The president was given direct control over all employés, was required to countersign checks, which duty, with the trustees' consent, might be delegated to the vice president, who could perform the president's duties in his absence. The treasurer had custody of all moneys and a committee consisting of all three officers, together with the secretary, was given general supervision of the business between the meetings of the trustees. A company in which defendants were interested made drafts upon them which were satisfied by funds of the bank taken therefrom by the treasurer by defendants' direction, which funds were replaced by defendants' checks, which all the officers knew were worthless. Held, that physical possession was not essential to custody or control, and, in view of the history of the provision, defendants had "possession, custody, or control" of the funds misappropriated so as to make them guilty of larceny under subdivision 2. People v. Britton, 118 N. Y. Supp. 989, 993, 134 App. Div. 275.

Where a laundress, on discovering in a clothes basket money belonging to her employer accidentally placed therein, knew her duty was to return it, but before returning it fraudulently converted the money, she was guilty of embezzlement under Gen. St. 1903, § 3311, condemning the act by a servant as to anything of value which has come into his possession by reason of his employment. Neal v. State, 46 South. 845, 846, 55 Fla. 140, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 371.

In considering whether or not a person accused of "embezzlement" was a "servant," an "agent," or the like, it should be borne in mind that in the law of embezzlement there cannot be a "clerk" without an employer, a "servant" without a master, or an "agent" without a principal. The gist of the offense of embezzlement is a breach of trust and the statutes defining such offense have no application to appropriation of property by a person unless he held a relation of confidence or trust towards the owner, and had possession of the property by virtue of that relation and converted it in violation of the trust reposed in him. The word "agent," as employed in such statute, is used in its popular sense, meaning one who undertakes to transact some business, or to manage some affair for another by authority, and on account of the latter, and to render an account of it. A person in the employ of another, who in the discharge of his duties is subject to the immediate direction and control of his master, is a "servant." The words "clerk" and "servant" imply in some one the power of control. Tipton v. State, 43 South. 684, 686, 53 Fla. 69.

Under Acts 1903, p. 89, c. 18, § 19, to constitute embezzlement it is necessary to show that the relation of the person charged with the property embezzled is such as is embraced in the statute, that it is the property of another, that it came into the possession of the accused by virtue of his employment, and his manner of dealing with it constituted a fraudulent appropriation to his own use, and that such appropriation was with intent to deprive the owner thereof. State v. Moyer, 52 S. E. 30, 32, 58 W. Va. 146.

An affidavit, founded on Acts 1905, p. 671, c. 169, § 392, providing that every employé, who, having access to, control, or possession of any money, to the possession of which his employer is entitled, shall, while in such employment, appropriate the same to his own use, shall be guilty of "embezzlement," which avers that accused was the employé of a designated association, and "as such employé" had possession of money of the association, which he appropriated to his own use, is fatally bad for failing to aver that he obtained possession of the money by virtue of his employment. Wright v. State, 81 N. E. 660, 168 Ind. 643.

An agent, with authority to collect money and retain a part for his services, is, on converting to his own use the entire amount collected, guilty of embezzlement, within Ky. St. 1903, § 1202, punishing any agent who shall embezzle or convert to his own use the money of his principal, though he was entitled to 15 per cent. of the amount as his commission. Commonwealth v. Jacobs, 104 S. W. 345, 846, 126 Ky. 536, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 511, 15 Ann. Cas. 1226.

Under Pen. Code, defining "embezzlement," the offense consists of an agent's fraudulent misapplication or conversion to his own use, without the consent of his principal or employer, of money or property of the principal or employer, or which may have come into his possession, or is under his control, by virtue of his office, agency, or employment. Hamer v. State, 131 S. W. 813, 815, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 341.

16 Del. Laws, c. 153, makes it embezzlement for a servant or agent, having property in his possession as such, to wrongfully convert it to his own use, though the property has never been in the possession of the master or employer. Acts Gen. Assem. May 3, 1893 (19 Del. Laws, c. 782), makes one guilty of a misdemeanor who, being a bailee of money or property, the subject of larceny, embezzles or fraudulently converts it to his own use. Held, that the statutes made it "embezzlement" to fraudulently appropriate to his own use personalty of another coming into the appropriator's hands lawfully with the owner's consent, as his bailee or in any other fiduciary capacity. State v. Brewington (Del.) 78 Atl. 402, 404.

Crimes Act 1905, § 392, denounces as embezzlement the purloining, secreting, etc., of money deposited with or held by a person, firm, corporation, or association, by its officer, agent, or employé, who has access to or possession of the money converted. An affidavit purporting to present a charge of embezzlement alleged that a certain person was treasurer of an Odd Fellows Lodge, "and as such treasurer * * * had control and possession" of a sum of money, "the property of the said * * * order of Odd Fellows," and while such treasurer and so possessed of the money converted it. Held that, although the affidavit does not allege that the money was in possession of such defendant "by virtue of his employment," a "treasurer" is one who is intrusted with money, and "as such" means "in that particular character," so that the allegation that the defendant was a treasurer, and as such had control of the funds which he converted, means that the character of his possession was in his trust relationship, and renders the affidavit sufficient to charge the offense denounced. Frost v. State (Ind.) 99 N. E. 419, 422.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 503, 508, defining "embezzlement" as the fraudulent appropriation of property by a person to whom it has been "intrusted," and declaring that a clerk, agent, or servant who fraudulently appropriates to his own use any property of another which has come into his control or care by virtue of his employment is guilty of embezzlement, it is of the essence of the crime that the misappropriation be of property "intrusted" to the defendant, and where defendant informed witness that he could sell goods dealt in by witness to a certain person, and would do so for a certain commission, and the witness was to collect the price and defendant to return for his commission, and witness shipped the goods, and defendant went with them, sold them as his own, and appropriated the proceeds, and witness testified that defendant was not in his employ and had no authority to collect the money, the defendant was not guilty of "embezzlement." People v. Dougherty, 77 Pac. 466, 467, 143 Cal. 593.

Under Pen. Code, § 508, defining "embezzlement" by an agent or servant, it is necessary to prove that the accused was an agent, that the property came into his hands as the property of his employer, that he received it in the course of his employment, and that he appropriated it to his own use with intent to steal it. People v. Hemple, 87 Pac. 227, 229, 4 Cal. App. 120 (citing Pen. Code, §§ 506, 508; Ex parte Hedley, 31 Cal. 108; People v. Gordon, 133 Cal. 326, 65 Pac. 746, 85 Am. St. Rep. 174; Pullam v. State, 78 Ala. 31, 56 Am. Rep. 21).

Property subject

Code, § 841, describing embezzlement by a receiver as the fraudulent conversion to his own use of property which "may come" into his possession by virtue of his employment, comprehends property in the hands of the receiver before the passage of the act, but embezzled thereafter. Fields v. United States, 27 App. D. C. 433, 439.

Under Rev. St. § 6842, making it embezzlement for certain persons to convert to their own use anything of value that shall come into their possession by virtue of their office or employment, the secretary of a building association, who procured the checks of the association payable to fictitious persons, which checks were indorsed to him according to the usual custom of the association, and applied the proceeds to his own use, was guilty of embezzlement, as such checks which he converted were things of value within such section. Livingston v. Fidelity Deposit Co., 27 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 662, 663.

Series of acts

"Embezzlement" is a crime defined by statute, and the Legislature may declare what acts shall constitute it, and fix the measure of punishment. One element of the offense is the fiduciary or confidential relation existing which affords the amplest opportunity to misappropriate money, funds, and securities. The offense may consist of many acts done in a series of years, and the crime is the aggregate result rather than any particular act. Willis v. State, 83 South. 226, 234, 134 Ala. 429.

In a prosecution for embezzlement by a bank officer on a certain date, evidence tending to show "embezzlement" of different amounts at different times before that date, and the manner in which he continued the business of the bank, is admissible, since the body of the crime consists of many acts done by virtue of the confidential relation existing between the employer and the employé with funds, moneys, or securities over which the servant is given care or custody in whole or in part by virtue of his employment, the separate acts may not be susceptible of direct proof, but the aggregate result is, and that is "embezzlement." Chamberlain v. State, 115 N. W. 555, 557, 80 Neb. 812.

Larceny distinguished

At common law, possession was a necessary element of "larceny," and the distinction between "larceny" and "embezzlement" depends on the nature of the possession and the manner of obtaining it, and it would seem that a mere credit is not the subject of "larceny" at common law. Higbee v. State, 104 N. W. 748, 749, 74 Neb. 331.

Larceny and embezzlement are distinguishable, in that in larceny possession of the property may be obtained by fraud, while it cannot be so obtained in embezzlement. People v. Grider, 110 Pac. 586, 588, 18 Cal. App. 703.

The crimes of embezzlement and larceny are so different in their character that they should be treated in an indictment as distinct and separate offenses. State v. Finnegan, 103 N. W. 155, 157, 127 Iowa, 286, 4 Ann. Cas. 628.

The term "embezzle" as used in the statute, is a broader term than "larceny," but not exclusive of it. State v. Sullivan, 21 South. 688, 689, 49 La. Ann. 200, 62 Am. St. Rep. 644; State v. Pellerin, 43 South. 159, 161, 118 La. 547.

"Embezzlement" is defined as the fraudulent appropriation of property by a person to whom such property has been intrusted or into whose hands it has lawfully come. It differs from larceny in the fact that the original taking of the property was lawful or with the consent of the owner, while in larceny the felonious intent must have existed at the time of the taking. United States v. Allen, 150 Fed. 152, 153 (citing Moore v. United States, 16 Sup. Ct. 294, 295, 160 U. S. 268, 269, 40 L. Ed. 422).

The crime of embezzlement differs in its essential ingredients from the crime of larceny in this: that in larceny the gravamen of the offense is the unlawful and felonious taking of personal property with the intent to convert and steal the same, while in embezzlement the taking is lawful, because of the trust reposed in the agent, servant, or trustee receiving it, and the gist of the offense consists of the conversion of the property so received with a felonious and fraudulent intent of converting the same to the use of the agent, servant, or trustee. State v. Culver, 97 N. W. 1015, 1016, 5 Neb. (Unof.) 238.

Where a person honestly receives the possession of goods, chattels, or the money of another on any trust, express or implied, and after receiving them fraudulently converts them to his own use, he may be guilty of "embezzlement" but not of "larceny," except as "embezzlement" is by statute made "larceny." State v. Buck, 84 S. W. 951, 952, 186 Mo. 15, 2 Ann. Cas. 1007 (citing Commonwealth v. Barry, 124 Mass. 325).

The distinction between larceny by fraud and embezzlement is determined as to the time when a fraudulent intent to convert arose, and in larceny the criminal intent must exist at the time of the taking, and if the taker received the property as a bailment with intent to conform to the owner's wishes and thereafter fraudulently appropriates the property, the crime is embezzlement under Snyder's Comp. Laws 1909, §§ 2591 and 2609. Where the owner of personalty voluntarily parts with its possession for a particular purpose, and the person receiving possession for that purpose has at the time a fraudulent intent to make use of such possession as a means of converting the property to his own use, the crime is larceny. Bivens v. State, 120 Pac. 1033, 1036, 6 Okl. Cr. 521.

"Where one honestly receives the possession of goods upon trust, and after receiving them fraudulently converts them to his own use, it is a case of 'embezzlement.' If the possession has been obtained by fraud, trick, or device, and the owner of it intends to part with his title when he gives up possession, the offense, if any, is obtaining money by 'false pretenses.' But where the possession has been obtained through a trick or device, with the intent, at the time the party receives it, to convert the same to his own use, and the owner of the property parts with the possession and not with the title, the offense is 'larceny.'" Where a person gave money to another as a stakeholder on a bet, such delivery having been brought about by fraud and artifice of the stakeholder, who intended to appropriate the money in any event, and who did so, the offense was larceny. State v. Ryan, 82 Pac. 703, 706, 47 Or. 338, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 862 (quoting and adopting the statement in People v. Tomlinson, 36 Pac. 506, 507, 102 Cal. 19, 23).

"The distinction between 'larceny' and 'embezzlement' is one fully recognized in the criminal law of this state, as well as in England. While the two offenses have much in common, for the purpose of prosecution they have uniformly been regarded as distinct. In every larceny there must be a trespass in the original taking of the property; that is, in larceny the felonious intent must have existed at the time of the taking." State v. Casey, 105 S. W. 645, 647, 207 Mo. 1, 123 Am. St. Rep. 367, 13 Ann. Cas. 878 (citing State v. Shermer, 55 Mo. 83; State v. Ware, 62 Mo. 602).

"One who obtains money or goods by some fraudulent trick or artifice, and carries them away, is guilty of 'larceny.'" Thus where one marries a woman in pursuance of a scheme to procure money which she has on deposit in bank, and later procures a check for the money on representations that he will use the money in making an investment for her, he is guilty of larceny and not embezzlement. Hunt v. State, 79 S. W. 769, 771, 72 Ark. 241, 65 L. R. A. 71, 105 Am. St. Rep. 34, 2 Ann. Cas. 33 (citing Beasley v. State, 38 N. E. 35, 138 Ind. 552, 46 Am. St. Rep. 418).

To constitute "larceny," as distinguished from "embezzlement," there must be a trespass to the possession, but it is larceny where one gains possession of another's personal property so as to constitute only a bare custody, or procures it by subterfuge; the owner's property not being divested in such case, he still having constructive possession. Boswell v. State, 56 South. 21, 22, 1 Ala. App. 178.

According to Pen. Code, § 528, "larceny" includes every act which was larceny at common law, and in addition such acts as formerly constituted "false pretenses" and "embezzlement." At common law, if a person honestly and in good faith received possession of personal property in trust, and thereafter converted the same to his own use, he was guilty of "embezzlement." If he obtained possession of the property by fraud, the owner intending nevertheless to part with the title as well as the possession, the offense was obtaining property under "false pretenses." If the possession was wrongfully or fraudulently obtained, without the owner's consent, and without color of title, and with a felonious intent of converting the property to the use of the taker or another, the offense was "larceny." People ex rel. Perkins v. Moss, 99 N. Y. Supp. 138, 144, 145, 113 App. Div. 329 (citing People v. Miller, 62 N. E. 418, 169 N. Y. 350, 88 Am. St. Rep. 546).

"Larceny" was a crime at common law and consisted of a trespass, committed in the taking of the personal goods and chattels of another with intent to convert them to the taker's use, without the consent of the owner. "Embezzlement" cannot be committed unless the defendant is in the lawful possession of the property at the time of the conversion. As trespass is an injury to the possession only, it logically and legally follows that one in the lawful possession of goods cannot commit larceny of them, for it were idle and absurd to talk of one committing an injury to his own possession. Embezzlement consists in the breach of some trust relation by one in the lawful possession of the personal property of another who fraudulently converts it to his own use. In larceny, there is no breach of any confidential relation as in embezzlement, while in the latter crime there is no trespass as in larceny. State v. Browning, 82 Pac. 955, 956, 47 Or. 470.

"Larceny" at common law was the felonious taking of the property of another against his will with intent to convert it to the use of the taker, or, as some authorities hold, the use of the taker or third person. "Embezzlement" consists in the fraudulent appropriation to one's own use of money or goods intrusted to him by another. In larceny the felonious intent must have existed at the time of taking, whereas in embezzlement the fraudulent act consists in the appropriation of the property to the use of the taker or third party; but the felonious or fraudulent intent is of the essence of the offense in each case. Where an insurance agent was entitled under his contract with the company to a credit of three months on his monthly balances due the company, the fact that at the end of the three months he was unable to pay or simply failed to pay, with no proof of a fraudulent disposition of the money, would not have established embezzlement. The mere failure to pay a debt without compulsion even by one having the financial ability is neither larceny nor embezzlement. Williams v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 66 Atl. 495, 496, 105 Md. 490.

Misapplication distinguished

The statute defining embezzlement does not make a failure to account for a trust fund or a fund received by an agent or officer an offense, but the essence of the offense is the wrongful conversion of the fund. State v. Mispagel, 106 S. W. 513, 519, 207 Mo. 557.

Under Code, § 4840, making the conversion of money coming into the hands of public officers "embezzlement," the crime consists in the conversion and not in a failure to account, and therefore an indictment need not allege a demand or failure to account. State v. Hoffman, 112 N. W. 103, 105, 134 Iowa, 587.

"Not every wrongful conversion, even by a bailee or trustee without legal authority to sell, is an 'embezzlement.' To constitute that crime, the conversion must be actuated by the fraudulent purpose to deprive the owner of his property. For instance, if this guardian, having collected $300 on a note held for his ward, and having at the same time a like sum to his own credit in the bank, should without any fraudulent purpose use the trust money in his hands for private purposes, and then go at once to the bank and have the same amount transferred from his personal to his trust account, he would perhaps be chargeable with a technical conversion, but would not be guilty of embezzlement. So, too, if, holding a note for his ward which is of doubtful value, he meets an opportunity to sell it for the full sum of principal and interest, and makes the sale in good faith and for his ward's benefit, though without any order or direction of the court, he may have exceeded the letter of his legal authority, but he has committed no crime. Now, if, in the first of the hypothetical cases, the guardian on the following day conceives and carries out a fraudulent purpose to convert the money in the bank to his own use, and is indicted therefor, he cannot successfully defend on the theory that, if there was any embezzlement, it was the use of the specific money collected, and not the use of the money which had been substituted for it in the bank. People v. Bringard, 39 Mich. 22, 33 Am. Rep. 344. And in the other case, if the guardian should fraudulently convert to his own use the money for which he sold the note held for his ward, we think he could be heard to say that the embezzlement, if any, was of the money, but not of the note." State v. Dishrow, 106 N. W. 263, 265, 130 Iowa, 19, 8 Ann. Cas. 190.

As steal

See Steal.

Theft distinguished

One assisting a person, having possession, as employé, of horses of another, in driving them away with the purpose of appropriating them, is guilty of "embezzlement" and is not guilty of "theft." Pearce v. State, 98 S. W. 861, 862, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 507.

"Embezzlement" partakes largely of the qualities and nature of theft, in that it is a peculiar way of converting money obtained by virtue of a trust relation. The fraudulent idea pervades embezzlement as it does theft. The difference mainly in the two offenses consists in the manner of obtaining possession of the property, and the time the fraudulent intent was conceived," and there is no variance between an indictment charging embezzlement of specified property of a designated person and proof that the property was held by such person as guardian of others. Leach v. State, 81 S. W. 733, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 507.

EMBEZZLEMENT OF PUBLIC MON- EYS

Rev. St. § 5497, extends the crime of embezzlement of public money to "every * * * person * * * who uses, transfers, converts, appropriates, or applies any portion of the public money for any purpose not prescribed by law." United States v. Greene, 146 Fed. 778-780.

The embezzlement of the funds of a savings bank, established, maintained, and owned by a city in Germany, by a cashier who is a public official appointed by the city, is an "embezzlement of public moneys," within the meaning of the treaty of 1852 between Prussia and the other states of the Germanic Confederation and the United States. In re Reiner, 122 Fed. 109, 110.

EMBLEM

See Conflict in Emblems.

Under Ky. St. 1903, § 1453, authorizing state conventions of political parties to adopt a figure or device, and providing that such device may be any appropriate symbol, but that any "emblem" common to the people at large shall not be so used, conceding that the words "device," "emblem," "symbol," and "figure" mean the same thing, which is that the device or figure used may be such symbol as will represent a particular idea, and also conceding that a figure of a book with words indicating that it represents the Holy Bible is such a type of symbol common to all the people, the use of such device on local option ballots which did not require any emblem or device was a mere irregularity and did not invalidate the election. Erwin v. Benton, 87 S. W. 291, 296, 120 Ky. 536, 9 Ann. Cas. 264.

EMBLEMENTS

"Emblements" at common law embraced not only corn sown, but roots planted, or other annual artificial crops. Under Ky. St. 1903, §§ 3862, 3863, providing that all the "emblements" of the lands of a person dying after the 1st day of March which shall be severed before the last day of December following shall be assets in the hands of his personal representatives and that all the emblements growing on the land at that time shall pass with the land to the heir or remainderman, a lessee under a lease from the owner of a third person's life estate, executed in September for a term of one year from March 1st following, who had sown wheat on the premises previous to the death of the third person in October, was not entitled to an interest on the wheat as "emblements," since it could not be severed from the land before the last day of December following. Devers v. May, 99 S. W. 255, 257, 124 Ky. 887 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Blackstone, p. 121).

A tenant for life who sows land is entitled through his legal representatives to the growing crops, in case the estate determined by his death before the produce can be gathered. These profits are termed "emblements."

A deed conveying land and the "rents, issues, and profits thereof" was deposited with a third person in escrow, to be delivered to the grantee on the grantor's death. The grantor leased the land for a share of the crops. Held that, on the grantor's death while the crops were growing on the land, the grantee was entitled to the share agreed on as rent. Wilhoit v. Salmon, 80 Pac. 705, 706, 146 Cal. 444.

Where a tenant from year to year sows a crop, and before the end of a year and before the crop is harvested abandons the land and gives notice that he will not take it another year, and the surrender is accepted, he is not entitled to the crop as "emblements," though in abandoning the lease he reserved the crop, where such condition was not accepted by the landlord. Hatfield v. Lawton, 95 N. Y. Supp. 451, 452, 108 App. Div. 113.

"Emblements" are corn and other crops of the earth which are produced annually, not spontaneously, but by labor and industry, and for this reason are called "fructus industriales." In re Andersen's Estate, 118 N. W. 1108, 1110, 83 Neb. 8, 131 Am. St. Rep. 613.

Fruits and trees

"Emblements," as between landlord and tenant, consist of such annual productions of the soil as are raised by a tenant's labor, as corn, hops, flax, roots, and the like, but does not extend to things not of annual growth and which do not require the labor of the tenant to produce them, such as trees, fruit, etc. Floralta Sawmill Co. v. J. T. Parrish, 46 So. 461, 462, 155 Ala. 462.

Grass

"Emblements" do not include grass which is not an annual crop. Floralta Sawmill Co. v. J. T. Parrish, 46 South. 461, 462, 155 Ala. 462.

EMBRACE

In a grant by the government of a section of land, "to embrace the buildings thereon," the word "embrace" means to inclose, as by surrounding or encircling. Story v. Woolverton, 78 Pac. 589, 590, 31 Mont. 346.

Under a statute authorizing the city council to annex by ordinance any tract adjoining any first-class city, but not within its limits, if it has been platted, or whenever any tract is included or embraced within corporate limits, but has not been made a part of the city, the boundary line must be unbroken and separate property within from that without at every point, and, when property is excluded from its limits by its boundary line, it is not "included" or "embraced" within the city within the statute, so as to authorize annexation; those words being synonymous. City of Pueblo v. Stanton, 102 Pac. 512, 514, 45 Colo. 523.

The word "expressed," as used in the constitutional provision requiring the object of every act to be expressed in the title, is not synonymous with the word "embraced" as used therein, providing what shall be embraced in an act. Jersey City v. Speer, 72 Atl. 448, 451, 78 N. J. Law, 34.

The phrase, "if embraced in the stenographer's report," in Acts 1903, p. 219, c. 112, § 5, means that the report should contain mention and such reasonable description of any documentary evidence as will identify the same, in order to guard against the incorporation in the clerk's transcript of instruments not offered in evidence, and does not require the stenographer to make full copy of such evidence in his notes. Colorado & S. Ry. Co. v. Hamm, 103 S. W. 1125, 1126, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 196.

EMBRACERY

Embracery consists in all such practices as tend corruptly to influence a juror. The crime is made up of the attempt thus to influence a juror. Upon such attempt being made, whether successful or not, the crime is consummate. The corpus delicti, the essence and body of the offense, being a corrupt attempt, it is wholly immaterial whether the would-be corrupter gains his point or not, or whether the juror thus approached gives any verdict or not, or whether the verdict be true or false. State v. Woodward, 81 S. W. 857, 861, 182 Mo. 391, 103 Am. St. Rep. 646 (quoting State v. Williams, 88 S. W. 75, 136 Mo. 303).

Unsuccessful attempt

"Embracery" * * * was an offense at common law, and is of ancient origin. It consists, in short, of an attempt to corruptly influence a jury, * * *, and, embracery being an attempt as well as a consummated injury, there is no such thing as an attempt to commit it, as an attempt is the offense itself." State v. Davis, 87 S. W. 33, 112 Mo. App. 346.

EMBROIDERY

Webster defines to "embroider" as to ornament with needlework, and "embroidery" as "needlework used to enrich textile fabrics." So-called openwork articles, having ornamental designs stitched thereon by hand with a needle and thread, are held to be "embroideries" within the meaning of the Tariff Act. On the question of whether certain imported openwork articles were embroideries, the testimony of a clerk of the importers, who had never bought or sold embroideries, and whose only knowledge was as to the designation of the goods in the linen trade, was insufficient to establish the commercial scope of the expression "embroideries," or to prove that the goods, though embroidered in fact, were not embroidery in a commercial sense. Neuss, Hesselein & Co. v. United States, 142 Fed. 281, 282.

The "embroidery" of a single letter upon the corner of a handkerchief is so limited in its extent and of such comparative narrowness as not to require that the handkerchiefs should be regarded as embroidered. To the common apprehension, the term "embroidery," as applied to a handkerchief, implies ornamentation, whereas, an initial, whether embroidered or otherwise affixed to the handkerchief, is a mark of identification. The fact that the expense of the embroidering of the initial formed a considerable proportion of the entire cost of the handkerchief is not material, and this additional expense does not make it an embroidered handkerchief. It is still an initial handkerchief, both in commercial and in popular designation. United States v. Borgfeldt, 123 Fed. 196, 197 (quoting United States v. Jonas, 83 Fed. 167, 169, 27 C. C. A. 500; United States v. Harden, 68 Fed. 182, 15 C. C. A. 358).

The provision in Tariff Act 1897, par. 339, 30 Stat. 181, for "embroidery" and articles "embroidered in any manner," does not include articles stitched on the edge merely to prevent raveling. The fundamental idea of embroidery is that it is needlework done upon a previously completed fabric as distinguished from tapestry or lace work in which the design is a part of the original fabric. It is also essential that it should be ornamental, rather than merely useful. United States v. Waentig, 168 Fed. 570, 571.

Thread or yarn used chiefly for machine embroidering are "embroidery cottons" within paragraph 303, Tariff Act 1897. Loeb & Schoenfeld v. United States, 143 Fed. 698, 699.

"Embroidery cottons," as used in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule I, par. 303, do not include so-called No. 60, 5-ply thread or yarn used in embroidering machines not within the class generally or commercially known as "embroidery cottons"; the meaning of the words, rather than the chief or individual use, being the test of classification. Loeb & Schoenfeld v. United States, 150 Fed. 327, 328, 80 C. C. A. 211.

Under the proviso in Tariff Act 1897, par. 339, 30 Stat. 170, prescribing that embroidered articles shall not pay a less rate of duty than is applicable to "any embroideries of the materials of which such embroidery is composed," held, that silk-embroidered screens, composed of wood and other materials, are liable to the rate provided for silk embroideries in par. 390, 30 Stat. 187. The rule of "noscitur a sociis" does not operate to exclude such articles by reason of the enumeration in the same paragraph of laces, trimmings, etc. Lichtenstein Millinery Co. v. United States, 154 Fed. 736 (citing United States v. Altman, 107 Fed. 15, 46 C. C. A.

116; Carter, Webster & Co. v. United States, 137 Fed. 978).

The provision for articles "embroidered" in Tariff Act 1897, par. 339, 30 Stat. 181, held to include so-called "drawnwork" goods, consisting of fabrics in which an openwork effect has been produced by drawing out certain of the threads and interjecting different and independent threads, and which have ornamental work and figures in various portions of the goods. Beach v. Sharpe, 154 Fed. 543, 544.

Fur garments, ready to wear, lined with silk and trimmed with embroidery, are "embroidered articles," though the fur itself has not been embroidered. Hugo Jaeckel & Son v. United States, 178 Fed. 260, 261, 101 C. C. A. 620.

Embroidered fans are subject only to the provision in Tariff Act 1897, par. 427, 30 Stat. 191, for "fans of all kinds," not being within the scope of the proviso in paragraph 339, 30 Stat. 181, imposing the embroidery rate on "embroidered wearing apparel or other article or textile fabric." United States v. Quong Lee & Co., 173 Fed. 819, 821.

EMERGENCY

See Extraordinary Emergency.

See, also, Error in Extremis.

An "emergency" is an event or occasional combination of circumstances calling for immediate action, pressing necessity, a sudden or unexpected happening, exigency. Colfax County v. Butler County, 120 N. W. 444, 447, 83 Neb. 803; Parker v. City of Monroe, 55 South. 587, 589, 128 La. 951.

The word "emergency" is defined in Cent. Dict. as follows: "(2) A sudden or unexpected happening; an unforeseen occurrence or condition; specifically, a perplexing contingency or complication of circumstances. (3) A sudden or unexpected occasion for action; exigency; pressing necessity." United States v. Sheridan-Kirk Contract Co., 149 Fed. 809, 814.

The word "emergency" signifies some sudden or unexpected necessity, requiring immediate or at least quick action. Mallon v. Board of Water Com'rs, 128 S. W. 764, 765, 144 Mo. App. 104.

The term "emergency," as used in a statute authorizing the borrowing of money to meet an emergency on the authorization of the advisory board of a town, is an event or occasional combination of circumstances which calls for immediate action or remedy; the word being synonymous with "pressing necessity" or "exigency." Id.

A contract to order goods from defendant provided that plaintiff would take the same currently as specified on order between certain dates, subject to plaintiff's privilege to change sizes from those specified, and to cancel in the event of an "emergency" such portions of the order as had not been taken in work by defendant. Held, that the contract was not lacking in mutuality, as plaintiff was bound to order and to take the goods between the dates indicated, except in the event of an "emergency," by which was meant, not plaintiff's whim or wish, but some unforeseen event or unexpected combination of circumstances, which, in view of the business to which the contract related, would furnish a reasonably substantial ground for cancellation. Semon Bache & Co. v. Coppes, Zook & Mutschler Co., 74 N. E. 41-43, 35 Ind. App. 351, 111 Am. St. Rep. 171.

"An 'emergency' is a condition of things appearing suddenly or unexpectedly; that is, it is an unforeseen occurrence. As related to the law of negligence, it may properly be defined as any event or combination of circumstances which call for immediate action without giving time for the deliberate exercise of judgment or discretion, in short, an emergency." Mayott v. Norcross, 52 Atl. 894, 896, 24 R. I. 187; Morancy v. Hennessey, 52 Atl. 1021, 1025, 24 R. I. 205 (quoting and adopting definition in Mayott v. Norcross, 52 Atl. 894, 24 R. I. 187).

A girl was employed in feeding a mangle in a laundry; she had been instructed as to her duties, and had been warned by the boss of the machine to be careful lest her hands be caught in the rollers. A sheet which she was feeding into the mangle stuck in passing over a roughness on the table of the machine, and in pushing it the sheet gave way, and her hand was drawn between the rollers and injured. Held, that it could not be said that there was an "emergency" relieving plaintiff from the rule as to assumption of risk. Morancy v. Hennessey, 52 Atl. 1021, 1025, 24 R. I. 205.

A servant experienced in his work and knowing that it cannot be safely performed without assistance attempted to do it alone and was injured. There was nothing to divert his attention, no defect in the machinery, nor anything to show lack of opportunity for deliberation, except that, knowing his employer was in a hurry for the work to be done, he attempted to do it alone. Held, that there was no such "emergency" as would prevent him from being deemed to have assumed the risks incident to doing the work alone. Mayott v. Norcross, 52 Atl. 894-896, 24 R. I. 187.

In the sudden and unexpected starting of a street car while a passenger is attempting to board, there is presented an emergency; an "emergency" being a sudden or unexpected happening or occasion calling for immediate action. Burger v. Omaha & C. B. St. Ry. Co., 117 N. W. 35, 38, 139 Iowa, 645, 130 Am. St. Rep. 343.

Where it was shown that the use of the emergency brake on a railroad train was unusual and unnecessary on ordinary occasions, it devolved on the railroad company, when sued for injuries caused by the sudden stop from its use, to show that an "emergency" existed justifying the engineer in applying the emergency brake. Benedict v. Chicago Great Western Ry. Co., 78 S. W. 60, 61, 104 Mo. App. 218.

"The term 'reserve fund' when applied to a level rate policy, means a sufficient percentage of the annual premium to meet, when invested at a given rate of interest, all present and prospective liability on account of the particular policy. When applied to term insurance, it means the entire mortuary premiums collected for the particular year. It has no application to assessment insurance." In Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 1408 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1111), declaring that any such fraternal beneficiary associations may create and maintain, disburse and apply, a reserve or emergency fund in accordance with its constitution or by-laws, the word "reserve" was not used in a technical meaning, but as a convertible term with "emergency," and the use of such word did not indicate a legislative intention to authorize such association to issue nonforfeitable policies and to do an old line life insurance business not otherwise authorized. State ex rel. Supreme Lodge K. P. v. Vandiver, 111 S. W. 911, 918, 213 Mo. 187 (quoting 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6147).

EMERGENCY BRAKE

What is known as the "service brake" differs from the "emergency brake" only in degree. If the full force of air is turned upon the brake, that is an "emergency brake." In ordinary cases less than the full force is turned on, and that is the service brake. In other words, there is only one set of brakes, and the difference consists in the amount of air pressure which is applied. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. Dean's Adm'x, 59 S. E. 389, 391, 107 Va. 505.

An "emergency brake" on a train is adapted and used in instances of emergency as its name implies, while a service stop is used in ordinary cases where a stoppage of the train can be accomplished by a gradual application of the brakes. Benedict v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., 78 S. W. 60, 61, 104 Mo. App. 218.

EMERGENCY EMPLOYE

Where one renders aid to the servant of another at the request of the servant and under circumstances which create a necessity for aid, the person rendering aid becomes an "emergency employe" of the servant's master, and, if he be injured through the servant's negligence in some detail of the work, he cannot recover against the master; the negligence being that of a fellow servant. Where it was part of the general duty of plaintiff, as a gate tender at a railroad station, to help get passenger trains off as quickly as possible, and in the performance of such duty plaintiff assisted an express messenger, who was under the sole employment and control of defendant express company and not of the railroad company by whom plaintiff was employed, to remove a heavy package from the express car, and in so doing was injured by the express messenger's negligence, plaintiff was neither a fellow servant of the express messenger, nor an emergency employé of the express company. Cannon v. Fargo, 122 N. Y. Supp. 576, 579, 138 App. Div. 20.

EMERGENCY STOP

The railroad train on which plaintiff was injured consisted of 10 cars, 6 of which were equipped with air brakes controlled and operated by the engineer. For all ordinary stops such as stopping at stations, and water tanks and all cases except cases of emergency, the service stop as it was termed was used which checked the train gradually but did not lock the wheels. The "emergency stop" was used only for a sudden stop in case of danger and was a full application of all the brake power which had the effect of locking the wheels. Its effect was almost instant and the shock and recoil unusually severe. Benedict v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., 78 S. W. 60, 104 Mo. App. 218.

EMERY

Corundum and emery being used for the same purposes, and emery being merely an impure grade of corundum, ground corundum ore is similar to emery and is dutiable by similitude under Tariff Act 1897, par. 419, 30 Stat. 191, relating to "emery, * * * ground," etc. F. W. Myers & Co. v. United States, 163 Fed. 53, 89 C. C. A. 284.

EMERY BELT

Belting as including, see Belting.

EMERY WHEEL

EMIGRATION AGENT

Acts 1903, p. 344, imposing a license tax on emigration agents, and defining an "emigration agent" as "any person engaged in hiring," etc., and referring to "any person doing the business of an emigration agent," does not apply to a person living near the border line of the state, who employs laborers for service in his business beyond the limits of the state. Kendrick v. State, 39 South. 203, 204, 142 Ala. 43.

EMINENT DOMAIN

See, also, Appropriation of Land; Condemnation; Expropriation; Public Necessity; Public Use (In Eminent Domain); Taking (In Eminent Domain). Compensation for taking property, see Compensation.

The taking of private property for public use is the exercise of the right of "eminent domain," which is a distinct right from that of public domain. It is a superior right which the sovereign possesses in all property of the citizen or subject, whether real or personal, and whether the title were originally derived from the sovereign or not. Blincoe v. Choctaw, O. & W. R. Co., 83 Pac. 903, 906, 16 Okl. 286, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 890, 8 Ann. Cas. 689.

"Eminent domain" is defined by Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 1237, to be the right of the people or government to take private property for public use. Shasta Power Co. v. Walker, 149 Fed. 568, 569.

"The right of 'eminent domain' which resides in the state is defined to be 'the rightful authority which exists in every sovereignty to control and regulate those rights of a public nature which pertain to its citizens in common, and to appropriate and control individual property for the public benefit as the public safety, necessity, convenience, or welfare may demand.'" Spencer v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 49 S. E. 96, 101, 137 N. C. 107, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 604 (citing Cooley, Const. Lim. 524; 1 Lewis, Em. Dom. 1; Raleigh & G. R. Co. v. Davis, 19 N. C. 451).

"Eminent domain" is the right or power of a sovereign state to appropriate private property to particular uses to promote public welfare. Jeffress v. Town of Greenville, 70 S. E. 919, 921, 154 N. C. 490.

The "right of eminent domain" is the right to take private property for a public use. Whether or not the use is public is a judicial question, and, the use being public, the right is absolute in the General Assembly, unless restricted by the Constitution, and it is entirely in its discretion whether it is necessary to take property for such use (that is, whether the public welfare requires or will be promoted by such taking). It may determine the public necessity of taking property for a public use, and confer the power to take for such use upon corporations or individuals, or it may confer the power to take subject to the determination by some other authority of the necessity of the particular improvement for which the property is sought, or of taking the whole or any part of the particular property sought to be taken. Wheeling & L. E. R. Co. v. Toledo Ry. & Terminal Co., 74 N. E. 209-212, 72 Ohio St. 368, 106 Am. St. Rep. 622, 2 Ann. Cas. 941.

The right of eminent domain is not a right belonging to individuals or corporations, but is only conferred by special enactment, and, before a plaintiff should be allowed to absorb the property of another by condemnation, it is not asking too much of him that he affirmatively show that he is authorized by the law to condemn land at all. State ex rel. Morrell v. Superior Court for Stevens County, 74 Pac. 686, 688, 33 Wash. 542.

The power of "eminent domain" is a special right delegated to individuals or to a corporation by the state, and can be exercised only on the terms and in the manner prescribed by statute. Westport Stone Co. v. Thomas, 83 N. E. 617, 170 Ind. 91.

As attribute of sovereignty

Eminent domain implies a taking by the sovereign for some public benefit, and is a reserved right or an inextinguishable attribute of sovereignty that may be exercised by the state or its authorized agent, to effect a public good whenever public necessity requires it. Cincinnati, I. & W. R. Co. v. City of Connersville, 83 N. E. 503, 506, 170 Ind. 316.

Eminent domain is the right or power of a sovereign state to appropriate private property for the promotion of the general welfare. The power is an attribute of government and is inherent in it, and embraces all cases where the property of the individual is taken without his consent by such sovereign power. Byrd Irr. Co. v. Smythe (Tex.) 146 S. W. 1064, 1065.

The power to take private property for public uses belongs to every independent government exercising sovereign power as a necessary incident to its sovereignty and requires no constitutional recognition. Jeffress v. Town of Greenville, 70 S. E. 919, 921, 154 N. C. 490.

Same—Exercise by corporation, etc.

"Eminent domain" is the right or power of a sovereign state to appropriate private property to particular use, for the purpose of promoting the general welfare. It is an inherent, inalienable, sovereign right, and lies dormant in the state until the Legislature sees fit to exercise it, either directly, or by investing some corporation, or individual, with the power to exercise it. Pittsburg Hydro-Electric Co. v. Liston, 73 S. E. 86, 87, 70 W. Va. 83, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 602.

"Eminent domain" is a sovereign power to be used only by the sovereign or by one on whom the sovereign has conferred it for a particular purpose. Corporations hold their property under the same guaranty that individuals do, no greater and no less, and, as the individual holds his property subject to the right of "eminent domain," so does the corporation. American Telephone & Telegraph Co. of Missouri v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 101 S. W. 576, 581, 202 Mo. 656.

Compensation

"Eminent domain" is the sovereign power in the state to take private property for public use, providing first a just compensation therefor. City of Austin v. Nalle, 120

S. W. 996, 102 Tex. 536; Jeffress v. Town of Greenville, 70 S. E. 919, 921, 154 N. C. 490; Southern Ry. Co. v. City of Memphis, 148 S. W. 662, 665, 126 Tenn. 267, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 828; South Park Oom'rs v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 93 N. E. 910, 912, 248 Ill. 299, 21 Ann. Cas. 127.

The right of eminent domain is the power of the state to apply private property to public purposes on payment of just compensation. The provision for compensation is no part of the power, but a limitation on its use imposed by the Constitution. Commonwealth v. Plymouth Coal Co., 81 Atl. 148, 151, 232 Pa. 141.

Extent of power

The right of eminent domain, being the power of the state to appropriate private property to public use, though relating to every kind of private property and to every public use, does not extend to property already devoted to public use; and a city could not condemn property belonging to a county as a state agency and used for a poor farm, for street purposes. City of Edwardsville v. Madison County, 96 N. E. 238, 251 Ill. 265, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 101.

Public use or necessity

The phrase "eminent domain" means the right of the state or of a person acting for the state to use, alienate or destroy property of a citizen for the ends of public utility. Wissler v. Yadkin River Power Co., 74 S. E. 460, 158 N. C. 465.

"Eminent domain rights" are attributes of sovereignty to be exercised by the state, with great caution, and only in case of public necessity. Wise v. Yazoo City, 51 South. 453, 455, 96 Miss. 507, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1130, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 377.

The right of eminent domain is the right of the state as sovereign to take at any time private property of any citizen for public use by paying just compensation therefor. The right is inherent in all governments, but is now restricted by Const. art. 1, § 6, providing that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, and the theory upon which it may be taken at all is that the right of the individual must give way to the greater rights of a majority of the subjects of the state, and that it is necessary for the public use. In re Board of Water Supply of City of New York, 109 N. Y. Supp. 1036, 1040, 58 Misc. Rep. 581.

Under Mills' Ann. St. § 2257, giving to a private individual the right to invoke the power of eminent domain to acquire the right of way for a ditch, to enable him to utilize a valid appropriation of water, a proceeding is not authorized by a private individual in his own right in a representative capacity and as a trustee for the public, to acquire private lands for the purpose of making an artificial channel for a natural stream which has been wrongfully obstructed, which will enable him, in his individual capacity, to utilize an individual right. Ortiz v. Hansen, 83 Pac. 964, 965, 35 Colo. 100.

"Eminent domain" is the right of the people or government to take private property for public use (Code Civ. Proc. § 1237), and, under a Code provision allowing property already taken for public use to be taken for a more necessary public use than that to which it has been already appropriated, the land of a private person subject to an easement for a public highway may be taken by a water company for a dam and reservoir; this constituting a more necessary public use. Marin County Water Co. v. Marin County, 79 Pac. 282, 283, 145 Cal. 584.

As an estate

"The power of 'eminent domain,' or the right to take private property for a public use, which is the controlling principle underlying the action, does not partake of the nature of an estate or interest in property, but is essentially a governmental function existing in the sovereign, as a necessary, constant, and inextinguishable attribute." Contra Costa Water Co. v. Van Rensselaer, 155 Fed. 140, 141 (citing Lewis, Em. Dom. [2d Ed.] 9; Mahoney v. Spring Valley Water Co., 52 Cal. 159; California Cent. Ry. Co. v. Hooper, 18 Pac. 599, 76 Cal. 404).

Police power distinguished Destroying property as a dangerous nuisance is not an "appropriation to public use," but is to prevent any use of it by the owner and end its existence, because it could not be used consistently with the maxim, "Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lœdas." In abating nuisances, the public does not exercise the power of eminent domain, but the police power. Louisa County v. Yancey's Trustee, 63 S. E. 452, 455, 109 Va. 229.

"The 'police power' is to be clearly distinguished from the right of 'eminent domain,' and the distinction lies in this: That in the exercise of the latter right private property is taken for public use and the owner is invariably entitled to compensation therefor, while the police power is usually exerted merely to regulate the use and enjoyment of property by the owner, or, if he is deprived of his property outright, it is not taken for public use, but rather destroyed in order to promote the general welfare of the public, and in neither case is the owner entitled to any compensation for any injury which he may sustain in consequence thereof, for the law considers that either the injury is damnum absque injuria, or the owner is sufficiently compensated by sharing in the general benefits resulting from the exercise of the police power." Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. People ex rel. Grimwood, 72 N. E. 219, 224, 212 Ill. 103 (citing Frazer v. City of Chicago, 57 N. E. 1055, 186 Ill. 480, 51 L. R. A. 306, 78 Am. St. Rep. 296).

It is a well-recognized principle in the decisions of the state and federal courts that the citizen holds his property subject not only to the exercise of the right of "eminent domain" by the state, but also subject to the lawful exercise of the "police power" by the Legislature. In the one case, property is taken by condemnation and due compensation; in the other, the necessary and reasonable expenses and loss of property in making reasonable changes in existing structures, or in erecting additions thereto, are damnum absque injuria. Laws 1901, p. 912, c. 334, § 100, as amended by Laws 1902, p. 937, c. 352, § 47, generally known as the "Tenement House Act," requiring all school sinks in the existing tenement houses in cities of the first class to be removed and replaced by water-closets, is a proper and constitutional exercise of the police power of the state for the protection of the public health. Tenement House Department of City of New York v. Moeschen, 72 N. E. 231, 232, 179 N. Y. 325, 70 L. R. A. 704, 108 Am. St. Rep. 910, 1 Ann. Cas. 439.

An ordinance requiring railroad companies at their own expense to reduce their tracks at crossings to grade is the exercise of the police power over crossings, and not the power of "eminent domain." The limitation on the power of eminent domain that property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without adequate compensation does not of itself impose any restrictions on the proper employment of the police power on any subject lying within its sphere in a proper and lawful manner. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Dallas, 84 S. W. 648, 651, 98 Tex. 396, 70 L. R. A. 850.

EMOLUMMENT

See Separate Public Emoluments or Privileges.

The word "emolument" is more comprehensive than "salary" and includes the meaning of "gain," "profit," "compensation," etc. Scharrenbroich v. Lewis & Clarke County, 83 Pac. 482, 483, 83 Mont. 250.

Under Const. art. 3, § 13, providing that no law shall extend the term of any public officer or increase or diminish his salary or emoluments after his election or appointment, the word "emoluments" is defined to be any perquisite, advantage, profit, or gain arising from the possession of an office. Commonwealth v. Mathues, 59 Atl. 961, 973, 210 Pa. 872 (quoting and adopting definition in Apple v. Crawford County, 105 Pa. 300, 51 Am. Rep. 205; And. Law Dict.).

"Emolument" is an incident to office merely, and not a necessary element in determining its character. In re Members of Legislature, 39 South. 63, 64, 49 Fla. 269.

Act June 28, 1902, c. 1301, referring to the fees and compensation of clerks of the district and circuit courts, defines "emoluments" as including all amounts received in connection with the admission of attorneys to practice in the courts, amounts received for services in naturalization proceedings, and all other amounts received for services in any way connected with the clerk's office. United States v. Mason, 31 Sup. Ct. 28, 83, 218 U. S. 517, 54 L. Ed. 1133.

Const. art. 15, § 4, provides that no law shall extend the term of any public officer or diminish his salary or emoluments. Held, that the word "emoluments" imports any perquisite, profit, advantage, or gain arising from the possession of an office. "21 Del. Laws, p. 412, c. 247, which became operative March 18, 1899, provided for the establishment of a workhouse in a certain county, to be completed within two years, and to which, when completed, the sheriff was to deliver all prisoners held by him on commitment. 22 Del. Laws, p. 122, c. 73, passed March 9, 1901, put the office of sheriff of the county on a salary basis, and provided that it should take effect at such time as the sheriff should deliver the prisoners in his custody to the workhouse, pursuant to the workhouse act. Plaintiff was elected sheriff in 1900, and received the fees and perquisites of his office up to November, 1901, on which date he was notified of the completion of the workhouse and was given notice to transfer the prisoners to it. The salary to which plaintiff was entitled under the act of 1901 amounted to less than the fees and perquisites of the office, including the profits from the board of prisoners in his custody, amounted to prior to the taking effect of that act. Held, that the workhouse act, having been passed prior to plaintiff's election as sheriff, constituted notice to the sheriff that as soon as the workhouse was completed the prisoners would be taken from his custody, and that he would no longer receive the profits from boarding them, and hence there was no violation, as to plaintiff, of Const. art. 15, § 4, providing that no law shall extend the term of any public officer, or diminish his salary or 'emoluments,' after his election or appointment." McDaniel v. Armstrong, 59 Atl. 865, 867, 5 Pennewill, 240.

EMOTIONAL INCAPACITY

"Emotional incapacity," as applied to a witness, is partiality of hostility resulting from bias, interest, or corruption. State v. Craft, 41 South. 550, 551, 117 La. 213 (citing Wigmore, on Ev. §§ 940, 943).

EMPLOY

See Cease to Employ; Further Employ.

The word "employ," in an agreement by a charterer of a vessel that he should "employ" only in lawful trade, indicates a purpose of control and management, but does not necessarily show a demise of the vessel. Grimberg v. Columbia Packers' Ass'n, 83 Pac. 194, 198, 47 Or. 257, 114 Am. St. Rep. 927, 8 Ann. Cas. 491.

The word "employ," as used in a contract by which the employer agrees to engage and employ the employé as servant, and in a particular capacity for a specified term, means to retain in service. White v. Lumiere North American Co., 64 Atl. 1121, 1124, 79 Vt. 206, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 807.

Webster defines the word "employ": "to use; to have in service; to cause to be engaged in doing something; to make use of as an instrument, a means, a material, etc., for a specific purpose." And as so defined it is the sense in which the term is used in a statute prohibiting one to organize, maintain, and employ an armed body of men. It does not mean to hire, but it means to use whether under hire or not. It is unnecessary that the relation of master and servant exist. State v. Gohl, 90 Pac. 259, 261, 46 Wash. 408.

Under a statute providing that no child and no woman shall be employed in laboring in certain manufacturing and mechanical pursuits, except on compliance with certain regulations, etc., the word "employ" is used to mean to have work or to make use of the service of another. Commonwealth v. Riley, 97 N. E. 367, 368, 210 Mass. 387, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 388.

Deputy inspectors of boilers and elevators, provided for by the charter of the city of St. Louis, perform public functions. They have a fixed tenure of office of four years, and are required to give bond. Their salaries are fixed at a certain sum per year. Their qualifications are prescribed by law. Their public position is expressly denominated as an office, and their duties as official duties. The charter defines officers as those holding situations under the city government or its departments with an annual salary or for a fixed definite term of office, and the forms of official oath and bond prescribed refer to their positions as officers. Held, that they are officers, although McQuillin's Municipal Code of St. Louis, § 2197, authorizes the inspectors of boilers and elevators to "employ" deputies; the word "employ" conveying the idea of selecting and intrusting with a duty. Gracey v. City of St. Louis, 111 S. W. 1159, 1163, 213 Mo. 384 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 4923).

Compensation implied

The word "employ" means "to make use of the time, attention or labor of; to give occupation to; use as an agent." One cannot be employed unless his time is occupied at something to which he is giving his attention, labor, or skill. "Employment," when used in respect to a servant or hired hand, is equivalent to hiring, which implies a request and contract for compensation. Rev. St. 1899, § 2187, which provides that no child under the age of 14 years shall be "employed" in specified manufacturing companies, and section 2190, which punishes any firm, corporation, or its agents who "employs" any such child, prohibit the putting of a child under 14 years of age at work in any of the described establishments, and a foreman of such a manufacturing corporation who hires a child and puts him at work in the establishment is subject to the punishment. State v. Deck, 83 S. W. 314, 315, 108 Mo. App. 292 (citing Cent. Dict.; Webst. Dict.; United States v. Post, 13 Sup. Ct. 567, 148 U. S. 124, 37 L. Ed. 392; State v. Canton, 43 Mo. loc. cit. 51; State v. Foster, 37 Iowa, 404, and McCluskey v. Cromwell, 11 N. Y. 593).

A theatrical manager, engaging a child, in regular services in a theatrical exhibition which he is presenting every evening, thereby giving the child an opportunity for valuable training and constant companionship of his parent, who is an actor in the company, employs the child in violation of Rev. Laws, prohibiting the employment of children at certain hours; the word "employ" meaning to use as a servant, agent, or representative, and not requiring the payment of compensation as an element. Commonwealth v. Griffith, 90 N. E. 394, 395, 204 Mass. 18, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 957, 134 Am. St. Rep. 645.

EMPLOYÉ

See Bona Fide Employé; Coemployé; Emergency Employé; Quasi Employé.
As such employé, see As Such.
Discharge of employé, see Discharge.
Other employés, see Other.

An "employé" is one who works for and under the control of his employer; and the mode of payment, while a circumstance to be considered in determining the question, is not decisive. Employers' Indemnity Co. of Philadelphia v. Kelly Coal Co., 149 S. W. 992, 994, 149 Ky. 712, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 963.

Within Labor Law, § 18, requiring any person employing or directing another to perform labor of any kind in the erection, repairing, etc., of a house, building, or structure to furnish safe scaffolding, and section 2 defining an "employé" to mean a mechanic, working man or laborer who works for another for hire, it is not intended to protect only any particular class of mechanics, and carpenters engaged in repairing a railroad car in a car shop, requiring the use of scaffolds, are entitled to the protection of the statute. Caddy v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 110 N. Y. Supp. 162, 164, 125 App. Div. 681.

One employed only in one particular instance to transport liquor to a mulct saloon for lawful sale was not an employé whose name the saloonkeeper was required to file with the county auditor by Code, § 2448, subd. 4. Johannsen v. Hutchinson, 132 N. W. 20, 22, 151 Iowa, 608.

An employé of defendant railway company having charge of its pumping station and water tank, informed the superintendent that he had to leave on business, and would leave his 14 year old son in charge, and received the superintendent's permission to do so. Held, that the son was an "employé" of the company. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Slaughter, 45 South. 873, 874, 92 Miss. 289.

Gen. St. 1906, § 3150, limits the rule that an employé cannot recover from an injury occasioned by the negligence of a fellow servant to cases where the person injured is guilty of contributory negligence, and the word "employé," as used in that relation, means such an employé as would be a fellow servant under the rule above mentioned. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Beazley, 45 South. 761, 764, 54 Fla. 311.

Acts 1901, p. 63, as amended by Acts 1903, p. 91, making it unlawful to employ or rent agricultural lands to, or to furnish lands to be cropped by, any person already under contract as the employé, tenant of agricultural lands, or cropper of another, and providing that when the relation of employer and employé, or of landlord and tenant of agricultural lands, or of landlord and cropper, has been created by a written contract, it shall be unlawful during the life of such contract to disturb the relation in any way, is not limited to the wrongful employment of a laborer under contract to work on agricultural lands, but includes a laborer employed in the turpentine business. Johnson v. Hudspeth, 67 S. E. 423, 424, 134 Ga. 25.

The definition of "employé," as given by the Century Dictionary, is: "One who works for an employer; a person working for salary or wages; applied to any one so working but usually only to clerks, workmen, laborers, etc., and but rarely to the higher officers of a corporation or government or to domestic servants." In Re Cortland Manufacturing Co. (Sup.) 45 N. Y. Supp. 630, an "employé" is defined to be a person who is employed; one who works for wages or a salary. In Palmer v. Van Santvoord, 153 N. Y. 612, 47 N. E. 915, 38 L. R. A. 402, the court held: "An 'employé' is one who works for an employer; a person working for a salary or wage. The word is applied to any one so working, but usually only to clerks, workmen, laborers, etc., and but rarely to officers of a government or corporation." United States v. Schlierholz, 137 Fed. 616, 624.

There is no distinction between the term "laborer" and the term "employé" as respects the element of personal service. Pere Marquette R. Co. v. Baertz, 74 N. E. 51, 54, 36 Ind. App. 408.

In 1 Laws Wis. 1883, c. 349, providing that assignments for the benefit of creditors containing preferences, except for the wages of laborers, servants, and employes, earned six months prior thereto, shall be void, is qualified and limited by its association with the words "laborers" and "servants," according to the maxim, noscitur a sociis. Campfield v. Lang, 25 Fed. 128, 131.

Attorney

In an order giving a preference to claims for all amounts due to operators and employes, the term "employes" includes attorneys at law regularly employed. Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. Continental Trust Co., 166 Fed. 597, 600.

An attorney serving as division counsel for a railroad, having charge of "all legal matters" within the territory constituting his division to which the company is a party or in which it may be interested, furnished with annual passes and telegraph franks as such counsel, and having authority to appoint local counsel, subject to the approval of the general counsel of the company, although paid by fees on accounts rendered and audited at stated periods, instead of by salary, is an "employé," and his accounts for services so rendered are for a current debt arising in the operation of the road, and within the terms of an order of court, appointing receivers, which authorized them to pay from the earnings of the property "all amounts due to operators and employes * * * and unpaid pay rolls and supply accounts incurred in the operation of" the road within the preceding six months and entitled to priority of payment thereunder from current earnings over the claims of mortgage bondholders. Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. Continental Trust Co., 166 Fed. 597, 602.

An attorney retained for a single suit is not an "employee," the engagement being rather that of a contractor than an employee. Hand v. Cook, 92 Pac. 3, 10, 29 Nev. 518.

Laws N. Y. 1897, c. 415, § 8, provides that, "upon the appointment of a receiver of a partnership or of a corporation organized under the laws of this state and doing business therein, other than a moneyed corporation, the wages of the employes of such partnership or corporation shall be preferred to every other debt or claim." Section 2 defines the word "employé" as used in the act as meaning "a mechanic, workman or laborer who works for another for hire." Held that, under the construction placed upon a similar prior statute by the Court of Appeals of the state, an attorney at law employed by an electric company to procure options on certain property and water power sites which the company desired to buy, at an understood compensation of $10 per day and expenses for the time employed in the service was not a "workman" or "laborer," and hence not an "employé" entitled to preference under the statute. Gay v. Hudson River Electric Power Co., 178 Fed. 499, 502.

Engineer

In an action to recover for the death of a person who, after securing appointment as locomotive engineer, was traveling on a locomotive for the purpose of informing himself more particularly as to the character of the road and was killed by the train leaving the tracks, whether deceased was a passenger or an "employé" was for the jury. The test of whether he was an employé being whether at the time of the accident he was in the actual service of the company performing the duties of an employé, and the fact that at the time he was riding on an "employé's pass" was not conclusive, an employé's pass being usually not required when the employé is in actual service. Wilkes v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co., 65 Atl. 787, 788, 216 Pa. 855.

Hospital physician

Pol. Code, § 2255, provides that the directors of the state deaf, dumb, and blind asylum shall have power: "(2) To elect the principal teacher; (3) to elect a treasurer; * * * (4) to elect a physician for the asylum for the term of two years, who shall not be a member of the board of directors; (5) to remove at pleasure any teacher or employé." Held, that the coupling of the term "employé" with the antecedent term "teacher" indicated that the former was used in a restricted sense, as applying only to employes of like kind with teachers, and the board had no power to remove the physician before the end of the term for which he was elected. Wall v. Board of Directors of Deaf, Dumb & Blind Asylum, 78 Pac. 951, 952, 145 Cal. 468.

Janitor

The present Greater New York Charter, relating to compensation of employes of the board of education, by excluding "day laborers and teachers, examiners and members of the supervising staff," includes janitors employed by the board, though limited to "compensation paid out of the city treasury." Farrell v. Board of Education of City of New York, 98 N. Y. Supp. 1046, 1048, 118 App. Div. 405.

Under Greater New York Charter, granting to the board of education certain judicial powers over officers and employes, and section 1068, giving power to enact by-laws, rules, and regulations for defining the duties of officers and subordinates, which have the force of law, and section 1093, providing for penalties for violation thereof to be imposed by the board, consisting of a fine, suspension, or dismissal, a janitor is an employé and subject to the penalty prescribed in section 1093. Egan v. Board of Education of City of New York, 127 N. Y. Supp. 611, 613, 70 Misc. Rep. 518; Farrell v. Board of Education of City of New York, 122 N. Y. Supp. 289, 290, 67 Misc. Rep. 187.

Manager or superintendent

A testator gave a specified sum to each of the employes of a firm of which he was a member who should have been in the employ of the firm one or more years previous to testator's death. Held, that one who was paid by the piece, and who worked intermittently from May 12th, in one year to May 15th in the following year, was not an "employé" of the firm within the meaning of the will, nor was a person such an employé, where he at one time acted as a clerk of the firm but thereafter ceased to be regularly employed as such, and thereafter made collections for the firm, occasionally went to other parts of the state to transact business, and finally, during one of such trips, became the manager of a corporation in which testator and his partner were interested, at an annual salary. In re Klein's Estate, 88 Pac. 798, 806, 35 Mont. 185.

Miners

Rev. St. 1899, § 2586, provides that eight hours shall constitute a day's labor for all "coal miners and laborers," etc. Section 2587 declares that the word "day," in all contracts between any owner, lessee, or operator of any mine with any such miner or laborer, shall mean eight hours, and section 2589 declares that any owner, lessee, or operator, his or its agent, employes, or servants violating any of the provisions of the chapter, shall be fined, etc. Held, that the words "employé" or "servants," used in section 2589, should be construed to mean employes or servants of the mine owner occupying positions of "agents," and not to include miners and laborers, so that a miner was not subject to punishment under the penal provision for working more than eight hours a day. State v. Thompson, 87 Pac. 433, 434, 15 Wyo. 136 (citing Lewis' Sutherland, Stat. Con. [2d Ed.] § 521).

Officer of corporation

A director of a corporation is an "officer," within General Corporation Act (22 Del. Laws, p. 780) § 57, giving employes of an insolvent corporation priority for wages, but declaring that the word "employé" shall not include any officer, and he is not entitled to priority as an employé for wages as a foreman. In re Peninsula Cut Stone Co., 82 Atl. 689, 9 Del. Ch. 348.

While the word "employé" is not to be read with full generic force, it has been adjudicated to embrace more than the words "operative" and "laborer." It may be said generally that the term "employé" includes persons employed by the corporation in comparatively subordinate positions, which cannot correctly be described as either "operatives" or "laborers." Hopkins v. Cromwell, 85 N. Y. Supp. 839, 840, 89 App. Div. 481 (citing In re American Lace & Fancy Paper Works, 51 N. Y. Supp. 818, 820, 80 App. Div. 321, 323).

A health officer is not an "employé," as that word is used in Mun. Code, § 129, declaring that all employes now serving in the health department shall continue to hold their positions, and shall not be removed from office or reduced in rank or pay, except for cause assigned, and after hearing has been afforded them before the board. State v. Craig, 69 N. E. 228, 230, 69 Ohio St. 236.

Salaried servant

Where a retail and wholesale liquor business was incorporated, the corporation was the employer, and owners of the stock, who were in its service and drew salaries from the corporation, were required by the statute to be listed as "employes," though they practically owned the business. Employé of railroad

A student brakeman, who, in consideration of being permitted to ride on a railway company's freight train to observe and learn the duties of a freight brakeman, agrees to perform service on its engines, trains, and cars, while learning such duties, is an "employé" of the company. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Fronk, 87 Pac. 696, 699, 74 Kan. 519, 11 Ann. Cas. 174.

In an action to recover for the death of a person who, after securing appointment as locomotive engineer was traveling on a locomotive for the purpose of informing himself more particularly as to the character of the road, and was killed by the train leaving the tracks, whether deceased was a passenger or an "employé" was for the jury. The test of whether he was an employé being whether at the time of the accident he was in the actual service of the company performing the duties of an employé, and the fact that at the time he was riding on an "employé's pass" was not conclusive; an employé's pass being usually not required when the employé is in actual service. Wilkes v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co., 65 Atl. 787, 788, 216 Pa. 355.

In Act Cong. March 4, 1907, c. 2939, § 34 Stat. 1415, making it unlawful for any common carrier subject to the act to remain on duty for a period longer than a specified time, and providing that the term "employes" shall be held to mean persons actually engaged in or connected with the movement of any interstate train, the operation of the act is limited not only to employers engaged in interstate commerce, but to the conduct of employes so engaged, to the exclusion of any who might be engaged purely in the domestic affairs of the employer. State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 117 N. W. 686, 691, 136 Wis. 407, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 326.

Intrastate railroads and employes wholly engaged in local business were not affected by the provisions of Act March 4, 1907, c. 2939, § 2, 34 Stat. 1416, making it "unlawful for any common carrier, its officers or agents, subject to this act, to require or permit any employe subject to this act to be or remain on duty" for a longer period than that prescribed, since such carriers and employes are defined in section 1 as those who are engaged in the transportation of passengers or property by railroad in the District of Columbia or the territories, or in interstate or foreign commerce, although that section further defines "railroad" as including all bridges and ferries used or operated in connection with any railroad, and also all the roads in use by any carrier operating a railroad by contract, agreement, or lease, and "employes" as meaning persons actually engaged in, or connected with, the movement of any train. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 31 Sup. Ct. 621, 624, 221 U. S. 612, 55 L. Ed. 878.

Act Cong. March 4, 1907, c. 2939, § 2, prohibits a carrier to require or permit any employe subject to the act to remain on duty for a longer period than 16 consecutive hours, and requires that after an employe has been continuously on duty for 16 hours he shall be relieved, and not permitted to go on duty again until he has had at least 10 consecutive hours off duty, and that no such employe who has been on duty 16 hours in the aggregate in any 24-hour period shall be permitted to continue or again go on duty without having had at least 8 consecutive hours off duty, provided that no operator, train dispatcher, or other employe dispatching train orders shall be permitted to remain on duty for a longer period than 9 hours in any 24-hour period at stations continuously operated night and day, or for more than 13 hours in stations operated only in the daytime. Held, that train dispatchers, being "employes," are within the protection of the main part of the section giving to all employes "at least eight consecutive hours off duty in each day, counting from some point in the next day, so that it would be impossible for carriers to require of them short service periods spread over the entire 24 hours, giving no opportunity for real recuperation. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. United States, 177 Fed. 114, 119, 100 C. C. A. 534.

Decedent was a porter on a pullman car owned jointly by defendant railroad company and the Pullman Company, and operated by them as an association under a contract providing that the Pullman Company should have the management thereof, but that all obligations with reference to operation of the cars should be borne by the association, which should furnish each car one or more employes, who at all times should be subject to the rules of the railroad company governing its own employes, that the earnings should be divided in certain proportions, and, in the event of liability arising against the railroad company for personal injuries to an employe of the association, the railroad company should be liable only to the same extent it would be if the person injured were an employe in fact of the railroad company, and for all excess liability the railway company should be indemnified and paid by the owners of the car. Held, that decedent was an employe of the railway company within federal Employers' Liability Act, 35 Stat. 65, and hence thereunder his personal representatives were not precluded from recovering for his death resulting from the negligence of the railway company by a provision in his contract of employment purporting to release both the Pullman Company and the railway company from such liability. Oliver v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 196 Fed. 432, 435.

Within Acts of 1891, c. 4071, § 3, providing that if any person is injured by a railroad company by the running of locomotives, cars, or other machinery, he being at the time an employe of the company, and if the damage is caused by the negligence of another employe without fault or negligence on the part of the person injured, his employment shall be no bar to a recovery, a person who, although in the employment of the principal whose servant's negligence occasioned the injury, was not when injured engaged in the performance of his duties as such employe, but had left the scene of his labors and was engaged in the pursuit of his own ends, was not an "employe." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wade, 35 South. 863, 864, 46 Fla. 197.

Employes on the job

A building contract provided that no orders for work supposed to be "extra" which should be given to subcontractor "by employes upon the job" would be recognized as extra by the contractor. The contractors were nonresidents, represented upon the construction work by agents known as superintendents. Held, that the superintendents represented the company upon the job, and were not "employes upon the job" within the contract. McGowan v. Gate City Malt Co., 130 N. W. 965, 967, 89 Neb. 10.

EMPLOYED

See Capital Employed; Permanently Employed.

The word "employed" is a verb of past or present tense, and cannot be accurately used potentially to indicate future action, unless qualified by additional words. Independent Transp. Co. v. Canton Ins. Office, 173 Fed. 564, 565.

The use of the word "employed" in Civil Service Law, Laws 1899, p. 807, c. 370, § 19, requiring on the pay roll of each department of the city the certificate of the municipal civil service commission, that the persons named therein have been appointed or "employed" in pursuance of law, is in distinction to appointed, and the commission is not required to certify that the persons named in the pay roll performed the services entitling them to receive the amount opposite their respective names, or that such persons performed services appropriate to the title of the positions assigned to them on the pay roll; but the only duty imposed on the commission is that they certify that the persons whose names appear on the pay rolls are qualified for appointment or employment in the positions assigned them on the pay rolls and that they have been duly appointed thereto. People ex rel. Bedford v. McWilliams, 106 N. Y. Supp. 459, 460, 56 Misc. Rep. 293.

The use of the word "employed" in section 1, c. 114, Laws 1891, providing that eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workmen, mechanics, or other persons employed on behalf of any city of the state, excludes officers; an office being distinguished from an employment, in that it implies tenure, duration, emolument, and duty. State v. City of Ottawa, 113 Pac. 391, 393, 84 Kan. 100.

As used in section 18, Act Cong. June 26, 1884, providing that the individual liability of a shipowner shall be limited to the proportion of any or all debts and liabilities that his individual share of the vessel bears to the whole, and the aggregate liabilities of all the owners of a vessel on account of the same shall not exceed the value of such vessel and freight pending, but providing that such limitations shall not apply to wages of those persons "employed" by said shipowner, the word "employed" is not restricted to those only who are hired by the master of the ship personally. Great Lakes Towing Co. v. Mill Transportation Co., 155 Fed. 11, 20, 83 C. C. A. 607, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 769.

As engaged in

"To be 'employed' in any thing means not only the act of doing it, but also to be engaged to do it; to be under contract or orders to do it." United States v. Morris, 14 Pet. (39 U. S.) 463, 475, 10 L. Ed. 543.

An employé under 16 years of age "permitted to operate" dangerous machinery prohibited by Labor Law, § 81, as amended by Laws 1899, c. 192, § 1, is "employed in violation of law" within an employer's liability policy, excepting liability for injury to one so employed; "employ," when so used, having a broader meaning than "hiring," and meaning "to have in service, to cause to be engaged in doing something." Buffalo Steel Co. v. Etna Life Ins. Co., 136 N. Y. Supp. 977, 982.

A child is not "employed," within the meaning of the statute prohibiting the employment of children in certain manufacturing establishments, until he is put to work. Merely to employ a child to work does not complete the offense. State v. Deck, 83 S. W. 314, 315, 108 Mo. App. 292.

A statute authorizing payment of a specified sum to a court reporter for every day he is "employed," does not restrict a reporter's compensation to the time during which he is actually taking testimony. Ferguson v. Potawattamie County, 101 N. W. 733, 734, 126 Iowa, 108.

An attorney is "employed"—that is, he is engaged in his professional capacity as a lawyer or counselor—when he is listening to his client's preliminary statement of his case, or when he is giving advice thereon, just as truly as when he is drawing his client's pleadings or advocating his client's cause in open court. Sheehan v. Allen, 74 Pac. 245, 247, 67 Kan. 712 (quoting Denver Tramway Co. v. Owens, 36 Pac. 848, 855, 20 Colo. 107, 128).

Where it appeared that plaintiff was directed by his employer to run a gin stand, and was paid a daily wage for doing such work, it was not error to hypothesize a charge on the jury's belief from the evidence that "plaintiff was employed by defendants to run the gin stand in their gin"; the word "employed" not always being synonymous with "hired," and sometimes meaning to be occupied or engaged in performance of a duty or undertaking. Davis, Pruner & Howell v. Woods (Tex.) 143 S. W. 950, 951.

Employed in buying and selling chattels

Where a bank carried a person for the money he used in buying and shipping stock to market, and returns for the sales were made to the bank, and the statement for money received, placed to his credit, and certain stock belonging to him was shipped in the name of the bank for its protection against loss for money furnished to buy stock, the bank, at the most, was merely acting as agent for the other, and the transaction was not within Rev. St. 1899, § 1291, prohibiting a bank to "employ its money in trade or commerce by buying and selling chattels." Griffin v. Wabash R. Co., 91 S. W. 1015, 1016, 115 Mo. App. 549.

Employed in mechanic arts

A finished manufactured product entirely completed in the fall of one year, and as to which nothing further remained to be done except to be sold when the opportunity offered, and which is stored because not sold until the following April, is not "employed in the mechanic arts" on the 1st day of that April, within the meaning of Rev.

St. 1883, c. 6, § 14, providing that all personal property employed in the mechanic arts shall be taxed in the town where so employed. Inhabitants of New Idmerick v. Watson, 57 Atl. 79, 80, 98 Me. 379.

Rev. St. 1903, c. 9, § 13, par. 1, provides that personal property employed in the mechanic arts shall be taxed in the town where employed, provided the owner occupies any store, shop, mill, or wharf therein for the purpose of such employment. A corporation owned and operated in the town of O., which was located on the opposite side of the river from the town of B., a mill for the manufacture, by mechanical and chemical processes, of soda pulp from pulp wood. On the same side of the river it also had a cutting up sawmill and piling ground. On the opposite side of the river, in B., it had another cutting up sawmill and piling ground. Pulp wood out of which the soda pulp was manufactured was driven down the river in log lengths to a boom above the mill from which some of the logs were let down into a boom on the O. side of the river, taken out and cut up and used in the mill or piled in the piling ground, while other logs were let down into a boom on the B. side of the river, taken out and cut up and piled on the B. piling ground, from where they were taken across the river in the winter on the ice to the mill or piling ground on that side. The town of B. taxed pulp wood which had been cut up and piled on the B. piling ground but which had not been removed to the O. side during the previous winter because the piling ground on that side was full. Held, that the pulp wood was not taxable by the town of B. as being employed in the mechanic arts in that town. Inhabitants of Bradley v. Penobscot Chemical Fibre Co., 71 Atl. 887, 888, 104 Me. 276.

Toothpicks stored by a manufacturer thereof in a storehouse preparatory to shipment in the general course of business are not taxable under Rev. St. c. 9, § 13, par. 1, as amended by Pub. Laws 1909, c. 4, as personality "employed in mechanic arts." Inhabitants of Peru v. Forster's Estate, 83 Atl. 670, 671, 109 Me. 226.

Logs and lumber used at a mill for manufacture of boxes for the manufacturer's use in shipping explosives are taxable as personality "employed in the mechanic arts," within Rev. St. c. 9, § 13, par. 1, in the town where the mill is located. Inhabitants of Boothbay v. E. I. Du Pont De Nemours Powder Co., 83 Atl. 663, 664, 109 Me. 236.

Employed in trade

Toothpicks stored by a manufacturer thereof in a storehouse preparatory to shipment in the general course of business are not taxable under Rev. St. c. 9, § 13, par. 1, as amended by Pub. Laws 1909, c. 4, as personality "employed in trade." Inhabitants of Peru v. Forster's Estate, 83 Atl. 670, 671, 109 Me. 226.

Where an inhabitant of another town owned a wood lot in the town of B. from which he cut wood and hauled it to a wharf in B. and piled it up to await shipment to a particular place when the river opened for navigation, where it remained on April 1st, the day when taxes were assessed, it was not assessable by B. within Rev. St. Me. c. 6, § 14, cl. 1, providing that all personal property "employed in trade," etc., shall be taxed in the town where so employed on the 1st day of each April, provided that the owner so employing it occupies any wharf, etc., for the purpose of such employment. Creamer v. Inhabitants of Bremen, 40 Atl. 555, 557, 91 Me. 508 (citing and distinguishing Gower v. Inhabitants of Jonesboro, 21 Atl. 846, 83 Me. 142).

Where a corporation doing business in Portland owned, occupied, and used a sawmill in F., and also owned a large quantity of logs in another county destined for that mill and which were in fact sawed there during the season of 1897 but did not arrive there until after June 1st of that year, they were "employed in trade" on April 1, 1897, within the meaning of Rev. St. c. 6, § 14, providing that all personal property employed in trade shall be taxed in the town where so employed on the 1st day of April, if the owner or agent so employing it occupies a mill, etc., therein for the purpose of such employment. Inhabitants of Farmingdale v. Berlin Mills Co., 45 Atl. 39, 40, 93 Me. 333 (citing and adopting Inhabitants of Ellsworth v. Brown, 53 Me. 519).

Employed on railroad

Where an employé in railroad shops on going from his work passed along a track 150 feet from a crossing used by employes for many years with the consent of the company, and then attempted to go around a train on the track, and fell and was killed by the train, he was not "connected with or employed on" the railroad within Railroad Law, § 83, prohibiting any person not connected with or employed on a railroad from walking on tracks except at crossings, and the company owed him only the duty to refrain from wantonly injuring him. McIntyre v. Long Island R. Co., 135 N. Y. Supp. 309, 310, 150 App. Div. 783.

Employed in any of the works

A contract for government work provided that if the contractor should fail to prosecute the work or begin the delivery of material in such manner as to insure a full compliance within the time limit, or if any question should arise as to whether the contractor was properly carrying on the contract in its true intent and meaning, and on his neglect or refusal after notice to provide means for a more energetic compliance with the contract, the Secretary of the Interior might suspend the work and take possession of all machinery, tools, appliances, and animals "employed on any of the works," and all "materials belonging to the contractor delivered on the ground," and use the same to complete the work. Held, that on the termination of the contract the Secretary of the Interior's right to take possession of machinery, tools, appliances, and animals was not limited to those employed by the contractor, but included all that were "employed on any of the works," by any one, whether contractor or subcontractor. Tinker & Scott v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 160 Fed. 211, 215.

Employed within the state

To render a corporation liable to a franchise tax under section 182 of the tax law as amended, imposing such a tax on the capital of a corporation "employed within the state," it must be doing business in the state, and must have capital stock employed within the state during the year for which the tax is assessed. Where the capital stock of a corporation was used for the precise purpose specified in the certificate of incorporation, it was "employed" rather than "invested" within the state so as to render it liable to a franchise tax under said section. People ex rel. Vandervoort Realty Co. v. Glynn, 37 N. E. 434, 435, 194 N. Y. 387.

A tract of 200 acres of land belonging to a corporation, upon part of which 34 dwelling houses are built and earning an annual rental of $7,200, and the balance of which is held for sale as soon as a satisfactory price can be obtained, is "employed," within the meaning of Tax Law, Laws 1896, p. 856, c. 908, § 182, imposing a franchise tax on corporations, to be computed upon the basis of the amount of their capital stock employed within the state. People ex rel. Stehway & Sons v. Kelsey, 96 N. Y. Supp. 42, 44, 108 App. Div. 138.

Within Laws 1896, c. 908, § 182, providing that every corporation incorporated in this state shall pay annual tax, to be computed on the basis of the amount of its capital stock "employed" within this state, the capital stock of a corporation, represented by the several pieces of real estate owned by it, is "employed"; and the corporation is liable for the tax though it is really merely a holding corporation for an individual, and it is merely employing the property as he would have employed it had the title remained. People ex rel. Wacklark Realty Co. v. Williams, 91 N. E. 266, 267, 198 N. Y. 54, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 371.

A corporation organized to buy and sell real estate and erect buildings thereon "employed" its capital in this state from the time it purchased realty for the purpose of erecting a building thereon within the meaning of Tax Law requiring every corporation to pay to the State Treasurer an annual tax, to be computed upon the basis of the amount of its capital stock employed during the preceding year within the state; it not being essential that it should have completed the buildings and received rents therefrom in order to employ its capital in the state within the statute. People ex rel. Fifth Ave. Bldg. Co. v. Williams, 91 N. E. 638, 640, 198 N. Y. 238, 189 Am. St. Rep. 809.

The value of the rolling stock of a domestic railroad corporation is capital "employed within the state," unless such stock is used exclusively outside of the state. People ex rel. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Knight, 65 N. E. 1102, 1104, 173 N. Y. 255.

A corporation whose only business is owing and managing an apartment house within the state is employing its capital stock within the state, and is taxable under Tax Law, providing for the assessment of a franchise tax against corporations, to be computed upon the basis of the amount of their capital stock "employed within the state." People ex rel. Hubert Apartment Ass'n v. Kelsey, 96 N. Y. Supp. 745, 746, 110 App. Div. 617.

Where the entire capital of a foreign corporation was invested in a building within the state and employed in the care and management of the same and the collection of the rents, the net income being devoted to dividends, this fund was subject to taxation as being "employed within the state" under the purview of Laws 1896, p. 856, c. 908, §§ 181, 182, imposing license taxes on foreign corporations. People ex rel. Wall & H. St. Realty Co. v. Miller, 73 N. E. 1102, 1103, 181 N. Y. 323.

A corporation organized for the purpose of taking title to unimproved city real estate owned by tenants in common so as to execute a mortgage thereon to pay past due mortgages and taxes and hold the same for sale is not liable to the franchise tax imposed under Tax Law, § 182, on capital of a corporation "employed within this state." People ex rel. Ft. George Realty Co. v. Miller, 71 N. E. 463, 464, 179 N. Y. 49.

Where a foreign banking corporation, maintaining its principal office in the state and branches and agencies in other states, carries on the business of selling its own drafts on its own branches and agencies, which in turn draw upon the principal office for reimbursement and also to pay for such drafts as have been sold, thereby becoming indebted to the main office, which uses such indebtedness for the payment of any further drafts that may be drawn and sold by it, such credits and evidences of indebtedness were taxable as capital "employed" and invested within the state. People ex rel. International Banking Corp. v. Raymond, 102 N. Y. Supp. 85, 86, 117 App. Div. 62.

EMPLOYER

In section 161, Crimes Act, the terms "employé or agent of any individual," on the one hand, and "employer," on the other, are correlative; so that, when the employes or agents of an individual embezzle his money, they embezzle the money of their "employer," within the intendment of the law. State v. Barr, 38 Atl. 817, 818, 61 N. J. Law, 131.

A stockholder in a corporation which employs tinnners is not an "employer of labor" within the meaning of a by-law of a labor union which admits to its membership master tinnners, described by such by-law as employers of labor. J. F. Parkinson Co. v. Building Trades Council of Santa Clara County, 98 Pac. 1027, 1030, 154 Cal. 581, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 550, 16 Ann. Cas. 1165.

The Secretary of State without notice to a corporation dissolved it and caused its name to be stricken from his records. Thereafter an employe who had no knowledge of its dissolution was injured and served timely notice in writing addressed to the corporation of the time, place, and cause of the injury on its president and manager, who was also one of its two trustees and stockholders. Held, that conceding that the entry by the Secretary of State on his records of a notation that the corporation was dissolved terminated its corporate existence, and that under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 3715d, providing that the trustees of such a dissolved corporation shall hold title to the property for the benefit of its stockholders and creditors, the trustees became the employer within Laws 1905, c. 84, requiring notice of injury to be given to the employer, the notice given was sufficient. Jones v. Francis, 127 Pac. 307, 309, 70 Wash. 676.

EMPLOYING PLUMBER

"Master plumbers" and "employing plumbers" are one and the same, those who do not hold themselves out as personally doing the work, but as contracting to furnish the materials and to do the work through others, while "journeyman plumbers" are those skilled in the calling and holding themselves out as able and willing to do the work themselves. Felton v. Atlanta, 61 S. E. 27, 28, 4 Ga. App. 183.

EMPLOYMENT

Where the general manager of a corporation, on one of its employes being injured, directed an employe to call a physician, and placed the injured employe under such physician's care, and did not countermand the first employment, though he knew the physician was continuing to attend the employe, there was an employment of the physician as to his entire services. Freeman v. Junge Baking Co., 103 S. W. 535, 126 Mo. App. 124.

Under Laws 1904, p. 8, c. 9, § 1, providing that in every public department and upon all public works, etc., honorably discharged veterans of the Civil War who are citizens and residents of the state shall be entitled to preference in appointment and "employment," etc., a position as janitor of a courthouse is one by appointment or employment. Kitterman v. Board of Sup'rs of Wapello County, 115 N. W. 13, 15, 137 Iowa, 275.

The phrase "while in the employment" is not synonymous with "in the scope of employment." The line is not always easy to draw, but if not drawn the employer is made responsible for every tort committed by the employe during the time of employment. Stewart v. Cary Lumber Co., 59 S. E. 545, 567, 146 N. C. 47 (dissenting opinion).

As appointment

In the common acceptation, the meaning of the words "appointment" and "employment" is quite different. An officer is usually appointed, while a person employed is spoken of as an "employe," and but rarely, if ever, as an "officer." The Century Dictionary defines "appointment" as "the act of appointing, designating, or placing in office. An office held by a person appointed." Among the definitions given to those words by the courts are the following: "'Appointment' is the designation of a person by the person having authority therefor to discharge the duties of some office or trust." State v. New Orleans, 41 La. Ann. 156, 6 South. 592. "Where the selection of an officer is referred to some functionary, it is called an 'appointment.'" Speed v. Crawford, 60 Ky. 207. The definition of "employe," as given by the Century Dictionary, is: "One who works for an employer; a person working for salary or wages; applied to any one so working but usually only to clerks, workmen, laborers, etc., and but rarely to the higher officers of a corporation or government or to domestic servants." In re Cortland Manufacturing Co. (Sup.) 45 N. Y. Supp. 630, an "employe" is defined to be a person who is employed; one who works for wages or a salary. In Palmer v. Van Santvoord, 153 N. Y. 612, 47 N. E. 915, 38 L. R. A. 402, the court held: "An employe is one who works for an employer; a person working for a salary or wage. The word is applied to any one so working, but usually only to clerks, workmen, laborers, etc., and but rarely to officers of a government or corporation." United States v. Schlierholz, 137 Fed. 616, 624.

Hiring distinguished

"The word 'employment,' when used in respect to a servant or hired hand, is equivalent to 'hiring,' which implies a request and a contract for compensation." State v. Deck, 83 S. W. 814, 815, 108 Mo. App. 292 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Foster, 37 Iowa, 404; McCluskey v. Cromwell, 11 N. Y. 593).

Laws 1905, p. 145, c. 18, § 2, provides that the railroad commission may appoint a secretary at a salary of not more than $2,000 per annum, appoint such clerks as may be necessary at a salary not exceeding a maximum amount, "and such other persons as experts as may be necessary to perform the duties that may be required of them by the act." Section 12 requires the commission as early as practicable to ascertain the amount of money expended per mile in the construction and equipment of every railroad in Washington, the amounts paid the officers of railroad and express companies for salaries, and wages of employes, and for this purpose authorizes employment of sworn experts to make the inspection and to assist the commission. Held, that the commission had authority to employ an expert in ascertaining the cost of the construction of railroads and to fix a salary which in the absence of fraud could not be reviewed by the State Auditor, under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 134, subd. 1, authorizing the Auditor to audit, adjust, and settle all claims against the state except such as may be expressly required by law to be audited and settled by other officers or persons. As stated in McCluskey v. Cromwell, 11 N. Y. 593, to "employ is to 'engage' in one's service; to use as an agent or substitute in transacting business; to commission or intrust with the management of one's affairs; and when used in respect to a servant or hired laborer is equivalent to hiring which implies a request, and a contract for a compensation, and has but this one meaning in the ordinary affairs and business of life." State ex rel. Gillette v. Clausen, 87 Pac. 498, 499, 44 Wash. 437.

Office distinguished

See Office; Officer.

EMPOWER

"Empowered" means authorized. Bacon v. Davis, 98 Pac. 71, 77, 9 Cal. App. 83.

The word "empowered," as used in Act May 23, 1899 (P. L. 277), art. 12, § 2, providing that "any city which now has the title to any water, gas, or electric light works * * * is hereby 'empowered' to create a department to be called the water and light department," is a grant of authority rather than a command to exercise it. Commonwealth v. Heller, 67 Atl. 925, 928, 219 Pa. 65.

EMPTOR

See Caveat Emptor.

EMPTY

A manufacturer's stamped package is not "emptied," within section 13 of the Oleomargarine Act, making it the duty, subject to a fine for violation thereof, of the person in whose hands the package is when emptied, to destroy the stamps thereof, where it still contains a pound package put up by the retailer out of its original contents. United States v. Knott, 151 Fed. 925, 926.

Where, in an action for injuries to a servant by the derailment of a car, it appeared that the car was "emptied" of its contents by "dumping," which was accomplished by pulling a lever, an instruction that, if plaintiff "emptied" the slate from the car at the place of derailment, he was guilty of contributory negligence, was sufficiently covered by the plea, which alleged that plaintiff "dumped the car." The words "dumped" and "emptied" are synonymous. Redus v. Milner Coal & R. Co., 41 South. 634, 635, 148 Ala. 665.

ENACT

"The word 'resolved' is as potent to declare the legislative will as the word 'enacted.'" A joint resolution enacted by the words, "Be it resolved," etc. is a sufficient compliance with the mandatory provision of Const. art. 3, § 18, requiring all laws to be enacted by the words, "Be it enacted," etc. Smith v. Jennings, 45 S. E. 821, 823, 825, 67 S. C. 324 (quoting Swann v. Buck, 40 Miss. 268); Swann v. Buck, 40 Miss. 268, 269, 293.

The words "revived, saved, and enacted," as used in a law declaring that "all acts of assembly of this province, made and enacted at any time before the session of the assembly, begun and held at the port of Annapolis on the 26th of April, 1704, to be repealed and made void, except Acts 1702, c. 1, and Acts 1690, c. 24, and except the act for keeping good rules and order in the port of Annapolis, and which are not revived, saved, and enacted, this present session of assembly," mean such acts as had been expressly revived and enacted, otherwise the language would have been, "which are not hereby revived"; to revive a law by repealing a repealing law, not being to "enact" it. State v. Bank of Maryland (Md.) 6 Gill & J. 205, 224, 26 Am. Dec. 561.

ENACTING CLAUSE

The "enacting clause" of a statute is that part which enacts any rule or regulation, no matter what place it occupies in the statute. Mackmull v. Brandeish, 137 N. Y. Supp. 607, 611, 152 App. Div. 733.

The "enacting clause" of a statute, within the rule that if exceptions are stated in the enacting clause it will be necessary to negative them in order that the description of the crime may in all respects correspond with the statute, is not necessarily alone that which purports to be such, but comprehends every part of the statute which should be stated in order to define the offense with clearness. U. S. v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 160 Fed. 520, 528.

ENACTMENT

The word "enactment" as used in the saving clause of article 5, § 58, of the Constitution of Oklahoma, relating to the passage of laws and the time when they are to take effect, is synonymous with the word "act." Norris v. Cross, 105 Pac. 1000, 1007, 25 Okl. 287; In re Initiative State Question No. 10, 110 Pac. 647, 648, 26 Okl. 554.

ENAMEL

The art of "enameling" metal is old. Many different formulas and substances are used to form the enamel, but the usual process is substantially as follows: Certain ingredients, usually a mixture of silica or sand, and of other substances having a fluxing property to produce glass when mixed with sand, and subjected to heat, are mixed together mechanically. This mixture is called by enamellers the "mix." The mix is then subjected to a high degree of heat and fused, resulting in a vitrified or glassy mass. This is called the "frit." The frit is then put in a mill and ground fine, with a mixture of clay and water, resulting in a liquid paste. This is called the "dip." The metal article to be enameled is then dipped in the paste, dried, and subjected to a very high temperature in an oven or ruffle. In some cases more than one dipping and burning takes place. The result is, if the operation is successful, a metal article with its surface covered with an adherent coat of metal. National Enameling & Stamping Co. v. New England Enameling Co., 151 Fed. 19, 29, 80 C. A. 485.

ENCEPHALO MENINGITIS

"Encephalo meningitis" is a disease and consists in a change in the meninges covering the brain. It is a change which takes place in the brain's surface, and is therefore an affection of the brain covering. The term signifies degeneration. Thomas v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 67 Atl. 259, 260, 106 Md. 299.

ENCOURAGE

To "encourage, aid, or abet" the commission of a crime means or implies that the will of the person has contributed to the act actually committed by another, and fully and accurately describes an accessory before the fact if he is too far away to aid in the felonious act, or a principal if near enough to aid. One who tacitly approves of or silently consents to the killing of another person cannot be held to have aided or abetted in such killing. Harper v. State, 35 South. 572, 574, 83 Miss. 402 (quoting and adopting definition given in True v. Commonwealth, 14 S. W. 684, 90 Ky. 653).

In an instruction that all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether they directly committed the act constituting the offense, or aided or abetted in its commission, or even if not present at its commission, have advised or encouraged its commission, are principals in the crime so committed. The word "advise" means "to give counsel; to offer an opinion to; as worthy or expedient to be followed; to recommend as wise and prudent; or to suggest as the proper course of action." And the term "encourage" means "to give courage to; to excite to action or perseverance." While the terms are not synonymous in a technical sense, they are in popular usage, and one who suggests to another that the commission of a crime is wise or that it is a proper course of action, and the advice so given is followed, may be said, in a popular sense, to have encouraged the commission of the offense. To incite one to action involves the idea of giving advice to the same end. By avoiding a strictly technical construction and giving the terms employed a more liberal and popular meaning, which is the correct canon of construction to be applied in such cases, there is no difference in principle between giving advice and giving encouragement, and criminal responsibility should be regarded as attaching to the giver in each case. State v. Allen, 87 Pac. 177, 182, 34 Mont. 403.

ENCROACHMENT

See Substantial Encroachment.

As public nuisance, see Public Nuisance.
As purpresture, see Purpresture.

An "encroachment" is a gradual entering on and taking possession by one of what is not his own; an unlawful gaining upon the rights of possession of another. Meservey v. Gulliford, 93 Pac. 780, 786, 14 Idaho, 133 (citing Chase v. City of Oshkosh, 51 N. W. 560, 81 Wis. 313, 51 L. B. A. 553, 29 Am. St. Rep. 898; 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2385).

To "encroach" is to intrude upon, make gain upon, occupy, or use the land, right, or authority of another as by a gradual or partial assumption of right; to gain unlawfully upon the lands, property, or authority of another. Johnston v. Long Island Inv. & Imp. Co., 82 N. Y. Supp. 961, 964, 85 App. Div. 60 (citing And. Law Dict.; Bouv. Law Dict.).

Though a post is set three feet outside the wheel tracks of a highway, it may be an obstruction within St. 1898, § 1326, providing a penalty therefor, rather than a mere encroachment within section 1330, providing for its removal. Neale v. State, 120 N. W. 345, 346, 188 Wis. 484.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 5648, providing for the prevention and removal of encroachments or obstructions upon any city street or sidewalk, an unauthorized private awning extending in whole or in part over the sidewalk, which is in a good and safe condition but which might interfere with the fire department, is an "encroachment" on the street, and an ordinance requiring its removal is authorized. City of Helena v. Wooten, 135 S. W. 828, 829, 98 Ark. 158.

ENCUMBRANCE

See Incumber—Incumbrance.

END

See At the End.

The word "end," as used in a restriction in a deed providing that no building should be erected in the rear end of the lot conveyed within 10 feet from the line of the north side of a street, means the extremity, termination, limit. Crofton v. St. Clement's Church, 57 Atl. 570, 572, 208 Pa. 209.

A deed to certain lots reserved a right of way 10 feet wide abutting on the southwesterly "end of the strip" for an alley. Thereafter the grantor conveyed to S. the parcel of land subsequently acquired by defendant, reserving "the right of a driveway 12 feet wide along and across the southwesterly end of the same," which S. was entitled to inclose and use on maintaining gates at each end thereof. Held, that the 12-foot driveway was not only to be across the southwesterly end of the parcel conveyed, but was also to be along the southwesterly boundary; the word "end" being used first to describe the southwesterly boundary of the parcel, and as describing the southwesterly portion thereof. Reed v. Gasser, 106 N. W. 383, 384, 130 Iowa, 87.

Of term

The words "end of the term," within the meaning of the acts providing for remedying defects in court records, were construed as being the last day on which argument was to be heard during that term, notwithstanding the court continued in session several days longer consulting and deciding cases. Temple Baptist Church v. Georgia Terminal Co., 58 S. E. 157, 160, 128 Ga. 669.

A lease for a year contained a proviso that the "agreement, with all its provisions and covenants," should continue in force from time to time after the expiration of the year, provided that the parties could terminate the same at the end of the year or any term thereafter, and stipulated that the tenant should have the right to purchase the premises "at the end of said term" for a fixed sum. Held, that the tenant's option to purchase could be exercised at the end of the year, or every succeeding year until the lease was terminated. Thomas v. Gottlieb, Bauernschmidt Straus Brewing Co., 62 Atl. 683, 635, 102 Md. 417.

Of will

The words "end of the will" in the statute of wills requiring signature at the end of a will refer to the logical and not the physical end and apply to the time of signature as well as the place. In re Foley's Will, 136 N. Y. Supp. 933, 937, 76 Misc. Rep. 168.

The statutory requirement that a will be signed "at the end thereof" means the logical end of the language used, which shows that the testamentary purpose has been fully expressed, and the position of the signature with regard to the bottom or end of the page is only evidence whether testator has completed the expression of his intention. In re Swire's Estate, 73 Atl. 1110, 1111, 225 Pa. 188.

The "end" of a will, under the statute, is the logical end of testator's disposition of his property, wherever it appears on the paper, and not the point spatially farthest removed from the beginning; and where testatrix, after having written the first page of a will, skipped the second page, filled the third page, and then returned to the second, having completed the disposition of her property at about the middle of the second page, and signed her name there, the statute was complied with. In re Stinson's Estate, 77 Atl. 807, 808, 228 Pa. 475, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1173, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1014.

The provision of the statute that the will must be subscribed at the end thereof requires the testator's name to be written at the termination of the testamentary provisions which he makes in the instrument. The will at whose end the name is to be subscribed is not the sheet of paper or other material upon which these testamentary provisions are written, but it is the declaration which the testator has written thereon for such testamentary disposition, and the end thereof is not the foot or physical end of the sheet of paper upon which the will is written, but is the physical termination of the testamentary provisions which constitute the will. The requirement that the name shall be subscribed at the end of the will is not satisfied by having that name written in any place after the termination of the written matter irrespective of the relation which such place bears to the concluding portion of the will. This portion does not, however, of necessity require that it shall be in immediate juxtaposition with the concluding words of the instrument, but that it shall be so near thereto as to afford a reasonable inference that the testator thereby intended to indicate an authentication of the instrument as a completed expression of his testamentary purposes. It must appear upon the face of the instrument not only that he intended to place it at the end of his testamentary provisions, but that he has in fact placed it in such proximity thereto as to constitute a substantial compliance with this requirement of the statute. While a slight space such as a single line or even more might be left blank between the written matter and the name without impairing the validity of the will, yet to leave blank an entire page between the two would indicate a disregard of the requirements of the statute, whether resulting from ignorance or intention which would prevent its admission to probate. An alleged will was written on a printed form consisting of four pages folded in the middle as ordinary legal cap, and dispositive parts of the will were written on the blank portion of the first page and on about one-fourth of the blank portion of the second page. The printed form was prepared to be twice folded from the top to the bottom, and across the face of the paper as so folded and at the top thereof was testator's signature. Held, that the will was invalid as not fulfilling the requirements of Civ. Code, § 1276, requiring every will other than nuncupative or olographic to be subscribed at the end thereof by the testator. In re Seaman's Estate, 80 Pac. 700, 702, 146 Cal. 455, 106 Am. St. Rep. 53, 2 Ann. Cas. 726 (citing McGuire v. Kerr, 2 Bradf. Sur. [N. Y.] 244; Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul v. Kelly, 67 N. Y. 409; In re O'Neil's Will, 91 N. Y. 522; In re Andrews' Will, 56 N. E. 529, 162 N. Y. 1, 48 L. R. A. 662, 76 Am. St. Rep. 294; Soward v. Soward, 1 Duv. [62 Ky.] 126).

A will is not signed at the end thereof, within Rev. St. 1892, § 5916, when it is written by the party making it on a printed blank form containing a testimonium clause, with blanks for the name of the place and the date of execution, which he fills, and immediately following a blank line for the signature, which he leaves blank, though he has written his name in the attestation clause, immediately following the testimonium clause, in a blank left for the name of testator, and may have intended such act as a signing. Sears v. Sears, 82 N. E. 1067, 1068, 77 Ohio St. 104, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 353, 11 Ann. Cas. 1008.

A will was written on a blank form, folded in the middle, and containing three ruled pages marked with a printed heading. There were numerous testamentary clauses, and one naming the executor, occupying the first and a portion of the second page. Then a blank space was left between such clauses and the testimonium clause at the bottom of page 3. At the end of the testimonium clause testatrix signed her name, immediately following which was the attestation clause signed by two witnesses. There was no testamentary provision after her signature. Held, that the will was signed at the end thereof, as required by Rev. St. § 5916. Mader v.

Apple, 89 N. E. 37, 89, 80 Ohio St. 691, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 515, 131 Am. St. Rep. 719.

ENDANGER

"Endanger" means exposure to injury coming from without, as well as within a given place or object; such being its meaning in 87 Ohio Laws, p. 161, prohibiting the employment of any child under the age of 16 years at an occupation whereby its life or limb is endangered. Frank Unnewehr Co. v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 178 Fed. 16, 20, 99 C. C. A. 490.

ENDARTERITIS

"Endarteritis" is an inflammation of the inner cores of an artery. Heyzer v. Morris, 97 N. Y. Supp. 131, 132, 110 App. Div. 313.

ENDEAVOR

See Would Endeavor.

ENDOCARDITIS

According to expert testimony "endocarditis" is an inflammation of the heart lining, and interferes with the action of that organ so as to enlarge or cause leakage of the valves, and make it beat faster. "The doctors agreed that this disease results from general infection, attended by a rise of temperature; and one of those called by defendant was of opinion that a person will die in a few days from acute endocarditis, but may survive months or years with the disease when chronic." Schroeder v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 103 N. W. 985, 988, 128 Iowa, 365.

ENDORSE—ENDORSEMENT

See Indorse—Indorsement.

ENDOW

ENDOWMENT

An exemption from taxation of the "endowment or fund of any religious society, college, etc.," has been held not to include an endowment of a religious society, college, etc., consisting of land. Rosedale Cemetery Ass'n v. Linden Tp., 63 Atl. 904, 905, 73 N. J. Law, 421 (citing State [Nevin, Prosecutor] v. Krollman, 38 N. J. Law, 574).

ENDOWMENT INSURANCE

A fraternal beneficiary association, which agrees to pay dividends or "maturity benefits" to its living members not under disability, and which agrees to pay small disability benefits as a loan and an insignificant death benefit for a flat premium, is selling "endowments," a business which beneficiary associations are forbidden by statute to engage in. National Protective Legion v. O'Brien, 112 N. W. 1050, 1052, 102 Minn. 15.

ENEMY

See Public Enemy.

Face of the enemy, see Face.

"In war, all residents of enemy country are 'enemies.'" Juragua Iron Co. v. United States, 29 Sup. Ct. 385, 388, 212 U. S. 297, 53 L. Ed. 520 (quoting definition in Lamar v. Browne, 92 U. S. 187, 194, 23 L. Ed. 650, 653).

Where the officers and crew of a vessel seizing another vessel acted under commissions issued by a de facto government, engaged in levying war against the United States, they are liable to be regarded as "enemies." But every forcible contest between two governments, de facto, or de jure, is war. War is an existing fact, and not a legislative decree. Congress alone may have power to declare it beforehand, and thus cause or commence it. But it may be initiated by other nations, or by traitors; and then it exists, whether there is any declaration of it or not. It may be prosecuted without any declaration; or Congress may, as in the Mexican War, declare its previous existence. In either case it is the fact that makes "enemies," and not any legislative act. In a civil war, those who prosecute hostilities against the established government are also traitors. And their acts are robbery or murder on the land, or piracy on the sea; and hence, though such officers and crew be regarded as "enemies," they may also be pirates. Dole v. Merchants' Mut. Marine Ins. Co., 51 Me. 465, 470.

ENEMY'S PROPERTY

"For the purposes of capture, property found in enemy territory is 'enemy property,' without regard to the status of the owner." An American corporation doing business in Cuba was during the war with Spain an enemy to the United States with respect of its property found and then used in Cuba, and such property could be regarded as enemy's property, liable to be seized and confiscated by the United States in the progress of the war. Juragua Iron Co. v. United States, 42 Ct. Cl. 99; Id., 29 Sup. Ct. 385, 388, 212 U. S. 297, 53 L. Ed. 520 (quoting definition in Lamar v. Browne, 92 U. S. 187, 194, 23 L. Ed. 650, 653).

ENFLEURAGE GREASE

So-called muguet pomade, produced by the combination of several kinds of enfleurage grease, to which is added about one-half of 1 per cent. of various essential oils to fortify and combine the article, thus producing an odor like that of the lily of the valley, held free of duty, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 626, as en-fleurage grease. Lueders v. United States, 143 Fed. 918.

ENFORCE

See Proceed to Enforce.

In the provision of the mulct tax statute, (Acts 25th Gen. Assem. p. 63, c. 62), requiring the county attorney to see that the provisions of the act are enforced, "to 'enforce' is to 'execute with vigor,' to put in force, compel obedience to, cause to be executed or performed. It has the same meaning in this respect as 'execute.'" Tennant v. Kuhlemeier, 120 N. W. 689, 693, 142 Iowa, 241, 19 Ann. Cas. 1026.

ENFORCEABLE CONTRACT

"The term 'enforceable contract' * * * means something more than a contract of legal validity, the violation of which will afford a cause of action. It is a contract which can be so enforced as to give to the principal the property, or the money, or the profit, or other advantage for which he bargained." Snyder v. Fidler, 101 N. W. 130, 132, 125 Iowa, 378.

ENGAGE

See Principally Engaged.

The word "engage" means "to take a part; to devote attention and effort; to employ one's self; to enlist; to carry on; to conduct; be busied; to occupy one's self." Graves v. Knights of the Maccabees of the World, 112 N. Y. Supp. 948, 950, 128 App. Div. 660.

The term "engage" means "to take part," as to engage in a conversation. People v. Corbais, 83 N. Y. Supp. 782, 784, 86 App. Div. 531 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent.-Dict.).

As carry on or transact

The word "engaged," as used in a by-law of a fraternal benefit order which bars from admission to the order persons "engaged" in blasting, coal mining, manufacturing explosives, etc., or who are engaged in any other occupation deemed extrahazardous, or who are engaged either as principal, agent, or servant in the sale of liquor as a beverage, and which provides that any member who shall engage in any of the prohibited occupations shall thereby render his certificate void, is equivalent to the words "carry on," and the by-law is violated by a member who with his son opened a saloon as copartners, the license therefore being issued in their joint names, and the member being peculiarly interested therein, though he performed no labor in or about the saloon and took no active part in the business. Graves v. Knights of the Maccabees of the World, 92 N. E. 792, 794, 199 N. Y. 397, 139 Am. St. Rep. 912.

Interest distinguished

See Interest.

As occasional or single act

To say that one is "engaged" in an occupation signifies much more than the doing of one act in the line of such occupation. State v. Roberson, 48 S. E. 595, 596, 136 N. C. 587.

A mere single transaction by an infant does not constitute him as one "engaged" in a business, within the meaning of Civ. Code 1895, § 3648, providing that, if an infant by permission of his parents or guardian or of the law engages in any business as an adult, he is bound for all the contracts connected with the business. White v. Sikes, 59 S. E. 228, 229, 129 Ga. 508, 121 Am. St. Rep. 228.

Pen. Law, § 970, provides that a person who "engages" as player, gamekeeper, or dealer in any gambling or banking game, where money or property is dependent on the result, is a "common gambler." Code Cr. Proc. § 399, provides that a conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice, unless corroborated by such other evidence as tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime. The only witness in a prosecution under section 970 was a person who had participated in a game of draw poker at which defendant, before the hand was opened, took one or two chips from the pile in the center of the table, and put them in a separate pile from the chips he was playing with, and had himself acted as dealer when it came to his turn to deal. Held, that the phrase "who engages" means something more than occasional participation, and imports some continuity of practice, just as the word "common" implies that a common gambler is a person who customarily, or habitually, or frequently carries on the gambling practices in violation of the statute, as a money-making pursuit; and hence that the witness was not an accomplice whose testimony required corroboration. People v. Bright, 96 N. E. 862, 864, 203 N. Y. 73, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 771.

As to pursue for profit or livelihood

To "engage in" business is uniformly construed as signifying to follow that employment or occupation which occupies the time, attention, and labor for the purpose of a livelihood or profit. Semple v. Schwarz, 109 S. W. 633, 636, 130 Mo. App. 65 (citing Beckler v. Guenther, 96 N. W. 895, 896, 121 Iowa, 419).

Engaged chiefly in farming

See Farming.

See, also, Person.

Engaged in alighting

Where a complaint alleged that plaintiff, a passenger, was thrown down and injured while engaged in alighting, the term "engaged in alighting," includes all the acts transpiring from the moment the passenger rises for that purpose until he gets clear of the car, provided there is no interruption of his passage. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Glenn (Ala.) 60 South. 111, 113.

Engaged in becoming a passenger

An allegation of the complaint, in an action against a street railway company for an assault, that it was committed while plaintiff was "engaged in or about becoming a passenger" on said car does not show that plaintiff was a passenger. Birmingham Railway & Electric Co. v. Mason, 84 South. 207, 137 Ala. 342.

Engaged in business

See Continue to Carry on Business.

As doing business, see Doing Business.

A nonresident owner of real estate in a city, who employs a resident as agent in charge of the property to rent the same and collect rents, is engaged in the business in the state of renting real estate within Civ. Code Prac. § 51, subsec. 6, providing that, in actions against a nonresident engaged in business in the state, the summons may be served on the agent, and in an action against her for damages to a tenant by defects in the premises process is properly served on the agent. Andonique v. Carmen, 151 S. W. 921, 923, 151 Ky. 249.

A person who contracts debts while "engaged in a business," which makes him liable to bankruptcy, is not to be heard to say that he is not so engaged, even though he has in fact ceased to be so, so long as his debts remain unpaid. Hence, where a corporation conducted a milk-condensing business up to October 6, 1904, when its plant was burned, and thereafter did nothing except to gather in its assets and settle up its affairs, retaining a central office within its district for the purpose, upon a petition in bankruptcy being filed against it February 2, 1905, the court had jurisdiction under section 2 of the Bankruptcy Act, notwithstanding the fact that, for the greater part of the six months next preceding the filing of the petition, it was not conducting the business for which it was incorporated, but only engaged in liquidation. Tiffany v. La Plume Condensed Milk Co., 141 Fed. 444, 448.

Where complainant railroad company, after operating its railroad for a number of years, in 1896 leased its property and franchises for 999 years at a specified rent, and since that time merely maintained a corporate existence, received the rents, and distributed them among its stockholders, and only had an office and such employees as were necessary to maintain such corporate existence as required by the lease, and to receive and distribute the rent, it was not "engaged in business," within the corporation tax law of 1909, and was therefore not liable for corporation taxes thereunder, notwithstanding the lease provided for termination and recovery of the property in case of the lessee's default, etc. Mine Hill & S. H. R. Co. v. McCoach, 192 Fed. 670, 671.

"Engaging in or carrying on business," as used in Acts 1900-01, p. 2680, subd. 63, requiring a license for engaging in or carrying on the business of a dealer in pistols, is to pursue the occupation or employment, as a livelihood or source of profit, and must be a series of acts rather than the doing of a single act pertaining to the particular business. Morningstar v. State, 33 South. 485, 486, 135 Ala. 66.

A person who agreed to act as private detective to watch the movements of a husband and report to the wife, for which he was promised a certain fee, undertook "to engage in the business of a private detective for hire or reward," within Laws 1898, p. 1120, c. 422, § 1, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 1002, c. 362, requiring private detectives to be licensed, though he was not regularly engaged in the business. Fox v. Smith, 108 N. Y. Supp. 181, 182, 123 App. Div. 369.

Where, on sale of a business, the vendor agreed that he would not "engage in a business similar" in three named states for five years, but thereafter became president of a corporation engaged in a similar business, he would be enjoined. The parties intended that the vendor should only not employ his capital in a like enterprise but should not employ his skill and experience in any capacity whatever in a business similar to that sold. Pittsburg Stove & Range Co. v. Pennsylvania Stove Co., 57 Atl. 77, 79, 214 Pa. 37.

"One cannot properly be said to be engaged in a business unless there is to some extent a continuous occupation of his faculties and powers directed toward the carrying on of the business as an object or purpose. The extent of continuity implied when the word 'engaged' is employed depends upon the thing which engages. A man may be engaged in prayer, although the engagement may occupy but a few minutes. A man may be engaged in building a house, which cannot occupy, in the natural course of things, more than a few months. A man also may be engaged in any occupation or pursuit for a limited time." One who has sold his business and good will, and has covenanted not to engage as agent or servant in that business, may not, though he is not engaged in any way in the prohibited business, hold himself out to the world as the manager or superintendent of a similar business carried on under his wife's name, as one giving to that business the benefit of his special skill and personal attention, and thereby attract to it the good will which he has sold. Fleckenstein Bros. Co. v. Fleckenstein, 57 Atl. 1025, 1027, 66 N. J. Eq. 252.

"To say that one is 'engaged' in an occupation signifies much more than the doing of one act in the line of such occupation. It is an expression in common use, and well understood—that one is engaged in merchandising or in practicing law. Webster, Int. Dict., defines 'engage': 'To embark in a business; to employ or involve oneself; to enlist.' Cent. Dict.: 'To occupy oneself; be busied.' An indictment that defendant, "at," etc., "did engage in procuring laborers for employment out of the state, without having first paid the license tax" prescribed, etc., sufficiently charged that defendant "engaged in the business of procuring laborers," within Pub. Laws 1903, p. 347, c. 247, § 74, prohibiting persons from engaging in the business of procuring laborers, etc., without first having paid the tax imposed. State v. Roberson, 48 S. E. 595, 596, 136 N. C. 587.

A person whose principal business is that of insurance agent is also engaged in carrying on the business of selling real estate, if he enters into a contract for the sale of such property on commission, and renders such service under the contract as would entitle him to his commission if he had complied with the law in reference to registering and paying the tax. Ford & Pruett v. Thomason, 75 S. E. 269, 11 Ga. App. 359.

An officer of a foreign corporation, who comes into the state to procure laborers to work under himself in another state on work which he superintends and manages for the corporation, and who receives no consideration or compensation for carrying the laborers out of the state, and the laborers procured by whom are not employed in any other business or under the management of any other person than himself, is not "engaged in the business" of an emigrant agent, within the statute exacting a license tax from persons engaged in such business. Lane v. Rowan County Com'rs, 52 S. E. 140, 139 N. C. 443 (citing Moore's Case, 18 S. E. 342, 113 N. C. 697, 22 L. R. A. 472; Hunt's Case, 40 S. E. 216, 129 N. C. 686, 85 Am. St. Rep. 758).

Defendants manufactured fluid extract of ginger by pouring distilled spirits on ginger root. After drawing off the fluid, the distilled spirits remaining in the dregs was separated therefrom by distillation, and this product, less in quantity and lower in grade than that previously placed in the receptacle with the ginger root, was reused in repeating the process and in the manufacture of medicinal preparations. Held, that defendant was a person engaged in the business or occupation of rectifying, purifying, and refining distilled spirits and subject to internal revenue taxation imposed on those so engaged. United States v. Smith, Kline & French Co., 184 Fed. 532, 533.

To constitute "engaging in the business of selling liquor" in prohibition territory, it must appear that accused pursued the business for profit, and it must be shown that at least two sales of liquor had been made between the earliest date fixed by a witness who testified to the purchase of liquor and the finding of the indictment. Hernandez v. State, 141 S. W. 268, 273, 64 Tex. Cr. R. 73.

Under Rev. Pol. Code, § 2838, making it unlawful for any person to engage in any business requiring the payment of a license under section 2834 without paying the license, which section requires a license for the business of selling intoxicating liquors, the offense of "engaging in the business without a license" is the same as that of "selling without a license." State v. Ely, 118 N. W. 687, 688, 22 S. D. 487, 18 Ann. Cas. 92.

A bona fide club, situated in a precinct, city, or town where liquor may be lawfully sold, organized for purposes sanctioned by law, and which, as a mere incident and without profit, furnishes liquors to its members, and not to the public generally, is not a person, under the laws, "engaged in the occupation or business of selling intoxicating liquors," though each individual act of such club in territory where the sale of liquor is prohibited by law is a sale. State v. Duke, 137 S. W. 654, 666, 104 Tex. 355.

Laws 1897, p. 253, c. 167, provides for the issuance of licenses to sell liquor, and "that none of the provisions of this act shall apply to any person 'engaged in business as a wholesale dealer,' who does not sell in less quantities than five (5) gallons at a time." Held, that a sale of five gallons or more at a time is selling as a wholesale dealer, though the sale is made to a consumer and not to a retail dealer. State v. Bock, 79 N. E. 493, 495, 167 Ind. 559 (citing Daniels v. State, 50 N. E. 74, 150 Ind. 348; Bishop v. State ex rel. Griner, 48 N. E. 1038, 149 Ind. 223, 39 L. R. A. 278, 63 Am. St. Rep. 270; Cahill v. State, 76 N. E. 182, 36 Ind. App. 507; State v. Kiley, 76 N. E. 184, 36 Ind. App. 513).

A by-law of defendant fraternal benefit association barred from admission to the order persons "engaged" in blasting, coal mining, manufacturing explosives, etc., or who were "engaged" in any other occupation deemed extrahazardous by its medical examiner, or who were "engaged," either as principal, agent, or servant, in the sale of liquor as a beverage, and, should any member "engage" in any of the prohibited occupations, his membership certificate should be void. Before his death, insured and his son opened a saloon as copartners; the license being issued in their joint names. Insured was pecuniarily interested therein, but performed no labor in or about the saloon and took no active part in the business. Held that, giving the word "engaged" the same meaning throughout the clause and construing it most favorably to plaintiff, insured was not "engaged" in the liquor business within the meaning of the policy; the general intent of the policy being to prohibit members from engaging in occupations which increased the risk. Graves v. Knights of the Maccabees of the World, 112 N. Y. Supp. 948, 949, 128 App. Div. 660.

The act (Laws 1903, c. 114) regulating and prohibiting the carrying of concealed weapons declares (section 4) that it shall not apply to peace officers in the discharge of their duties, nor to persons acting or engaged in the business of common carriers in the state, or to persons traveling through the state. Held, that the words "acting or engaged in the business of common carriers" did not limit the exemption to persons engaged "in common carrying," but that the exemption included persons acting or engaged in other business of common carriers than actual transportation of freight or passengers, such as the guarding of trains, depots, or property of common carriers, and that watchmen employed by a railroad company, though not engaged in train service, were within the exception. Ex parte Davis, 110 Pac. 1131, 1134, 33 Nev. 309.

See Interstate Commerce.

Engaged in operation of car

An employé assisting in replacing a derailed tram car on the track was "engaged in the operation of a car," within Acts 25th Leg., approved June 18, 1896 (Laws 1897, p. 14, c. 6), making a railroad liable for injuries to a servant while "engaged in operating cars" by reason of the negligence of any other servant. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Smith, 99 S. W. 743, 745, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 128.

Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4560f, provides that every person or corporation operating a railroad shall be liable for all damages sustained by any servant thereof, while "engaged in the work of operating the cars" of such railroad, by reason of the negligence of a fellow servant. Held that, where plaintiff, a servant of a sawmill company operating a private railroad, was injured while transporting telephone poles along the track for the construction of a telephone line by the negligence of a fellow servant, he was "engaged in the work of operating the cars" at the time of his injury, and was entitled to the protection of the statute. Mounce v. Lodwick Lumber Co. (Tex.) 91 S. W. 240.

Engaged in operating engine

An engineer, in charge of a switching engine, and a fireman are, while the engineer is engaged in oiling the parts of the engine and the fireman in filling the tank with water after the engine has been stopped for the purpose of taking water, "engaged in operating the engine," within a statute exempting the operatives of a railroad engine from the fellow-servant rule while engaged in their work. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Walton, 104 S. W. 415, 416, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 43.

Engaged in operation of railroad

A brakeman, in the discharge of his duties lighting lamps in a caboose, which was being switched, so as to attach it to his train, when he was injured by a collision, was "engaged in the work of operating the railroad," within a statute of Missouri making a railroad corporation liable for injuries to any servant engaged in the work of operating such railroad by reason of the negligence of a fellow servant. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Smith (Tex.) 90 S. W. 926, 927.

Engaged in services requiring his presence

A yard foreman of a railway company, in the discharge of whose duties it was customary and necessary for him to ride on a yard engine, and whose position on the step of the engine at the time he was thrown therefrom was the usual and proper place for him to be, is an employé "engaged in services requiring his presence" on an engine, within a constitutional provision abolishing as to such employé the doctrine of "fellow servant," so far as it affects the employer's liability for injury resulting from another's acts or omissions. Southern Ry. Co. v. Smith, 59 S. E. 372, 373, 107 Va. 553.

Engaged in speculating

The words "or shall engage in speculating, or in options on grain, stock, or produce," are well understood to mean the making of contracts in which the parties speculate on the rise and fall of prices. Hoffman v. Farmers' Co-op. Shipping Ass'n, 97 Pac. 440, 442, 78 Kans. 561.

Engaged in superintendence

See Superintendence.

Engaged in transportation from one state to another

Interstate commerce begins with the shipment of an article in one state directed and destined to another state, and ends only with the delivery at destination. All common carriers by railroad, which participate in its actual transportation from the time of shipment to the time of delivery, are "engaged in the transportation of property from one state to another," within the meaning of Interstate Commerce Act, whether their services be performed wholly in one state or in more than one state, whether their services be primary, and called "carriage," or incidental, and called "switching," whether the carrier be paid a flat sum per car or a percentage of the through rate, and whether such payment be made directly by the shipper or consignee on the one hand, or by the initial or final carrier on the other. The Chicago Junction Railway Company, as lessee, operates the railroad owned by the Union Stockyard & Transit Company of Chicago, which consists of some 250 miles of tracks in Chicago, wholly within the state of Illinois, connecting with the tracks of interstate trunk line railroads, and extending to the Union Stockyards and some 650 different industrial establishments in the stockyards district. It is organized under the general railroad law of the state, and its business is to haul cars between receiving tracks on the trunk line roads and the stockyards and industrial plants, from which the shipments are made or to which they are consigned, for which it receives a flat rate per car, in all cases paid by the trunk line company and absorbed in its own charges. Held, that such company is a common carrier "engaged in the transportation of property from one state to another" by rail within the meaning of Interstate Commerce Act. United States v. Union Stock Yard & Transit Co. of Chicago, 192 Fed. 330, 334.

Engaged in unlawful act

Under Ky. St. § 68, providing that every person keeping any dog shall be liable to the party injured for all damages done by such dog, but that no recovery shall be had if the person injured is at the time on the premises of the owner of the dog after night, or "engaged in some unlawful act in the daytime." The words must be given their proper force, according to the common and approved usage of language, and, where plaintiff was bitten by defendant's dog while going to defendant's stable to speak to defendant socially, plaintiff was not engaged in an unlawful act, within the statute, and was entitled to recover for the injuries sustained. Dillehay v. Hickey (Ky.) 71 S. W. 1.

Engaged principally in manufacture See Manufacturer.

Engaged principally in mercantile pursuits

See Mercantile.

Engaged or employed about the premises

The phrase, "engaged or employed about the premises," as used in Act. Pa. April 4, 1868, relating to compensation for injuries sustained by any person engaged or employed on or about the premises of a railroad company, does not include one who, after finishing his day's work, stopped at a small building on the railroad company's property for the purpose of giving in his time. Hobbs v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 143 Fed. 180, 181.

ENGAGEMENT

See Regular Engagement.

"Engagement," in its mechanical sense, means a seizure, a laying hold of, an active prehension, and does not include mere contiguity. Vrooman v. Penhollow, 179 Fed. 296, 301, 102 C. C. A. 484.

A bank's covenant of warranty in a deed is a "contract" and an "engagement" within Rev. St. U. S. art. 515, which makes the stockholders of a national bank liable for the bank's contracts, debts, engagements, etc. McLean v. Moore (Tex.) 145 S. W. 1074, 1075.

ENGINEER

The word "engineer," as used in a contract between the board of water commissioners of a city and a contractor for the construction of a pump well at such times, points, and with such force as might be directed by the engineer, was understood to refer to the engineer and superintendent of the water department of such city or his successor in office. Murland v. Atlantic City, 65 Atl. 1049, 1050, 75 N. J. Law, 592.

As employé or laborer

See Employé; Laborer.

As locomotive engineer

The word "engineer," as used in the Montana statute providing that every railroad corporation shall be liable for all damages sustained by an employé thereof without contributory negligence on his part, when such damage is caused by the negligence of "any train dispatcher, telegraph operator, superintendent, engineer, or any other employé who has superintendence of any stationary or hand signal," refers to a locomotive engineer and does not include an operator of a stationary engine used to draw a plow along the floor of flat cars for the unloading of gravel. Reinke v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 145 Fed. 988, 993.

One charged with the duty of operating a yard engine in switching and making up trains and the like is called, in railroad parlance, a "hostler." Though his duties and work be confined to the depot yard, he is as much an "engineer" as one operating an engine from point to point on a line of a railroad. Howard v. Chesapeake, & O. Ry. Co. (Ky.) 90 S. W. 950, 951.

The word "engineer," as used in New Jersey Public Laws 1896, p. 305, § 88, providing that, in suits against a foreign corporation, process may be served upon any officer, agent or engineer of such corporation, cannot mean, for example, a locomotive engineer. Erie R. Co. v. Van Allen, 69 Atl. 484, 485, 76 N. J. Law, 119.

"The term 'driver' is not as commonly used in this country to describe one who operates a locomotive on a railroad as is the term 'engineer,' although perhaps the former is nearer the original signification than the latter," and as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 2864 (enacted in 1855), giving a right of action for death caused by the negligence of the "driver" of any stage coach or other public conveyance while in charge of the same as driver, does not include the motorman of an electric street car. Drolshagen v. Union Depot R. Co., 85 S. W. 344, 346, 186 Mo. 258.

Engineers and other employés

Gen. St. 1901, § 5858, providing that railroad companies shall be liable for damages to any employé of said companies in consequence of any negligence of their agents or of any mismanagement of their engineers or other employés to any person sustaining such damage, does not make a distinction between agents on the one hand and "engineers and other employés" on the other, nor between negligence and mismanagement, but by the act a company is made responsible for any mismanagement of its engineers or other employés to any person sustaining damage thereby. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Kellerman, 87 S. W. 401, 404, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 274.

See Question of Engineering.

ENGLISH

The words "English language" refer to the well-known spoken and written tongue used by the people of this nation, and while the language is composed of words spoken and written, which consist of single letters, the letters themselves do not constitute the language, but must be formed into words, which must be used in such connection with one another that they form sentences which convey thought or meaning. Stein v. Meyers, 97 N. E. 295, 297, 253 Ill. 199.

Abbreviations

Under Rev. St. 1908, § 4096, requiring that the date of signing the petition for a local option election and the residence address of the signer shall be written opposite his name, the use of ditto marks is permissible, for writing consists of any symbols generally used to transmit ideas, and as no particular style is required, ditto marks, which are to be read as a repetition of the line above, and are as much a part of the English language as punctuation marks, may be used. People ex rel. Arfman v. Newell, 113 Pac. 643, 645, 49 Colo. 349 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2141).

ENGLISH CONSOLS

"English consols" are different from the public debt of the United States in that they are annuities. The principal is never reimbursed, the interest only being paid, and the only way the Government can redeem them is by purchase in the market. Henry v. Henderson, 33 South. 960, 964, 81 Miss. 743, 63 L. R. A. 616.

ENGLISH GEOGRAPHICAL MILES

The statute or English mile was adopted as the standard of land measurement in the thirty-fifth year of the reign of Elizabeth, 1593; the log was invented about the same time, which inaugurated measuring of the sea or marine miles, known as "English geographical miles." The statute mile measures 5,280 feet on the land; the sea mile, knot, geographical, or marine mile measures 6,086.7 feet on the sea, on the scale of 60 geographical or sea miles to a degree. It would therefore appear that the statute mile for measuring the land and the marine mile for measuring the sea by the use of the log were established and went into use at about the same time in England. Lazell v. Boardman, 69 Atl. 97, 99, 103 Me. 292, 13 Ann. Cas. 673.

ENGLISH LAW

The term "English law," as used in London Assurance v. Companhia de Moagens, 17 Sup. Ct. 785, 167 U. S. 149, 42 L. Ed. 113, where the Supreme Court, in construing an insurance policy, said, "Under the circumstances, we think that this contract of insurance is to be interpreted according to the English law," did not mean an act of Parliament, but the law of England as established by the decisions of its courts and by the usages prevailing at Lloyd's. Keene Five Cent Sav. Bank v. Reid, 123 Fed. 221, 230, 59 C. C. A. 225.

ENGROSSING

"Engrossing" is described to be the getting into one's possession, or buying up, large quantities of corn or other dead victual, with intent to sell them again. Commonwealth v. International Harvester Co., 115 S. W. 703, 712, 131 Ky. 551 (quoting and adopting definition in Bl. Com. 155).

"Engrossing" was defined in the statute, 5, 6, Edward VI, c. 14, providing that whatsoever person or persons shall engross, or get into his or their hands by buying, contracting, or promise taking other than by demise, grant, or lease of land, or title, any corn growing in the fields, or any other corn or grain, butter, cheese, fish, or other dead victuals whatsoever, within the realm of England, to the intent to sell the same again, shall be accepted, reputed, and taken as unlawful engrosser or engrossers. The sole trade of anything is "engrossing" ex rei natura, for whoever hath the sole trade of buying and selling hath engrossed that trade, and whoever hath the sole trade to any country hath the sole trade of buying and selling the produce of that country at his own price, which is an "engrossing." Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 502, 512, 221 U. S. 1, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734.

Under the old English law, a technical monopoly was a license or privilege, granted by the sovereign to an individual for the sole buying or selling, making, working, or using of anything, whereby the people in general were excluded from the liberty of manufacturing and trading, which they had before enjoyed. It differed from "engrossing" only in that, in case of a monopoly, a patent was had from the king, while engrossing was a transaction between individuals. State v. Duluth Board of Trade, 121 N. W. 395, 403, 107 Minn. 506, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1260.

ENHANCED DAMAGES

Damages engrafted on a common-law recovery on a statute in the nature of a penalty, and thereby merely accumulating the measure of recovery in actions otherwise primarily existing at common law, are denominated as "enhanced damages." Casey v. St. Louis Transit Co., 91 S. W. 419, 425, 116 Mo. App. 235 (citing Reed v. Northfield, 18 Pick. [80 Mass.] 94, 23 Am. Dec. 662; Huntington v. Attrill, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. Ed. 1123).

ENJOIN

Abate as including, see Abate.

Under St. 1899, p. 103, which authorizes suit by the district attorney of a county to "abate" a public nuisance existing therein, suit lies to enjoin maintenance of a public nuisance by permitting noxious vapors to escape from a smelter, though, strictly construed, the words "abate" and "enjoin" have technically different meanings. People v. Selby Smelting & Lead Co., 124 Pac. 692, 695, 163 Cal. 84.

ENJOY

The word "enjoy" means to have, possess, and use with satisfaction; to occupy or have the benefit of. A bequest of personal property to a person to hold, possess, and enjoy during her natural life gave such legatee the right to apply it in any way that would contribute to her well-being and the fund was hers to expend for her personal benefit if she chose to do so. Her estate was a life estate with power of use. Board of Trustees of Westminster College v. Dimmitt, 87 S. W. 536, 537, 113 Mo. App. 41 (quoting and adopting definitions given in Webst. Dict.).

Under a statute giving to the widow the right to "enjoy the homestead" during her life, where dower was never admeasured to a widow, she, during her life, was entitled either to occupy or rent it, at her election, without any obligation on her part to pay rent. Lloyd v. Turner, 62 Atl. 771, 772, 70 N. J. Eq. 425.

ENJOYMENT

See Exclusive Enjoyment; Full Benefit and Enjoyment.

Where legatees had full and absolute control of the disposition of their share of the residue, and each was entitled to all the income accruing therefrom after the testator's death, the legacies were vested in "enjoyment," though not in possession. Ward v. Sage, 185 Fed. 7, 9, 108 C. C. A. 413.

ENLARGE

ENLARGING BUSINESS

A bond given to an insurance company to secure performance of the duties of its agent appointed to procure applications for insurance provided that the principal and sureties should be liable for loans or advances made to the agent during his agency "for the purpose of enlarging his business or otherwise." Held, that it was the intent of the parties to secure the payment of loans or advances made for the specific purpose of enlarging the agent's business, and advances for the support of the agent's family, being merely personal, were not for that purpose within the meaning of the bond, and were not covered thereby. New York Life Ins. Co. v. McDearmon, 114 S. W. 57, 58, 133 Mo. App. 671.

ENLIST—ENLISTMENT

The receiving in pledge, by a civilian from a soldier, of clothing issued to the latter during the term of his "enlistment" does not constitute a penal offense, within Rev. St. § 5438, providing that every person who purchases or receives in pledge from a soldier any arms, equipment, ammunition, clothing, military stores, or other public property, such soldier not having the lawful right to pledge or sell the same, shall be imprisoned, etc., since "enlistment" is, properly speaking, a contract between the government and the party entering its service. Hence the clothing, on being issued to a soldier, becomes his individual property and ceases to belong to the United States. United States v. Michael, 153 Fed. 609, 611.

ENOUGH

See Not Enough.

As used in a contract by which plaintiff agreed to furnish "enough" material for a pavement, the term "enough," in connection with common knowledge that lumber is generally sold by the square foot, and that in laying such a pavement as was contemplated there is necessarily some waste, the amount of which cannot be accurately determined in advance, suggests very forcibly that the quantity to be paid for was to be determined by measurement of the completed work. Fromme v. O'Donnell, 103 N. W. 3-5, 124 Wis. 529.

ENROLLED—ENROLLMENT

General Election Law (Laws 1896, c. 909, § 31), providing for the adding and erasing of names on the register, is inapplicable to primaries; the recording of the voters there being an "enrollment" instead of a "registration." People ex rel. Moscovitz v. Voorhis, 84 N. Y. Supp. 848, 849, 41 Misc. Rep. 360.

ENSUES

A fire policy insuring against loss by fire except as provided, but exempting the company from liability for loss caused directly or indirectly by explosion of any kind "unless fire ensues, and in that event for the damage by fire only," does not exempt the company from liability for damage caused by an explosion which is preceded and caused by the fire; the word "ensues" meaning to follow or come afterwards, to follow as a consequence or in chronological succession, to result, and the words "by explosion of any kind" not referring to the agency which produces the explosion, but to the different kinds of material which explode. Wheeler v. Phenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 96 N. E. 452, 454, 203 N. Y. 283, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 474.

ENSUING

The words "ensuing year," used in the rules of a political party requiring the election by the voters of a district of a member of the county committee for the district for the ensuing year, mean the political year intervening between one election and the next annual election, and not a calendar year, when construed with other rules of the party providing for the management of the affairs of the party by the county committee, and making the whole machinery of party elections largely dependent upon the initiatory action of the county committee and the committeemen. In re Chester County Republican Nominations, 62 Atl. 258, 260, 213 Pa. 64.

ENTER—ENTRY

See At Private Entry; Attempt to Enter; Double Entry; False Entry; Floating Entry; Person Making Entry; Re-enter; Regularly Enter; Special Entry.

ENTER—ENTRY (In Commercial Law)

The word "entry," as used in Rev. St. § 5209, declaring that every officer, clerk, or agent of a national banking association who makes any false entries in any of the bank's books with intent to injure or defraud the association shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, means "an item in an account." United States v. Morse, 161 Fed. 429, 431.

An "entry" on the books of a national bank by the cashier of a check which actually entered into the transaction of the bank will not support an indictment of the cashier under Rev. St. § 5209, for making a false entry, though the cashier knew the check to be worthless and fraudulent, as the legal effect of the entry is but a written representation to whom it may concern that the cashier in actual transaction had received the check, and that the amount stated formed the basis of the item which went with others to make up the aggregate cash items which the entry declared the cashier had at the time. United States v. Young, 128 Fed. 111, 114.

ENTER—ENTRY (In Criminal Law)

See Unlawful Entry.

"Entry," as defined in a prosecution for burglarizing a railroad car, as meaning every kind of entry except one made with the consent of the occupant, or of one authorized to give such consent, was erroneous, since in order to constitute burglary, whether the entry is by day or night, there must be a breaking; if in the daytime an actual breaking, if at night it must be done by force. Newman v. State, 116 S. W. 577, 578, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 278.

An "entry," whether by night or day, to constitute burglary, must be by breaking, and, if in the day by breaking externally, then it must be an actual breaking, under Pen. Code 1895, art. 839, providing that one is guilty of burglary who with intent to commit felony or theft, by breaking, enters a house in the daytime. Bates v. State, 99 S. W. 551, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 568.

In prosecution for burglary, a charge that by the term "entry" into a house is meant every kind but one made by free consent of one authorized to give consent was not erroneous, because ignoring necessity for a "breaking," where the charge merely defined an "entry," and the court also defined "breaking," and properly charged as to necessary elements of burglary. Montgomery v. State, 116 S. W. 1160, 1161, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 502.

On a prosecution for burglary, it appeared that prosecutor in the nighttime hung a pair of trousers in a room within a few feet of an open window, so that no one could get them from the outside without getting a portion of his body into the room or lifting them out with some instrument, that the trousers disappeared during the night, and defendant was subsequently found in possession of them; and the court instructed that an "entry" in burglary may be constituted by the introduction of any instrument into the house for the purpose of taking any personal property, though no part of the body of the offender be introduced, and that it is not necessary that there be any actual breaking, when the entry is made in the nighttime, but that there must be some degree of force, however slight, and that the entry, through an unusual place, such as a window, constitutes force. Held, that there was no error in the instruction. Hays v. State, 100 S. W. 926, 927, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 111.

White's Ann. Pen. Code, art. 838, provides that burglary is committed by entering a house by force, threats, or fraud at night, or in like manner by entering a house during the day and remaining concealed there till night, with the intent of committing a felony or the crime of theft. Article 841 declares that the entry is not confined to the entrance of the whole body, but may consist of the entry of any part for the purpose of committing a felony, and article 842 defines the term "breaking" to mean an entry by actual force, such as the introduction of the hand or any instrument to draw out the property through an aperture made by the offender for that purpose. Held, that where defendant broke a glass of a store window in which certain shoes were displayed, but he was arrested before he abstracted any of the shoes therefrom, he was guilty of an attempt to commit burglary, regardless of the value of the property in the store. Mason v. State (Tex.) 100 S. W. 383, 384.

Pen. Code 1895, art. 838, defines burglary as "entering a house by force, threats or fraud at night * * * with the intent * * * of committing a felony or the crime of theft." Article 841 declares that the entry is not confined to the entrance of the whole body, but may consist of the entry of any part for the purpose of committing a felony. Article 842 declares that the slightest force is sufficient to constitute breaking, such as the introduction of the hand or any instrument to draw out the property through an aperture made by the offender for that purpose. Held that, under article 842, if the glass in a door through which accused thrust his arm was already broken, he would not commit burglary by inserting his hand or arm, even for the purpose of committing theft. Jones v. State, 87 S. W. 1157, 1158, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 336.

ENTER—ENTRY (In Practice)

See Docket Entries.

Filing distinguished, see File.

Of appeal

To "enter the appeal" from justice court means to claim it or notify the clerk, if there be a clerk, that an appeal is desired, and it is the only appellate act which must be done within 24 hours after judgment. Wyman v. Newland, 74 Atl. 195, 196, 105 Me. 260.

Under Rev. Laws, c. 128, §§ 13, 15, authorizing appeals from the land court to the superior court, and providing that the appeal shall be entered within 30 days, and on the "entry of appeal" the appellant shall file in the superior court copies of all material papers in the case, certified by the recorder, etc., an entry of an appeal in the superior court is an entry with a proper officer of the court at the place where its records are kept and where the clerk does his work, and the mere receipt of the papers on appeal by the clerk or an assistant clerk at his residence is not an entry in court, since chapter 159, § 18, providing that for entering orders and issuing writs the "court shall always be open," does not mean that there is a court which is open wherever a clerk or assistant is found, without the presence of any justice. Old Colony St. R. Co. v. Thomas, 91 N. E. 1006, 1008, 205 Mass. 529, 18 Ann. Cas. 247.

Of judgment

As subsequent proceeding, see Subsequent Proceeding.

"The 'entry of a judgment' is a ministerial act, which consists in spreading upon the record a statement of the final conclusion reached by the court in the matter, thus furnishing external and incontestible evidence of the sentence given, and designed to stand as a perpetual memorial of its action." Simmons v. Hanne, 39 South. 77, 78, 50 Fla. 267, 7 Ann. Cas. 322 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Black, Judg. § 106); Blohme v. Schmancke, 61 S. E. 1060, 1062, 81 S. C. 81 (quoting 1 Black, Judg.).

The entry of a judgment is a matter of record, and it is the act which makes the judgment a record. Foss v. Johnstone, 110 Pac. 294, 296, 158 Cal. 119.

The word "entry" is not synonymous with "rendition," as used in section 336 of the California Practice Act, authorizing an appeal to be taken from a final judgment within one year after the rendition of the judgment. "There is a rendition of judgment before it is actually entered in the judgment book" (quoting and adopting Gray v. Palmer, 28 Cal. 416). "Rendition and entry of a judgment are entirely different acts; one is to be performed by the court and must be first in order of time, and the other by the clerk" (quoting and adopting Peck v. Courtis, 31 Cal. 207). People v. Schmitz, 94 Pac. 407, 409, 7 Cal. App. 330, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717.

The period for issuing district court executions is limited by statute to 10 years from the "entry of judgment." As applied to a justice's court judgment, this means 10 years from its entry by the justice, and not 10 years from the filing of the transcription in the district court. The act of filing the transcript is not the "entry of judgment." Holton v. Schmarback, 106 N. W. 36, 38, 15 N. D. 38.

"The rendition of a judgment * * * is an entirely different thing from the 'entry' of it. The former is the act of the law through the mouth of the judge; the latter the act of the clerk. The former gives force and efficacy to the judgment; the latter preserves a memorial of it. The former is a judicial act; the latter a ministerial act." Jagua v. Harkins, 82 N. E. 920, 922, 40 Ind. App. 639 (quoting and adopting the definition in 1 Black, Judg. § 179).

"There is a clear distinction between rendering a judgment, which is purely a judicial act and which can be performed by the court alone, and 'entering a judgment,' which is ministerial and is usually performed by the clerk." Rev. St. 1901, par. 1442, providing that a judgment may be "entered" in term time, or vacation, does not justify the "rendition" of a judgment by a judge, in vacation, without the district in which the case was tried. Meade v. Scribner, 85 Pac. 729, 730, 10 Ariz. 33 (citing Black, Judg. § 106).

While the "entry" of a judgment made by a clerk is evidence of what the pronouncement of the court was, yet as it is but the act of the scrivener of the court, his failure to properly and exactly put down what the court in fact ordered is a mere misprision of the clerk, which the court can and should rectify by an entry nunc pro tunc. Groton Bridge & Mfg. Co. v. Clark Pressed Brick Co., 136 Fed. 27, 30, 68 C. C. A. 577.

Of record

"Entering" is the word ordinarily used for the commencement of a proceeding on the records of the superior court, while "filing" is more commonly used in reference to papers presented for action before the county commissioners. Cheney v. Assessors of Town of Dover, 91 N. E. 1005, 205 Mass. 501.

The phrase "by an order entered of record," as used in a statute, providing that exceptions may be written and filed at the time, or during the term of court at which they are taken, and within such time thereafter as the court may, by order entered of record, allow, does not require the order to be spread at length upon the record but merely requires a recital of the substance of the order. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S. W. 486, 492, 225 Mo. 414, 20 Ann. Cas. 1072.

Where parties to a controversy entered into a stipulation for the submission thereof to a justice of the circuit court as authorized by Tuley Act 1887, the filing of the agreement is sufficient to confer jurisdiction to hear the cause, though the stipulation is not then entered of record as required by such act; it being sufficient if the agreement is "entered of record" by being preserved in the judgment or decree at the conclusion of the hearing. West Chicago Park Com'rs v. Riddle, 91 N. E. 1060, 1063, 245 Ill. 168.

ENTER-ENTRY (In Real Property Law)

See Forcible Entry; Forcible Entry and Detainer; Lawful Entry; Peaceable Entry; Right of Entry for Breach of Condition Subsequent; Unlawful Entry.

Right of entry as estate, see Estate.

See, also, Right of Entry (In Real Property).

An "entry" at common law is nothing more than an assertion of title by going on the land, or, if that was hazardous, by making continual claim. Anciently an actual entry was required to be made, but now nothing of that kind is necessary; the entry is a fiction, and nothing is required but that the lessor shall have the right to enter. Innerarity v. Mims' Heirs, 1 Ala. 660, 674.

ENTER-ENTRY (On Public Lands)

See Pre-Emption Entry.

Under the homestead law, three things need to be done to constitute an "entry on public lands": First, the applicant must make an affidavit setting forth the facts which entitle him to make such entry; second, he must make a formal application; and, third, he must make payment of the money required. When these three requisites are complied with and the certificate of entry is executed and delivered to him, the entry is made; the land is entered. Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Fisher, 72 Pac. 931, 933, 28 Utah, 179 (citing Hastings & D. R. Co. v. Whitney, 10 Sup. Ct. 112, 132 U. S. 357, 33 L. Ed. 363).

"The term 'entry,' as applied to appropriations of lands, was probably borrowed from the state of Virginia, in which we find it used in that sense at a very remote period. * * * It means that act by which an individual acquires an inceptive right to a portion of the unappropriated soil of the country, by filing his claim in the office of an officer known in the legislation of several states by the epithet of an entry taker, and corresponding very much in his functions with the registers of land offices, under the Acts of the United States." Chotard v. Pope, 12 Wheat. (25 U. S.) 586, 588, 6 L. Ed. 737.

In statutes and in common parlance the word "entries," when applied to proceedings in the land office under the homestead law, is used with various meanings—sometimes in the sense of preliminary entries, at other times in the sense of final entries, and again in the sense of the proceedings as a whole. Stearns v. United States, 152 Fed. 900, 906, 82 C. C. A. 48.

In an indictment for conspiracy to defraud the United States by means of a false and fraudulent entry of public lands under the homestead law, the word "entry" may properly be used and construed as applying to any or all of the steps necessary to acquire title under such law. Bradford v. United States, 152 Fed. 617, 619, 81 C. C. A. 607.

The desert land act provides that it shall be lawful for any citizen on payment of 25 cents an acre to file a declaration under oath with the register and receiver of the land district in which any desert land is situated that he intends to reclaim a tract of desert land, and Act March 3, 1891, c. 561, requires that, at the time of filing the declaration, the party shall also file a map of the land which shall exhibit a plan showing the mode of contemplated irrigation, which plan shall be sufficient to thoroughly irrigate it, and prepare it to raise ordinary agricultural crops, and shall also show the source of the water to be used. Held, that only bona fide entries made with intention to reclaim the land are contemplated; and hence, though the entryman may assign his entry, yet, if he made the same in bad faith or in evasion of the provisions of the law, it constituted a fraud on the government, so that an indictment charging that defendants conspired to make, and cause to be made, false, fraudulent, and fictitious entries of respective tracts of desert land to fraudulently obtain title to and use and possession of such tracts, and performed certain overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, it stated an offense punishable by Rev. St. § 5440; the term "entry" including not only the preliminary application, but the proceedings as a whole to complete the transfer of title. Chaplin v. United States, 198 Fed. 879, 881, 114 C. C. A. 98.

Laws 1877, c. 15, § 3, relating to the disposition of state lands, provided that no person should be allowed to enter more than 240 acres; while Ann. Code, 1892, § 2564, relating to the same subject, declares that one person may purchase as much as one quarter section of public lands in one year and no more, and that all lands acquired directly or indirectly by any person in contravention of sections 2564 or 2565 escheat to the state. Held, that there was no substantial difference between such statute; the words "enter" and "purchase," used therein, being convertible terms, and the provision for "escheat" in section 2564 meaning nothing more than that the lands should be recovered or should be reclaimed, which would be implied, though not expressed, in the act of 1877. Wisconsin Lumber Co. v. State, 54 South. 247, 249, 97 Miss. 571; Newman v. Nall (Miss.) 54 South. 250.

ENTER-ENTRY (Under Immigration Laws)

An alien, who falsely represents himself to be a citizen, and by such artifice and fraud secures admission to the United States, is guilty of "entering in violation of law," within the meaning of Immigration Act, and is subject to deportation thereunder. Williams v. United States ex rel. Bougadis, 186 Fed. 479, 481, 108 C. C. A. 457.

An "entry" or "entrance" of a Chinese person into the United States within the Chinese exclusion acts, means more than the mere act of crossing the border, and consists in his going at large or becoming domiciled in the country. Ex parte Chow Chok, 161 Fed. 627, 629.

Failure of an alien to enter at a port of entry and submit to examination and inspection and entering surreptitiously is an "entry in violation of law," so that an alien so entering is found in the United States in violation of the Immigration Act Feb. 20, 1907, c. 1134, § 36, and is subject to deportation. Ex parte Li Dick, 176 Fed. 998, 1000.

ENTER—ENTRY (Under Revenue Laws)

In construing Act June 22, 1874, c. 391, § 21, which provides that the "settlement of duties shall, after the expiration of one year from the time of entry, * * * be final and conclusive," held, that the "entry" referred to does not mean the entire transaction leading up to the liquidation, but the act of the importer in presenting to the collector the document known as an "entry." Cassel v. United States, 146 Fed. 146, 147.

Act Cong. June 10, 1890, c. 407, provides that if any importer or owner shall make or attempt to make any entry of imported merchandise by means of any fraudulent or false invoice, affidavit, letter or other means, or shall be guilty of any willful act or omission by means whereof the United States shall be deprived of duty or any portion thereof, he shall be fined, etc. Rev. St. § 2979, declares that the owner of goods may re-export the same under the inspection of the proper officers without the payment of any duty thereon. Held, that where the defendant was charged with having withdrawn certain imported beans from the warehouse for exportation upon bond and permit, all on January 15, 1902, and the indictment then alleged that the goods were not exported "then and there," but were withheld and concealed with the knowledge of the defendants, the goods would be regarded as "entered," and the duties therefrom due when the owners or the truckmen to whom the custody was intrusted disregarded the limitations put on them and introduced the goods into the unrestricted commerce of the country, though the time within which the goods might be properly exported had not arrived; hence the indictment was not objectionable because it did not allege that defendants concealed or withheld the goods, not only at the time of their removal, but for all the period which was allowed to export them. United States v. Ehrgott, 182 Fed. 267, 271.

The word "entry," as used in Rev. St. § 5445, which makes it a criminal offense to knowingly effect the entry of any goods or merchandise at less than the true weight or measure thereof, etc., is used in its broad sense, and includes the series of acts which are necessary to put the goods through the custom house. Helke v. United States, 192 Fed. 83, 99, 112 C. C. A. 615; United States v. Mescall, 164 Fed. 580, 583.

Section 5444, Rev. St. U. S., relating to the crime of illegally admitting imported goods to "entry," does not refer merely to the act of filing at the custom house the document known as an "entry," but comprises the transaction of entering the goods into the body of the commerce of the country; that is, the whole process of passing the goods through the customhouse, which cannot be deemed complete until liquidation has been had. United States v. Mescall, 164 Fed. 584, 585.

A manifest clerical error in a liquidation made within one year after original entry cannot be corrected more than one year after such entry, because not within the provision in Customs Administrative Act, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to correct such errors "within one year from the date of such entry," as the term "entry," as there used, refers to the document filed by the importer on entry. United States v. F. B. Vandegrift & Co., 175 Fed. 772, 773, 99 C. C. A. 598.

In the provision in section 33, Tariff Act July 27, 1897, c. 11, for "merchandise previously imported, for which no 'entry' has been made," the word "entry" refers to an "entry for consumption." John B. Ellison & Sons v. United States, 136 Fed. 969, 972 (overruling Hartwell Lumber Co. v. United States, 128 Fed. 306).

While it is a condition to the entry of merchandise that invoices should be carried before an American consul, this is not necessarily a part of the entry, within the meaning of Customs Administrative Act, relating to illegal "entry," as the earliest entry does not begin until the owner, after the goods reach this country, begins that series of acts through which, by application to the customs officials, he gains possession of the goods. It is not necessary to determine with strictness in this case just how much the term "entry" includes; all that is necessary being to show that the taking out of a fraudulent invoice in Paris is not part of the entry. United States v. One Trunk, 171 Fed. 772, 774.

ENTER AND REMAIN

Under a statute giving a parent a right of action against any liquor dealer who allows his minor child to enter and remain in a saloon, it was error to charge that the length of time the minor remained therein was immaterial; it not being sufficient that the minor "enters or remains," but both must concur, and a mere entry in all cases does not constitute remaining. Cox v. Thompson, 75 S. W. 819, 820, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 572.

Where the entering and remaining was only for a time sufficient to purchase and drink a glass of liquor, and the sale was made in good faith on reasonable grounds of belief that the person was an adult, there was not such a permitting, by the liquor dealer, of a minor to "enter and remain" in his liquor store as amounted to a violation of the condition of his bond that he would not permit a minor to enter and remain in the store. Minter v. State, 76 S. W. 312, 314, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 182.

ENTERED INTO

An allegation, in an action for the breach of a contract, that a certain written contract was "entered into" is sufficient to admit proof that memorandum thereof was delivered. Bailey v. Leishman, 89 Pac. 78, 79, 32 Utah, 123, 13 Ann. Cas. 1116.

ENTERON

"According to the Century Dictionary, the term 'intestines' is used in biology in a wider sense to include the whole enteron, and the term 'enteron' is there defined as meaning, in anatomy, 'the intestines, alimentary canal, including its annexes and appendages.'" Hampton v. State, 39 South. 421, 426, 50 Fla. 55.

ENTERTAIN

ENTERTAINED BY THE COURT

The Supreme Court of the United States has held in a series of cases that, if a motion for a new trial in a law case or a petition for rehearing in an equity case is made or presented in season and "entertained by the court," the time limited for a writ of error or appeal does not begin to run until the motion or petition is disposed of. Just what is meant by the term "entertained by the court" is not defined in these decisions. It would seem, however, that the term so industriously repeated must have some significance, and that the court thereby meant to say that something was necessary more than the mere filing of the motion. Klein v. Southern Pac. Co., 140 Fed. 213, 214.

ENTERTAINMENT

Any other entertainment, see Any Other. Other entertainment, see Other.

An "entertainment" is a source or means of amusement; a diverting performance, especially a public performance, as a concert, drama, or the like. People v. Klaw, 106 N. Y. Supp. 341, 351, 55 Misc. Rep. 72 (quoting and adopting definition in Stand. Dict.).

In enactments respecting houses for public refreshment, resort, and entertainment, the expression "entertainment" cannot be understood as meaning a theatrical or musical or other similar performance, but as something contributing to the enjoyment of the refreshment. Bryan v. Menefee, 95 Pac. 471, 476, 21 Okl. 1 (quoting End. Interp. St. § 296).

ENTERTAINMENT OF THE STAGE

Under a statute making it unlawful to exhibit on Sunday any interlude, tragedy, comedy, etc., or any other "entertainment of the stage," the term "any other entertainment of the stage" covered all performances of any character in a place of public amusement on Sunday, and was not limited by the rule of ejusdem generis to entertainments similar to those specifically named. In re Hammerstein, 108 N. Y. Supp. 197, 198, 57 Misc. Rep. 52 (quoting Mayor, etc., of New York City v. Eden Musee Amer. Co., 8 N. E. 40, 102 N. Y. 593).

A license is not required for a free moving picture show in an ice cream saloon and candy store to draw trade, under Greater New York Charter, requiring a license for the exhibition to the public in any building, garden or grounds, concert room, or other place or room in the city of New York, of any interlude, tragedy, comedy, opera, ballet, play, farce, minstrelsy, or dancing, or "any other entertainment of the stage," or any equestrian, circus, or dramatic performance, or any performance of jugglers or rope dancing, or acrobats; such show not being within the meaning and purview of the act, and not within the words "any other entertainment of the stage." Weistblatt v. Bingham, 100 N. Y. Supp. 545, 546, 58 Misc. Rep. 328.

ENTICE

The word "entice," as used in Cr. Code, § 20, declaring that any person who shall maliciously or forcibly or fraudulently lead, take, or carry away, or entice away any child under the age of 18 years, with intent unlawfully to detain or conceal such child from its parent or parents, or guardian, must be given its ordinary and usual meaning, which is to draw on; to instigate by inciting hope or desire; to allure, especially in a bad sense; to lead astray; to tempt; to incite. Its synonyms are "to allure"; "to coax"; "to destroy"; "to seduce"; "to tempt"; "to inveigle"; "to persuade"; and "to prevail on." Gould v. State, 99 N. W. 541, 543, 71 Neb. 651.

"Entice" means to draw on by exciting hope and desire, to allure, to attract. An invitation to a boy about 15 years old to take a trip somewhere, accompanied with a promise to pay all of his expenses, and to give him anything in the world he wanted, would come within the definition of "entice," as used in Pen. Code 1895, § 110, relating to the inveigling of children away from home. Arington v. State, 59 S. E. 207, 208, 3 Ga. App. 30.

The words "entice, persuade, and decoy," as used in Pen. Code 1895, § 122, providing that, if any person shall by offering higher wages or in any way entice, persuade, or decoy any servant to leave his employer during the term of service, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, indicate that there must be some word or act of incitement or inducement on the part of the offender whereby he influences the will of the servant so that the latter becomes dissatisfied with his employment and is allured away. Bright v. State, 61 S. E. 289, 4 Ga. App. 333 (quoting McAllister v. State, 122 Ga. 744, 50 S. E. 921).

In order that a parent may maintain an action for the enticement of a minor son from the parent's service, there must have been an actual service of the parent by the son, and some active or affirmative effort by defendant to detract the child from that service. It is not enough that the son has voluntarily left the parent's service without the latter's consent, and has entered into the employment of defendant. Kenney v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 61 Atl. 581, 582, 101 Md. 490, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 205.

ENTIRE ENTIRE BOARD

Salem City charter provides that a board of county commissioners may borrow money only after the passing of an ordinance by a three-fourths vote of the entire board. Held, that the use of the words "entire board," and not the words "entire board elected" or similar term, indicates that the Legislature intended that three-fourths of the entire membership of the board in existence at the passage of the ordinance, as distinguished from three-fourths of the entire board elected, should have power to pass the ordinance. The word "board," when used in municipal charters, has two meanings, one abstract, having reference to the legislative creation, the corporate entity, which is continuous, and the other referring to the members, the individuals, composing the board. The words "entire board," as used in the Salem charter, refer to the membership of the board and were evidently inserted to guard against the hasty legislation by requiring three-fourths of all the members to concur. As the board, the corporate body, was composed of only six members when the ordinance was finally adopted, five of its members being present and voting for the passage, the requirements of the charter were complied with. Also, in a case where the power of a motion was conferred on a municipal council to be exercised by a vote of three-fourths of that body, it was held to give the power of removal to three-fourths of a legal quorum. Board of Com'rs of Town of Salem v. Wachovia Loan & Trust Co., 55 S. E. 442, 444, 143 N. C. 110 (citing Warnock v. City of Lafayette, 4 La. Ann. 419).

ENTIRE BUSINESS SERVICE

In a contract by which a party agreed to give his entire business services to another for a specified time, the phrase "entire business services" had reference to his calling or business, and did not mean any business or work which the defendant might choose to put him to from time to time, and, where the contract did not disclose what his calling or business was, it could be proved by extrinsic evidence. Davis v. Dodge, 110 N. Y. Supp. 787, 793, 126 App. Div. 469.

ENTIRE CHARGE

See Take Entire Charge.

ENTIRE CONTRACT

"A contract is 'entire' and not severable, when by its terms, nature, and purpose it contemplates and intends that each and all of its parts, material provisions, and the consideration are common each to the other and interdependent. * * * A 'severable contract' is one in its nature and purpose susceptible of division and apportionment, having two or more parts, in respect to matters and things contemplated and embraced by it, not necessarily dependent upon each other, nor is it intended by the parties that they shall be." The entirety or separability of a contract depends primarily upon the intention of the parties, rather than upon the divisibility of the subject, although the latter aids in determining the intention. Where the consideration or promise is single, there is no difficulty in pronouncing the contract indivisible and in declaring the whole void if there be illegality in the consideration or promise. Packard & Field v. Byrd, 51 S. E. 678, 679, 73 S. C. 1, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 547 (quoting and adopting definition in Wooten v. Walters, 14 S. E. 734, 110 N. C. 251); Sterling v. Gregory, 85 Pac. 305, 306, 149 Cal. 117 (quoting and adopting the definition in Wooten v. Walters, 14 S. E. 734, 736, 110 N. C. 251).

"If it reasonably appears from the language of the contract that the parties intended that full and complete performance should be made with respect to the subject-matter of the contract by one party in consideration of the obligation of the other party to the contract, such contract is an entirety. In other words, if a party contracts with another to do certain work in the aggregate consisting of several items to be paid for by the other party at so much for each item as it is performed, the work to continue for a certain period of time, if it appears from a character and nature of the subject-matter alone, or in connection with the relation of the parties to such subject-matter, that it was their intention that full and complete performance of such work should be made, the contract should be held to be entire." A contract to print, bind and deliver to a publisher volumes of law reports, etc., agreeing to deliver to the publisher a thousand copies of each report and necessary plates therefor within 90 days after the original copy had been received, providing that it should remain in force for a term of two years, the publisher agreeing to pay for each thousand copies a specified price as delivered, is an "entire contract" with subsidiary provisions relating to performance. Jones & Co. v. Gammel-Statesmen Pub. Co. (Tex.) 94 S. W. 191, 193, 194 (citing 2 Pars. Cont. § 217; 3 Page, Cont. § 1484; Widman v. Gay, 80 N. W. 450, 104 Wis. 277; History Company v. Flint [Tex.] 15 S. W. 912; Barrie v. Earle, 8 N. E. 639, 143 Mass. 1, 58 Am. Rep. 126; Norrington v. Wright, 6 Sup. Ct. 12, 115 U. S. 188, 29 L. Ed. 366; Cresswell Rancho & Cattle Co. v. Martindale, 63 Fed. 86, 11 C. C. A. 233; Olmstad v. Bach, 37 Atl. 501, 78 Md. 132, 22 L. R. A. 74, 44 Am. St. Rep. 273).

"An 'entire contract,' in its legal interpretation, is an unconditional agreement for the whole of the several articles or number or quantity of goods contracted for, and precludes by its terms, and equally by the plain intention of the parties, all idea of divisibility." Bradford & Carson v. Montgomery Furniture Co., 92 S. W. 1104, 1100, 115 Tenn. 610, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 979 (quoting and adopting definition in Story, Cont. §§ 21, 22).

A contract is not entire and indivisible because embraced in one instrument and signed by the same parties. Strauss v. Yeager, 93 N. E. 877, 880, 48 Ind. App. 448.

In case of a contract naturally and accurately severable, such as a contract for the sale of a bill of goods at certain prices for each article, courts incline to hold the contract "severable," and to grant a recovery for that portion of the goods actually delivered, less damages for the nondelivery of any portion not delivered; but, if it appears by express terms or necessary implication that the intent was to make payment of the consideration depend on delivery of all the articles, the contract will be held "entire," though the consideration may be measured by units and be actually severable. Contracts for the sale of goods naturally severable, like the sale of a quantity of gloves of different kinds at fixed prices, will not be held entire, in absence of express or implied provision to that effect, or persuasive circumstances showing such is the intent. The entirety of a contract of sale is a question of intent, which severability of the subject-matter and measurement of consideration by units may assist in determining, but not necessarily determine. National Knitting Co. v. Bouton & Germain Co., 123 N. W. 624, 625, 141 Wis. 63.

As a general rule, a contract is "entire" when by its terms, nature, and purpose it contemplates and intends that each and all of its parts and the consideration shall be common each to the other and interdependent. The question whether a given contract is entire or separable is very largely one of intention, to be determined from the language used and the subject-matter of the agreement. The divisibility of the subject-matter or of the consideration is not necessarily conclusive, though of aid, in determining the intention. Quarton v. American Law Book Co., 121 N. W. 1009, 1015, 143 Iowa, 517, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1.

"An 'entire contract' is one where, in the intention of the parties, full and complete performance on the one part constitutes the consideration for performance on the other. It is not necessary that the price named shall be a lump sum. It may be measured by quantity or by units. Nor is it essential that, by the terms of the contract, actual payment is to be postponed until after full completion, if earlier payments are merely advancements upon the whole price, and not ratable payments for performance of several and distinct parts. It suffices that full performance is the consideration of the price to be paid, and earlier actual payments on account of the full price are not necessarily inconsistent with entirety." Fessman v. Barnes (Tex.) 108 S. W. 170, 171 (quoting and adopting definition in Widman v. Gay, 80 N. W. 450, 104 Wis. 277).

"Entire," as used in a provision that this entire policy shall be void if, etc., is held by some courts (even in jurisdictions where separate valuations are ordinarily regarded as rendering the contracts divisible) to make the contract entire and indivisible, while other courts hold that no valid distinction can be drawn between the words "this entire contract shall be void" and "this entire policy shall be void." Goorberg v. Western Assur. Co., 89 Pac. 180, 183, 150 Cal. 510, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 876, 119 Am. St. Rep. 246, 11 Ann. Cas. 801.

Where an insurance policy is issued, and different classes of property are insured, each class being separated from the others and insured for a specific amount, and there is a breach of the conditions of the contract as to one class of the property insured, the contract should be considered not as one entire in itself, but as one which is severable. Miller v. Delaware Ins. Co. of Philadelphia, 75 Pac. 1121, 1123, 14 Okl. 81, 65 L. R. A. 173, 2 Ann. Cas. 17.

Where plaintiff agreed to furnish defendants a certain quantity of crushed stone for a fixed price per cubic yard, at a stated rate per day, the contract was "entire," requiring full performance before payment of the consideration was due. Prautsch v. Rasmussen, 113 N. W. 416, 417, 133 Wis. 181.

In an action to enforce an oral agreement to take back certain mining stock at $1 per share, which had been sold to plaintiff at 50 cents per share, the jury found that defendant agreed, as a condition to the sale of the stock to plaintiff, that he would purchase it back at $1 per share, and that the repurchase would be made within one year from the date of sale, and that plaintiff offered back the stock to defendant at $1 per share within the year. Held, that the agreement was an "entire contract" for the sale of the stock, and that plaintiff was entitled to recover $1 per share, and not merely the purchase price, with interest, on the theory that the agreement to repurchase embodied two elements, one of which gave the right to rescind and demand the purchase money, and the other a promise of defendant to pay an additional 50 cents per share upon such rescission, which would be within the statute of frauds. Vohland v. Gelhaar, 118 N. W. 869, 870, 136 Wis. 75, 16 Ann. Cas. 781.

ENTIRE ESTATE

The word "entire," in a will whereby testator bequeathed his entire estate, both real and personal, to his wife, and requested that as soon as convenient after his death the wife should sell personal property to pay his entire indebtedness, and requested that at the wife's death the estate testator was then seised of should be equally divided between his children, measures the duration of the estate devised, and the wife acquired a fee-simple title in the real estate, though the word "entire" may sometimes be used as a measure of extent or breadth only. Snodgrass v. Brandenburg, 71 N. E. 137, 138, 164 Ind. 59.

ENTIRE LEASE

Laws 1905, p. 163, c. 103, § 5, provides that an original lessee of school lands, or the assignee of an "entire lease," out of which no sale of one complement of land has been made under this act, may purchase out of his lease the quantity of land allowed to one purchaser. School lands were leased. In 1901, part of the lands were sold to a third person with the consent of the lessee. The lessee assigned his lease, and the assignee sought to purchase other land embraced in the lease. Held, that the assignee was entitled to purchase; the lease of the part not sold to the third person being an "entire lease" within the statute. Garza v. Terrell, 90 S. W. 1092, 1093, 99 Tex. 506.

ENTIRE MINING PROPERTY

Where a lease of a coal mining property required the lessee to surrender the premises at the end of the term in good condition as an "entire mining property," and during the term worthless buildings were destroyed by fire without the lessee's negligence, the lessee need not rebuild the burned buildings, since they were not necessary to constitute the premises an "entire mining property." Junction Min. Co. v. Springfield Junction Coal Co., 78 N. E. 902, 911, 222 Ill. 600.

ENTIRE TERM

Pen. Code 1876, § 1590, provided that, in deducting credits for good conduct in favor of a convict, they should be deducted from the "entire term" of penal servitude to which he had been sentenced. St. 1889, p. 410, c. 264, § 20, provides that a convict shall be allowed from "his term," for good behavior, certain deductions. Held that, under the language of the original section, it was intended to make the successive periods of imprisonment under cumulative sentences continuous for commutation purposes, but that under the latter statute, where one is convicted of two offenses, and as a punishment for each sentenced to imprisonment, the second sentence to commence at the expiration of the term of imprisonment imposed by the prior sentence, each term is to be considered by itself as regards the allowance of credits for good behavior. Ex parte Clifton, 78 Pac. 655, 656, 145 Cal. 186.

An equitable owner is an entire and sole owner within a policy stipulating that insured was the sole and unconditional owner of the property. Modlin v. Atlantic Fire Ins. Co., 65 S. E. 606, 607, 151 N. C. 35.

ENTIRE WIDTH OF LOT

The phrase "entire width of the lot," in Tenement House Act (Laws 1901, c. 334) § 53, as amended by Laws 1902, c. 352, providing that behind every tenement house there shall be a yard extending the "entire width of the lot," and section 56, as amended by Laws 1903, c. 179, § 29, providing that, where a lot running through from street to street is over 100 feet in depth, a yard space shall be left throughout the center of the lot midway between the two streets and shall extend across the "entire width of the lot," is not of doubtful meaning, and it does not mean two open spaces interrupted by solid walls of masonry extending across the center of the lot midway between the two streets, and no tenement house building may be erected without a yard space, and the tenement house commissioner will not be compelled by mandamus to approve plans which do not provide for such yard space. People ex rel. Ungrich v. Crain, 95 N. Y. Supp. 906, 909, 47 Misc. Rep. 281.

ENTIRELY

The word "entirely," as used in railroad rules regulating the approach of trains to a station, declaring that the responsibility for a collision would rest "entirely" with the approaching train in connection with instructions requiring the engineer to have his train "under control" and so to proceed until the track was "plainly seen to be clear," meant that his control should be adjusted to the distance he could see along the track as he advanced, and that he should proceed on the theory that the responsibility for a collision would rest "entirely" with his train. Great Northern Ry. Co. v. Hooker, 170 Fed. 154, 158, 95 C. C. A. 410.

ENTIRELY AND CONTINUOUSLY CONFINED

The words "entirely and continuously," as used in a health insurance policy, providing for certain monthly payments to members who, by reason of sickness or disease, are "entirely and continuously" confined to bed, must receive a common-sense construction. It is not intended by the employment of these words that a person must spend every minute of his time, while sick, in bed in order to bring himself within its provisions, but the meaning of it is that he must be bedridden in a substantial sense, or, in other words, the indemnity is payable for such sickness only as will confine the patient to his bed nearly all or about all the time of each day, and will not permit him to be absent therefrom for any considerable portion of the time on any day. Where insured was confined to bed a greater portion of the time every day during his sickness, though at times he sat outside of the house, was once driven a few blocks, and was in and out of bed many times, he was "entirely and continuously" confined to his bed, within the meaning of such policy. Hays v. General Assembly American Benev. Ass'n, 104 S. W. 1141, 1142, 127 Mo. App. 195.

Where a policy of insurance provided certain weekly indemnity for sickness or disease, whereby the insured as a result thereof is "entirely and continuously confined in bed," under the charge of a physician, though the clause does not mean that the patient must stay every minute in bed for his right to indemnity to accrue, the manifest purpose was not to indemnify for loss of time due to sickness, unless the patient was bedridden in a substantial sense, and there can be no recovery by an insured, notwithstanding he was under the attention of a physician throughout his sickness and was wholly incapacitated to attend to any business, when he was never, even at his worst, confined to the bed, though he rested occasionally in bed during the daytime, but spent most of the hours of the day out of doors under the advice of his physician, and according to his own testimony was never confined to his bed constantly but sometimes stayed in bed two or three days out of a week. Bradshaw v. American Benevolent Ass'n, 87 S. W. 46, 47, 112 Mo. App. 435,

ENTIRELY WITHOUT UNDERSTANDING

The phrase "entirely without understanding," as used in Civ. Code, § 89, providing that "a conveyance or other contract of a person of unsound mind, but not entirely without understanding, made before his incapacity has been judicially determined, is subject to rescission, as provided in the chapter on rescission in this Code," means a want of capacity to understand transactions of the kind involved in the particular case, and it is impossible that a person without the capacity of understanding a particular transaction can in fact understand it. Ripperdan v. Weldy, 87 Pac. 276, 279, 149 Cal. 667 (citing Jacks v. Estee, 73 Pac. 247, 139 Cal. 507).

This phrase, in Rev. St. 1887, § 2410, making a conveyance on contract of a person "entirely without understanding" void, does not include a person who is sane on one subject but not on another. Ratliff v. Baltzer's Adm'r, 89 Pac. 71, 73, 13 Idaho, 152.

ENTIRETY (Estate by)

An "estate by entirety" is one held by husband and wife by virtue of title acquired by them jointly after marriage. In re Rhodes' Estate, 81 Atl. 643, 645, 232 Pa. 489.

A "tenancy by the entirety" is created by a conveyance of land to a husband and wife; the survivor taking the whole estate. Oliver v. Wright, 83 Pac. 870, 871, 47 Or. 322,

A "tenancy by entirety" arises whenever an estate vests in two persons who are, at the time when the estate vests, husband and wife. It may exist in personality as well as real property; in choses in action as well as chose in possession. In re Klenkes' Estate, 60 Atl. 166, 210 Pa. 572 (citing In re Bramberry's Estate, 156 Pa. 628, 27 Atl. 405, 22 L. R. A. 594, 36 Am. St. Rep. 64).

"Tenancy by the entirety" arises where an estate in land is given to the husband and wife, or where a joint purchase is made by them during coverture; there being no words in the devise or conveyance showing that the grantor intended them to take either as joint tenants or as tenants in common. Aubry v. Schneider, 60 Atl. 929, 930, 69 N. J. Eq. 629 (citing Fulper v. Fulper, 54 N. J. Eq. 481, 34 Atl. 1063, 32 L. R. A. 701, 55 Am. St. Rep. 590).

An "estate by entirety" is one held by husband and wife by virtue of title acquired by them jointly after marriage. Being regarded as one person in law, they take not in parts or shares like joint tenants or tenants in common, but each takes the whole, or, in the ancient phrase, they are seized not per mie et per tout, but per tout only. Incident to this estate is the right to survivorship with the difference that on the death of husband or wife the survivor takes no new title or estate but he or she is in possession of the whole from its inception. Alles v. Lyon, 66 Atl. 81, 82, 216 Pa. 604, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 463, 116 Am. St. Rep. 791, 9 Ann. Cas. 137.

An estate by entirety is held by husband and wife as one person, and under one title, the grant, gift, or devise which created the estate operating in such manner as to give each the whole, and each is seised of the whole of the estate in the survivor; the survivor, on the other's death, not taking as a new acquisition, but holding under the original limitation, his title being merely freed from participation by the other. Maitlen v. Barley, 92 N. E. 738, 174 Ind. 620.

Divorce severs the estate by entirety which is then held as joint tenants or tenants in common. Maitlen v. Barley, 92 N. E. 738, 174 Ind. 620.

"Tenancy by the entirety" is an estate in which each tenant is seised of an entirety, and, under the married women's acts, each tenant is a tenant in common or joint tenant of the use, and each is entitled to a half of the rents and profits during their joint lives. Niehaus v. Niehaus, 125 N. Y. Supp. 1071, 1072, 141 App. Div. 251.

Where the grantees in a deed are named as Daniel H. and Lyda H., his wife, etc., and the granting clause is "do by these presents grant, bargain and sell, convey and confirm unto the said (grantees), their heirs and assigns," etc., an estate by the entirety is created in the grantees. Holmes v. Kansas City, 108 S. W. 9, 12, 209 Mo. 513, 123 Am. St. Rep. 495.

"If an estate in fee be given to a man and his wife, they are neither properly joint tenants nor tenants in common, for, husband and wife being considered as one person in law, they cannot take the estate by moieties, but both are seised of the 'entirety,' per tout et non per my, the consequence of which is that neither the husband nor the wife can dispose of any part without the assent of the other, but the whole must remain to the survivor." Green v. Cannady, 57 S. E. 832, 834, 77 S. C. 193 (quoting the definition in 1 Sharswood's Blackstone, 181).

Where a husband purchased property from his own funds and took the title in the name of himself and wife, they became "tenants by the entirety." Hayes v. Horton, 81 Pac. 386, 387, 46 Or. 597.

A deed to a husband and wife jointly creates in them an "estate in entirety," and the survivor takes the whole fee. Naler v. Ballew, 99 S. W. 72, 73, 81 Ark. 328.

A conveyance of land, after the passage of the married woman's act, to husband and wife creates in them an "estate in entirety," gives to each a right to a half of the rents and profits, and vests in each a freehold estate corresponding to the rights of each. Bilder v. Robinson, 67 Atl. 828, 830, 73 N. J. Eq. 169 (citing Buttlar v. Rosenblath, 42 N. J. Eq. 651, 9 Atl. 695, 59 Am. Rep. 52; Kip v. Kip, 33 N. J. Eq. 213; Rosenblath v. Buttlar, 7 N. J. Law J. 143).

ENTITLED THERETO

Under Municipal Court Act (Laws 1902, c. 580) §§ 271, 276, and section 307, as amended by Laws 1910, c. 540, making it the duty of a city marshal to collect on execution and pay the amount to the "party entitled thereto," and requiring him within 20 days to make a return and payment to the clerk or to such party, his payment to the attorney of record of the party in whose favor the judgment was rendered, or to such attorney's managing clerk, will discharge him from liability, unless he has knowledge of a revocation of the attorney's authority. Schuldenfrei v. Enright, 138 N. Y. Supp. 1065, 1066, 79 Misc. Rep. 1.

ENTITLED TO DEBENTURE

Chapter 101 of the Laws of 1905 requires registration with the State Auditor of public utility bonds issued by cities, "and the said Auditor shall be entitled to a fee of not exceeding fifty cents for each bond so registered in his office." Held, that such fees collected by the plaintiff when Auditor belonged to him, and he was not required by section 4, c. 5, of Laws of 1909, to account for or turn them over to the State Treasurer; "entitled" meaning to give a claim right or title to. Nation v. Tully, 121 Pac. 507, 508, 86 Kan. 564.

The words "entitled to debenture," in Rev. St. § 3030, giving the importer of any merchandise "entitled to debenture" the right to transfer the same into new packages when necessary for its safety or preservation, mean imported goods upon which the duties have been paid or secured to be paid which have been entered for export and therefore have the benefit of the drawback and become "entitled to debenture." W. H. Thomas & Son Co. v. Barnett, 144 Fed. 338, 341, 75 C. C. A. 300.

ENTITLED TO LEGACY

The general guardian of an infant legatee is not a person "entitled" to a legacy, within a statute declaring who may apply to the surrogate's court to compel an administrator or executor to pay legacies. In re Patton, 28 N. Y. Supp. 160, 161, 7 Misc. Rep. 377.

ENTITLED TO LETTERS TESTAMENTARY

In a statute providing that a married woman is not entitled to letters testamentary unless her husband consent in writing, the expression "is not entitled" means that she has no claim, no right to be appointed; it does not import the absolute disqualification and incapacity of a married woman to take administration without his consent; such an appointment would be revocable, but not absolutely void. English's Ex'r v. McNair's Adm'rs, 34 Ala. 40, 49.

ENTITY

Joint-stock association as entity, see Joint-Stock Companies and Association.

Railroad as entity, see Railroad—Railway.

A corporation is a legal "entity" distinct from the stockholders, and this rule applies though all the stock is owned by one person. Roberts v. W. H. Hughes Co., 83 Atl. 807, 812, 86 Vt. 76.

When a corporation sues in the circuit court, claiming jurisdiction through diversity of citizenship, it can obtain jurisdiction only by showing that it is the creation of the state of which it claims to be a corporation, and that it is really a corporation, otherwise it is not a "legal entity," a person in the eye of the law. Gas'onia Cotton Mfg. Co. v. W. L. Wells, 128 Fed. 369, 373, 63 C. C. A. 111.

The estate of a deceased person, pending administration, is a legal "entity," and in charging the crime of embezzlement it is sufficient, as to the matter of ownership, to allege in the information that the money or property belonged to such an estate. Hendee v. State, 113 N. W. 1050, 1051, 80 Neb. 80.

"There are two conceptions of a 'partnership,' one springing from the agreement, on which it is founded, that it is an aggregation of persons associated together to share its profits and losses, owning its property and liable for its debts. The other that it is an artificial being, a distinct entity separate in estate, in rights, and in obligation from the partners who compose it. In most of its relations to persons and things the latter conception is the more accurate." Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, a "partnership" is a distinct "entity," a person separate from the partners who compose it. It owns its property and owes its debts apart from the individual property of its members, which it does not own, and apart from the individual debts of its members, which it does not owe. It may be adjudged bankrupt, although the partners who compose it are not so adjudicated. The trustee of the estate of a bankrupt partnership is not the trustee of the individual property of the unadjudicated partners and has no more right to administer that property than he has to administer the property of indorsers of the commercial paper of the firm or the property of sureties for its debts. He is not the trustee or the assignee of the claims of the partnership creditors nor their agent nor attorney to collect those claims out of other than the partnership property, and, where no partner is adjudged bankrupt, he has no powers to enforce such claims against any property except the partnership property or against any unadjudicated partner or other person who has none of the partnership property. Under Act March 2, 1867, c. 176, 14 Stat. 517, and the Massachusetts Insolvency Law of 1838 (Laws 1837-38, p. 449, c. 163), a partnership was an aggregation of partners, and the insolvency or bankruptcy of the partners conditioned the bankruptcy of the partnership. It is not so under the act of 1898, and therefore many of the rules of law applicable under the former acts do not obtain under the latter. In re Bertenshaw, 157 Fed. 363, 365, 85 C. C. A. 61, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 886, 13 Ann. Cas. 986 (citing Walker v. Wait, 50 Vt. 668, 676; Robertson v. Corsett, 39 Mich. 784; Cross v. National Bank, 17 Kan. 340).

Though a "partnership" may be regarded as a "legal entity" for the consideration of the rights of partners inter se, it has no legal existence apart from the members composing it with reference to the rights of third persons. State v. Krasher, 83 N. E. 498, 500, 170 Ind. 43.

A "partnership" is a "legal entity," as well as a corporation, except in a more limited sense. Though partners are not jointly liable, and cannot be sued as a firm for slanderous words spoken by one of them unless by the direction or authority or approval of the others, they are liable as a firm for slander committed by a servant whom they have directed or authorized to speak the words for them, or where, with knowledge of what their servant has done, they ratify it. Duquesne Distributing Co. v. Greenbaum, 121 S. W. 1026, 1028, 135 Ky. 182, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 955, 21 Ann. Cas. 481.

A "partnership," under the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, is a distinct "entity," and as such it may be adjudged to be a bankrupt irrespective of any adjudication against the individual members, but, when there is no adjudication against the firm, the partnership assets cannot be administered where there is one partner not adjudicated a bankrupt, unless he consents and it is not an act of bankruptcy for which a firm may be adjudged a bankrupt that one of its members out of his individual estate prefers one of his own or one of the firm creditors. Mills v. J. H. Fisher & Co., 159 Fed. 897, 899, 87 C. C. A. 77, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 656 (citing In re Meyer, 98 Fed. 976, 39 C. C. A. 368; In re Mercur, 122 Fed. 384, 58 C. C. A. 472; Loveland, Bankr. [3d Ed.] §§ 96-98).

A "partnership" is really not a "legal entity." It is not a person, and the use of the partnership name is of no value except as it represents natural persons. In re Levin Bros.' Estate, 78 Pac. 159, 162, 139 Cal. 350.

"Partnership" is a legal, but not a social "entity." It can own property, it can buy and sell, it can sue and be sued, and it can plead and be impleaded in the courts of the land; but it can neither marry nor be given in marriage, nor perform any other social function essential to its being elevated to the dignity of becoming the head of the family. A member of a partnership firm, although the head of a family, cannot claim, as exempt from a forced sale upon execution, any portion of the partnership property which has been levied upon to satisfy the claims of the creditors of the firm. Lynch v. Englehardt-Winning-Davison Mercantile Co., 96 N. W. 524, 525, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 528.

A "partnership," unlike a corporation, is not an "entity." A firm, as such, is not regarded as having any legal existence apart from the members composing it. Bergstrom v. Ridgway-Thayer Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 1093, 1094, 53 Misc. Rep. 95.

A "partnership" is an "entity" distinct from that of its members, and is recognized in law as a person. Clay, Robinson & Co. v. Douglas County, 129 N. W. 543, 549, 88 Neb. 363, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 756.

The common law does not recognize a "partnership" as an "entity" existing and having rights and liabilities apart from its members; yet a judgment may be rendered against a partnership in a case where citation has been served on one of the partners as well as against the partner cited. State v. Cloudt (Tex.) 84 S. W. 415, 416.

ENTITY DOCTRINE

The "entity doctrine," adopted by the United States Supreme Court in Hill v. Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank, 97 U. S. 450, 24 L. Ed. 1051, is that in manufacturing plants, where machinery is used in connection with the plant, the intention to devote such machinery to the use of the realty, accompanied with the act of bringing it on the realty, amounts to annexation. In re Eagel Horse-shoe Co., 163 Fed. 699, 701, 90 C. C. A. 283.

ENTRANCE

See Nearest Entrance.

One of the definitions in Webster's International Dictionary of "entrance" is "passage, door, or gate for entering." A sheriff's return on an order providing for the surrender and reissue of county warrants, reciting that the sheriff posted notices at each "entrance" to the courthouses in two places specified, sufficiently showed that the notices were posted at the courthouse "door," as required by statute. Yell County v. Wills, 103 S. W. 618, 619, 83 Ark. 229.

A trapdoor nailed down and kept securely and permanently fastened except when it had been pried open and used by a workman as a means of access to the cellar for a proper purpose, maintained in the floor of a mullet law saloon, did not constitute an "entrance" to the saloon in violation of Code, § 2448, subd. 4, providing that the sale of intoxicating liquors should be carried on in a single room having but one entrance or exit, and that opening on the public business street. Johannsen v. Hutchinson, 132 N. W. 20, 21, 151 Iowa, 608.

Under Liquor Tax Law (Laws 1896, p. 60, c. 112) § 17, subd. 8, requiring the consent of at least two-thirds of the owners of dwelling houses within 200 feet of a proposed saloon, such distance to be measured in a straight line from the nearest entrance to a building occupied exclusively for dwelling, a rear door in a city house leading to a back yard and inaccessible to anybody desiring to pass from the street into the dwelling is not an "entrance." McDougal v. Malaghan, 77 N. E. 12, 13, 184 N. Y. 253.

ENTRANCE FEES

Predecessors in title of defendant by deed conveyed to a city a right of way over land on the ocean front, with a restriction against buildings on the ocean side of the lands conveyed, reserving a right to build a pier on which the owners would not permit sale of commodities and charge only an entrance fee. Defendant erected a pier of the kind permitted and charged an entrance fee, dependent on whether entrance to it only was desired, or access to certain reserved parts, or certain amusements thereon provided. Held, that such charges other than the fee for entrance were in violation of the covenant that the pier owner should charge only an entrance fee. Atlantic City v. Associated Realities Corp., 72 Atl. 61, 62, 75 N. J. Eq. 568.

ENUMERATE

In order to remove an imported article from the operation of a tariff provision for merchandise "not enumerated," it is not necessary to show that there is an enumeration of the article according to its chief use. It is enough if there is an enumeration describing any minor use. Dodge & Olcott, 180 Fed. 624, 625.

ENVELOPE

See Paper Envelopes.

The Standard Dictionary defines "envelope" as a case or wrapper, usually of paper, with gummed edges for sealing, in which a letter or like may be sent through the mail or inclosed for any purpose. EPICURE

The word "epicure," deprived from Epicurus, a Greek philosopher, who taught that peace of mind based on meditation is the origin of all good, in its original sense, indicated a follower of or believer in the ethical system of that philosopher, but through popular misapprehension of his teachings has come to mean, and is chiefly used to designate, a devotee of sensual enjoyment; a voluptuary; a gourmand. Beadleston & Woerz v. Cooke Brewing Co., 74 Fed. 229, 232, 20 C. C. A. 405.

EPILEPSY

A person may be "epileptic" who has about him anything pertaining to epilepsy. He may be an intelligent and active man or a helpless imbecile. In Conn. Pub. Acts 1895, p. 667, c. 325, prohibiting marriage by an epileptic while the woman is under the age of 45 years, does the Legislature mean by an epileptic person one whose disease has taken the form of imbecility or feeble-mindedness? It is suggested that the Legislature had in mind a bodily condition which often descended from parent to child. The provisions of the act imply this. That epilepsy is a disease of a peculiarly serious and revolting character, tending to weaken mental force and often descended from parent to child, or entailing upon an offspring of the sufferer some other grave form of nervous malady, is a matter of common knowledge of which the courts will take judicial notice. Gould v. Gould, 61 Atl. 604, 612, 78 Conn. 242, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 531.

Proof of epilepsy does not necessarily directly establish insanity, as epilepsy is not as a matter of fact or law insanity, though evidence thereof may bear on the mental condition of the afflicted person to the extent of establishing insanity. Oborn v. State, 126 N. W. 737, 746, 143 Wis. 249, 81 L. R. A. (N. S.) 966.

EQUAL

See As Nearly Equal as May Be; Unequal.

The word "equal," as used in a will devising to trustees all testator's estate to pay the income to the wife during her life, and upon her death to divide the estate into three equal parts, and to assign one part to each of two sons and hold the remainder to pay the income to his daughter during her life, implies parts equal in all respects, in quantity, character, and value. In re Spreckels' Estate, 123 Pac. 371, 378, 162 Cal. 559.

EQUAL ACCOMMODATIONS

Under a statute requiring railroad companies to provide separate waiting rooms of "equal and sufficient accommodations" for the two races, the accommodations need not be the same, nor need the waiting rooms be of the same dimensions. If as good, they would be of equal accommodation within the meaning and spirit of the statute; its object being to prevent discrimination. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. State, 87 S. W. 426, 427, 75 Ark. 279.

EQUAL AND UNIFORM TAXATION

See, also, Uniform Taxation.

That taxation may be equal within the requirement of the Constitution it is not necessary that the benefits arising therefrom be enjoyed by all the people in equal degree, nor that each person should participate in each particular benefit. Sawyer v. Gilmora, 83 Atl. 673, 676, 109 Me. 169.

The requirement that all taxation shall be "equal and uniform" means, with reference to taxes on occupations, that the burden imposed shall fall alike on all persons who are in substantially the same situation—a rule generally recognized, even in the absence of an express constitutional requirement as to uniformity. Within the boundaries of this limitation lie broad fields of legislative discretion, which should not be invaded by the court. In seeking to secure equality and uniformity, the Legislature may tax some trades and not others; it may—indeed, must—classify occupations for the purpose of taxation; and the more exhaustive its system of arrangement, the more nearly similar will be the situation of all who are embraced within any designated class. In re Watson, 97 N. W. 463, 465, 17 S. D. 486, 2 Ann. Cas. 321.

The term "equal and uniform," as used in the Constitution, providing that "taxation shall be equal and uniform, and that all property in the state whether owned by natural persons or corporations, other than municipal, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, which shall be ascertained as provided by law," does not require that the method of ascertaining the value of property subject to an ad valorem tax be the same. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Shannon, 100 S. W. 138, 143, 100 Tex. 379, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 681.

In the clause of the Constitution requiring the Legislature to provide by law for uniform and "equal rate of assessment and taxation," "equality in the rate of assessment" means proportional valuation, relative, not absolute equality; and "equality in the rate of taxation" means that the percentage shall be the same, or absolutely equal. The result is relative equality of taxation. Lake County v. Schroder, 81 Pac. 942, 944, 47 Or. 136 (quoting and adopting definition in Crawford v. Linn County, 5 Pac. 738, 11 Or. 482).

Diversity of method of taxation, with respect to the amount imposed and the species of property selected for taxation or exemption, is not inconsistent with perfect uniformity and "equality" of taxation, since the equality of operation of tax laws does not mean indiscriminate operation on persons merely as such, but on persons according to their relation. State v. Clement Nat. Bank, 78 Atl. 944, 945, 952, 84 Vt. 167, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 22.

"Equality of taxation," as a maxim of politics, means equality of sacrifice. It means apportioning the contributions of each person towards the expenses of government, so that he shall feel neither more nor less inconvenience from his share of the payment than every other person experiences from his. There is evidence that this was the equality sought by the framers of the New Hampshire Constitution. While an inheritance tax need not comply with Bill of Rights, art. 12, and article 5, pt. 2, requiring taxes to be proportional, it must be an "equal tax" in the sense that it must affect all persons equally. Thompson v. Kidder, 65 Atl. 392, 394, 396, 74 N. H. 89, 12 Ann. Cas. 948 (quoting definition in Mills' Pol. Economy, Book 5, c. 2, § 2).

License and occupation taxes

Conceding that when a tax is imposed on avocations or privileges, or on corporate franchises, it must be equal and uniform, the "equality and uniformity" consists in the imposition of the like tax upon all who engage in the avocation or who may exercise the privilege taxed. City Council of Montgomery v. Kelly, 38 South 67, 69, 142 Ala. 552, 70 L. R. A. 209, 110 Am. St. Rep. 43 (quoting and adopting definition in Phoenix Carpet Co. v. State, 22 South. 628, 118 Ala. 151, 152, 72 Am. St. Rep. 143).

EQUAL ANNUAL INSTALLMENTS

See Payable in Equal Annual Installments.

EQUAL APPORTIONMENT BY LOT

In Const. 1879, art. 130, providing that all prosecutions instituted in the criminal district court of the parish of Orleans should be equally apportioned between the two judges thereof by lot, "equal apportionment by lot" meant an indiscriminate equal distribution or repartition among the judges, by resort to chance. State v. Rose, 38 South. 858, 859, 114 La. 1061.

EQUAL DISTRIBUTION

See Just and Equal Distribution.

EQUAL ELECTION

A guaranty of an "equal election" merely requires the vote of each elector to be counted for all it is worth in proportion to the whole number of qualified electors desiring to exercise their privilege, but does not given unqualified electors the privilege of voting. Ex parte Wilson, 125 Pac. 739, 746, 7 Okl. Cr. 610.

EQUAL FACILITIES

See, also, Unjust Discrimination.

Plaintiff, after buying a ticket for a train, the usual place of boarding which was on the depot side, where the ground between the tracks was macadamized and smooth, and where the conductor and assistants stood during the letting off and taking on of passengers, went to the further side of and beyond the tracks, and then returning to and attempting to board the train from such further side, where the ground was lower and less smooth, was thrown and injured, the train having started up before he attempted to board it, or while he was in the act of doing so. His requested instruction that, where it is customary for passengers to alight at a station on both sides of the train, it is the carrier's duty to provide equal facilities for passengers to alight or take passage on both sides, was given with the qualification: "That would be so if the railroad company expressly or impliedly invited them to alight on both sides, but not otherwise." Held that, construing the term "equal facilities" to include the keeping of equal watch or lookout on both sides to prevent injury to passengers, there was no error, though the carrier might know, without entering protest, that passengers for reasons of their own frequently got on or off the wrong side at the station in question. Du Bose v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 62 S. E. 255, 257, 81 S. C. 271.

EQUAL MEANS OF KNOWLEDGE

While a servant is bound to see for himself such risks and hazards as are patent to observation, and is bound to exercise his own skill and judgment in a measure, and cannot blindly rely upon the skill and care of his master, this does not involve the question of "equal means of knowledge," which doctrine, although having had a place in the decisions of this state at one time, has been frequently ignored and expressly denied, and the case upon which it rested to that extent overruled in effect if not in terms. The master is required to do all that ordinary prudence and care requires to acquaint himself with the condition of the premises on which he sets his employé to labor, and the servant may rely on the master's implied assurance of the premises being reasonably safe for the purpose for which they are used, without inquiry or examination, unless the defect is obvious and certain and one which must come to his notice in the regular discharge of his work, without having to stop to suspect or hunt for it. Kentucky Freestone Co. v. McGee, 80 S. W. 1113, 1114, 118 Ky. 306.

EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAW

See, also, Privileges and Immunities.

Within the general declarations of the Bill of Rights in which uniformity and equality are laid down as a rule of government, there is no "equality" without uniformity. In re Opinion of Justices, 68 Atl. 505, 509, 73 N. H. 625, 6 Ann. Cas. 689.

The "equal protection of laws" is secured if the law operates alike on all of the same class, provided the classification is not arbitrary or unreasonable, and arises out of the business engaged in, or the peculiar manner in which it is conducted, and bears a just and proper relation to the attempted classification. Sons & Daughters of Justice v. Swift, 84 Pac. 984, 985, 73 Kan. 255.

To constitute "equal protection of the law," it is only necessary that there be equality among those similarly situated. People ex rel. Williams Engineering & Contracting Co. v. Metz, 85 N. E. 1070, 1072, 193 N. Y. 148, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 201.

The "equal protection of law" guaranteed by the Constitution means equal security or burden under the law to all similarly situated, and the law must bear alike on all individuals, classes, and districts which are similarly situated; the purpose of the amendment being to prevent arbitrary and capricious laws. In re Van Horne, 70 Atl. 986, 987, 74 N. J. Eq. 600. It means equal exemption with others of the same class from all charges and burdens of every kind; but the inequality which will violate the Constitution must be substantial, affect a substantial right, and result in unequal burdens. State v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Savings Bank of Minneapolis, 130 N. W. 445, 449, 114 Minn. 95. It means subjection to equal laws applying alike to all in the same situation. Adams v. Standard Oil Co. of Kentucky, 53 South. 692, 694, 97 Miss. 879. Equal protection is secured if the laws operate upon all alike and do not subject the individual to the arbitrary exercise of the powers of government. Miller v. City of Birmingham, 44 South. 388, 389, 151 Ala. 469, 125 Am. St. Rep. 31. It means that equal protection and security shall be given to every person under like circumstances in his life, liberty, and property and in the pursuit of happiness and in the exemption from any greater burdens, and charges than are imposed upon others. Ex parte Mallon, 102 Pac. 374, 375, 16 Idaho, 737, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1123.

Const. U. S. Amend. 14, in declaring that no state "shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws," undoubtedly intended, not only that there should be no arbitrary deprivation of life or liberty, or arbitrary spoliation of property, but that equal protection and security should be given to all under like circumstances in the enjoyment of their personal and civil rights; that all persons should be equally entitled to pursue their happiness and acquire and enjoy property; that they should have like access to the courts of the country for the protection of their persons and property, the prevention and redress of wrongs, and the enforcement of contracts; that no impediment should be interposed to the pursuits of any one, except as applied to the same pursuits by others under like circumstances; that no greater burdens should be laid upon one than are laid upon others in the same calling and condition; and that, in the administration of criminal justice, no different or higher punishment should be imposed upon one than such as is prescribed to all for like offenses." Sellers v. Hayes, 72 N. E. 119, 123, 163 Ind. 422 (quoting and adopting from Barbier v. Connolly, 5 Sup. Ct. 357, 359, 113 U. S. 27, 31, 28 L. Ed. 923).

Classification and punishment of crimes

The Legislature being entitled to classify crimes and penalties according to terms of imprisonment, a statute providing a death penalty in cases of assaults with a deadly weapon, or likely to produce great bodily injury, by life convicts, was based on a valid classification and, being equally applicable to all persons within the same class, was not unconstitutional, as denying such convicts "equal protection of the law." Ex parte Finley, 81 Pac. 1041, 1044-1046, 1 Cal. App. 198.

Bringing a convict after judgment before the court of another county in a separate proceeding instituted conformably to W. Va. Code, chap. 165, §§ 1-5, by information charging him with prior convictions which were not alleged in the indictment on which he was last tried and convicted, and, on the finding of the jury that he was the former convict, sentencing him to the additional punishment which chap. 152, §§ 23, 24, in such cases prescribes, does not deny him the "equal protection of the laws" because of the difference in procedure between the case where the fact of former conviction is alleg-vicious laws exempting the Boston Elevated Railway Company from the operation of chapter 112, is not thereby rendered unconstitutional as depriving other railway companies of the "equal protection of the laws," inasmuch as the difference in conditions is sufficient to justify the distinction made by statute. Commonwealth v. Interstate Consol. St. Ry. Co., 73 N. E. 530, 532, 187 Mass. 436, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 973, 2 Ann. Cas. 419.

Sess. Laws 1905, p. 376, c. 180, prohibits any one but a duly authorized agent of a railroad to sell railway transportation; requires such agent to be provided with a certificate from the railroad showing his authority, and to have a fixed place of business in which his certificate shall be conspicuously shown; makes it unlawful for any one not possessed of such certificate to sell railroad transportation or to set up, establish, and conduct any office or place of business for the sale or transfer of railroad transportation. Held, that the act is not unconstitutional as denying to unauthorized ticket brokers "equal protection of the laws" by granting special privileges to railroads not enjoyed by others. In re O'Neill, 83 Pac. 104, 105, 41 Wash. 174, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 558, 6 Ann. Cas. 869.

That provision of the act of 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 579), amending the charter of the city of Macon, which authorizes the city authorities to determine which of the existing roads and alleys in the territory annexed to the city by the act shall be declared to be public streets of the city, does not deny to them the "equal protection of the law," within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Smith v. City of Macon, 58 S. E. 713, 714, 129 Ga. 227.

A state law, which places five towns in a class by themselves, organizes them into a municipal corporation, casts upon them the burden of constructing and maintaining highways and bridges, and subjects them to a different control in respect thereto from other towns, is within the provision of the state Legislature, and not a denial of the "equal protection of the laws," in the meaning of the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution. Williams v. Eggleston, 18 Sup. Ct. 617, 619, 170 U. S. 304, 42 L. Ed. 1047.

Same-Race discrimination

"The equal protection of the laws" is not denied to colored persons by a law which makes no discrimination against the colored race in terms, but which grants a discretion to certain officers which can be used to the abridgment of the right of colored persons to serve on grand or petit juries, where it is not shown that the actual administration of the law was evil, but only that evil was possible under it. Montgomery v. State, 42 South. 894, 896, 53 Fla. 115.

Due process synonymous

There is a substantial distinction between the fifth amendment of the federal Constitution which is obligatory only on the United States, and secures due process of law, and the fourteenth amendment, which is obligatory on the states and prohibits the denial of the equal protection of the law; the latter expression being broader than the former, though the mere denial of equal protection of the laws may run into the other limitation. Mere discrimination, however, does not necessarily have that effect. United States v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 165 Fed. 742, 745.

The terms "due process of law" and "equal protection of the laws," as used in Const. U. S. Amend. 14, mean practically one and the same thing. The words "law of the land" were borrowed from Magna Charta and have a recognized significance. "Due process of law means in the due course of legal proceedings, according to those rules and forms which have been established for the protection of private rights." "Equal protection of the law" means equal security under them by every one on similar terms in his life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. State v. Barrett, 50 S. E. 506, 514, 138 N. C. 630, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 626 (dissenting opinion of Brown, J., quoting and adopting definitions in Cooley, Const. Lim. § 335; Westervelt v. Gregg, 12 N. Y. 202, 62 Am. Dec. 160; San Mateo County v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 13 Fed. 722).

Unequal taxation or exemption

The words "equal protection of laws" mean the subjection to equal laws, which applies alike to all persons in the same situation. Ala. Code 1907, §§ 2391-2400, imposing an additional franchise tax upon foreign corporations for the privilege of doing business within the state without imposing such tax on domestic corporations carrying on the same business, deprives such foreign corporation of the equal protection of the law. Southern R. Co. v. Greene, 30 Sup. Ct. 287, 289, 216 U. S. 400, 54 L. Ed. 536, 17 Ann. Cas. 1247.

Where a tax law does not deprive the taxpayer of property without due process of law, and the law does not violate the constitutional requirement that "property shall be assessed for taxes under general laws, and by uniform rules, according to its true value," it cannot be said that the law denies to the taxpayer the "equal protection of the laws," since the "law," to whose equal protection the citizen is entitled, is that very provision of our Constitution, which requires a uniform rule of taxation. Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. State Board of Assessors, 67 Atl. 672, 685, 75 N. J. Law, 120.

The provisions of the fourteenth constitutional amendment, prohibiting states from depriving any person of his property "without due process of law," and from denying to any person the "equal protection of the law," do not prevent a state from changing its system of taxation in all proper and reasonable ways, nor compel it to adopt any iron rule of equality, but it may lawfully classify property for the purposes of taxation, and impose different rates on different classes, it being sufficient if there is no discrimination in favor of one as against another of the same class, and the method of assessment and collection of the tax is not inconsistent with natural justice. Pere Marquette R. Co. v. Powers, 138 Fed. 223, 229 (citing Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 10 Sup. Ct. 533, 83 L. Ed. 892; Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657-662, 13 Sup. Ct. 721, 37 L. Titusville*, 184 U. S. 329, 22 Sup. Ct. 382, 46 L. Ed. 569; American Sugar Refining Co. v. Louisiana, 179 U. S. 89, 21 Sup. Ct. 43, 45 L. Ed. 102; New York State v. Barker, 179 U. S. 279, 21 Sup. Ct. 124, 45 L. Ed. 194; Charlotte, etc., R. Co. v. Gibbs, 142 U. S. 386, 12 Sup. Ct. 268, 35 L. Ed. 1051; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Connecticut, 185 U. S. 364, 22 Sup. Ct. 673, 46 L. Ed. 949; Kidd v. Alabama, 188 U. S. 730, 23 Sup. Ct. 401, 47 L. Ed. 669; Turpin v. Lemon, 187 U. S. 51, 23 Sup. Ct. 20, 47 L. Ed. 70; Florida, etc., R. Co. v. Reynolds, 183 U. S. 471, 22 Sup. Ct. 176, 46 L. Ed. 283).

The Illinois state board of equalization, when making an assessment pursuant to the supposed command of a writ of mandamus, represents the state, and its action is repugnant to Const. U. S. amend. 14, if it denies any one the "equal protection of the laws" protected by that amendment against impairment by the state. Raymond v. Chicago Union Traction Co., 28 Sup. Ct. 7, 12, 207 U. S. 20, 52 L. Ed. 78, 12 Ann. Cas. 757.

Compelling the owner of distilled spirits contained in government warehouses or the warehousemen to pay taxes thereon is not a denial to them of the "equal protection of the law." Thompson v. Commonwealth, 94 S. W. 654, 655, 123 Ky. 302, 124 Am. St. Rep. 362.

Const. art. 2, §§ 29, 30, and Acts 1903, p. 632, c. 258, exempt from taxation in the direct product of the soil in the hands of the producer and his immediate vendee and articles manufactured of the produce of the state. Held, that a tax on logs purchased in and brought from another state and lumber manufactured from such logs, belonging to a domestic corporation, is not violative of the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution, as a denial of the "equal protection of the laws." The fourteenth amendment of the federal Constitution does not prohibit the states from classifying property and from according treatment to the different classes. There is nothing in the amendment requiring taxes to be equal and uniform. The states may classify objects of legislation if the classification is not clearly arbitrary and unreasonable. The declaration that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the "equal protection of the laws" intended not only that there should be no arbitrary deprivation of life, or liberty, or arbitrary spoliation of property, but that equal protection and security should be given to all under like circumstances in their personal and civil rights; that all persons should be equally entitled to pursue happiness and acquire and enjoy property; that they should have like access to the courts for the protection of person and property, for the prevention and redress of wrongs, and for the enforcement of contracts; that no impediment should be imposed to the pursuits of any one, except as applied to the same pursuits to another in like circumstances; that no greater burden should be laid upon the same calling and condition; and that, in the administration of criminal justice, no different or higher punishment should be imposed upon one than upon another for a like offense. But this amendment was not designed to interfere with the police power of the state, to prescribe regulations to promote the health, peace, morals, education, and good order of the people and to legislate for the promotion of the industries of the state for the development of its resources, and to add to its health and prosperity. The amendment was not intended to prevent a state from adjusting its system of taxation in all proper and reasonable ways, or to compel the adoption of an iron rule of equal taxation. To give it that construction would not only supersede the constitutional provisions and laws of the state, the object of which is to secure equality of taxation, but would render nugatory those discriminations which the best interests of society require and which are necessary for the encouragement of needful and useful industries, and the discouragement of intemperance and vice. I. M. Darnell & Son v. City of Memphis, 95 S. W. 816, 818, 819, 116 Tenn. 424 (citing Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Connecticut, 22 Sup. Ct. 673, 185 U. S. 364, 46 L. Ed. 949; Barbier v. Connolly, 5 Sup. Ct. 671, 50 L. Ed. 1099).

The so-called "Duffield Act" (P. L. 1905, p. 189) relating to taxation of railroads, does not conflict with article 14 of the amendments to the federal Constitution, which provides that no state shall "deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the 'equal protection of the laws.'" Bergen & D. R. Co. v. State Board of Assessors, 67 Atl. 668, 672, 74 N. J. Law, 742 (citing Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 6 Sup. Ct. 57, 115 U. S. 321, 337, 338, 29 L. Ed. 414; *Pittsburg, C., C. & St. L. R. A statute making debts due from solvent debtors subject to taxation does not deny to any person within the state the "equal protection of the laws." Kingsley v. Merrill, 99 N. W. 1044, 1048, 122 Wis. 185, 67 L. R. A. 200, 2 Ann. Cas. 748.

Laws 1905, p. 2059, c. 729, providing for taxation of mortgages, does not deny the "equal protection of the law," because applying only to mortgages recorded after July 1, 1905; it making no distinction between persons in the same class or condition. People ex rel. Elisman v. Ronner, 95 N. Y. Supp. 518, 519, 48 Misc. Rep. 436.

Assessing the franchises and other property of certain corporations at a different rate and by a different method from that employed for other corporations, of the same class for the same year, which results in enormous disparity and discrimination, denies the "equal protection of the laws," protected by Const. U. S. Amend. 14, against impairment by a state. Raymond v. Chicago Union Traction Co., 28 Sup. Ct. 7, 12, 207 U. S. 20, 52 L. Ed. 78, 12 Ann. Cas. 757.

The "equal protection of the laws" is not denied a foreign meat packing house by the tax imposed on its local business, under Pub. Laws N. C. 1903, c. 247, taxing "every meat packing house doing business in this state," although, at the points where such local business is carried on, persons selling meat packing house products, but not doing a meat packing house business either in North Carolina or elsewhere, are not subjected to the tax. Meat packing houses are not denied the "equal protection of the laws" by the tax imposed on their business by Pub.

Laws N. C. 1903, c. 247, because houses packing vegetables and the like are not included in the same classification and subjected to the same tax. Armour Packing Co. v. Lacy, 26 Sup. Ct. 232, 235, 200 U. S. 226, 50 L. Ed. 451.

EQUAL SHARES

The words "in equal shares" do not manifest a purpose to modify what has been clearly and aptly expressed and can be given effect by interpreting them as meaning with such equal regard to the rights of all heirs at law as the law itself recognizes in the statute of distributions. Thompson v. Thornton, 83 N. E. 880, 881, 197 Mass. 273.

EQUAL TO

An agreement to pay a man money "equal to" a definite per cent. of the gross profits of a business means "measured" or "estimated" by such proportion of the profits, and gave the recipient no interest in the profits, as such, necessary to make him a partner. Fechtelner v. Palm Bros. & Co., 133 Fed. 462, 471, 66 C. C. A. 336.

EQUAL VOTE

Under Ill. Const. art. 2, § 18, providing that all elections shall be free and "equal," the vote of an elector is "equal" when counted at the same value as the vote of every other qualified elector exercising the privilege, but this expression does not entitle members of an opposite political party to vote at the primary of another party. Rouse v. Thompson, 81 N. E. 1109, 1123, 228 Ill. 522.

EQUALITY

As equity, see Equity.

EQUALITY OF REPRESENTATION

"The Constitution therefore must be understood, not as enjoining an absolute relative equality, because that would be demanding an impossibility, but as requiring Congress to make an apportionment of representatives among the several states, according to their respective numbers, as nearly as may be. That which cannot be done perfectly must be done in a manner as near perfection as can be. If exactness cannot, from the nature of things, be attained, then the nearest practicable approach to exactness ought to be made. Congress is not absolved from all rule, merely because the rule of perfect justice cannot be applied. In such a case approximation becomes a rule. It takes the place of the other rule, which would be preferable, but which is found inapplicable and becomes itself an obligation of binding force. The nearest approximation to exact truth or exact right, when that exact truth or exact right cannot be reached, prevails in other cases, not as a matter of discretion, but as an intelligible and definite rule, dictated by justice and conforming to the common sense of mankind—a rule of no less binding force in cases to which it is applicable, and no more to be departed from than any other rule." Act Ky. March 23, 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 472, c. 139), redividing the state into representative districts and placing Ohio, Butler, and Edmonson counties with a population of 53,263 and a combined area of 1,241 square miles into one district with only one representative, while Spencer county, with only 7,407 population and 204 square miles, is made a district by itself, entitled to one representative, constituted such an unequal division as to violate Const. § 33, requiring a division of the state into districts as nearly equal in population as may be without dividing any county except where a county may include more than one district, etc. Ragland v. Anderson, 100 S. W. 865, 869, 125 Ky. 141, 128 Am. St. Rep. 242 (quoting and adopting definition of Daniel Webster as chairman of a senatorial committee).

EQUALIZATION

"'Equalization' of assessments has, for its general purpose, to bring the assessments of different parts of a taxing district to the same relative standard so that no one of the parts may be compelled to pay a disproportionate part of the tax." Huldekoper v. Hadley, 177 Fed. 1, 8, 100 C. C. A. 395, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 505 (quoting and adopting the definition in Cooley, Tax. [2d Ed.] p. 421); Hacker v. Howe, 101 N. W. 255, 258, 72 Neb. 885.

"To accomplish 'equalization,' assessment rolls are equalized by county courts, boards of supervisors, or commissioners, and the aggregate of the county assessments by a state board established for the purpose. This is not done by changing individual assessments, but by fixing the aggregate sum for the several districts at what, in the opinion of the board, they should be, so that general taxes may be levied according to their determination, instead of on the assessor's footings." Hacker v. Howe, 101 N. W. 255, 258, 72 Neb. 885 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Cooley, Tax. [3d Ed.] 784).

EQUALIZE

Under Comp. Laws 1909, § 7620, requiring the state board of equalization to equalize, correct, and adjust assessments, the word "equalize" requires the board to make the assessments equal with reference to the fair cash value of the property. Appeal of McNeal, 128 Pac. 285, 291, 35 Okl. 17.

The word "equalize," as used in revenue statutes creating a board of equalization, means to bring the assessment of different parts of a taxing district to the same relative standard so that no one of the parts may be compelled to pay a disproportionate part of the tax. Huldekoper v. Hadley, 177 Fed. 1, 100 C. C. A. 395, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 505.

"Equalize" is defined as: "To make equal; to cause to correspond or be like in amount or degree as compared with something." Wells Fargo & Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 56 Cal. 194, 196.

EQUALLY

It was error to instruct that the law presumes that parties in their dealings intend to conduct them honestly, and, where a transaction which is challenged will admit "either" of an honest or a dishonest construction, it is the duty of the jury to accept the former, though it was probable that the word "either" was used when it was intended to use the word "equally." Had the word "equally" been used, the charge would not have been objectionable. Detroit Electric Light & Power Co. v. Applebaum, 94 N. W. 12, 13, 132 Mich. 555.

As creating tenancy in common

A devise to W. and B. to take and to hold during their natural lives "equally between them" means that they were to hold several estates, and not to hold jointly. Wells v. Fairbanks, 6 R. I. 474, 477.

The word "equally," in a conveyance to two or more persons "equally," unaccompanied by any controlling word implies a tenancy in common. Under a statute providing that all conveyances and devises made to two or more persons shall be construed to create estates in common and not in joint tenancy, unless it shall be expressed therein that the grantees or devisees shall hold the same in joint tenancy, and to the survivor of them, or it shall manifestly appear that it was intended to create an estate of joint tenancy, a will, devising property in remainder to be owned "equally" and "jointly" by testator's children or in case of the decease of any of said children his or her share to descend to the heirs of their body, creates a tenancy in common and not a joint tenancy, notwithstanding the use of the word "jointly." Taylor v. Stephens, 74 N. E. 980, 983, 165 Ind. 200 (citing 2 Powell, Devises, 370; Freeman, Cotenancy & Partition, § 23).

EQUALLY DIVIDED

As division per capita

Where a will directs that property shall be "equally divided between" persons standing in different degrees of relationship to the testator, it will be construed, in the absence of anything in the will showing a different intention, as requiring a distribution per capita. Armstrong v. Crutchfield's Ex'rs, 150 S. W. 835, 836, 150 Ky. 641.

The words "equally to be divided," when used in a will, mean a division per capita, and not per stirpes, whether the devisees be children and grandchildren, brothers and sisters, nephews or nieces, or strangers in blood to the testator, unless a contrary intention is discoverable from the will. Kaufman v. Anderson (Ky.) 104 S. W. 340, 341 (citing Purnell v. Culberson, 12 Bush [75 Ky.] 369; 2 Jarm. Wills, p. 80).

The phrase "equally share and share alike," as used in a will whereby a testator bequeathed his residuary estate, without lawful heirs, and directed that the same should be equally divided among the heirs, share and share alike, meant that in the distribution of the estate the testator's lawful heirs took per capita, and not per stirpes. Mooney v. Purpus, 70 N. E. 894, 896, 70 Ohio St. 57.

Under a bequest of property to be equally divided between the children of two of testator's brothers, the nieces and nephews take per capita, and not per stirpes. Hughes v. Hughes, 82 S. W. 408, 409, 118 Ky. 751.

As division per stirpes

Where the residue was bequeathed to testator's heirs at law, "such heirs to share equally," they took per stirpes. Allen v. Boardman, 79 N. E. 260, 261, 193 Mass. 284, 118 Am. St. Rep. 497 (citing Daggett v. Slack, 8 Metc. [49 Mass.] 450; Holbrook v. Harrington, 16 Gray [82 Mass.] 102; Houghton v. Kendall, 7 Allen [89 Mass.] 72; Balcom v. Haynes, 14 Allen [96 Mass.] 204; Bassett v. Granger, 100 Mass. 348; Rand v. Sanger, 115 Mass. 124; King v. Savage, 121 Mass. 303; Hall v. Hall, 2 N. E. 700, 140 Mass. 267; Cummings v. Cummings, 18 N. E. 401, 146 Mass. 501; Townsend v. Townsend, 31 N. E. 632, 15 Mass. 454; Siders v. Siders, 48 N. E. 277, 169 Mass. 523; Coates v. Burton, 77 N. E. 311, 191 Mass. 180).

The word "equally," when used in a will devising certain property to testator's brother's children and heirs, to be divided "equally," means the property is to be divided between the children and heirs per stirpes.—McClench v. Waldron, 91 N. E. 126, 127, 204 Mass. 554.

As creating tenancy in common

It is a general rule that, when a bequest is made to several persons of income to be divided "equally" among them, they take as tenants in common, and not as a class or as joint tenants. Loomis v. Gorham, 71 N. E. 981, 982, 186 Mass. 444.

EQUIP

Safety Appliance Act, while in terms it requires only that engines and cars shall be "equipped" with the required appliances, must be construed to mean equipment which, if there, is capable of being operated, and that it shall be kept in good order and repair; but it cannot be construed to require that the equipment shall in fact be efficiently operated by those in charge of the train. United States v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 156 Fed. 182, 183.

EQUIPMENT

See Railroad Equipment.

Where a corporation executed a mortgage covering all its buildings, structures, improvements, machinery, etc., and then recited that it was intended to include all the property of every description owned by the corporation, constituting a part of its "plant and equipment," the term "equipment" should be construed to mean whatever was used in equipping, the collective designation for the articles comprising an outfit, to fit out or supply with whatever was necessary to efficient action in any way, and hence included the company's office furniture and articles used in the office in the conduct of the business, etc. Landau v. Sykes, 54 South. 3, 4, 98 Miss. 495, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 197.

Of passenger

The Century dictionary defines "equipment" as the act of equipping or fitting, or the state of being equipped, as for a voyage or an expedition. The term "equip" is derived from words of similar meaning, and often similar sound in various other languages, all meaning or relating to a ship, voyage, or expedition. Under Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 709, providing that "luggage" may consist of any articles intended for the use of a passenger while traveling or for his personal equipment, the reasonable interpretation of the term "personal equipment" is that it only includes clothing, jewelry, and such things as are used in the protection or adornment of the person. It does not include the tools with which one may gain a livelihood after the journey is completed. Choc-taw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Zwirtz, 73 Pac. 941, 942, 13 Okl. 411.

Of railroad

Train Railway Act, § 35, providing that a street railway company may, for money to construct and operate its road, give a mortgage on its franchise, road, superstructure fixtures, rolling stock, and equipments, and that its mortgage on its right of way shall be a lien thereon and on the superstructure and fixtures thereon, whether built before or after, makes the lien of the mortgage superior to titles subsequently reserved in contracts for furnishing material for the road, which, when put in place, becomes a fixture, notwithstanding section 6336, providing that any contract for sale of railroad "equipment or rolling stock" may provide that title to the property shall not vest in the purchaser till the purchase price is paid; this referring to movable personalty, as distinguished from the permanent fixed property forming an integral part of the railway as an entirety. Detroit Trust Co. v. Detroit, F. & S. Ry. Co., 124 N. W. 45, 51, 159 Mich. 442.

EQUITABLE

See Inequitable.

EQUITABLE ACTION

As proceeding, see Proceeding.

An action to set aside a default entered in a foreclosure proceeding, and to have the decree entered therein vacated and declared void, is an equitable action within Const. art. 6, § 4, giving the Supreme Court jurisdiction in equity cases; and hence an appeal in such action was improperly brought to the Court of Appeal. Litch v. O'Connor, 97 Pac. 207, 208, 8 Cal. App. 489.

Action for money had and received is an "equitable action," governed by equitable principles, and in it plaintiff waives torts, trespasses, and damages, and it may be maintained whenever one has money belonging to another which in equity and good conscience he ought to pay the other. Williams v. Smith, 72 Atl. 1088, 1101, 29 R. I. 562.

EQUITABLE ASSETSChoses in action

"Choses in action" are not equitable assets, and in absence of any special equity, they can only be reached by creditors for the payment of debts in pursuance of the modes provided by statute. Clapp v. Smith, 19 Atl. 330, 331, 16 R. I. 717.

Proceeds of decedents' lands

"Ordinarily and strictly, the term 'equitable assets' applies only to property and funds belonging to the estate of a decedent, which by law are not subject to the payment of debts, in the course of administration by the personal representatives, but which the testator has voluntarily charged with the payment of debts generally, or which, being nonexistent at law, have been created in equity, under circumstances which fasten upon them such a trust. To constitute equitable assets, the trust imposed by the party, or by the court, must be for the benefit of creditors generally." Freedman's Sav. & T. Co. v. Earle, 4 Sup. Ct. 228, 110 U. S. 710, 718, 28 L. Ed. 301.

EQUITABLE ASSIGNMENT

An equitable assignment is an assignment of a portion of a debt which a court of equity will recognize and a court of law will not. In re Macauley, 158 Fed. 322, 327.

To constitute an "equitable assignment" good as between the assignor and assignee, it is not essential that the fund should have been earned or in esse at the time of the assignment, or that notice be given to the present or future holder of the fund, but, if the intent of the parties to create the lien is apparent, it is sufficient that there be a reasonable expectancy that the funds will be fully earned and come into existence. Barnes v. Shattuck, 114 Pac. 952, 954, 13 Ariz. 338.

An assignment of a portion of money to be earned in the future is an "equitable assignment." Cogan v. Conover Mfg. Co., 60 Atl. 408, 411, 69 N. J. Eq. 358.

Defendants testified that P., before becoming a bankrupt, arranged to pay defendants their full claim of $5,400 when the United States paid P. the final balance due to him on a claim then pending; but no definite amount was agreed on to be paid to defendants, nor was the "arrangement" recognized by the government—the disbursing officer only promising to notify defendants when settlement was to be made, so that they might be present. At the settlement a check for $5,000 was made payable to the bankrupt, which was turned over to defendants; the bankrupt refusing to pay more. Held, that such facts were insufficient to constitute an enforceable equitable assignment. Speckman v. Smedley Bros., 158 Fed. 771, 772.

Order for payment out of particular fund or property

"In order to constitute a valid assignment in equity, all that is necessary is an order from the person to whom the money is due or coming on the person in whose hands or under whose control it may be to pay to the payee." Mack Mfg. Co. v. Smoot & Co., 47 S. E. 859, 861, 102 Va. 724 (quoting Chesapeake Classified Bldg. Ass'n v. Coleman, 94 Va. 433, 26 S. E. 843).

An agreement to pay a certain sum out of, or that one is entitled to receive the same from, a designated fund when received, does not operate as an "equitable assignment." The test, even of an equitable assignment, "is whether the debtor would be justified in paying the debt, or the portion contracted about, to the person claiming to be the assignee." Donovan v. Middlebrook, 88 N. Y. Supp. 607, 608, 95 App. Div. 365 (citing Fairbanks v. Sargent, 22 N. E. 1039, 117 N. Y. 320, 6 L. R. A. 475).

Where an order requesting payment to another relates to the whole amount of the funds in the hands of the debtor belonging to the assignor, it is an "equitable assignment" of the claim. Brady v. Ranch Min. Co., 94 Pac. 85, 86, 7 Cal. App. 182.

"An agreement to pay out of a particular fund, however clear in its terms, is not an 'equitable assignment'; a covenant in the most solemn form has no greater effect. The phraseology employed is not material, provided the intent to transfer is manifested. Such an intent and its execution are indispensable. The assignor must not retain any control over the fund, any authority to collect, or any power of revocation. If he do, it is fatal to the claim of the assignee. The transfer must be of such a character that the fund holder can safely pay, and is compellable to do so, though forbidden by the assignor. Where the transfer is of the character described, the fund holder is bound from the time of notice. A bill of exchange or check is not an assignment pro tanto of the funds of the drawer in the hands of the drawee." One who had a contract with a railroad to furnish board to a track gang entered into an arrangement with a supply firm whereby it was to extend him credit, and he in turn gave it an order on the railroad, directing it to pay to the firm any sums due from the railroad to him. It was agreed between the contractor and the firm that the latter was not to present the order unless the former did not keep up his payments. In pursuance of this agreement the order was not presented for over a year, and then just one day before the contractor, being insolvent, filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy. Held, that the order did not operate as an equitable assignment as of the date when it was given, but was effective as a transfer only when presented to the railroad, and therefore constituted a preference, within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60, 30 Stat. 562, declaring a transfer of property by an insolvent, the effect of which is to enable any creditor to obtain a greater percentage of their debts than any other creditors of the same class, a preference. Johnston v. Huff, Andrews & Moyler Co., 133 Fed. 704, 706, 66 C. C. A. 534.

A mere promise, although of the clearest and most solemn kind, to pay a debt out of a particular fund, is not an assignment of the fund, even in equity; but to make an "equitable assignment" there should be such an actual or constructive appropriation of the subject-matter as to confer a complete and present right on the assignee, even where the circumstances do not admit of its immediate exercise and to divest the assignor of control over the fund. Smedley v. Speckman, 157 Fed. 815, 819, 85 C. C. A. 179.

EQUITABLE CONVERSION

Equitable conversion is a constructive alteration in the nature of property by which realty is regarded as personalty or personalty as realty. Beaver v. Ross, 118 N. W. 287, 289, 140 Iowa, 154, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 65, 17 Ann. Cas. 640.

Conversion is a fiction of equity, applied to carry out the intention of the testator, but, where that intention or purpose fails, it will not be applied, and, if there be a total failure of purpose, the heir at law takes, and may not only prevent a sale, but may compel the trustee, if any, to convey the real estate to him; while in case of a partial failure the heir takes his share according to the course of inheritance under the intestate law. In Re Reed's Estate, 85 Atl. 138, 139, 237 Pa. 125.

To constitute a "conversion" of real estate into personalty, in the absence of an actual sale, it must be made the duty of the trustee to sell in any event; such conversion resting upon the principle that equity considers that as done which ought to have been done. A mere discretionary power to sell produces no such conversion. Christopher v. Mungen, 55 South. 273, 277, 61 Fla. 513, 534 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, pp. 2437, 2438).

"Equitable conversion" is that change in the nature of property by which, for certain purposes, real estate is considered as personal, and personal estate as real, and transmissible and descendible as such; the doctrine being founded on the maxim that equity regards and treats that as done which in good conscience ought to be done. Geiger v. Bitzer, 88 N. E. 134, 135, 80 Ohio St. 65, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 285, 17 Ann. Cas. 151.

"The doctrine of 'equitable conversion' is based on the rule that what is or ought to be done shall be treated as if done already. It is a fiction, therefore, invented to sustain and carry out the intention of the testator or settlor." Conversion is always a matter of intent. In order to work a conversion there must be either "(1) a positive direction to sell, (2) an absolute necessity to sell in order to execute the will, or (3) such a blending of real and personal estate by the testator in his will as to clearly show that he intended to create a fund out of both real and personal estate and to bequeath the said fund as money. In each of the two latter cases an intent to convert will be implied." In re Vanuxem's Estate, 61 Atl. 876, 877, 212 Pa. 315, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 400 (quoting Appeal of Hunt, 105 Pa. 128; Yerkes v. Yerkes, 200 Pa. 419, 50 Atl. 186).

To operate as a "conversion," direction that the form of the property be changed must be imperative, in the sense of being positive and unmistakable. If the intention, as gathered from the whole instrument, be left in doubt, or the direction allows the trustee to sell or not as he deems best, the court is not at liberty to say that conversion has taken place, but must deal with the property according to its actual form and character. The doctrine of conversion of real into personal property is recognized in this state, and the provision for the sale of real estate and distribution of the proceeds contained in a will is evidence sufficient to show the intention of the testator to make such conversion, and is effective to do so. But the intention to make the conversion must be clear and certain and the direction to sell for that purpose imperative and unconditional. The intention must appear by expressed direction and the conversion be obligatory upon the executor or trustee. If the direction to sell is made to depend upon contingencies, or discretion is given to the executors to sell for distribution or divide the property in kind, the intent of the testator to make conversion is not sufficiently evident and positive, and none is effected.

Where testator gave his real and personal property to his widow for life for the joint use for herself and children and authorized her to dispose of the personality at discretion, and on the arrival of any child at age to give the child any property she might desire, preserving equality among the children, and empowered her to sell any real estate as she might think best, and providing that at her death any remaining property should be sold and equally divided among the children, there was no "equitable conversion" of real estate into personality. Bennett v. Gallaher, 92 S. W. 66, 67, 115 Tenn. 568 (quoting and adopting Wheless v. Wheless, 21 S. W. 595, 92 Tenn. 293, and Bedford v. Bedford, 75 S. W. 1017, 110 Tenn. 204).

By "equitable conversion of property" is meant an implied or equitable change of property from real to personal or from personal to real, so that each is construed as transferable, transmissible, and descendible, according to its new character as it arises out of the contracts or other intentions of the parties. This change is a mere consequence of the common doctrine of courts of equity that where things are agreed to be done they are to be treated for many purposes as if they were actually done. Where the owner of land made a contract to convey, and left his heirs only the interest then owned, which was virtually but a right to the proceeds, the holder of the contract being entitled to have the land conveyed to him upon paying the purchase price, the vendor's property for the purposes of administration is personal rather than real. Grigg's Land Co. v. Smith, 89 Pac. 477, 479, 46 Wash. 185 (quoting and adopting definition in Story, Eq. Jur. [11th Ed.] 789, 790, 1212).

In order to work a conversion of testator's lands into money from the time of his death, there must be either a positive direction to sell or an absolute necessity to sell, in order to execute the will, or such a blending of real and personal estate by the testator in his will as to clearly show that he intended to create a fund out of both real and personal estate, and to bequeath it as money. In re Cooper's Estate, 56 Atl. 67, 68, 206 Pa. 628, 98 Am. St. Rep. 799 (citing Irwin v. Patchen, 164 Pa. 51, 30 Atl. 436).

Where testator devised his real estate to his wife for life, with remainder to a nephew, who predeceased testator, so that there was a lapse of the devise to the nephew into the residuary clause of the will, providing that after the death of testator's wife all the rest of his estate should be sold, and the proceeds equally divided and paid over to the children of testator's brother, there was an "equitable conversion" of the real estate into personality for the purpose of devolution. Duckworth v. Jordan, 51 S. E. 109, 111, 188 N. C. 520.

To effect a "conversion" of realty into personality, it is not necessary that there should be an imperative direction to the executors to sell; but the testator's intention may be gathered from the general scope and tenor of his will and the necessity of a sale to carry out its provisions, the conversion arising on the theory that the testator must have intended that everything essential to his scheme should be done. A testator in his will used the expression "inasmuch as I shall hereafter give my executors power to sell or lease my real estate and personal estate," etc., and in the last clause after appointing his executors, said: "I confer upon my executors power * * * to make sale * * * of my real estate, * * * only for the purpose of paying my debts, but as herein before provided, it being contemplated by me that they will sell my real estate, though not with undue haste." Held, that it was his intent that his whole estate, real and personal, should be converted into money. Boyce v. Kelso Home, 68 Atl. 550, 552, 107 Md. 190.

Where executors sold real estate for part cash and part reservation of ground rent, there was no "conversion" of the real estate represented by the ground rent, and the executors would have to account for it as real estate and not as personality. In re Harrison's Estate, 66 Atl. 354, 356, 217 Pa. 207.

EQUITABLE DEFENSES

In Code Civ. Proc. § 507, authorizing the defendant in an action to interpose any defense he may have, either legal or equitable, "equitable defense" means a defense which a court of equity would recognize, or a defense founded on some distinct ground of equitable jurisdiction. City of New York v. Holzderber, 90 N. Y. Supp. 63, 64, 44 Misc. Rep. 509.

The term "equitable defense" in Greater New York Charter Laws, 1901, c. 466, § 934, as amended by Laws 1904, c. 624, authorizing an order dismissing an action to enforce a personal property tax in the city, if defendant has an "equitable defense," means a defense which a court of equity will recognize or a defense founded on some distinct ground of equitable jurisdiction; and, where the moving paper simply denied that defendant was liable for an assessment for the year and stated that he had never before been taxed on his personality and received no notice of the assessment until long after the time for correcting the assessment rolls and had no personal property subject to taxation but not stating that he was unable to pay his tax, there was no ground for dismissing the action to recover a personal property tax. City of New York v. Holzderber, 90 N. Y. Supp. 63, 64, 44 Misc. Rep. 509.

EQUITABLE JOINTURE

When the statutory requisites are not all found in a provision by a husband for the wife by will or otherwise, yet it is manifest that the husband did not intend her to have the provision and her dower also, she will be compelled in equity to elect between them, which election is known as "equitable jointure." A contract, made in contemplation of marriage, by which a woman purports to release her claim to her intended husband's lands, but in which it is nowhere declared to be in satisfaction of her dower, and in which no provision is made for her support after the husband's death, but simply permits her to receive the rents out of her dower in a former husband's estate, does not constitute an equitable jointure. King v. King, 82 S. W. 101, 103, 184 Mo. 99.

Any reasonable provision which an adult person agrees to accept in lieu of dower will amount to an "equitable jointure," and, though it be wanting in the requisites of a legal jointure, in equity it will bar dower. Rieger v. Schaible, 115 N. W. 560, 563, 81 Neb. 33, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 866, 16 Ann. Cas. 700.

EQUITABLE LEVY

The right to an equitable lien is sometimes called "equitable levy." Hudson v. Wood, 119 Fed. 764, 776, 777.

EQUITABLE LIEN

See, also, Lien.

Equitable liens are such as arise either from a written contract which shows an intention to charge some particular property with a debt or obligation, or declared by a court of equity from the facts and circumstances of the case, and do not depend on possession. Strictly speaking, they are not a jus in re, nor a jus ad rem, but are more properly a charge on the thing, which can be enforced only in equity. Garrison v. Vermont Mills, 69 S. E. 743, 744, 154 N. C. 1, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 450.

The foundation of every equitable lien is a contract, which deals with some specific property, made by some authorized person, or arising by implication from his acts, before a lien in equity may be created against the property of the person to be affected thereby. Vivion v. Nicholson, 116 S. W. 386, 388, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 43.

The doctrine of "equitable lien" follows the doctrine of subrogation. They both come under the maxim, "Equality is equity," and are applied only in cases where the law fails to give relief and justice would suffer without them. The doctrine of "equitable lien" is not a limitless remedy to be applied according to the measure of the conscience of the particular chancellor any more than, as an illustrious law-writer said, to the measure of his foot. The right to such lien arises when a party at the request of another advances him money to be applied, and which is applied, to the discharge of a legal obligation of that other, but when, owing to the disability of the person to whom the money is advanced, no valid contract is made for its repayment, as where money is advanced to a minor to pay a debt which he has incurred for necessities furnished him, no action at law lies to recover of the minor on a contract, express or implied, but, as the money was loaned to discharge a debt for which the minor was liable at law and it was used for that purpose, a court of equity will charge a lien on the minor's property to repay the sum advanced. The doctrine is limited to cases where the same principle applies as is illustrated in the supposed case. It does not, however, apply in favor of a mere volunteer. Capen v. Garrison, 92 S. W. 368, 372, 193 Mo. 335, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 838.

"An equitable lien arises where there are some personal obligations or duty to be enforced." Where testator bequeathed to his wife and daughter the use of his estate for life, with remainder, subject to a power of sale in the life tenants, over to defendants, one of the life tenants, by temporarily waiving her right to share in the estate so that a sale of the property was avoided, was not entitled to an equitable lien on the property so as to be able to reach defendant's remainder interest through that medium, but was, as to defendant, a mere volunteer. Hare v. Congregational Society of Ferrisburg, 57 Atl. 964, 965, 76 Vt. 362.

"Where in terms the parties agree that one making advances for the purchase of merchandise to be shipped to him shall have a lien on the same, the lien arises upon the purchase of the merchandise before it is consigned to the creditor. The lien, in such case, attaches to the merchandise purchased, and in the hands of the debtor at the time of his bankruptcy, and may be asserted against the debtor's assignee in bankruptcy. Judge Story said that the possession of the property by the debtor was not a badge of fraud, or against the policy of the law, or in any manner to be deemed inconsistent with the just rights of his general creditors, and therefore the agreement to give a lien or equitable charge was binding upon the prop-

Every written contract which shows an intention to charge some particular property therein described or identified with a debt or obligation creates an equitable lien, and a written agreement to convey or transfer property as security for a debt creates an equitable lien, and a verbal contract will create such a lien on personal property. Atlanta Nat. Bank v. Four States Grocer Co. (Tex.) 135 S. W. 1135, 1138.

It is said that: "Every express agreement in writing, whereby the party clearly indicates an intention to make some particular property therein described as security for a debt, creates an 'equitable lien' upon the property, which is enforceable. The form of the writing is not important, provided it sufficiently appears that it was thereby intended to create a security. If that intention appears, it will create a mortgage in equity, or a specific lien on the property so intended to be mortgaged." Port v. Carpenter, 114 N. W. 615, 616, 138 Iowa, 553, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 206.

EQUITABLE MORTGAGE

A writing which is in all respects sufficient as a deed of trust securing a debt, except that it is not under the seal of the party purporting to be the grantor therein, is an "equitable mortgage." Holly's Ex'r v. Curry, 51 S. E. 135, 137, 58 W. Va. 70, 112 Am. St. Rep. 944.

An agreement to execute an agricultural lien is not an "equitable mortgage." An equitable mortgage to secure a debt may be created, by parol agreement, on crops to be raised, and attaches as soon as they are in esse. Creech v. Long, 51 S. E. 614, 616, 72 S. C. 25.

Agreements of the nature above referred to are usually termed "equitable mortgages," but the name is not important. If the effect is to create a lien to secure a debt, possession given to the creditor in pursuance of the agreement may be held under the rules applicable to mortgages in possession. Equity requires the payment of the debt before relinquishment of the security can be compelled. Charple v. Stout, 128 Pac. 396, 398, 88 Kan. 318.

Where title deeds and other securities were deposited with the depositor's sureties to secure them against liability on a bond, and an instrument executed reciting that the papers were deposited to secure them against any loss by reason of signing such bond, and the writing included the real estate in controversy, which was pledged to the sureties as above stated, such writing was sufficient in form to create an equitable mortgage on the property to secure the sureties' liability. Port v. Carpenter, 114 N. W. 615, 616, 138 Iowa, 553, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 206 (quoting and adopting definition in Howard v. Iron & Land Co., 64 N. W. 896, 62 Minn. 298).

A written agreement entered into by parties to make certain property a security for past indebtedness and for future advances, and upon the faith of which both parties have acted in making and accepting payments and advances, constitutes an "equitable mortgage" or lien upon the property. Earle v. Sunnyside Land Co., 88 Pac. 920, 925, 150 Cal. 214.

In order to avoid foreclosure of a deed of trust, the mortgagor quitclaimed the property to the mortgagee, who executed an agreement to reconvey the property on condition of the payment by the mortgagor of the debt, taxes, and other incumbrances before a certain date. If these obligations were not so paid, the agreement was to be void. Held, that the conveyance vested an absolute title in the mortgagee, and the transaction did not constitute an "equitable mortgage." Bailey v. St. Louis Union Trust Co., 87 S. W. 1003, 1005, 188 Mo. 483.

A consent judgment, declaring that defendant "has an equity to redeem" land on the payment to plaintiff of a specified sum, and in case of the failure to pay the same within the time limited "defendant shall stand debarred absolutely" of all equity in the premises, establishes the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee between the parties. Bunn v. Braswell, 51 S. E. 927, 929, 139 N. C. 135.

A bought certain land from B. for C., taking a deed from B., and giving him in return a mortgage for the purchase money. He then put C. into possession and agreed to convey to him on payment of the purchase money. After payment he refused to convey. Held, A. could not be considered toward C. as a mortgagee. Kean v. Landrum, 52 S. E. 421, 423, 72 S. C. 556.

To create an equitable mortgage on property for the payment of a debt, an intent to create it must be manifest as distinguished from an intent to apply to the payment of the debt the proceeds from the sale of the property. An agreement setting out that whereas plaintiff and defendant purchased certain land in the proportion of a two-third interest in plaintiff and a one-third interest in Rainey, and plaintiff had paid the entire purchase money and defendant had agreed to repay the same, and that plaintiff had made necessary advancements for improvements, and that all the moneys advanced by him should be considered as a loan and repaid by defendant as rapidly as possible from the receipts of sales or the income of the property, and that, if all such advancements were not fully paid within five years, the defendant, on demand, would pay the one-third thereof then unpaid, with interest, does not disclose an intent to create an equitable mortgage or lien in favor of plaintiff on defendant's interest in the property purchased. Smith v. Rainey, 83 Pac. 463, 464, 9 Ariz. 362.

Absolute deed

A mortgage created by an absolute deed of the property made to the mortgagee, taken in connection with the contract, may be regarded as an "equitable mortgage" in contradistinction from a legal mortgage. Fitch v. Miller, 65 N. E. 650, 653, 200 Ill. 170.

An absolute conveyance of property in partial satisfaction of a debt, accompanied by a parol agreement that, if the property enhances in value within a certain time and to a certain extent, notes given in satisfaction of the remainder of the debt shall be delivered up and canceled, does not constitute an "equitable mortgage." Pearson v. Dancer, 39 South. 474, 475, 144 Ala. 427.

EQUITABLE OWNER

As owner, see Owner.

An "equitable owner" is one who has not the legal title but is entitled to the beneficial interest. In re Folwell's Estate, 62 Atl. 414, 415, 68 N. J. Eq. 728, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1193 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Bouv. Law Dict. p. 24, "Legal Estate").

A parol gift of land followed by possession and improvements by the donee makes the donee the equitable owner. Maas v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co., 111 N. W. 1044, 1045, 148 Mich. 432.

One who has acquired a complete right to public lands, but to whom a patent has not been issued, is usually regarded as an "equitable owner"; the federal government or the state holding the naked title in trust. De Graffenreid v. Iowa Land & Trust Co., 95 Pac. 624, 629, 20 Okl. 637.

EQUITABLE PLAINTIFF

The "legal plaintiff" is the person in whom the legal title or right of action is vested, while the "equitable plaintiff" is the person who does not have the legal title to the right of action but is in equity entitled to the thing sued for. Burrell v. United States, 147 Fed. 44, 46, 77 C. C. A. 308.

EQUITABLE PROCEEDING

Mandamus is not an equitable proceeding, and a mandamus issued after judgment against a county, to compel the levy of a tax to pay the same, is not a proceeding in equity, but one at law, in the nature of an execution to enforce satisfaction. Carter County v. Schmalstig, 127 Fed. 126, 127, 62 C. C. A. 78 (citing Riggs v. Johnson County, 73 U. S. [6 Wall.] 166, 18 L. Ed. 768; Helne v. Levee Com'rs, 86 U. S. [19 Wall.] 655, 22 L. Ed. 223).

A proceeding under Rev. St. 1899, § 42, providing for the removal of administrators for specified causes, upon a complaint in writing and affidavit by any person interested and 10 days' notice to the person complained of, is not a common-law but a statutory proceeding, equitable in nature, addressed originally to the discretion of the probate court, and not within Const. art. 2, § 28, guaranteeing the right to trial by jury as heretofore enjoyed, so that a jury is not demandable in either the probate court or on appeal to the circuit court. Stevens v. Lawrill, 84 S. W. 113, 115, 110 Mo. App. 140 (citing Bray v. Thatcher, 28 Mo. 132; Whaley v. Whaley, 50 Mo. 577).

EQUITABLE RECEIVER

An "equitable receiver" is a mere custodian, without title and without any power saving that conferred upon him by the order appointing him. Cogan v. Conover Mfg. Co., 60 Atl. 408, 415, 69 N. J. Eq. 358.

EQUITABLE TITLE

"An 'equitable title' is a right or interest in land which, not having the properties of a legal estate, but merely a right of which courts of equity will take notice, requires the aid of such court to make it available." Pogue v. Simon, 81 Pac. 566, 567, 47 Or. 6, 114 Am. St. Rep. 903, 8 Ann. Cas. 474 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bouv. Law Dict. [Rawle's Ed.] p. 680).

An "equitable title" is a right possessed by a person to have the legal title to property transferred to him upon the performance of specified conditions. Karalis v. Agnew, 127 N. W. 440, 441, 111 Minn. 522; Joy v. Midland State Bank of Omaha, Neb., 133 N. W. 276, 277, 28 S. D. 262; Harris v. Mason, 115 S. W. 1146, 120 Tenn. 668, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1011. In order that he may draw to himself an equitable title, he must show that the one from whom he derives his right had himself a right to transfer. Harris v. Mason, 115 S. W. 1146, 1154, 120 Tenn. 668, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1101.

An equitable title is a right imperfect at law, but which may be perfected by the aid of a court of chancery either by compelling parties to do that which in good faith they are bound to do, or by removing obstacles interposed in bad faith to the prejudice of another. When a party's grantors were not the possessors of a legal right and could neither sell nor convey, he acquired nothing which could be perfected by a court of equity. Nor will a court of equity decree an equitable title where conveyances are shown to have been taken under a treaty which provided for valid conveyances upon conditions, unless such conditions appear to have been complied with. Ayres v. United States, 42 Ct. Cl. 385, 413.

EQUITABLE WASTE

"Equitable waste" is such acts as at law would not be esteemed to be waste under the circumstances of the case, but which is so esteemed by a court of equity because of their manifest injury to the inheritance, although not inconsistent with the legal rights of the party committing them. It is a wanton and unconscientious abuse of the rights of the party in possession, ruinous to the interests of other parties; such acts as a prudent man would not do with his own property. Landers v. Landers, 151 S. W. 386, 391, 151 Ky. 206.

EQUITY

See Court of Equity; Inchoate Equity; Intervening Equity; Justice and Equity; On Hearing in Equity; Suit in Equity.

Plea in equity, see Plea.

"Equity" is the correction of that wherein the law, by reason of its universality, is deficient." Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Blair, 130 Fed. 971, 974; Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. v. Bouvier, 62 Atl. 868, 875, 70 N. J. Eq. 158; Thels v. Spokane Falls Gaslight Co., 74 Pac. 1004, 1006, 34 Wash. 23. Its special mission is to relieve from fraud and to enforce the observation of broad and just principles." Thels v. Spokane Falls Gaslight Co., 74 Pac. 1004, 1006, 34 Wash. 23. In equitable actions, the rigid rules of law are relaxed, thereby giving the conscience of the chancellor more latitude. Lynn v. Waldron, 80 Pac. 292, 293, 38 Wash. 82 (quoting Bl. Comm.).

Aristotle (Ethica, book 5, c. 10) defines "equity" as "a better sort of justice which corrects legal justice where the latter errs through being expressed in a universal form and not taking account of particular cases." Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. v. Bouvier, 62 Atl. 868, 875, 70 N. J. Eq. 158.

"Equity" is a system, both in England and this country, of well-established law. Equity is not a chancellor's mere notions of what is equality. Laird v. Union Traction Co., 57 Atl. 987, 208 Pa. 574.

"Equity" is now also the law. "Equity" is a rogish thing. For law we have a measure and know what we trust to. Equity is according to the conscience of him that is chancellor; and, as that is larger or narrower, so is equity. 'Tis all one as if they should make his foot the standard for the measure we call a chancellor's foot. What an uncertain measure would this be! One chancellor has a long foot, another a short foot, a third an indifferent foot. 'Tis the same thing as the chancellor's conscience. Cox v. Burgess, 96 S. W. 577, 579, 139 Ky. 699 (quoting from Table Talk, tit. Equity).

While "equity" operates on fixed rules, as well defined as are the rules of law, it exercises a judicial discretion which may be likened to the civil conscience, and which will vary in the relief afforded according to the facts and peculiar circumstances of the case. This is not, as was formerly charged against the chancellor's exercise of prerogatives which were at variance with the rules of law, according to the individual conception of the judge in the case as to what was right between man and man. Cox v. Burgess, 96 S. W. 577, 579, 139 Ky. 699.

As equality

"Equality" is equity. Hayden v. Collins, 81 Pac. 1120, 1123, 1 Cal. App. 259.

EQUITY AND GOOD CONSCIENCE

"Equity and good conscience" is an elastic phrase often applied in adjudicating the rights of parties, but it is not a doctrine or rule under which a party will be deprived of his property without due process. City of Leadville v. Leadville Sewer Co., 107 Pac. 801, 813, 47 Colo. 118.

EQUITY JURISDICTION

See Error or Mistake as to Common-Law or Equity Jurisdiction.

The question of equity jurisdiction relates technically to power itself, but in a broader sense when such power should or should not be used. Wadhams Oil Co. v. Tracy, 123 N. W. 785, 787, 141 Wis. 150, 18 Ann. Cas. 779.

Though jurisdiction in its proper sense means authority to hear and decide a cause, jurisdiction of a court of equity involves the question whether equity ought to assume jurisdiction, and hear and decide the cause. Miller v. Rowan, 96 N. E. 285, 287, 251 Ill. 344.

Const. 1874, art. 7, § 15, conferring on the circuit courts jurisdiction in matters of equity until the Legislature shall establish courts of chancery, refers to such jurisdiction as a court of chancery could properly exercise at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, and, though the Legislature may create courts of chancery and vest the same with jurisdiction in matters of equity, it may not enlarge their jurisdiction when created. Gladish v. Lovewell, 130 S. W. 579, 581, 95 Ark. 618.

The term "equity jurisdiction" is used in contradistinction to "jurisdiction" in general, and to "common-law jurisdiction" in particular. In its most general sense the term "jurisdiction," when applied to a court, is the power residing in such court to determine judicially a given action, controversy, or question presented to it for decision. If this power does not exist with reference to any particular case, its determination by the court is an absolute nullity; if it does exist, the determination, however erroneous in fact or in law, is binding upon the parties until reversed or set aside in some proceeding authorized by the practice, and brought for that express purpose. "Equity jurisdiction," therefore, in its ordinary acceptation as distinguished on the one side from the general power to decide matters at all, and on the other from the jurisdiction "at law" or "common-law jurisdiction," is the power to hear certain kinds and classes of civil causes according to the principles of the method and procedure adopted by the court of chancery, and to decide them in accordance with the doctrines and rules of equity jurisprudence, which decision may involve either the determination of the equitable rights, estates, and interests of the parties to such causes, or the granting of equitable remedies. In order that a cause may come within the scope of the equity jurisdiction, one of two alternatives is essential; either the primary right, estate, or interest to be maintained, or the violation of which furnishes the cause of action, must be equitable rather than legal; or the remedy granted must be in its nature purely equitable, or, if it be a remedy which may also be given by a court of law, it must be one which, under the facts and circumstances of the case, can only be made complete and adequate through the equitable modes of procedure. At the same time, if a court clothed with the equity jurisdiction as thus described should hear and decide, according to equitable methods, a case which did not fall within the scope of the equity jurisprudence, because both the primary right invaded constituting the cause of action and the remedy granted were wholly legal, and belonging properly to the domain of the law courts, such judgment, however erroneous it might be and liable to reversal, would not necessarily be null and void. It is plain, from the foregoing definitions, that the question whether a given case falls within the equity jurisdiction is entirely different and should be most carefully distinguished from the question whether such case is one in which the relief peculiar to that jurisdiction should be granted, or in which the equity powers of the court should be exercised in maintaining the primary right, estate, or interest of the plaintiff. The constant tendency to confound these two subjects, so essentially different, has been productive of much confusion in the discussion of equitable doctrines. Equity jurisdiction is distinct from equity jurisprudence. One example will suffice to illustrate this important proposition. A suit to enforce the specific performance of a contract, or to reform a written instrument on the ground of mistake, must always belong to the equity jurisdiction, and to it alone, since these remedies are wholly beyond the scope of common-law methods and courts; but whether the relief of a specific performance, or of a reformation, shall be granted in any given case, must be determined by an application of the doctrines of equity jurisprudence to the special facts and circumstances of that case. "Jurisdiction," in the strict meaning of the term, as applied to judicial officers and tribunals, means no more than the power to hear and determine a cause. It is the power lawfully conferred to deal with the general subject involved in the action; it does not depend upon the ultimate existence of a good cause of action in the plaintiff in the particular case before the court, and does not relate to the rights of the parties as between each other, but to the power of the court. The question of its existence is an abstract inquiry, not involving the existence of an equity to be enforced nor the right of a plaintiff to avail himself of it if it exists. It precedes those questions, and a decision upholding the jurisdiction of the court is entirely consistent with a denial of any equity either in the plaintiff or in any one else. Jurisdiction is entirely independent of the manner of its exercise, involving the power to decide either way upon the facts presented to the court. The term "jurisdiction," as generally used in equity jurisprudence, imports, not the power to hear and decide, but the cases and occasions when that power will be exercised, and is to be distinguished from the use of that term in its strict meaning. While the Supreme Court may not by rule or otherwise limit the jurisdiction conferred on the United States Circuit Courts by statute, it may, and must when the occasion demands, determine what cases are within the equitable jurisdiction of such courts, and may prescribe by rule the cases or classes of cases in which they will grant equitable relief, and such rules govern in all cases, whether commenced in such courts or removed into them from state courts. Venner v. Great Northern R. Co., 153 Fed. 408, 413, 414 (quoting and adopting definitions in 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. [3d Ed.] §§ 129-131; People ex rel. Gaynor v. McKane, 28 N. Y. Supp. 981, 985, 78 Hun, 154. (Citing Anderson v. Carr, 19 N. Y. Supp. 992, 993, 65 Hun, 179; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217, 27 Am. Rep. 129; People v. Sturtevant, 9 N. Y. 263, 59 Am. Dec. 536.)

EQUITY OF REDEMPTION

An "equity of redemption" is defined to be a right which the mortgagor of an estate has of redeeming it after it has been forfeited at law by nonpayment, at the time appointed of the money secured by the mortgage to be paid, by paying the amount of the debt, interest, and costs. Ebelharr v. Tennyly, 80 S. W. 459, 460, 118 Ky. 43 (citing Bouv.).

The "equity of redemption" is the mortgagor's interest before foreclosure; while his "right of redemption" is a mere personal privilege given by statute to the mortgagor after a sale under the mortgage. Lewis v. McBride (Ala.) 57 South. 705, 706.

The term "right to redeem" is appropriate to express the right, interest, or the estate of a mortgagor, and not a vendee. When we speak of the interest of one in, or right to, real estate as an "equity of redemption," which is synonymous with "right to redeem," we understand that reference is made to the status of a mortgagor, not a vendee. We are also impressed with the expression that the defendant "has a right to redeem." Bunn v. Braswell, 51 S. E. 927, 929, 139 N. C. 135 (quoting and adopting definition in Robinson v. Willoughby, 65 N. C. 520).

An equity of redemption is not the difference between the value of the property, in respect to which it is held, and the amount of the liens thereon, but an equitable estate in the property capable of being enlarged into complete legal title by discharging the liens, and in such case, the interest of the owner therein, within the meaning of Code 1899, c. 75, § 3, is such equitable estate. Grant v. Cumberland Valley Cement Co., 52 S. E. 36, 38, 58 W. Va. 162.

"An 'equity of redemption' is an estate in the mortgaged property and is subject to all the incidents of ownership. It may be conveyed or devised. It descends to the owner's heirs or personal representatives according to the nature of the mortgaged property and is subject to curtesy and homestead." A surplus arising on a foreclosure sale of land of a decedent's estate is not thereby converted into personality, but partakes of all the incidents of real estate and is distributable to the widow and children as realty according to the statute of descent and distribution. Kitchens v. Jones, 113 S. W. 29, 30, 87 Ark. 502, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 723, 128 Am. St. Rep. 36.

The term "equity of redemption," used in the old charter of the city of Rochester (Laws 1880, p. 15, c. 14, as amended by Laws 1898, p. 371, c. 182), providing that when land is sold for taxes and bid in by the city the owner may redeem within two years, and that at the end of that time the city may serve notice on the owner requiring him to redeem within 30 days, and if not redeemed the mayor must execute a certificate of the fact of sale, which entitles the city to possession of the land and bars the equity of redemption, means some right of the owner which has already been imperiled, but which he may still exercise and redeem the land. Rochester v. Fourteenth Ward, Co-Op. Bldg. Lot Ass'n, 75 N. E. 692, 694, 183 N. Y. 23.

Originally a mortgage conveyed the title to the mortgagee, to be defeated, however, upon the payment of the debt. If the debt was not paid at maturity, there was a breach of the condition, and the title became absolute in the mortgagee without further action by any one. The harshness of this rule became apparent, and courts of conscience relieved against it by holding that the purpose of the mortgage was to secure the payment of the debt and that when the debt was paid the debtor should be satisfied, and hence, notwithstanding the terms of the mortgage, the debtor still had, in good conscience, an interest in the land which was called an "equity of redemption"; that is, a right to pay off the debt even after condition broken in a reasonable time. At the present time the term "equity of redemption" denominates a legal estate which may be the subject of grant and is within the rule as to ejectment and is not simply an equitable right to redeem, which can be enforced only in a court of equity, and an outstanding mortgage or deed of trust with condition broken held by a third person is not such an outstanding title as will defeat an action of ejectment. Benton Land Co. v. Zeitler, 81 S. W. 193, 199, 182 Mo. 251, 70 L. R. A. 94.

"The 'equity of redemption,' as usually recognized and applied, has its origin in the early chancery practice, where a strict foreclosure was decreed in cases where an equity only in real estate remained in the debtor or mortgagor, and which, by a formal decree, was cut off and barred if the property was not redeemed at a time as therein stated. Under our practice, we now speak of it as belonging to the owners of the legal title to real estate mortgaged or incumbered otherwise, where, in the enforcement of the lien, the jurisdiction of a court of equity is invoked for the purpose of decreeing a sale of the property for the satisfaction of the debt. Strictly speaking, it is the right to redeem from the lien, and may be taken advantage of at any time before the decree or thereafter, before a sale and confirmation in pursuance of the decree, by means of which the equity of redemption becomes extinguished." It should be distinguished from the statutory right of redemption which exists for a specified time after foreclosure sale. Logan County v. McKinley-Lanning Loan & Trust Co., 101 N. W. 991, 992, 70 Neb. 406.

"By invoking the general maxim that 'equity regards as done what ought to be done,' and applying the doctrine of equitable conversion, it follows that, when a valid contract for the sale of real property and the execution of a deed therefor has been consummated, an equitable title to the premises becomes vested in the vendee, who thereafter is treated as the owner of the land, while the money which is to be paid as a consideration therefor is regarded as the property of the vendor; so that, upon the

termine judicially a given action, controversy, or question presented to it for decision. If this power does not exist with reference to any particular case, its determination by the court is an absolute nullity; if it does exist, the determination, however erroneous in fact or in law, is binding upon the parties until reversed or set aside in some proceeding authorized by the practice, and brought for that express purpose. "Equity jurisdiction," therefore, in its ordinary acceptation as distinguished on the one side from the general power to decide matters at all, and on the other from the jurisdiction "at law" or "common-law jurisdiction," is the power to hear certain kinds and classes of civil causes according to the principles of the method and procedure adopted by the court of chancery, and to decide them in accordance with the doctrines and rules of equity jurisprudence, which decision may involve either the determination of the equitable rights, estates, and interests of the parties to such causes, or the granting of equitable remedies. In order that a cause may come within the scope of the equity jurisdiction, one of two alternatives is essential; either the primary right, estate, or interest to be maintained, or the violation of which furnishes the cause of action, must be equitable rather than legal; or the remedy granted must be in its nature purely equitable, or, if it be a remedy which may also be given by a court of law, it must be one which, under the facts and circumstances of the case, can only be made complete and adequate through the equitable modes of procedure. At the same time, if a court clothed with the equity jurisdiction as thus described should hear and decide, according to equitable methods, a case which did not fall within the scope of the equity jurisprudence, because both the primary right invaded constituting the cause of action and the remedy granted were wholly legal, and belonging properly to the domain of the law courts, such judgment, however erroneous it might be and liable to reversal, would not necessarily be null and void. It is plain, from the foregoing definitions, that the question whether a given case falls within the equity jurisdiction is entirely different and should be most carefully distinguished from the question whether such case is one in which the relief peculiar to that jurisdiction should be granted, or in which the equity powers of the court should be exercised in maintaining the primary right, estate, or interest of the plaintiff. The constant tendency to confound these two subjects, so essentially different, has been productive of much confusion in the discussion of equitable doctrines. Equity jurisdiction is distinct from equity jurisprudence. One example will suffice to illustrate this important proposition. A suit to enforce the specific performance of a contract, or to reform a written instrument on the ground of mistake, must always belong to the equity jurisdiction, and to it alone, since these remedies are wholly beyond the scope of common-law methods and courts; but whether the relief of a specific performance, or of a reformation, shall be granted in any given case, must be determined by an application of the doctrines of equity jurisprudence to the special facts and circumstances of that case. "Jurisdiction," in the strict meaning of the term, as applied to judicial officers and tribunals, means no more than the power to hear and determine a cause. It is the power lawfully conferred to deal with the general subject involved in the action; it does not depend upon the ultimate existence of a good cause of action in the plaintiff in the particular case before the court, and does not relate to the rights of the parties as between each other, but to the power of the court. The question of its existence is an abstract inquiry, not involving the existence of an equity to be enforced nor the right of a plaintiff to avail himself of it if it exists. It precedes those questions, and a decision upholding the jurisdiction of the court is entirely consistent with a denial of any equity either in the plaintiff or in any one else. Jurisdiction is entirely independent of the manner of its exercise, involving the power to decide either way upon the facts presented to the court. The term "jurisdiction," as generally used in equity jurisprudence, imports, not the power to hear and decide, but the cases and occasions when that power will be exercised, and is to be distinguished from the use of that term in its strict meaning. While the Supreme Court may not by rule or otherwise limit the jurisdiction conferred on the United States Circuit Courts by statute, it may, and must when the occasion demands, determine what cases are within the equitable jurisdiction of such courts, and may prescribe by rule the cases or classes of cases in which they will grant equitable relief, and such rules govern in all cases, whether commenced in such courts or removed into them from state courts. Venner v. Great Northern R. Co., 153 Fed. 408, 413, 414 (quoting and adopting definitions in 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. [3d Ed.] §§ 129-131; People ex rel. Gaynor v. McKane, 28 N. Y. Supp. 981, 985, 78 Hun, 154. (Citing Anderson v. Carr, 19 N. Y. Supp. 992, 993, 65 Hun, 179; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217, 27 Am. Rep. 129; People v. Sturtevant, 9 N. Y. 263, 59 Am. Dec. 536.)

EQUITY OF REDEMPTION

An "equity of redemption" is defined to be a right which the mortgagor of an estate has of redeeming it after it has been forfeited at law by nonpayment, at the time appointed of the money secured by the mortgage to be paid, by paying the amount of the debt, interest, and costs. Ebelharr v. Tenny, 80 S. W. 459, 460, 118 Ky. 43 (citing Bouv.).

The "equity of redemption" is the mortgagor's interest before foreclosure; while his "right of redemption" is a mere personal privilege given by statute to the mortgagor after a sale under the mortgage. Lewis v. McBride (Ala.) 57 South. 705, 706.

The term "right to redeem" is appropriate to express the right, interest, or the estate of a mortgagor, and not a vendee. When we speak of the interest of one in, or right to, real estate as an "equity of redemption," which is synonymous with "right to redeem," we understand that reference is made to the status of a mortgagor, not a vendee. We are also impressed with the expression that the defendant "has a right to redeem." Bunn v. Braswell, 51 S. E. 927, 929, 139 N. C. 135 (quoting and adopting definition in Robinson v. Willoughby, 65 N. C. 520).

An equity of redemption is not the difference between the value of the property, in respect to which it is held, and the amount of the liens thereon, but an equitable estate in the property capable of being enlarged into complete legal title by discharging the liens, and in such case, the interest of the owner therein, within the meaning of Code 1899, c. 75, § 3, is such equitable estate. Grant v. Cumberland Valley Cement Co., 52 S. E. 36, 38, 58 W. Va. 162.

"An 'equity of redemption' is an estate in the mortgaged property and is subject to all the incidents of ownership. It may be conveyed or devised. It descends to the owner's heirs or personal representatives according to the nature of the mortgaged property and is subject to curtesy and homestead." A surplus arising on a foreclosure sale of land of a decedent's estate is not thereby converted into personality, but partakes of all the incidents of real estate and is distributable to the widow and children as realty according to the statute of descent and distribution. Kitchens v. Jones, 113 S. W. 29, 30, 87 Ark. 502, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 723, 128 Am. St. Rep. 36.

The term "equity of redemption," used in the old charter of the city of Rochester (Laws 1880, p. 15, c. 14, as amended by Laws 1898, p. 371, c. 182), providing that when land is sold for taxes and bid in by the city the owner may redeem within two years, and that at the end of that time the city may serve notice on the owner requiring him to redeem within 30 days, and if not redeemed the mayor must execute a certificate of the fact of sale, which entitles the city to possession of the land and bars the equity of redemption, means some right of the owner which has already been imperiled, but which he may still exercise and redeem the land. *Rochester v. death of the purchaser, his heirs succeed in equity to the rights of their ancestor to the real property, and upon the death of the vendor his personal representative succeeds to his rights to the purchase money remaining unpaid." Collins v. Creason, 108 Pac. 445, 447, 55 Or. 524 (citing Minor, Real Prop. § 1284; Sievers v. Brown, 34 Or. 454, 56 Pac. 171, 45 L. R. A. 642; Conner v. Banks, 18 Ala. 42, 52 Am. Dec. 209).

EQUIVALENT

"Equivalent" means "equal in worth or value, force, power, effect, import and the like," and hence under Rev. Codes, § 6521, providing that personal service of a copy of the summons and complaint out of the state is "equivalent" to publication and mailing, and that service of summons is complete on the day of the fourth publication, a defendant has the same time to appear, 4 weeks and 20 days, whether service be by publication and mailing or by delivery of copies of the complaint and summons. McLean v. Moran, 99 Pac. 836, 837, 38 Mont. 298.

EQUIVALENT (In Patent Law)

See Mechanical Equivalent.

An "equivalent" must not vary in any manner the idea of means, or affect it in any degree. It is quite true that the equivalent may perform some new or additional function in the invention, and still be an equivalent; but it must perform all the functions of the element for which it is a substitute in substantially the same way. It is not material that the element for which another is substituted has more parts or less parts. The substitution of an equivalent is, however, a mere change of parts and form involving no inventive skill, but suggested by the invention itself to every person skilled in the particular art. If the alleged equivalent not only performs the function of the element for which substituted and perhaps more, but introduces into the combination a new idea, or new ideas, or a much more extended development of the idea of means, then we do not have the substitution of an equivalent, but a patentable improvement—something different in principle and function. Dey Time Register Co. v. Syracuse Recorder Co., 152 Fed. 440, 450.

The test of "equivalents" in the law of patents is whether the devices in question produce the same effect or perform the same function. A spring may be an equivalent for a pivot. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Condit Electrical Mfg. Co., 159 Fed. 144, 151.

Under a clause in a patent claim describing an advertising rack for street cars, making an element of the combination with "screws or equivalent devices for connecting the rack to the car, engaging with the moldings outside the grooves therein," pins, nails, hooks, or moldings, or plain boards properly fastened extending over the edges of the rack, and capable of being removed and replaced, constitute "equivalent devices" for connecting the rack to the car. American Street Car Advertising Co. v. Jones, 122 Fed. 803, 807.

EQUIVALENT CIRCUMSTANCES

Other equivalent circumstances, see Other.

While mere words, threats, menaces, or contemptuous gestures will not constitute "equivalent circumstances," within the meaning of section 65, Pen. Code 1895, which will reduce murder to manslaughter, yet what circumstances will present this equivalence and justify the excitement of passion, and exclude all idea of deliberation or malice, the law does not specifically declare. It furnishes a standard, and leaves the jury in each case to make the comparison and determine whether the special facts of the case before them come up to that standard or not. There was therefore no error in omitting to charge that certain acts other than those referred to in the Penal Code would constitute "equivalent circumstances." Findley v. State, 54 S. E. 106, 108, 125 Ga. 579.

ERECT—ERECTION

See Duly Laid Out or Erected; For and in the Erection; Standing or Erected Upon.

One of the primary definitions of the word "erect" is "to raise, as a building; to build, to construct." Butz v. Murch Bros. Const. Co., 97 S. W. 895, 897, 199 Mo. 279 (quoting Webst. Dict.).

The carrying of planks from which another constructed a contrivance did not constitute the "erection" of the contrivance itself within Labor Law (Laws 1897, p. 467, c. 415). Madden v. Hughes, 93 N. Y. Supp. 324, 326, 104 App. Div. 101.

The term "erection," used with reference to building, means the putting together of the materials that are used therein, the putting together of the brick and mortar, wood and other materials making the construction. Scharff v. Southern Illinois Const. Co., 92 S. W. 126, 130, 115 Mo. App. 157.

Where a statute authorized a city to issue bonds to erect an electric light plant, the use of the word "construct," instead of "erect," in city ordinances providing for the issuance of bonds was immaterial; the word "erect" meaning "to construct." State ex rel. City of Chillicothe v. Gordon, 135 S. W. 929, 931, 233 Mo. 383.

Labor Law (Laws 1901, c. 257) § 1 (Sanborn's St. Supp. 1906, § 1636—81), provides that a person employing another in labor of any kind in erecting, repairing, altering, or painting of a house, building, or structure shall not furnish, for the performance of such labor, scaffolding, hoists, stays, ladders, or other mechanical contrivances which are unsafe, and which are not so constructed, placed, and operated as to give proper protection to the life and limb of a person so employed. Held that, as "structure," as used in such act, included work below as well as above ground, and the word "erecting" was used in its broad sense to mean the creating of a particular thing out of its parts, an action for injury to an employe by the collapse of a derrick used to lower sections of water main pipe into place in a trench dug to receive it was within the statute; the derrick being within the prohibited instrumentalities, the setting up of the water main an "erection," and the putting in of new pipes an "altering," and the waterworks system a "structure" within the meaning of the act. Kosidowski v. City of Milwaukee, 139 N. W. 187, 188, 152 Wis. 223.

A statute giving a board of taxation right to increase assessments in case of increase of value by "erection of improvements" did not justify the board in raising an assessment without regard to the location of the improvements, whether on the land itself or in close proximity thereto; but the increase of value justifying such raise must have arisen solely from improvements on the land. Hancock County v. Simmons, 88 South. 337, 339, 86 Miss. 302.

As establish

Under a contract to pay a railroad company a sum specified when it had built a certain line of railroad and "erected a regular station for freight and passengers" at a place named, the sum named does not become payable on the completion of the road and the erection of a small building at the place designated, where no sidewalk was built and there were no facilities for receiving or shipping freight, and no ticket office or agent and no trains stopped except on signal. The word "erect," as used in the contract, means to "establish." Port Huron & N. W. R. Co. v. Richards, 51 N. W. 680, 90 Mich. 577.

Maintain synonymous

See Maintain.

Purchase authorized

Express power to "erect" a jail includes the implied power to purchase a site on which to erect such jail. Territory ex rel. Overholser v. Baxter, 83 Pac. 709, 710, 16 Okl. 359.

Remodeling for different use

Pub. Laws 1911, c. 702, § 2, provides that every theater "hereafter erected" shall be built to comply with the regulations of such section, etc. Held, that the word "erected," as so used, was synonymous with "built," and hence the act was not restricted to subsequent erection of a new building, but applied as well to the alteration of a stable into a theater, consisting of a demolition of a large part of the stable, and using only such parts of the walls, etc., as were suitable for the new construction. Greenough v. Allen Theater & Realty Co., 80 Atl. 260, 264, 33 R. I. 120.

Removal to new site

"The word 'erect' is defined in Anderson's Law Dict. p. 410: 'to lift up, build, construct; as to erect a building, a fixture. Removing a building is not erecting it, nor is elevating or materially changing it.'" Under a statute authorizing a city council to prevent the erection of wooden buildings in such part of the city as they might determine, it could prohibit the removal of such buildings from a point within or without to a point within the fire limits. Kaufman v. Stein, 87 N. E. 333, 335, 138 Ind. 49, 46 Am. St. Rep. 368 (citing and adopting Daggett v. State, 4 Conn. 60, 10 Am. Dec. 100; Booth v. State, 4 Conn. 65; Tuttle v. State, 4 Conn. 68; State v. Brown, 16 Conn. 54; Brown v. Hunn, 27 Conn. 334, 71 Am. Dec. 71).

The word "erect," as used in an ordinance forbidding persons to "erect" any wooden building within certain fire limits, does not mean the present construction and adjustment of its component parts to the smallest detail; and though ordinarily the word "erect" has a different meaning from the word "move" it is to be construed in the ordinance as prohibiting the moving of such a building into such limits. Red Lake Falls Milling Co. v. City of Thief River Falls, 122 N. W. 872, 873, 109 Minn. 52, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 456, 18 Ann. Cas. 182.

Scaffold

Labor Law, § 18, provides that one employing or directing another to perform labor in the "erection," repairing, or altering of any structure shall not furnish or erect, or cause to be furnished or erected, any scaffolding which is unsafe or improper. A scaffold consisted of joists laid upon irons, constituting a part of the permanent structure of a dock, across which joists planks were placed, so that they could be shifted as occasion required. Held that a servant, while moving a plank from one place to another for use in the work, was not engaged in building a scaffold. O'Neil v. Manufacturers' Automatic Sprinkler Co., 127 N. Y. Supp. 692, 694, 143 App. Div. 56.

ERECTED

A contract with the architect contained the statement, "The undersigned proposes to furnish architectural services for your flat to be erected on or before 1st May, 1902," etc. Held, that the word "erected" is synonymous with "completed." Hartrath v. Holzman, 127 Ill. App. 560, 562.

EROSION

Where land bordering on a body of water is lost by "erosion," which is the gradual and imperceptible wearing away of the land by the natural action of the elements, the state succeeds to the ownership thereof; where the land is added by "accretion," which is such a slow and gradual deposit of articles that its progress cannot be measured though its results may be discerned from time to time, the new land formed belongs to the owner of the upland to which it attaches; but where lost by "avulsion," which is the sudden or violent action of the elements, the effect and extent of which is perceptible while it is in progress, the boundaries do not change. In re City of Buffalo, 99 N. E. 850, 852, 206 N. Y. 319.

"The channels of the rivers and other streams and bodies of water may and do become changed and their physical location altered by the forces of nature operating upon their shores or banks. When the change is made insensibly, by gradual and imperceptible washing away of one shore and the formation in like manner upon the other shore, it is said to be 'by erosion and accretion.' When it is made suddenly and violently, and is visible and the effect certain, it is called 'avulsion.' Where the boundary lines between individuals, as well as states and nations, are marked by streams, and the location of the stream is altered by erosion and accretion, it continues to be the boundary line; but, where the alteration occurs as the result of an avulsion, no change is made, but the limits of the private estates or national territory and jurisdiction remain as before." State v. Muncie Pulp Co., 104 S. W. 437, 451, 119 Tenn. 47.

ERRONEOUS

ERRONEOUS TRANSMISSION

A telegram was delivered to defendant company in May, 1906, for transmission to plaintiff, which the company did not deliver to plaintiff at all, and no claim for damages was made to defendant until January, 1907. Code, § 2164, provides that no action against a telegraph company for damages caused by erroneous transmission or unreasonable delay in delivery of a message shall be maintained, unless the claim has been presented to the company within 60 days from the accrual of the cause of action. Held, in plaintiff's action against the company for damages, that defendant's entire omission to deliver the message was neither "erroneous transmission" nor "unreasonable delay in delivery," and that plaintiff was not required to present his claim to the company as a condition precedent to his right of action. Larsen v. Postal Telegraph Cable Co., 130 N. W. 813, 814, 150 Iowa, 748.

ERRONEOUSLY ALLOWED

The right to the repayment of the purchase price of public coal lands, given by the act of June 16, 1880, § 2, where the entry is subsequently canceled because "erroneously allowed," does not extend to cases where the entry was fraudulently procured. United States v. Colorado Anthracite Co., 82 Sup. Ct. 617, 619, 225 U. S. 219, 56 L. Ed. 1063.

ERRONEOUSLY ASSESSED

The term "erroneously assessed," as used in Kirby's Dig. § 7180, providing that in case any person has paid taxes on any property, real or personal, "erroneously assessed," on satisfactory proof, etc., the court shall make an order refunding the amount of the county tax so erroneously assessed and paid, and make provision for refunding the state tax. Referred to an assessment which was illegal because of a jurisdictional defect, such as an assessment levied on exempt property, or property not located within the county, and did not include a mere error of judgment on the part of the assessing officers in valuing the property. Clay County v. Brown Lumber Co., 119 S. W. 251, 252, 90 Ark. 413.

ERRONEOUSLY EXACTED OR PAID

Code, § 1374, authorizes the county treasurer to demand taxes on property withheld from taxation within five years from the date at which such property should have been assessed. A county treasurer notified an owner that unless he showed cause property withheld from taxation for several years, including a year more than five years from the date the assessment should have been made, it would be assessed according to law. The owner effected a compromise with the tax ferrets for all the years stated in the notice, and voluntarily paid the taxes imposed, pursuant to the compromise. The owner had wrongfully withheld his property, and owed the taxes paid. Held, that the taxes paid for the first year stated in the notice, though not collectible, could not be recovered back under section 1417, providing for the refunding of taxes "erroneously or illegally exacted or paid," there being no assessment, or, if one, a mere overassessment, nor any demand for taxes. Kehe v. Blackhawk County, 101 N. W. 281, 282, 125 Iowa, 549.

As error in law

The word "error," as used in a statute conferring on circuit courts jurisdiction to annul a physician's registration certificate obtained by "error" of the board of medical examiners, is used in the sense it is ordinarily understood, as applied to trials in courts before juries, viz., aside from jurisdictional errors, such absence of evidence in support of the board's decision that in no reasonable view thereof could its decision be justified, or prejudicial refusals to admit or exclude evidence, or other judicial misapprehensions of law, errors which in a general sense are purely judicial, in that a decision is binding on all concerned until set aside by some proper proceeding for that purpose. State v. Schmidt, 119 N. W. 647, 649, 138 Wis. 53.

ERROR APPARENT

"An 'error apparent on the face of the record,' which may be considered on the view without assignment, is a prominent error, either fundamental in character or determining a question upon which the very right of the case depends." San Antonio Traction Co. v. Yost, 88 S. W. 428, 429, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 551 (quoting and adopting definition in Wilson v. Johnson, 60 S. W. 242, 94 Tex. 272); Applebaum v. Bass (Tex.) 113 S. W. 173, 175.

In an action against a city to recover a balance due on a street-paving contract, an alleged error, in that, on the undisputed evidence, plaintiff could not recover on a ground, the determination of which would require an examination of almost the entire record, including the pleadings and evidence contained in a lengthy statement of facts, was not an "error apparent on the face of the record," within Rev. St. 1895, art. 1014, authorizing a review of such errors without assignment. City of Beaumont v. Masterson (Tex.) 142 S. W. 984, 987.

The trial judge's failure to make up and file a statement of facts within the time prescribed by law is not assignable, in the Court of Civil Appeals, on ex parte affidavit showing such failure as an error, since it is not one of the subjects which Rev. St. 1895, art. 1014, authorizes that court to review, and not being an error "apparent upon the face of the record" within such article. Applebaum v. Bass (Tex.) 113 S. W. 173, 174.

The recovery of a judgment against a surety on a guardian's bond for an amount exceeding the limit of his liability is an error appearing on the record within the meaning of Comp. St. 1910, § 5109, authorizing the Supreme Court to modify a judgment of the district court for errors appearing on the record. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Nash (Wyo.) 121 Pac. 541, 544.

ERROR IN EXTREMIS

In an action to recover for the death of one killed by being caught between the top of a descending elevator and a floor sill, where there was evidence that the decedent put one foot through the partly opened elevator door and upon the floor sill without the elevator being stopped, there was no warrant for an instruction upon the doctrine of "error in extremis" which presupposes that the party who invokes it is himself free from fault in creating the emergency. Real Estate Trust & Ins. Co. v. Gwyn's Adm'x, 74 S. E. 208, 211, 113 Va. 337.

ERROR NOT CAUSING SUBSTANTIAL INJURY

Where it appeared in an action against two persons jointly on a contract that one was liable, the irregularity of rendering a judgment against the other was "error not causing substantial injury" to the one liable within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 475, providing that no judgment shall be reversed for any error not causing substantial injury to the party complaining. Hence a reversal of the judgment against the one liable was not unwarranted by the error in question. McKee v. Cunningham, 84 Pac. 260-262, 2 Cal. App. 684.

ERROR OF FACT

An "error of fact" takes place either when some fact which really exists is unknown or some fact is supposed to exist which really does not exist. Scott v. Ford, 80 Pac. 890, 900, 45 Or. 531, 68 L. R. A. 469 (quoting and adopting Mowatt v. Wright [N. Y.] 1 Wend. 355, 360, 19 Am. Dec. 508).

Failure to appoint a guardian ad litem for an infant plaintiff in a suit for separation is not an irregularity, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1282, requiring a motion to vacate the judgment on such grounds to be made within one year, but is an "error in fact not arising upon the trial," within sections 1283 and 1290, for which a motion to vacate may be made in two years. Byrnes v. Byrnes, 96 N. Y. Supp. 306, 307, 109 App. Div. 535 (citing Maynard v. Downer [N. Y.] 13 Wend. 575; Camp v. Bennett [N. Y.] 16 Wend. 48; Arnold v. Sandford [N. Y.] 14 Johns. 417; Peck v. Coler [N. Y.] 20 Hun, 534).

Error in judgment

Where, on appeal by defendant from a justice's judgment, a reversal was had, and a new trial directed before another justice, the erroneous determination of such justice that plaintiff was stayed until payment of the costs of reversal was not an "error in fact," within Code Civ. Proc. § 3066, providing that on an appeal from a justice, if the judgment is reversed for an error in fact not affecting the merits, the costs of the appeal are in the discretion of the Appellate Court, but an error of law requiring a reversal entitles the successful party to costs. Smith v. Cayuga Lake Cement Co., 93 N. Y. Supp. 959, 960, 105 App. Div. 307.

ERROR OF LAW

An "error of law" is committed when the court, either upon motion of one of the parties or upon its own motion, makes some erroneous order or ruling on some question of law, which is properly before it and within its jurisdiction to make. Pratt v. Pratt, 74 Pac. 742, 743, 141 Cal. 247.

The error of the circuit court in sustaining a motion to dismiss an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace is not an "error of law occurring at the trial," within the meaning of the statute authorizing a motion for a new trial on this ground, and hence is properly presented on appeal by an independent assignment of error. Hughes v. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co., 98 N. E. 317, 318, 50 Ind. App. 278.

Gen. Laws 1909, c. 298, § 12, provides that a party entitled to appeal after verdict, except in a cause tried before a jury in a superior court, may file with the clerk of such court a motion for new trial for any reason other than "error of law occurring at the trial." Gen. Laws 1909, c. 297, § 2, declares that a party in any action in a superior court in which the trial was not fair and impartial may, after verdict, petition the Supreme Court for a new trial. Defendant, in grounds of his motion for a new trial after verdict in a prosecution for assault with a dangerous weapon, claimed that he did not have a fair and impartial trial, in that the presiding judge allowed the prosecuting attorney, over objection, to state that it was improper for defendant to converse with a witness summoned by the state relative to the testimony to be given by said witness at the trial, and in that the court instructed that the state's witnesses had been approached by defendant's attorney to learn what they were to testify, and that the state's witnesses should be left alone by the defendant. Held, that the claims stated "error of law occurring at the trial," and were inappropriate, under chapter 298, § 12, and that the remedy under chapter 297, § 2, was exclusive. State v. Papa, 80 Atl. 12, 14, 82 R. I. 453.

The overruling or sustaining of a demurrer to a pleading is not included in "errors of law occurring at the trial," within St. 1893, § 4196, since a trial does not commence until an issue of fact is joined, so that no error can be assigned thereon that can be reviewed on a transcript. Haynes v. Smith, 119 Pac. 246, 247, 29 Okl. 703.

Denial of a motion for a jury trial, made when the cause was called for trial in its order on the calendar, was an order made during the trial and reviewable on appeal from an order denying a new trial on the ground of "errors of law occurring at trial." Hassey v. McMullen, 123 N. W. 1073, 1080, 109 Minn. 332.

Where on appeal by defendant from a justice's judgment, a reversal was had and a new trial directed before another justice, the erroneous determination of such justice that plaintiff was stayed until payment of costs of reversal held an error of law, but not of fact, within Code Civ. Proc. § 3068, providing that, on an appeal from a justice, if the judgment is reversed for an error in fact not affecting merits, the costs of the appeal are discretionary, that an error of law requiring reversal entitles successful party to costs. Smith v. Cayuga Lake Cement Co., 93 N. Y. Supp. 959, 960, 105 App. Div. 307.

ERROR OR MISTAKE AS TO EQUITY OR COMMON-LAW JURISDICTION

Dismissal of a cause in the chancery court for want of jurisdiction, where it should have transferred it to the circuit court as required by Const. 1890, § 162, is not an "error or mistake as to whether the cause was of equity or common-law jurisdiction," within Const. 1890, § 147, providing that the Supreme Court could not reverse a decree or judgment therefor. Murphy v. City of Meridian (Miss.) 60 South. 48.

ESCAPE

See Wasting by Escape.

See, also, Prison Breach.

An escape is where one who is under arrest gains his liberty before he is delivered by due course of law, and where an escape from confinement is effected by the prisoner with force, it is called a "prison breaking," and where it is effected by others with force, it is known as a "rescue." State v. Sutton, 84 N. E. 824, 826, 170 Ind. 473.

An indictment for "escaping" from prison, made a felony by Pen. Code, § 105, will support a plea of guilty of an "attempt to escape," made a felony by section 106; the former necessarily including the latter. Ex parte Cook, 110 Pac. 352, 354, 13 Cal. App. 399.

Pen. Code 1895, § 314, provides that if one convicted of an offense below the grade of felony shall escape from the chain gang or other place of confinement for violation of any law, and be thereafter retaken, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Section 315 provides that, if one shall aid or attempt to aid a prisoner to escape so confined or imprisoned, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that the crime of escaping from a chain gang where municipal or misdemeanor convicts are worked is an act continuous in its nature, and is not finally completed until the convict is retaken, and the person who knowingly assists such a convict to escape from a chain gang, or to elude the officers after he has once gotten away and prior to his recapture, is punishable under section 315. Smith v. State, 68 S. E. 1071, 1072, 8 Ga. App. 297.

An escape is effected in the circumstances stated, upon the principle that legal custody exists only when the custodian has a right under the warrant to possession of the prisoner. Gebhardt v. Holmes, 135 N. W. 860, 865, 149 Wis. 428.

Code Cr. Proc. art. 886, that when a defendant appeals from a conviction of a misdemeanor he shall, if he is in custody, be committed to jail, unless he enter into a recognizance to appear, and, if he be not in custody, an appeal shall not be effective until he enter into a recognizance, held, that where defendant, convicted of a misdemeanor, did not enter into a recognizance at the term of his conviction, but after the term had expired gave bond to the sheriff, who released him from custody, such release constituted an "escape," requiring a dismissal of the appeal. Roberson v. State, 132 S. W. 766, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 514.

One is not guilty of escape within Pen. Code 1895, § 314, who affects his own deliverance from jail when his confinement is no part of a sentence imposed by a court, but whose imprisonment is for the purpose of safe-keeping only. Welch v. State, 61 S. E. 496, 497, 4 Ga. App. 388.

To constitute the offense of "escape" by an officer in permitting a prisoner to go at large, it is unnecessary that such permission be granted with intent to save the prisoner from trial or execution of a sentence. Haupt v. State, 140 S. W. 294, 297, 100 Ark. 409, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 690.

At common law, it was a misdemeanor for a sheriff having lawful charge of a prisoner to voluntarily or negligently permit him to depart from his custody, however short a time the departure might be. A sheriff in charge of a county jail in Iowa who permits a federal prisoner legally sentenced to the jail to go at large from time to time violates Rev. St. § 5409, and Code Iowa 1897, § 4891 et seq., punishing escapes, an "escape" being defined to be the voluntarily or negligently permitting a person lawfully confined in jail to leave the prison where he is confined before he is entitled to be released therefrom. Ex parte Shores, 195 Fed. 627, 630.

Where a person is confined in a jail under an indictment regularly brought against him for a crime and he attempts to escape, he commits a crime, although the bench warrant under which he was arrested was irregularly issued; but, when the imprisonment is unlawful, the right to liberty is absolute, and the one who is confined is not guilty of the offense of "escape" by regaining it. State v. Clark, 104 Pac. 593-595, 32 Nev. 145, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 754 (citing People v. Ah Teung, 28 Pac. 573, 92 Cal. 425, 15 L. R. A. 190).

As evade

In the statute authorizing the back-assessment of property that has "escaped taxation," "the words 'escaped taxation' * * * should receive the meaning usually and popularly accorded to them. The evil to be remedied demonstrates this. The object of the law, in respect to the back-assessment of property by the revenue agent, was to prevent property which had not been actually assessed at all from escaping its proper portion of the public burden of taxation. Property may escape taxation in varied ways, as, for example: (a) By being willfully withheld from assessment by the owner; (b) by being inadvertently or accidentally omitted by the owner in returning his property to the assessor. In either of these two cases, and in others which may be conceived, there has been in fact—there has been actually—escape of such property from taxation. It has never been assessed at all as a matter of fact, and it was the purpose of the law, in cases like these, where the regularly constituted fiscal officers had failed to assess all property liable to taxation, to authorize the revenue agent to back-assess such property never heretofore in fact assessed at all, and which was therefore described as property which had in fact escaped taxation. But, where an assessment has in fact been made, where the assessment roll shows on its face all that it ought to show, * * * but that assessment is irregular or imperfect or defective, or even absolutely and utterly void, by reason of some vital and fundamental requirement of the law, such property cannot, within the meaning of these words, 'escaped taxation,' be said to be property which has 'escaped taxation' in fact." Adams v. Luce, 39 South. 418, 419, 87 Miss. 220.

Where on a trial for the murder of a lone, unarmed woman, the evidence of the condition of her clothing and the scratches on the person of accused, and circumstances indicated that accused had made a wicked assault on her, and practically the only defense was defect of mind, the error in an instruction on self-defense that, if at the time accused killed decedent, he was in danger of death or of great bodily harm at the hands of decedent, and it was necessary, or believed by him to be so in the exercise of reasonable judgment, to kill decedent in order to "escape or avert" the danger, he was entitled to an acquittal on the ground of self-defense, arising from the use of the word "escape," implying that accused must seek safety in flight rather than in defending himself from impending danger, was not prejudicial. Frazier v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 124 S. W. 797, 799.

Unlawful departure

One who had been convicted of crime and delivered into the custody of the officers of a chain gang is guilty of an escape under Fen. Code 1895, § 314, if he voluntarily leaves such custody, though prior to the escape he was not fettered but was treated as a trusty. Johnson v. State, 50 S. E. 65, 122 Ga. 172.

ESCHEAT

The word "escheat" has a distinct and definite legal meaning, and can never be construed to mean "sale" and "purchase." Woodrough v. Douglas County, 98 N. W. 1092, 1094, 71 Neb. 354.

"The word 'escheat' is an old one, and a common in the law. It seems to have been derived from a French word, 'echoir,' meaning to happen. It is also defined in its etymology to mean: 'To fall to; to fall to the lot of; to fall back.' In feudal tenure the fief held the land of some superior on condition of rendering him services. Anciently the fee was limited to the use of the land by the vassal (Spelman, Feuds, c. 1), but this view was soon abandoned in favor of the one which now prevails; that is, that it is an estate of inheritance (2 Bl. Com. 106). But as the vassal and his heirs were not deemed to hold it upon the same condition, to wit, that of rendering service to the lord of the manor, when the tenant died, and there were no heirs to whom the lord could look for service, the title demised to the original tenant reverted to the lord. It fell back. Hence it was described as escheat. Or, if the tenant, by reason of attainder of blood, was rendered incapable alike of holding or transmitting the title, the feud fell back into the lord's hands by a termination of the tenure. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 2. By a logical extension of the doctrine, when the line of inheritance failed, and the tenure was determined by any unforeseen event, the land resulted back, by a kind of reversion, to the grantor, or lord of the fee. 2 Shars. Bl. Com. 244. As in the United States there are no feudal tenures, escheats are invariably held to go to the state as the sovereign within whose jurisdiction the property may be situated, by way of reversion of the title to its source. Personal property never escheated in the original and technical sense of the term. Commonwealth v. Blanton's Ex'rs, 2 B. Mon. 393, January, 1840, the Legislature provided: 'Estates within the commonwealth as to which the owner had previously died or might subsequently die intestate, without legal heirs or distributees, should be vested in said commonwealth without office found.' And it was held in Commonwealth v. Blanton, supra, and in White v. White, 2 Metc. 185, that personal, as well as real, estate was included. The same term and the same idea are carried forward into the existing statutes in this state. Although title to land in this state is allodial, as it is throughout the states of the Union, it seems to be the universal rule, in consonance with that of all civilized society, that, when the title lapses by reason of a failure of heirs, and possibly for other reasons, it vests in the public, and is at the disposal of the government. Shars. Bl. Com. 244, 245. The reason is now probably that, as no one of the public could rightfully claim it or enter upon it to the exclusion of others, and as it ought not to be suffered to lie barren, the government in behalf of all has a better right to it than any one, although the right is also likened to and is by many supposed to rest upon the doctrines of the feud as they existed at the common law. The title to all lands within the state was formerly in the state, which had the right to declare upon what conditions it might be held, or transmitted. This is peculiarly so as to corporations holding land within the state." Commonwealth, for use of Louisville School Board, v. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co., 99 S. W. 596, 597, 124 Ky. 497.

The word "escheat," as used in Const. § 192, and Ky. St. § 567, providing that a corporation shall not hold property not necessary for its legitimate business for more than five years under penalty of escheat, and Ky. St. § 2971, being a part of the laws relating to government of cities of the first class, providing that property which shall escheat to the commonwealth shall vest in the board of education for the benefit of the schools, and that the board may in the name of the commonwealth sue for and recover such property at law or in equity, was used in its ordinary meaning which is that land affected shall revert or fall back to the state or to an instrumentality of its choosing; and hence the disposition provided must obtain, so that, on a petition by the board, the court cannot order a sale, and, after payment of costs, allow the corporation to have the balance of the proceeds. Louisville Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth, 143 S. W. 1044, 1045, 147 Ky. 72.

Laws 1877, c. 15, § 3, relating to the disposition of state lands, provided that no person should be allowed to enter more than 240 acres; while Ann. Code 1892, § 2564, relating to the same subject, declares that one person may purchase as much as one quarter section of public lands in one year and no more, and that all lands acquired directly or indirectly by any person in contravention of section 2564 or 2565 escheat to the state. Held, that there was no substantial difference between such statute; the words "enter" and "purchase," used therein, being convertible terms, and the provision for "escheat" in section 2564 meaning nothing more than that the lands should be recovered or should be reclaimed, which would be implied, though not expressed, in the act of 1877. Wisconsin Lumber Co. v. State, 54 South. 247, 249, 97 Miss. 671; Newman v. Nall (Miss.) 54 South. 250.

ESCROW

An "escrow" is a written instrument, which by its terms imports a legal obligation deposited by the grantor, promisor, obligor, or his agent with a stranger or a third person not a party to the instrument as grantee, etc., to be kept by the depository until the performance of a condition of the happening of an event, and then to be delivered to take effect. A deposit of an instrument in escrow need not be in any particular form, nor need it be in writing, nor is it necessary that the term "escrow" be used. Bronx Inv. Co. v. National Bank of Commerce of Seattle, 92 Pac. 380, 381, 47 Wash. 566 (quoting and adopting 16 Cyc. pp. 561, 564).

An "escrow" ex vi termini is a deed delivered to some third person to be by him delivered to the grantee upon performance of some precedent condition by the grantee or another, or the happening of some event. Anderson v. Goodwin, 54 S. E. 679, 682, 125 Ga. 663 (citing Duncan v. Pope, 47 Ga. 451; Civ. Code 1895, § 3603); Seibel v. Higham, 115 S. W. 987, 990, 216 Mo. 121, 129 Am. St. Rep. 502.

An "escrow" is a written instrument, which by its terms imports a legal obligation, deposited by the grantor, promisor, or obligor, or his agent, with a stranger or third person—that is, a person not a party to the instrument, such as the grantee, promisee, or obligee—to be kept by the depository until the performance of a condition or the happening of a certain event, and then to be delivered over to take effect. Masters v. Clark, 116 S. W. 186, 187, 89 Ark. 191; Murphey v. Greybill, 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 839, 840.

A "delivery" in escrow requires that the deed be absolutely delivered; that is, it must pass beyond the dominion of the grantor. The delivery to a third party in escrow, in order that it may be sufficient to vest title in the grantee, must be such as to deprive the grantor of all control over the deed. Ellott v. Murray, 80 N. E. 77, 79, 225 Ill. 107 (citing Shults v. Shults, 43 N. E. 800, 159 Ill. 654, 50 Am. St. Rep. 188).

Where defendant claimed that a deed had been delivered in "escrow," but the evidence did not show that the attorney to whom the grantor had delivered the deed understood that it had been delivered to him beyond the power of control of the grantor, and at her request such attorney without protest surrendered the deed to her, there was no delivery sufficient to sustain the conveyance. Hayden v. Collins, 81 Pac. 1120, 1122, 1 Cal. App. 259.

A deed in "escrow," before delivery, conveys no title. Corr v. Martin, 77 N. E. 870, 871, 37 Ind. App. 655.

An "escrow" is defined as: "In the great majority of cases, the instrument deposited, together with the stipulation as to the condition or the event upon performance of happening of which the instrument is to take effect, constitutes a contract. Indeed, by the general rule, there must be a valid existing agreement between the parties, containing all the elements of a contract. As a general rule, the condition must be part of a contract between the parties." "In order that an instrument may operate as an escrow, not only must there be sufficient parties, a proper subject-matter, and a consideration, but the parties must have actually contracted. When the instrument purports to be a conveyance of land, for instance, the grantor must have sold, and the grantee must have purchased, the land. A proposal to sell or a proposal to buy, though stated in writing, will not be sufficient. The minds of the parties must have met, the terms must have been agreed upon, and both must have assented to the instrument, as a conveyance of the land, which the grantor would then have delivered and the grantee received, except for the agreement then made that it be delivered to a third person, to be kept until some specified condition be performed, and thereupon be delivered to the grantee by such third person." Where an offer to sell land at a certain price within a specified time was not accepted within the time, the deposit of a deed by the owner in a bank with instructions to collect the price named did not constitute an "escrow," since the owner was not under contract. Davis v. Brigham, 107 Pac. 961, 963, 56 Or. 41, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1340 (quoting 16 Cyc. pp. 562, 564).

"Whether, when a deed is executed and not immediately delivered to the grantee but handed to a stranger to be delivered to the grantee at a future time, it is to be considered as a deed of the grantor presently or as an 'escrow' is often a matter of some doubt. It generally depends more upon the intention of the parties, to be gathered from the words used and the purposes expressed, than from the terms they employ in naming the depository, or from the name the parties give to the instrument. Where the future delivery is to depend upon the performance of some condition, it will be deemed an escrow. Where it is merely to await a lapse of time or the happening of some contingency, and not the performance of a condition, it will be deemed the grantor's deed presently." Burnham v. Burnham, 111 N. Y. Supp. 252, 254, 58 Misc. Rep. 385 (quoting and adopting language of Hathaway v. Payne, 34 N. Y. 105).

To constitute the holding in escrow of a deed it must have been deposited under an agreement which prevents the grantor from recalling it. Anderson v. Messenger, 158 Fed. 250, 253, 85 C. C. A. 468.

A warranty deed, duly signed and acknowledged, purporting to convey lands by description so definite that they can be ascertained with certainty, and delivered to a third person, under an agreement with the grantee that the depository is to deliver the deed to him on the doing of a certain thing by the grantee, is an "escrow." Guild v. Althouse, 81 Pac. 172, 71 Kan. 604.

Conditions or contingencies

Where a deed is placed in the hands of a depository for conditional future delivery to the grantee, a distinction has by some courts been recognized between cases where the future delivery depends upon the performance of some condition, and those where it depends upon the death of the grantor. In the former case the deed does not become operative until rightfully delivered by the depository to the grantee, while in the latter, upon delivery to the depository, it is deemed to be the grantor's deed presently, taking effect for many, if not for most, purposes, from the time of its delivery to the depository. The deed, in either of these cases, is usually called an "escrow," but perhaps more frequently and more properly that word is used to designate the deed in the former rather than in the latter case. Where a grantor delivered a deed to a third person to be delivered by the depository to the grantee on the grantor's death, the grantee took an immediate estate, subject to a life use of the grantor. Grilley v. Atkins, 62 Atl. 337, 338, 78 Conn. 380, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 816, 112 Am. St. Rep. 152.

Where a deed was delivered to a bank with the stipulation that it should not be turned over to the grantee until notified to that effect by the grantor, it was not put in escrow, but remained in constructive possession of the grantor, a deed not being in escrow, unless its delivery to the grantee is dependent upon the occurrence of some event or the performance of some condition; so where the grantor took back the deed without delivering it to the grantee, in his action to set aside a copy of the deed obtained by the grantee, the grantee could not obtain relief, except by setting up such facts as to warrant specific performance. Peters v. Strauss (Tex.) 132 S. W. 956, 958.

A delivery in escrow presupposes a valid contract pursuant to which the deposit is made. And if the condition of the escrow is performed, but the deed is not delivered during the lifetime of the grantor, the delivery is nevertheless sustained. Bosea v. Lent, 90 N. Y. Supp. 41, 42, 44 Misc. Rep. 437. To be valid the delivery must be with the assent of the grantor. If it is made to depend upon the performance of certain conditions, his consent is withheld until such performance. Powers v. Rude, 79 Pac. 89, 93, 14 Okl. 381.

A deed is delivered in "escrow" when the delivery is conditional, that is, where it is delivered to a third person to keep until something is done by the grantee or some other person, and is of no force until the condition be performed. Yet where the grantee with knowledge of the contents of the deed accepts it in writing there is a sufficient delivery, though there was no actual delivery until after the grantor's death; the acceptance rendering the deed irrevocable. Fitzgerald v. Allen, 88 N. E. 240, 245, 240 Ill. 80.

Depositories

An "escrow" is a deed delivered to some third person to be by him delivered to the grantee on the performance of some precedent condition by the grantee or another on the happening of some event. If the instrument remains in the dominion of the maker, it is not an escrow. To constitute an escrow, the deed must be delivered to a third person, and not to the agent of the grantor. Van Valkenburg v. Allen, 126 N. W. 1092, 111 Minn. 333, 137 Am. St. Rep. 561.

A conditional delivery to a party to a contract does not create an "escrow." The delivery of a lease and rent notes to an agent of the landlord, though on condition that they were to be returned in case a proposed sale of land to him was consummated, did not create an "escrow." Bemis v. Allen, 93 N. W. 50, 51, 119 Iowa, 160.

Instruments deliverable in escrow

A deed absolute on its face cannot be delivered to the grantee therein named to be by him held in "escrow," and a delivery which purports to be such will operate as absolute and freed from all parol conditions, and title will vest at once. Whitney v. Dewey, 80 Pac. 1117, 1121, 10 Idaho, 633, 69 L. R. A. 572.

Time when instrument takes effect

Where a deed is delivered as an "escrow" to be delivered upon the performance of certain conditions, it is, until such performance, a mere scroll, and, if the grantee obtains possession thereof before the performance of the conditions, he acquires no title by obtaining possession of the deed even by the voluntary act of the depository. Powers v. Rude, 79 Pac. 89, 92, 14 Okl. 381.

ESPECIAL

The granting of especial privileges by any form of legislative action, and not merely the conferring of such privileges as a part of the grant of a forbidden private character, was what was prohibited by the provision of Washington Organic Act March 2, 1867, c. 150, 152, 14 Stat. 426, that the territorial Legislature should not grant private charters or especial privileges, but might enact general incorporation acts. The generic prohibition against the granting of especial privileges, made by Washington Organic Act March 2, 1867, c. 150, 14 Stat. 426, cannot be construed as intended to forbid merely the creation of such privileges as a legislative grant of an exclusive right to ferries, bridges, etc., even if it be conceded that such grants were a common form of territorial legislative abuse prior to the adoption of that statute, and were the generating cause of the insertion of this prohibition. A territorial statute giving perpetual succession to an incorporated educational institution, and endowing it with a perpetual exemption from taxation as to all its property, real and personal, grants an especial privilege within the meaning of the provisions of Washington Organic Act March 2, 1867, c. 150, 14 Stat. 426, that the territorial Legislature shall not grant private charters or especial privileges, but may enact general incorporation acts. Berrynan v. Board of Trustees of Whitman College, 32 Sup. Ct. 147, 222 U. S. 334, 58 L. Ed. 225.

ESPECIALLY

The use of the word "especially," in an instruction stating a proposition and declaring that the same would be "especially" true if a fact was established, indicates that the foregoing proposition was true and would be given additional weight if the additional fact was established. Chason v. Anderson, 46 S. E. 629, 630, 119 Ga. 495.

Land necessary for railroad tracks and buildings and used for railroad purposes solely is not "especially benefited" by the paving of the street in front of it, so as to be subject to assessment therefor under 7 Sp. Laws, p. 217. Naugatuck R. Co. v. City of Waterbury, 61 Atl. 474, 475, 78 Conn. 193.

ESPIONAGE

"Espionage" is the practice of spying or secretly watching for the purpose of detecting wrongdoing, excessive or offensive surveillance. And an allegation, in a husband's complaint for divorce, that his wife had maintained an unreasonable espionage, was not too uncertain as a charge of one of the forms of cruelty creating mental suffering. Hubbell v. Hubbell, 95 Pac. 664, 665, 7 Cal. App. 661 (quoting Stand. Dict.).

ESSENTIAL

A municipal corporation only possesses the powers granted to it in its charter in express words, those necessarily implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted, and those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation, using the word "essential" in the sense of indispensable, and not merely convenient. City of St. Louis v. Dreisoerner, 147 S. W. 998, 999, 243 Mo. 217, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 177.

ESSENTIALLY

The word "essentially," as used in the description in letters patent, wherein a patented vessel is described as "essentially a bowl with a flange," etc., is used as synonymous with "practically" or "substantially," and not in the sense that this precise bowl shape is indispensable. Electric Candy Machine Co. v. Morris, 156 Fed. 972, 974.

ESTABLISH

See Duly Established; Hereafter Established; If Established; Regularly Establish.

"Establish" means to fix or settle unalterably. Hart v. Hart (Tex.) 110 S. W. 91, 92 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2472).

"Established" has no statutory definition given it by our statute, but as usually understood it means settled, fixed, confirmed. Sult v. State, 17 S. W. 458, 30 Tex. App. 319, 322.

To "establish" means to originate and secure the permanent existence of; to found; to institute; to create and regulate; to make stable and firm. Under the Muskegon charter, as amended, permitting the city to issue electric light bonds, and requiring that a sinking fund therefor be created at the time of "establishing" the plant, the fund was properly created the same day the council authorized issuance of the bonds, and not at the earlier date when the electors voted to issue the bonds. Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co. v. City of Muskegon, 132 N. W. 1060, 1063, 167 Mich. 331.

To give effect to the probable intention of a testatrix as gathered from the language of her will, a hospital was held to have been "established" within five years from her death, when, beginning shortly after her death, a movement was started and thereafter carried forward without cessation which, within the five years, resulted in a charter for its establishment, the acquisition of a building site, and preparation for building, and which within 18 months after the expiration of the five years brought the hospital into actual operation. In re Pierpoint's Will, 47 Atl. 780, 781, 72 Vt. 204.

Webster's International Dictionary defines the verb "to establish" as "to appoint or constitute for permanence, as officers, laws, regulations," etc. The same authority defines or gives as the equivalent of "bureau" "a department of public business requiring a force of clerks; the body of officials in a department who labor under the direction of a chief." Bouvier says of the word "bureau" "In the classification of the ministerial officers of government, and in the distribution of duties among them, a bureau is understood to be a division of one of the great departments of which the secretaries or chief officers constitute the cabinet." A fair deduction from these definitions is that the word "bureau" in the connection and sense in which it is used in Const. art. 12, § 155, providing that the state corporation commission shall elect one of its members chairman of the same and shall have one clerk, one bailiff and such other clerks, officers, assistants and subordinates as may be provided by law and that the general assembly may establish subordinate divisions or bureaus of insurance, banking or other special branches of the business of that department, implies not merely a division where business is to be conducted under certain rules and regulations but includes the operating force as well, and hence Act March 9, 1906 (Laws 1906, p. 122, c. 112), establishing a bureau of insurance, in providing that the commissioner of insurance shall be elected by the general assembly, does not contravene Const. art. 12, § 155, as the power of appointing the insurance commissioner was not given by the Constitution to the commission, but his election was entrusted to the general assembly by the provisions authorizing it to establish the bureau of insurance. Button v. State Corporation Commission of Virginia, 54 S. E. 769, 770, 105 Va. 634.

Rev. St. 1892, § 5492, provides that an order for the arrest of defendant shall be made by the clerk of the court in which the action is brought when there is filed in his office an affidavit of the plaintiff, his authorized agent or attorney, stating the nature of the plaintiff's claim, that it is just, and the amount thereof as nearly as may be, and "establishing" one or more of the following particulars: That he fraudulently contracted the debt or incurred the obligation for which suit is about to be or has been brought; that the affidavit shall also contain a statement of the facts claimed to justify the belief in the existence of one or more of such particulars. The word "establishing" standing alone would seem to mean the same as proving by affidavit, but the latter part of the section, which provides that the affidavit shall also contain a statement of the facts, etc., seems to modify the meaning of the word to the extent that, when the plaintiff has a belief in the existence of one or more of said particulars and sets out facts tending to justify such belief and makes positive affidavit thereto, he thereby establishes such particular. Luhrig Coal Co. v. Ludlum, 69 N. E. 562, 563, 69 Ohio St. 311, 100 Am. St. Rep. 675.

As construct

Although the term "establishment" of a drainage ditch means the action of the board of supervisors in ordering it, and "construction" means the actual work, these terms are so interchangeable that, in the absence of evidence showing greater damage at one point than another, they may be used as synonymous in instructions in a proceeding to assess damages for the taking of land for a drainage ditch. Larson v. Webster County, 130 N. W. 165, 168, 150 Iowa, 344.

See Determine.

As erect

See Erect.

As locate

Const. art. 7, § 23, after designating the temporary location of the seat of government and certain other state institutions, provides that the Legislature shall not locate any other public institutions except under general laws and a vote of the people. Section 1 of such article 7 imposes upon the Legislature the duty of providing for the establishment and maintenance of high schools and such other institutions as may be necessary, and section 18 of the same article provides that such charitable reformatories and penal institutions as the claims of humanity and the public good may require, may be established and supported by the state in such manner as the Legislature may prescribe. Held, that the words "establish" and "established" are not synonymous with the word "locate," and the act of the people in voting to locate an institution at a particular place does not have the effect of establishing the institution, and hence it was proper for the Legislature to repeal an act providing for the establishment of an agricultural college at a place designated by a vote of the people; such repeal not constituting an attempt to abolish an institution created by the people by their vote in locating it. State ex rel. Wyoming Agricultural College v. Irvine, 84 Pac. 90, 106, 107, 14 Wyo. 318.

As prescribe

The word "prescribed," as used in Rev. Code, City of Chicago, § 1477, relating to the police department of cities and declaring that the department shall embrace as many patrolmen "as has been or may be prescribed by ordinance, is equivalent to "established." Bullis v. City of Chicago, 85 N. E. 614, 617, 235 Ill. 472.

The word "established," as used in Acts Sp. Sess. 1909, p. 316, § 25, providing that for a court "established for and held" in a territorial division of a county only the names of jurors residing in that territory shall be placed in the jury box and drawn, and Act Feb. 23, 1907 (Loc. Acts 1907, p. 61), dividing St. Clair county into two judicial divisions, and providing for the holding of terms of court in each division, with a branch clerk's office and sheriff's office in the division established by the act, and with process returnable to it, and that all criminal cases in the county shall be tried in the judicial division where the offenses were committed, is not limited to the meaning of "to found" or "set up," but often means putting in a settled or efficient state an existing legal organization or institution, and is often synonymous with "prescribed." Hence the act of 1907 "established" a court to be held in a territorial subdivision of the county, within the meaning of section 25, though the two courts exercised exclusive jurisdiction within their respective divisions and together constituted the circuit court of the county, and hence that the jury for the new division should be drawn under the provisions of section 25. Shell v. State, 56 South. 39, 42, 2 Ala. App. 207.

As purchase

The word "establish" is a word of various meanings; but there does not seem to be any dictionary definition that is the exact equivalent of the word "purchase." Its primary definition is: To make stable; to settle or fix firmly. Other definitions are: To set up or found; to place on a permanent footing; to put in a settled or efficient state or condition; to place upon a firm foundation. Held, that an electric plant, if it were about to be removed, or taken down, or to fall into disuse or decay, or was for any other cause in a precarious or inefficient condition, when purchased by a city to put it on a permanent footing, would be "established" within the definition. Hurd v. City of Fairbury, 128 N. W. 638, 640, 87 Neb. 745.

Conclusiveness of evidence

An instruction that, if plaintiff had established by a preponderance of the evidence that at a certain conference he had accepted defendant's proposal, then the jury should answer a certain question submitted in a special verdict in the affirmative was not objectionable on the ground that the word "established" imposed a greater burden on plaintiff than he was required to bear; the word being used in its common acceptation and therefore not misleading. Gamble v. Martin (Tex.) 151 S. W. 327, 330.

The word "establish," as used in an instruction requiring a party to clearly "establish" a fact by evidence, means to settle certainly or fix permanently what was before uncertain, doubtful, or disputed, and is therefore improper as applied to the party having the burden of proof in a civil case, in that it requires too high a degree of proof. Fisher v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 138 S. W. 316, 330, 124 Tenn. 450, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1246.

The word "establish" in an instruction as to the quantum of evidence necessary to warrant the existence of a fact in issue is more appropriate to a criminal than to a civil case (citing Words and Phrases, vol. 3, p. 2471). A charge that the burden of proof is on plaintiff to "establish" the facts essential to his cause of action by a preponderance, or greater weight, of evidence, sufficiently informs the jury that they must be "satisfied by a preponderance of the evidence" in order to find for plaintiff. Jones v. Monson, 119 N. W. 179, 183, 137 Wis. 478, 129 Am. St. Rep. 1082.

The phrase "established by the defendant" is practically equivalent to "shown by the defendant." Hence an instruction that contributory negligence must be established by the defendant and must be shown by the preponderance of the evidence is not erroneous as stating that it must be proven by defendant's own testimony. Wistrom v. Redlick Bros., 92 Pac. 1048, 1050, 6 Cal. App. 671.

To "establish" is to make certain. Where there is a reasonable doubt as to the degree of homicide of which accused is guilty, accused is entitled to an acquittal of the higher degree, and the evidence need not "establish" the existence of the inferior degree. Consequently a charge that, in order to convict of murder in the second degree, the evidence must "fail to establish" manslaughter, and must "fail to establish" self-defense, is erroneous. Casey v. State, 90 S. W. 1018, 1019, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 174.

An instruction which requires a party to "establish" his case by a preponderance of the evidence imposes a greater burden than the law requires. International, etc., R. Co. v. Duncan, 121 S. W. 362, 367, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 440.

An instruction that evidence of the declaration of a testator before and after the execution of a will is not admissible to prove the actual fact of undue influence being exercised upon the testator in making the will, but competent to establish the effect of external acts of undue influence, if any are shown, upon the mind of the testator, is improper as a charge upon the weight of the evidence, for the word "competent" means answering to all requirements, adequate, sufficient; and the word "establish" means "to fix or settle unalterably." Hence the instruction being about evidence, and the connection in which the term was used being with reference to evidence, the jury would naturally imply the word "evidence" in the term and construe the words as meaning "sufficient evidence to settle unalterably, or prove, the effect of the external acts of undue influence." Hart v. Hart (Tex.) 110 S. W. 91, 92.

An instruction that the burden of proof was on plaintiff, and that before he could recover he must establish all the facts necessary to his recovery by a preponderance of the evidence, the burden resting on defendant "to establish his plea of self-defense," was not erroneous in the use of the word "establish," as requiring too high a degree of proof, it being used in the sense of "prove"; the court having also charged that the jury should find for plaintiff, if they believed from a preponderance of the evidence that defendant made an unlawful assault on plaintiff, and to find for defendant, if they believed from a preponderance of the evidence that plaintiff was about to make an attack, real or apparent, on defendant. Sumner v. Kinney (Tex.) 136 S. W. 1192, 1195.

In an action for injuries to a servant from the sudden application of compressed air to a derrick, causing it to jerk the servant into the air, the court charged that the burden was on plaintiff "to show, by preponderance of evidence, by which is meant the greater weight and degree of credible testimony, the facts which will entitle him to recover," and that a like burden was on defendant to establish its plea of contributory negligence of plaintiff. Held, that the use of the word "establish," considering the charge as a whole, did not amount to a charge that defendant should "establish" its plea of contributory negligence by conclusive evidence. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Johnson, 127 S. W. 539, 540, 103 Tex. 320.

County

Under Const. art. 11, § 3, providing that no new county shall be established which shall reduce any county to a population less than 4,000, nor shall a new county be "formed" containing a population of less than 2,000, the word "established" means finally established. State ex rel. Chehalis County v. Superior Court of Pacific County, 92 Pac. 345, 347, 47 Wash. 453.

Grade

A street grade can be established only by ordinance regularly adopted. "Establishing a grade" does not mean the actual lowering or raising the surface of the street, but it means the fixing of a base line or plane of reference and certain measurements from that plane. Reilly v. Ft. Dodge, 92 N. W. 887-889, 118 Iowa, 633.

The "establishment of a grade of a street" takes place when corporate action is had to that end. The establishment of the grade may, and usually does, precede actual grading of the street. Therefore an adjacent owner is entitled to damages for the change in a street grade only when the prior grade in conformity to which his improvements were made was established by proper municipal authority in the manner prescribed, notwithstanding Comp. Laws 1897, § 2784, which provides that, where a street grade has been established and adjacent property has been improved in conformity therewith, such grade shall not be changed without compensation to the owner for all damages to such property resulting therefrom. Cummings v. Dixon, 102 N. W. 751, 752, 139 Mich. 269.

High school

A high school is "established" within Laws 1909, c. 210, providing that in counties in which high schools have been established and maintained for one year under the provisions of Barnes high school law, by a majority of the votes cast on such proposition, such act, as amended, shall be in force and effect, when such high school is brought up to the standard and meets the requirements prescribed in the Barnes high school law, though the school was in existence when such law took effect; the word "establish" meaning to confirm or ascertain, fix or settle. Armstrong v. George, 114 Pac. 209, 210, 84 Kan. 248.

Post office

Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 7, authorizes Congress to establish post offices and post roads, and Rev. St. § 3829, empowers the Postmaster General to establish post offices at all such places on post roads established by law as he may deem expedient. Held, that the government's mere occupation of a rented building on a post road for a post office did not constitute the establishment of a post office in the sense of accomplishing of itself any appropriation or dedication of the site selected to public use, or any interference with existing rights therein. United States v. Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 176 Fed. 963, 965.

Will

To "establish" a will is to make it the subject of such proof and finding as will entitle it to probate. In re Abel's Will, 118 N. Y. Supp. 429, 431, 63 Misc. Rep. 169.

ESTABLISH AND MAINTAIN

The words "establish and maintain," in a contract binding one to pay a specified sum to a railroad company on condition that it shall "establish and maintain" a station at a specified place, mean that a depot shall be established and thereafter maintained at the place designated; the word "maintain" meaning a continuing obligation. Piper v. Choctaw Northern Townsite & Improvement Co., 85 Pac. 965, 966, 16 Okl. 436.

An averment that a highway was one over which a rural mail route was maintained does not show that it was one on which a mail route had been "established and maintained," within Act March 9, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 223, c. 124), as amended by Laws 1907, p. 298, c. 180 (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7779), making it an offense for certain officers to refuse, after due notice, to repair such a highway. State v. Collier, 86 N. E. 1015, 1017, 171 Ind. 606.

ESTABLISHED BUSINESS

See, also, Established Place of Business.

St. 1895, p. 573, c. 488, § 14, provided for the condemnation of land for a reservoir, and that any person owning an established business on land in town of B., whether the same should be taken or not, should be entitled to damages for decrease in value, whether by loss of custom or otherwise. The village of O. in such town was destroyed by the construction of the reservoir, and it appeared that petitioner for 15 years had owned a small farm, by which he supported himself and family; that he had no other business; and that such products as were not required for the support of the family were sold in the village of O., though he had no regular route for customers. Held, that petitioner had an "established business" within the meaning of the statute. Allen v. Commonwealth, 74 N. E. 287, 289, 188 Mass. 59, 69 L. R. A. 599.

ESTABLISHED FACTS

By "established facts" is meant the questions of fact which are passed upon by the jury under competent testimony and correct instructions. Averbuch v. Great Northern R. Co., 104 Pac. 1103, 1105, 55 Wash. 633.

ESTABLISHED GRADE

A street grade is "established" "when corporate action is had to that end, and this usually—if not necessarily—is a matter of definite record." Cummings v. Dixon, 102 N. W. 751, 752, 139 Mich. 269 (citing Larned v. Briscoe, 29 N. W. 22, 62 Mich. 393).

Where prior to the adoption of Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, p. 400, c. 466) § 951, providing that, in all cases where a change of grade of any street has been made prior to the taking effect of this act, the right of abutting owners to damages shall be governed by the laws in force when the change was made, and that a grade shall be deemed "established" within the section, where it was originally adopted by the action of the public authorities, or where a street has been used by the public, as of right, for 20 years and been improved by the public authority at the expense of the public or of the abutting owners, a street, the grade of which had been established by user, was improved, and the established grade changed the right of an abutting owner, who had erected buildings according to the old grade, to damages for the change was governed by the county and village law, and not by the charter provision. Mayer v. City of New York, 86 N. E. 553, 193 N. Y. 535.

The term "established grade," as used in Code, § 782, providing that sidewalks shall not be constructed until the streets have been graded so that such sidewalk will be at the established grade, means the grade as established for the street. Gallaher v. City of Jefferson, 101 N. W. 124, 126, 125 Iowa, 324.

ESTABLISHED PLACE OF BUSINESS

The office of a corporation in a city, which office is made the depository of the books and records of the company by a vote of the directors and is the place at which a large share of the corporate business is transacted, is "the established place of business" of the corporation as affecting the venue of an action against it. Androscoggin & K. R. R. Co. v. Stevens, 28 Me. 434, 436.

ESTABLISHED RATE

If a new rate, to be charged by a carrier, was filed and posted for the requisite period, such a rate was "established" within the interstate commerce act. Houston Coal & Coke Co. v. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co., 171 Fed. 723, 725.

ESTABLISHED ROAD OR WAY

The word "established," in Pol. Code 1895, § 671, providing that if a private way is "established" over the wild lands of a person who has no notice of the proceeding he may within six months after receiving such notice, and not thereafter, proceed to have his damages assessed, has the same meaning as the words "laid out" in section 672; that is, the laying out of a way under the order of the ordinary. Watkins v. Country Club, 47 S. E. 538, 539, 120 Ga. 45.

Laws 1907, c. 201, § 16, provides that if after the changing, locating, or relocating of any public road, or opening and establishing any new public highway, any person be aggrieved, and he and the superintendent of roads cannot agree on the damages, if any, he may apply within six months after such change or opening and establishment of a new road for the assessment of damages. Held, that the word "change" refers not to a change contemplated and directed, but to a change completed, and that the word "establish" was used in the sense of "to found, prepare, make, institute, and confirm"; and hence an application to the clerk for an assessment of damages within six months after a change of a public road had been accomplished was in time. Bost v. Cabarrus County, 67 S. E. 1066, 1067, 152 N. C. 531.

The word "establish," as used in the Louisiana statute empowering police juries to establish ferries and toll bridges within their respective parishes, means to found; to create; to regulate. Police juries throughout the state have plenary powers with respect to the establishment of public ferries, bridges, and roads, and with respect to their abandonment or discontinuance, and may in their discretion convert a free bridge or road into a toll bridge or road, and vice versa, and may operate a toll ferry or road directly or through their lessees. Police Jury of Lafourche v. Robichaux, 40 South. 705, 707, 116 La. 286 (citing 16 Cyc. p. 591, and reaffirming Plank Road Co. v. Kline, 30 South. 854, 106 La. 325).

Under Pub. St. 1901, c. 67, § 12, a town situated on the Connecticut river may authorize its selectmen to contract with the officers of any contiguous town in Vermont for the purchase of the real estate, franchise, etc., of any bridge corporation, if in their opinion the public good requires a highway to be laid over said property. Held that, in proceedings thereunder, a proposed highway is "established" when the selectmen enter into such contract and purchase such property. O'Neill v. Town of Walpole, 66 Atl. 119, 120, 74 N. H. 197.

The term "estate," when used in its broad sense, includes every species of property. Lessler v. De Loynes, 138 N. Y. Supp. 503, 505, 153 App. Div. 903.

The word "estate" has a variety of significations. It may mean the property of a living man, the property of a decedent, which passes to his administrator for the payment of debts of the community, or the property of a husband and wife of which the husband dies seised. It may also be appropriately, though not accurately, used to signify the property of a decedent so long as it remains undivided. West v. Herman, 104 S. W. 428, 432, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 131 (citing 16 Cyc. pp. 599, 600).

There being no such legal entity as an "estate" where the record of a scire facias surmunicipal lien for taxes shows on its face that the registered owner is dead, an acceptance of service for her or for her "estate" is fatally defective. The term "estate" is a convenient phrase sometimes to identify the subject of litigation in the orphans' court, and in proceedings in rem it may be treated as harmless superfluity. Jones v. Beale, 66 Atl. 254, 255, 217 Pa. 182.

Decedent's estate or assets and succession

The word "estate," as generally used, means property of every character and is ordinarily applied to property of a decedent, a ward, a lunatic, a bankrupt, etc.; that is, to property being administered in the courts. A contract for the sale of realty, describing the vendor as "Estate of F.," did not sufficiently describe the vendor to comply with the statute of frauds (Sayles' Rev. Civ. St.

1897, art. 2543). Morrison v. Hazzard (Tex.) 88 S. W. 385, 386.

It might perhaps be correctly assumed that in all dispositions causa mortis the words "estate" and "succession" are synonymous; but, however this may be, the word "estate," as used by a testator in disposing of the whole of his estate to three persons in equal portions, the whole passing into the hands of his executors by the terms of the will, had the same sense and meaning as the term "succession." Thomas v. Blair, 35 South. 811, 812, 111 La. 678 (citing Shane v. Withers' Legatees, 8 La. 489).

Under Mansf. Dig. § 8, providing for the assignment of estates not exceeding $300 in value, whether of real or personal property, to the widow or children of deceased, the word "estate" means the mass of property left by decedent. Willson v. Massie, 65 S. W. 942, 943, 70 Ark. 25.

"The word 'estate,' or 'that part of my estate,' has always been construed to describe not only the land devised, but the whole interest of the testator in the subject of the devise." Abbott v. Essex Co., 18 How. (59 U. S.) 202, 207, 15 L. Ed. 352.

The use of the word "estate," in referring to a person's estate, is used in relation to the property of a deceased person, as it is unnatural and unusual for the word "estate" to be used in relation to the property of a living person. Pearce v. Dyess, 101 S. W. 549, 551, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 406.

Under an instrument reading in substance that, I, S. M., desire and so affirm that my stepdaughter shall receive out of my estate a sum of money, or its equivalent, that shall aggregate $2,000, the term "estate" refers to the property that the maker of the paper should possess at the time of her death. In re Megary's Estate, 55 Atl. 963, 964, 206 Pa. 260.

The word "estate," as used in Code Supp. 1907, § 296, providing that the clerk of the district court shall be entitled to collect for services in the settlement of a decedent's estate, where the value of the estate does not exceed $3,000, $3, where the value is between $3,000 and $5,000, $5, where the value is between $5,000 and $7,000, $8, and where the value exceeds $7,000, $10, referred only to the estate to be administered, and, where decedent left a homestead and real property in another state, neither of which was necessary to pay debts, the value thereof was not to be considered as part of the estate in determining the amount the clerk was entitled to charge. In re Pitt's Estate, 133 N. W. 660, 661, 153 Iowa, 269.

Where defendant, holding a note upon which plaintiff's decedent was guarantor, contracted to refrain from making any claim against the estate of decedent, but to share proportionately in any surplus remaining on the winding up of a partnership of which decedent was a member, provided defendant's share in such surplus should not exceed his claim against the estate under the contract of guaranty, the agreement should not be construed to mean merely that defendant would make no claim against the partnership assets, but that he should make no claim against decedent's individual estate. The word "estate" did not mean the interest of the decedent in firm. The words used had but one natural meaning, and if taken literally are sensible, but with the defendant's construction they become abstract. Whitman v. Taylor, 64 N. E. 206, 182 Mass. 37.

Where a testator was entitled under the will of his father to a small interest in the real property owned by the latter, and was by descent entitled to other and larger interests in the same real property, a will bequeathing all his interest in the estate of his father, which was the only property that the testator owned, includes not only that interest taken under the will of the father, but all interest owned by the testator, the word "estate" in its most common usage covering the property composing the assets of the decedent, and it must be presumed that the testator did not intend intestacy as to part of the interest owned by him. In re O'Gorman's Estate, 120 Pac. 33, 34, 161 Cal. 654.

Civ. Code, § 1813, declares that no devise or bequest of any estate, real or personal, to any charitable or benevolent society or corporation, or to any person or persons, in trust for charitable uses, shall collectively exceed one-third of the estate of the testator, leaving legal heirs. Held, that such section was intended not to fix a state polity, but for the protection of heirs at law, and that, in determining whether a bequest to charity exceeds one-third of the testator's estate, the court is not limited to the property bequeathed to charity within its jurisdiction, but should consider all the property bequeathed by testator to charity wherever situated. In re Dwyer's Estate, 115 Pac. 242, 244, 159 Cal. 680.

A claim against a city for the instantaneous death of plaintiff's intestate, through the city's negligence, stated that the claim was for damages sustained by his estate, legal representatives, and heirs, and that his estate, legal representatives, and heirs claimed a specified sum as damages. Held, that the words "legal representatives" were not used in their strictly technical sense as executors or administrators, nor was the word "heir" used in its primary and technical sense as one who, by reason of birth in lawful wedlock, inherits real property, but that the expression, "estate, legal representatives, and heirs," was used with the idea of using words broad enough in their significance to include all persons having claims against the city on account of the death, and hence the claim was sufficient as a basis for an action for the benefit of the widow under the statute. Moyer v. City of Oshkosh, 139 N. W. 378, 380, 151 Wis. 586 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, 3241-3264; 5 Words and Phrases, 4070-4079).

Dower interest

An inchoate right of dower is not such an "estate" as gives a wife the right to redeem land sold for taxes, within Laws 1885, c. 405, § 7, authorizing the redemption by persons having an "estate" in the land sold. Rosenblum v. Eisenberg, 108 N. Y. Supp. 350, 351, 123 App. Div. 896.

Fee imported

"An 'estate' will be presumed to be a fee simple, unless it is expressed that the estate shall be a lesser one." Beatson v. Bowers, 91 N. E. 924, 924, 174 Ind. 601.

As freehold

See Freehold.

Income

Where a testatrix directed that annuities be paid by my executor "from my estate," the words "from my estate" did not contemplate payment from income, as the word excludes the idea of payment from dividends, rent, or interest. Walcott v. Pitcher, 7 R. I. 555, 561.

In inheritance tax law

Under Transfer Tax Law, § 242, defining the word "estate," that term is taken to mean the property or interest therein of the testator passing or transferred to the successor thereof, when not exempted. In re Hellman's Estate, 79 N. Y. Supp. 201, 204, 77 App. Div. 355.

The words "property" and "estate" are often used synonymously, and are so used in a statute imposing an inheritance tax, at a specified rate on every $100 of the market value of the "property" received by each person. People v. Koenig, 85 Pac. 1120-1131, 37 Colo. 283, 11 Ann. Cas. 140.

The words "estate" and "property," as used in the Transfer Tax Law (Laws 1896, c. 908), are defined by section 242 to mean the property or interest therein of the testator, intestate, grantor, bargainer, or vendor passing or transferred. A husband and wife deposited moneys with two trust companies; either of them, or the survivor, having power to draw such deposits. In the earlier account the husband's name came first, and in the later one the wife's name came first. The moneys deposited in both accounts previously belonged to the wife, and the checks drawn on the early account were generally signed by the husband to pay household expenses, and the later account was drawn upon by checks signed by the husband with the names of both parties to pay for traveling expenses, and often checks were drawn on the later account and deposited in the first account and disbursed for family expenses. The husband contributed his whole salary to the household expenses. On the death of the wife, the balances in the joint accounts were not subject to the transfer tax. In re Stebbins' Estate, 103 N. Y. Supp. 563, 565, 52 Misc. Rep. 438.

The "estate" meant by the provision of Revenue Act 1906, that the first $500 of every estate shall not be subject to the tax thereby imposed on legacies to strangers and collateral heirs and inheritances by collateral heirs, is not the estate of deceased, but that passing to a stranger or collateral heir, so that each legacy is entitled to the exemption; and this, though the executor or administrator is required to pay it in the first instance, he being also required to deduct it from the estate passing to the legatee or collateral heir. Booth's Ex'r v. Commonwealth ex rel. Jefferson County Attorney, 113 S. W. 61, 85, 130 Ky. 88, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 592; Allen's Ex'rs v. McElroy, 113 S. W. 66, 130 Ky. 111.

Kind and quantum of interest

"An 'estate' is defined * * * to be the quantity of interest which a person has, from absolute ownership down to naked possession." Hayes v. City of Atlanta, 57 S. E. 1087, 1089, 1 Ga. App. 25 (quoting and adopting the definition of Justice Little in Lowery v. Powell, 34 S. E. 297, 109 Ga. 194); Clear Creek Water Co. v. Gladville Imp. Co., 58 S. E. 586, 587, 107 Va. 278, 13 Ann. Cas. 71. It is in this sense that the term is employed in the amendment of 1906 (page 452, c. 257), requiring the condemnation of the entire estate proposed to be taken by a public service corporation, but a partial interest in the land, such as a water right, may be condemned when a partial interest only is needed. Clear Creek Water Co. v. Gladville Imp. Co., 58 S. E. 586, 587, 107 Va. 278, 13 Ann. Cas. 71.

Since, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1519, requiring the verdict in ejectment to specify the estate of plaintiff in the property recovered, a verdict not defining plaintiff's estate is fatally defective, plaintiff's proof of the estate owned by him is a condition precedent to recovery in ejectment; the term "estate" being defined as the quantity of interest which one has in land. Meehan v. Dobson, 131 N. Y. Supp. 37, 38.

The word "estate," as used in Revisal 1905, § 28, providing that a foreign executor has no authority to "intermeddle" with the "estate" until he shall have entered into bond, etc., embraces an interest in anything that is the subject of property. Glascok v. Gray, 62 S. E. 433, 434, 148 N. C. 346.

The statute on descent provides that estates, both real and personal, of resident and nonresident proprietors dying intestate shall descend, etc. Held, that the word "estates" refers to all interests in property to which decedent is entitled. North v. Graham, 85

N. E. 267, 270, 235 Ill. 178, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 624, 126 Am. St. Rep. 189.

As used in a statute providing that no license shall issue to an executor or administrator to sell lands until notice shall have been given to all persons interested in the estate, the word "estate" does not mean the land to be sold but the title of the testator. This is the strict meaning of the term. It denotes the interest a party has in lands, tenements, and hereditaments; as an estate for life or in fee, etc. Yeomens v. Brown, 8 Metc. (49 Mass.) 51, 57.

The term "estate," as descriptive of rights in property, signifies the quantity of interest which a person has from absolute ownership down to naked possession, and, as between vendor and vendee of real property, the term may be defined to be an interest in real property which confers the right to a full and complete, or to a limited, beneficial use of the property itself; while the "title" is the means whereby the owner of lands has the just possession of his property, and may be said to be the evidence of the right. State ex rel. Dillman v. Weide, 135 N. W. 696, 701, 29 S. D. 109.

Liens

Under Pub. Laws 1893, p. 37, c. 6, § 1, as amended by Pub. Laws 1903, p. 1121, c. 763, providing that an action may be brought by any person against another who claims an estate or interest in real estate adverse to him to determine such adverse claims, and that if judgment has been docketed, whether in favor or against the person bringing the action or the person against whom such action was brought, the lien of such judgment shall be such a claim of an estate or interest in real estate as is contemplated by the act, where a creditor had his debt determined by a judgment, and by attachment of land brought it within the jurisdiction of the court, and had it condemned as the property of his debtor to the satisfaction of his debt, and a third person claims the entire and absolute estate in the land, under deeds which antedate the action of the creditor and the levy of the attachment, his claim is of an "estate or interest in real estate," within the act, and he may sue to quiet his title thereto. Crockett v. Bray, 66 S. E. 666, 667, 151 N. C. 615.

Note secured by trust deed

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 675, providing that an action to determine adverse claims may be brought by any person against another claiming an "estate or interest in real property" adverse to him, an owner of a note secured by a trust deed may sue to quiet title as against parties claiming title adverse to the trust deed. Battelle v. Wolven, 102 N. W. 297, 298, 19 S. D. 87.

Ownership or possession and choses in action

The term "estate" may be used to describe a mere chose in action. Veeder Mfg. Co. v. Marshall-Sanders Co., 68 Atl. 641, 642, 79 Conn. 15; State v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 80 S. W. 544, 553, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 214.

The ownership of undiscovered minerals constitutes an "estate" in the land. Hansen v. Hall, 132 N. W. 457, 167 Mich. 7.

The expressions "estate in lands" and "interest in lands" are broad enough to include the right to an easement therein. Oates v. Town of Headland, 45 South. 910, 911, 154 Ala. 503.

Persons and personal faculties, status or rank

"An estate" is a person, within the contemplation of the law. Forgery with intent to defraud an "estate" is within this meaning. Bennett v. State, 36 S. W. 947, 948, 62 Ark. 516.

The word "estate," in a contract for the sale of land made by the agent of the estate of the former owner, could not be construed to mean "heirs" of such deceased owner, nor could it be shown to have been so intended by parol. Morrison v. Hazzard, 92 S. W. 33, 35, 99 Tex. 583.

A will bequeathed to testator's wife all his household property, and devised to her the homestead for life, "at her death to revert to my estate," gave her one-third of the rents during life from land devised to testator's son, and also devised certain land to another son, and the succeeding paragraph required the "residue" of the estate to be divided, one-half to testator's wife, one-eighth to each son, etc. Held, that the will did not give a contingent remainder in the homestead to those persons who were testator's heirs at the widow's death, but the remainder interest therein fell into the "residue" of the estate, so that the widow, upon partition during her life, would be entitled to a one-half interest therein; the words "revert to my estate" ordinarily meaning "the return to the aggregate of all the property which I may leave at my death," and the word "estate" not being equivalent to the word "heirs." Downing v. Grigsby, 96 N. E. 513, 514, 251 Ill. 568.

Property compared and distinguished

The words "property" and "estate" are often used synonymously, and are so used in a statute imposing an inheritance tax on every $100 of the market value of the property received by each person. People v. Koenig, 85 Pac. 1129-1131, 37 Colo. 283, 11 Ann. Cas. 140.

The word "estates," in its primary sense, as used in a will, without limitation by context, is a word of extensive meaning. It is nearly synonymous with the word "property," where that word is not qualified. Property of every description will ordinarily pass under the word "estate," and the presumption is that, when used in a will, it is used in its broad sense, unless restricted. Powell v. Wood, 62 S. E. 1071, 1072, 149 N. C. 235 (citing 1 Underhill, Wills, § 295; Foll v. Newsome, 50 S. E. 597, 138 N. C. 115, 3 Ann. Cas. 417); Foll v. Newsome, 50 S. E. 597, 598, 138 N. C. 115, 3 Ann. Cas. 417 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Underhill, Wills, 295).

In Civ. Code, § 485, making railroads responsible for injury they may occasion to domestic animals in a line which passes through or along the property of the owner of the animals, "property" is interchangeable with "estate." That a tenant has a property in land may not be doubted. Walther v. Sierra R. Co., 74 Pac. 840, 841, 141 Cal. 288.

Laws 1895, c. 98 (Pol. Code, § 544), makes the amount incurred by a county for maintenance of an insane person in a hospital for the insane a charge against the estate of the insane person, provided that he "has no heirs within the United States dependent on said estate for support, and that no real property shall be sold during the life of the insane person." Held, that the statute did not exempt the whole estate where only part of the heirs were dependent on the insane person; the term "estate," as used therein, not being equivalent to "property" in the popular meaning, and the words "heirs dependent on said estate" not being equivalent to the words "person dependent on said estate"; so that, where only one heir was dependent on an insane person, the remainder of the estate left after the insane person's death was liable to the county's claim for maintenance. Minnehaha County v. Boyce (S. D.) 138 N. W. 287, 289.

Property, real and personal

The word "estates" in a will was broad enough to cover all property, whether real or personal, which the testator left behind him. Hacker v. Hacker, 138 N. Y. Supp. 194, 199, 153 App. Div. 270.

The word "estate" includes all species of property, applicable alike to real and personal, and in its broadest sense is held to include choses in action. State v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 80 S. W. 544, 553, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 214.

A testator's "estate" includes both realty and personalty. Harper v. Harper, 62 S. E. 553, 555, 148 N. C. 453.

The word "estate" is a general term and in modern construction may be said to embrace prima facie the whole estate of testator, both real and personal, and his property of every description. Snodgrass v. Brandenburg, 72 N. E. 1030, 1031, 164 Ind. 59 (quoting and adopting definition in Schouler, Wills [3d Ed.] § 510).

In its true legal significance the word "estate" embraces an interest in anything that is the subject of property, especially in lands. Preston defines it to be the interest which any one has in lands or in any other subject or property, and Coke and other English authorities are to the same effect. In America the word "estate" is a word of the greatest extension and broadest significance. It comprehends every species of property, real and personal. Glascock v. Gray, 62 S. E. 433, 434, 148 N. C. 346 (citing 1 Prest. Est. 20; 2 Black. Com. 103; 2 Crabb, Real Prop. § 942, Coke, Lit. 345; 2 Redfield, Wills, c. 14, § 48).

Where a will provides for the management and devise and distribution of the said estate, the words "the said estate" refer to an estate consisting of both the real and personal property. Dickson v. New York Biscuit Co., 71 N. E. 1058, 1064, 211 Ill. 468.

The word "estates" is genus generalissimum and includes all things, real and personal, and when legacies are directed to be paid out of the "estate" of a testator, and there is nothing to restrict the meaning of the word "estate" to personality, the real estate is held to be charged with legacies. Hartson v. Elden, 26 Atl. 561, 562, 50 N. J. Eq. 522 (citing Cox v. Corkendall, 13 N. J. Eq. 138; Hunt v. Hunt, 70 Mass. [4 Gray] 190, 193; Jackson ex dem. Pearson v. Housel, 17 Johns. [N. Y.] 281).

The word "estate," as used in a will in which the testator had bequeathed to his wife a house and lot, and also $300 in good and lawful money, and certain other chattels, reciting, "And I do hereby make and ordain T. and D. executors of this my last will and testament, all of such legacies to be paid out of my estate," was used by the testator in its broadest meaning, which would, of course, include both realty and personality. Getchell v. Rust, 68 Atl. 404, 406, 8 Del. Ch. 284.

The word "estate" may include real as well as personal property. A clause giving and devising all the rest and residue of the testator's property and "estate" of every description, and wherever situate, after the payment of all debts and certain legacies named, passes real estate, unless such construction be prevented by the other parts of the will. Chapman v. Chick, 16 Atl. 407, 409, 81 Me. 109.

The direction in a will that the testator's business shall be carried on with his "estate and property" comprehends the use of all his real and personal property for that purpose. It would seem to be evident that to use, in carrying on the business, the testator's estate and property, is to apply thereto all income, however it may be produced, from either form of property. Thorn v. De Breteuil, 71 N. E. 470, 473, 179 N. Y. 64.

The residuary clause devising and bequeathing the balance and residue of the "estate of every kind" includes real as well as personal property and included the reversionary interest in the real estate from which a life estate had been carved out. Foll v. Newsome, 50 S. E. 597, 598, 138 N. C. 115, 3 Ann. Cas. 417.

In Ky. St. 1909, § 1907, providing that every gift, conveyance, assignment, etc., by a debtor of any of his estate without valuable consideration, shall be void as to existing liabilities, the word "estate" includes personal as well as real property. Patton v. Walker's Trustees (Ky.) 118 S. W. 312, 313.

A testator made the following provisions in his will: "Item. I give, devise and bequeath to my wife, E. A. M., all my estate both real and personal wherever found and however situate for her use during life. Item. At the death of my said wife, whatever may remain of said estates, I give, devise and bequeath to my daughter, E. A. Y." Held, that a power of sale by the life tenant was annexed by implication to the devise of the life estate in the first item, and that it sufficiently appears that the testator intended the power of sale to extend to both the real and the personal estate. The devise of whatever "should remain of said estate" was not a devise of whatever should remain of his estate in general but whatever should remain of the real estate and of the personal estate. The word "estates" in the plural naturally has this significance, and in this case it expressed the real intention of the testator. By saying that only so much of the real estate as might "remain" at the death of the wife should pass to the daughter, testator expressed a purpose that the use given to the wife should extend to a sale of the property subject to the use, if she wished to sell the same or the proceeds of the property was needed for her support. Unless this construction is placed on the language, there is no practical significance in the use of the word "remain." Young v. Hillier, 67 Atl. 571, 572, 103 Me. 17, 125 Am. St. Rep. 283.

Real estate only

The word "estate" is used with a variety of meanings, its primary and technical sense referring only to an interest in land, and such is its meaning under the common-law definition of possibility of reverter. North v. Graham, 85 N. E. 267, 270, 235 Ill. 178, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 624, 126 Am. St. Rep. 189 (citing 16 Cyc. p. 599).

Right of entry

"A right of entry is not * * * an 'estate' in any just and legal sense of the word. Neither is it a 'thing in action,' for it does not depend upon any right to sue, but may be enforced by a mere entry. Indeed, a right of action and a right of entry are often used in contradistinction to each other." In-gills v. Sailor's Snug Harbour, 3 Pet. (28 U. S.) 99, 180, 7 L. Ed. 617.

ESTATE AND PROPERTY

ESTATE FOR YEARS

Code Ga. of 1910, § 3685, defines an "estate for years" as one which is limited in its duration to a period fixed, or which may be made fixed and certain, and declares that, if it be in lands, it passes as realty and may be made for any number of years, so that the limitation be within the rule against perpetuities. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wright, 199 Fed. 454, 457.

"A lease for a thousand years is considered only an 'estate for years,' and the lessee has only a 'chattel interest,' which by the common law goes into the hands of his executor or administrator at his decease." Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S. W. 486, 497, 225 Mo. 414, 20 Ann. Cas. 1072 (quoting 1 Swift Dig. p. 87).

While a technical "estate for years" is not an inheritable estate and therefore goes to the personal representative on the death of the owner, it is an estate in land, and an "estate for years," if taxable, is not taxed as personalty. An assessment of taxes against a lessee on account of his interest in land held under a so-called lease for 99 years renewable to the lessee, his heirs and assigns, forever, where the rent reserved is grossly disproportionate to the value of the land, is not invalid. Ocean Grove Camp Meeting

Ass'n v. Reeves, 75 Atl. 782, 784, 79 N. J. Law, 334.

A "tenancy for years" is determinable by the mere expiration of the period for which the lands were demised and neither demand nor notice is necessary or requisite to enable the landlord to re-enter or maintain ejectment for possession, but such tenancy may be converted into a tenancy at will or a periodical tenancy, and, when so changed, it can only be terminated as other tenancies of the kind. Wolfer v. Hurst, 82 Pac. 20, 21, 47 Or. 156, 8 Ann. Cas. 725.

ESTATE IN POSSESSION

"At common law estates in real property, with respect to the time of their enjoyment, were either in 'possession' or 'expectancy.' The person who had the present enjoyment of that out of which the enjoyment arose had an estate in possession. The person whose enjoyment was postponed had an estate in expectancy, which, however, was created at the same time as that upon which it was expectant. Expectant estates were either in remainder, limited to take effect and to be enjoyed after the particular estate, or in reversion; the residue of the estate left in the grantor or his heirs to commence in possession after the determination of the particular estate." State ex rel. Tozer v. Probate Court of Washington County, 113 N. W. 888, 893, 102 Minn. 268.

"Estates, as respects the time of their enjoyment, are divided into 'estates in possession' and 'estates in expectancy.' An estate which entitles the owner to immediate possession of the property is an 'estate in possession.' An estate in which the right of possession is postponed to a future time is an 'estate in expectancy.'" In re Perry, 96 N. Y. Supp. 879, 884, 48 Misc. Rep. 285 (quoting Real Property Law, § 25).

The phrase "estates of deceased persons," as used in Gen. St. 1902, §§ 2367-2377, imposing a succession tax on any property within the jurisdiction of the state which shall pass by will or inheritance, refers to the residuum of the decedent's property inventoried under the law remaining after claims of creditors and charges of administration have been satisfied. ESTATE OF INHERITANCE

An interest in land which may pass by devise or descent is an "estate of inheritance." Charles A. Warren Co. v. San Francisco Savings Union, 96 Pac. 807, 808, 153 Cal. 771.

A full equitable title to real estate and a beneficial interest therein, the holder of the legal title having no duty to perform except to convey to the holder of the equitable title, is an estate of inheritance within the dower statute. Harley v. Harley, 122 N. W. 761, 764, 140 Wis. 282.

Where one is seised of an estate in land, limited on his dying without lawful children, the estate, being one that can pass to heirs if lawful children are born, is an "estate of inheritance," in which his widow is dowable, though it expired by failure of issue, under Code 1906, c. 65, § 1. Couch v. Eastham, 73 S. E. 314, 315, 69 W. Va. 710, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 307.

Act March 30, 1874, St. 1873-74, p. 940, c. 671, § 1, provides that any citizen may lay down and plant oysters in any of the public waters of the state, and that the ownership of and the exclusive right to take up the same shall remain in such person, etc. Following sections provide that the person desiring to use the right must define the limits of his claim by stakes, etc., maintain thereon a sign with the words "Oyster Beds," and record a description of such beds, etc., and makes the carrying off of the oysters or the removal of boundary marks by strangers a misdemeanor. Section 9 provides that the act shall not apply to any tidelands which the state may have sold to private parties, and that nothing herein shall be so construed as to interfere with the right of the state to sell any of the tidelands, nor affect the rights of purchasers at any sale of the land by the state. Held, that the privilege given by the act is a mere personal license, and not an "estate of inheritance," subject to partition under Code Civ. Proc. § 752, providing for the partition of real property. Darbee & Immel Oyster & Land Co. v. Pacific Oyster

Co., 88 Pac. 1090, 1091, 150 Cal. 392, 119 Am. St. Rep. 227.

Donation claim

"An estate of inheritance" is one which descends or may descend to the heir upon the death of the ancestor." Under the Donation Law (Act Cong. Sept. 27, 1850) a settler and his wife have but a bare right of possession until completion of the four years' residence and occupation, and no "estate of inheritance" until then. Quinn v. Ladd, 59 Pac. 457, 459, 37 Or. 261 (citing and adopting Hall v. Russell, 101 U. S. 503, 25 L. Ed. 829; Farris v. Hayes, 9 Or. 81).

ESTATE REMAINING

The words "estate remaining," as used in a will devising real estate to testator's son, to hold "the same to him and his heirs forever," and providing that if he died leaving no issue surviving, or if such issue should die during minority, the "estate remaining" at the death of the son should go to designated persons, did not mean a remainder in a technical sense, but meant what the son should not dispose of during life, and by necessary implication the son had power to dispose of any or all of the estate, and the limitation over, being inconsistent with the power of disposal, could not take effect as an executory devise. Galligan v. McDonald, 86 N. E. 304, 305, 200 Mass. 299, 128 Am. St. Rep. 421.

ESTATE TAIL

Created by use of words, heirs of the body, see Heirs of the Body.

Words of procreation are not indispensable in establishing an "estate tail," but it is sufficient if the unmistakable implication limits the heirs to particular bodies. A deed to James A. Hall and Mary Hall, his wife, during their or either of their natural lives, and in fee to the heirs of the said Hall and his wife, conveying real estate unto them, their heirs and assigns, forever, by unmistakable implication limits the heirs taking to the particular heirs of the grantees named as husband and wife (that is, to the issue of the marriage), who take an estate tail, which, under the Illinois statute abolishing estates tail became a fee simple, so that the grantees, Hall and wife, take life estates, and the fee simple vests in their children as tenants in common. Hall v. Hankey, 174 Fed. 139, 140, 98 C. C. A. 173.

An "estate tail general" is one limited to a man and the heirs of his body without any further specifications. A will devising lands "not only to the said (devisee) but to the heirs of his body" creates an estate tail which, by reason of Comp. Laws 1897, § 8785, abolishing estates tail is an estate in fee simple in the devisee. Rhodes v. Bouldry, 101 N. W. 206, 207, 138 Mich. 144.

A conveyance to a grantee and to the heirs of her body, reciting that if she should die without issue then the lands should revert to the grantor's heirs at law, created an "estate tail," and vested in the grantee a life estate only, under Sand. & H. Dig. § 700, providing that when by the common law any person, who would become seised in fee tail of any lands or tenements by virtue of a conveyance, such person, instead of being or becoming seised thereof in fee tail, shall be adjudged to be seised for life only, and that the remainder shall pass in fee simple absolute to the person to whom the estate tail would have first passed, according to the course of the common law. Black v. Webb, 80 S. W. 367, 368, 72 Ark. 836.

Testatrix bequeathed to her executor not less than $8,500 nor more than $10,000 for the sole use of her sons for life, then to her grandchildren, to be theirs when they reached 21, the grandchildren to have their father's part, and if any died before such age or condition fulfilled, without brothers or sisters, his share should go to testatrix's surviving grandchildren of proper age on condition fulfilled; the intent being to protect part of testatrix's estate for the benefit of her own children while they lived, then for her own flesh after they were gone. Held, that the limitation of the trust created an executory devise, and was therefore not within Code 1906, § 2765, prohibiting estates tail. Thomas v. Thomas, 53 South. 630, 632, 97 Miss. 697.

ESTATE TO BE KEPT TOGETHER

ESTHETIC

See Æsthetic.

ESTIMATE

See Containing by Estimate.

The word "estimate" precludes accuracy, and its ordinary meaning is to calculate roughly or to form an opinion from imperfect data, and the word "estimate" has no more certainty than the term "about" or "more or less." Bautovitch v. Great Southern Lumber Co., 56 South. 1026, 1027, 129 La. 857, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 848 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2493).

"Estimate," as defined by Webster, is to "judge and form an opinion of the value of, from imperfect data; * * * to fix the worth of roughly or in a general way." National Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Duncan, 98 Pac. 634, 637, 44 Colo. 472, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 340.

The word "estimate," in Rev. St. 1899, § 5858, providing that, before the council shall make any contract for building bridges, sidewalks, or sewers, an "estimate" of the cost thereof shall be made by the city engineer, or other proper officer, and submitted to the council, and no contract shall be entered into for any such work for a price exceeding the "estimate," does not mean a correct statement of the cost of such work but an approximation of such cost. The filing of a statement that the cost of a sewer would not exceed a certain amount does not comply with the statute. City of Boonville v. Rogers (Mo.) 101 S. W. 1120, 1122.

The term "estimates" is not an appropriate expression to indicate the determination of the cost of past construction; hence the plans and estimates of cost which the board of supervisors is directed to procure under San Francisco Charter, art. 12, § 3, on receipt of a petition for the purchase of a public utility, are those of the original construction and not those of the past construction or completion of existing utilities owned by any other corporation. O'Connell v. Behan, 124 Pac. 1038, 1042, 19 Cal. App. 111.

A contract for street paving required the work to be done as a whole, and not in sections, according to specifications under the direction of the city's engineer. The notice to bidders and specifications alone provided for payment on semimonthly estimates as the work progressed, with a retention of 10 per cent. on each "approximate estimate." The contract also provided that the contractor should be responsible for any work until its completion and final acceptance, and that the acceptance should not relieve the contractor of any obligation to do reliable work previously described. Held, that the word "approximate" was tautologically used to accentuate the word "estimate," which was not to be construed as a final mathematical ascertainment of what was set forth, and hence the acceptance of sections of the work by the city engineer and issuance of approximate estimates thereon to the contractor did not bar the city's right to defend, when sued for the balance due under the contract, on the ground that the work in the sections estimated did not constitute a compliance with the specifications. City of Greensboro v. Southern Pav. & Const. Co., 168 Fed. 860, 882, 94 C. C. A. 292.

A city engineer's written report to a city council that, "in compliance with my duty as such engineer, I have computed the cost of paving, * * * and find that the work should be done at a cost not to exceed $1.47 per square yard," is a sufficient compliance with Rev. St. 1899, § 5858, subd. 8, which requires a city engineer's estimate of the cost of paving before any contract is made; the word "estimate" meaning the fixing of the worth or value roughly or in a general way, sometimes from imperfect data. City of Boonville ex rel. Cosgrove v. Stephens, 141 S. W. 1111, 1116, 238 Mo. 339.

Where the estimate of the cost of the construction of a sewer totaled in gross a specified sum, and the details thereof were of service only as specifications of the particular work to be done, and a bid for the work totaled a less sum, though the price of some of the items exceeded the estimate thereof, and the amount allowed the bidder obtaining the contract for the work was less than the bid, the special tax bills issued for the cost of the work were not void, on the ground that the cost of the work exceeded the estimate, within Rev. St. 1909, § 9407, providing that no contract shall be entered into for any work for a price exceeding the estimate; an "estimate" meaning a rough calculation. Gratz v. City of Kirkwood, 145 N. W. 870, 873, 165 Mo. App. 196.

An account for building materials for a dwelling, filed for the establishment of a mechanic's lien, which omits to show the prices charged for the different items, and which, for the purpose of showing that the materials were contracted for at a gross sum, merely recites "amount of estimate, $450," is insufficient, under Code 1904, § 2476, providing that a contractor, to perfect a lien, must file an account showing the amount and character of the work done or materials furnished, the prices charged therefor, etc.; the word "estimate," defined as a valuation based on opinion and roughly made from imperfect data, etc., not conveying the idea that the materials were contracted for as an entirety at the price named. Brown & Hoof v. Cornwell, 60 S. E. 623, 625, 108 Va. 129.

The original estimates for the construction of a building estimated the lumber needed at $1,400. Considerable of the lumber included in the estimate was not furnished, and for such deficiency $226.90 was credited back; and $900 was also credited on the account for cash payment. Held, that any recovery in excess of the difference between $1,400 and the sum of the two credits was excessive, though the parties had stipulated that $1,390.06 worth of lumber was furnished under the "estimate," since the word "estimate," as used in the stipulation, referred to the original estimate, and not to extras that may have been furnished, and hence recovery for extras by reason of the stipulation was not warranted. Moorer v. Leland Lumber Co., 48 South. 621, 622, 95 Miss. 503.

Where defendant in writing agreed to pay for lumber to be furnished for a building a certain sum "on basis of your estimate," the word "estimate," taken in its ordinary meaning excludes the idea of an exact detailed schedule of material, not to be increased or diminished as the building progressed, but, on the contrary was an approximate calculation of the lumber required. Mills-Carlton Co. v. Huberty, 95 N. E. 383, 384, 84 Ohio St. 81.

Where a policy of life insurance provides that, on the surrender of the policy, the insured may withdraw in cash the full amount of the surrender value, and there is attached thereto a table of surrender values, headed "illustration of the value calculated under this policy," such table cannot be regarded as a mere "estimate," but must be construed as a part of the agreement. Sweetland v. Banker's Life Ins. Co., 105 N. Y. Supp. 627, 730.

The word "estimated," in a state statute imposed an annual tax on the capital stock of a corporation estimated on its last report, carries with it the idea of valuation rather than of mathematical apportionment. It suggests that the property reported by the corporation is to be the basis on which the assessors shall make their valuation, so that the tax is "estimated" on that property rather than fixed by mere process of multiplication or division. Powers v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 26 Sup. Ct. 556, 559, 201 U. S. 543, 50 L. Ed. 860.

As opinion

To "estimate" the amount of work done means to form an opinion from imperfect data, comparison, or experience, to calculate roughly, or to rate; and an "estimate" involves an exercise of judgment in determining the amount, importance, or magnitude of things with their other exterior relations. O'Hehir v. Central New England R. Co., 137 N. Y. Supp. 627, 633, 152 App. Div. 677.

A witness' "opinion" as to damages to property from the construction of a railroad is synonymous with "estimate," and an estimate of value, as well as of damages, may be made by one familiar with the facts who states the facts upon which he bases his "estimate." Wray v. Knoxville, L. F. & J. R. Co., 82 S. W. 471, 474, 118 Tenn. 544.

In a conveyance or contract for conveyance of land, the statement of the quantity conveyed as "estimated" "does not afford a shield against liability for false representations." Boddy v. Henry, 101 N. W. 447, 452, 126 Iowa, 31.

ESTIMATED REVENUE

The words "estimated revenue," as used in the Baltimore city charter, providing that in case of any surplus arising in any fiscal year by reason of an excess of income received from the estimated revenue over expenditures for such year the surplus shall be passed to the commissioners of finance, to be credited to the general sinking fund, do not include a loan authorized by the city to be procured for the purpose of extending the water service and constructing a reservoir. Callaway v. City of Baltimore, 57 Atl. 661, 663, 99 Md. 315.

The expression "estimated excess of revenues," in Act No. 32, p. 39, of 1902, is used in its ordinary sense, and it is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of that statute (to the effect that "no dedication of future revenues shall be made which alone, or with other prior dedications in force, shall exceed the estimated excess of revenues," etc.) that a police jury, in good faith, though not necessarily by ordinance, and not necessarily for publication, makes an estimate of the future revenues (predicated upon the rates of taxation and expenditure), which, with reasonable certainty, will show the prospective existence of the surplus appropriated or dedicated; and this, in any given case requiring it, the courts will presume to have been done, unless there is proof to the contrary. Murphy v. Police Jury, St. Mary Parish, 42 South. 979, 982, 118 La. 401.

ESTIMATED WEIGHT

"Estimated weight" is the means of ascertaining the weight by a standard fixed and adopted by dealers in structural steel. For example, steel columns, girders, and other connections necessary for the steel part of a structure, according to their dimensions, are given a standard weight by manufacturers and dealers in such materials. Hale Bros. v. Milliken, 90 Pac. 365, 369, 5 Cal. App. 344.

ESTOPPEL

See Quasi Estoppel.

"According to my Lord Coke, an estoppel is that which 'shuts a man's mouth from speaking the truth.' With this forbidding introduction a principle is announced which lies at the foundation of all fair dealing between man and man, and without which it would be impossible to administer law as a system. The harsh words which the very learned commentator upon Littleton uses in giving a definition of this principle are to be attributed to the fact that before his day 'the scholastic learning and subtle disquisition of the Norman lawyers (in the language of Blackstone) had tortured this principle so as to make it the means of great injustice; and the object of my Lord Coke was to denounce the abuse which he says had got to be "a very cunning and curious learning" and "was odious," and thereby restore the principle and make it subserve its true purpose as a plain, practical, fair, and necessary rule of law.' Estoppels must be mutual; that is, if one side is bound, the other must be. It only includes parties and privies, and does not extend to a stranger." Allred v. Smith, 47 S. E. 597, 599, 135 N. C. 443, 65 L. R. A. 924 (quoting Armfield v. Moore, 44 N. C. 157).

The word "estoppel" is sometimes used to indicate the existence of an ordinary prior paramount right in the absent party, or a general rule of law, or to indicate the conclusive effect of a judgment, or to express the rule that courts will not enforce a demand contrary to public morals, or the rule of equity that he who commits iniquity shall not have equity, or that suitors who invoke relief from equity must come into court with clean hands; but it applies to matters of fact, though one has been said to be estopped from setting up a right under the Constitution or to take inconsistent legal propositions. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co. v. Douglas County, 114 N. W. 511, 514, 134 Wis. 197, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1074.

An "estoppel" is a bar which precludes a person from denying the truth of a fact which has, in contemplation of law, become settled by the act of the party himself, either by conventional writing or by representations express or implied, in pais. If a person by his conduct induces another to believe in the existence of a particular state of facts, and the other acts thereon to his prejudice, the former is estopped as against the latter to deny that that state of facts does in truth exist. Stevenson Co. v. Bethea, 61 S. E. 99, 103, 79 S. C. 478 (citing 16 Cyc. p. 679; Lites v. Addison, 8 S. E. 214, 27 S. C. 226).

"Estoppel," as predicated upon the maxim that no one can be heard alleging his own turpitude, is a doctrine which forms part of the policy of the law by reason of its recognition by the courts, but, as the law itself is paramount as to its policy, it follows that, in matters concerning which it speaks definitely, it cannot be controlled by an estoppel which is but the creature of its creature, and that such an estoppel cannot be given the effect of subordinating the law and the policy of the law as declared by the law itself, to the will or infirmity of the citizen. Ackerman v. Lerner, 40 South. 581, 586, 116 La. 101.

An "estoppel" is that which concludes and shuts a man's mouth from speaking the truth, where to permit him to speak would allow a departure from fair dealing and render it impossible to administer law as a system. Beaufort County Lumber Co. v. Price, 56 S. E. 684, 685, 144 N. C. 50 (citing Armfield v. Moore, 44 N. C. 157).

There are three kinds of "estoppel," namely, by matter of record, by matter of writing, and by matter in pais. The ground of holding a matter of record to act as an estoppel is that a record imports such absolute verity that no person against whom it is producible shall be permitted to impeach it. Where the sureties on an official bond have been sued for a specific breach, and a judgment is entered therefor, but not for the penalty of the bond, and the judgment is paid, the state cannot thereafter sue the same sureties for breaches not alleged when the first suit was brought. State v. Sandifer, 46 S. E. 1006, 1008, 68 S. C. 204.

"An 'estoppel' may be defined, in a general sense, to be a preclusion of a person to deny the truth of a fact which has been admitted or determined under circumstances of solemnity, such as by matter of record, or by deed, or which has, by an act in pais, induced another to believe and act upon to his prejudice." The Attorney General, by making public bills and certifying that they are correct, on which he receives warrants by which he draws money from the state treasury, which bills begin, "To moneys contracted for, advanced and paid out by me * * * in the discharge of duties * * * on account of legal expenses of the insurance department," and contain items for services rendered by plaintiff, is not estopped, in an action against him for such money had and received, to assert that plaintiff did not render part of the services and had been paid for the others. Richolson v. Moloney, 63 N. E. 188, 190, 195 Ill. 575 (citing Hefner v. Vandolah, 57 Ill. 520, 11 Am. Rep. 39).

ESTOPPEL BY DEED

An "estoppel by deed" is a bar precluding a party to a deed and his privies from asserting, as against the other party and his privies, any title in derogation of the deed, or from denying the truth of any material fact therein; and a grantor cannot assert, to defeat the grantee's title, that grantor had no title at the time of the conveyance; nor can he deny the deed its full operation as such. Simmons' Adm'r v. Simmons, 150 S. W. 59, 61, 150 Ky. 85.

An "estoppel by deed" is a preclusion against competent parties to a valid sealed contract and their privies to deny its force by any evidence of inferior solemnity. Pedro v. Pedro, 127 N. Y. Supp. 997, 999, 71 Misc. Rep. 296.

There is a distinction between "estoppel by deed," commonly known as technical estoppel, and estoppel in pais or equitable estoppel, arising from act and conduct. The latter estoppel may be given in evidence under a plea of the general issue. Dickson v. New York Biscuit Co., 71 N. E. 1058, 1068, 211 Ill. 468 (citing German Fire Ins. Co. of Peoria v. Grunert, 112 Ill. 68, 1 N. E. 113; Mann v. Oberne, 15 Ill. App. 35; Welland Canal Co. v. Hathaway, 8 Wend. [N. Y.] 483, 24 Am. Dec. 51).

ESTOPPEL BY JUDGMENT

See Res Adjudicata.

ESTOPPEL BY RECORD

There is a distinction between "estoppel by record," commonly known as technical estoppel, and estoppel in pais or equitable estoppel. Dickson v. New York Biscuit Co., 71 N. E. 1058, 1068, 211 Ill. 468 (citing German Fire Ins. Co. of Peoria v. Grunert, 112 Ill. 68, 1 N. E. 113; Mann v. Oberne, 15 Ill. App. 35; Welland Canal Co. v. Hathaway, 8 Wend. [N. Y.] 483, 24 Am. Dec. 51).

ESTOPPEL BY VERDICT

Where a specific fact or question has been adjudicated in a suit, and the same fact or question is put in issue in a subsequent suit between the same parties, the determination in the former suit is conclusive on the parties in the latter suit, without regard to whether the cause of action is the same in both suits or not; and this species of estoppel is known to the law as an "estoppel by verdict," and is equally available to a plaintiff in support of his action as when offered by a defendant as a matter of defense. A judgment of the probate court allowing a party an award as a widow of a decedent is conclusive, in a proceeding by her for assignment of dower, and homestead on the validity of her marriage to decedent, as against his heirs, where the heirs appeared before the probate court and contested the award on the ground of the alleged invalidity of the marriage. Potter v. Clapp, 68 N. E. 81, 84, 203 Ill. 592, 96 Am. St. Rep. 322.

A judgment on the merits in a case is an absolute bar to a subsequent action concluding parties not only as to every matter which was offered and received to sustain or defeat the action or demand, but as to any other admissible matter which might have been offered for that purpose; but, where the second action between the same parties is on a different claim, the judgment in the prior action operates as an "estoppel" only as to those matters in issue or points controverted, on the determination of which the finding or verdict was rendered. Baldwin v. Hanecy, 68 N. E. 560, 562, 204 Ill. 281 (citing Cromwell v. Sac County, 94 U. S. 351, 24 L. Ed. 195; Riverside Co. v. Townshend, 9 N. E. 65, 120 Ill. 9).

ESTOPPEL IN PAIS

"In the broad sense of the term, 'estoppel' is a bar which precludes a person from denying the truth of a fact which has, in contemplation of law, become settled by the facts and proceedings of judicial or legislative officers, or by the act of the party himself, either by conventional writing or by representations, expressed or implied in pais. An 'estoppel' arises where a man has done some act which the policy of the law will not permit him to gainsay or deny." Pollock v. Pegues, 51 S. E. 514, 521, 72 S. C. 47 (quoting and adopting definition in Greenleaf's Evidence, c. 4; 16 Cyc. p. 679).

"Equitable estoppel" is the effect of the voluntary conduct of a party whereby he is absolutely precluded, both at law and in equity, from asserting rights which might perhaps have otherwise existed, either of property, of contract, or of remedy, as against another person, who has in good faith relied upon such conduct, and has been led thereby to change his position for the worse, and who, on his part, acquires some corresponding right, either of property, of contract, or of remedy. The conduct must be done with the intention, or at least with the expectation, that it will be acted upon by the other party, or under such circumstances that it is both natural and probable that it will be so acted upon. Holt v. Holt, 102 Pac. 187, 195, 23 Okl. 639 (quoting and adopting 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 804, 805); Memphis Consolidated Gas & Electric Co. v. Simpson, 103 S. W. 788, 790, 118 Tenn. 532 (quoting and adopting the definition in 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 804); Porter v. Goudzwaard, 127 N. W. 295, 297, 162 Mich. 158; Miller v. Ahrens, 163 Fed. 870, 876.

"The following elements must be present in order to constitute an 'estoppel' by conduct: (1) There must have been a representation or concealment of material facts. (2) The representation must have been made with knowledge of the facts. (3) The party to whom it was made must have been ignorant of the matter. (4) It must have been made with the intention that the other party would act upon it. (5) The other party must have been induced to act upon it." Dye v. Crary, 85 Pac. 1038, 1040, 18 N. M. 439, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1136 (quoting and adopting definition in Bigelow, Estop. [4th Ed.] 445; 1 Bouv. Law Dict. [Rawle's Ed.] 695; citing And. Law Dict., 16 Cyc. pp. 722, 726); Musconetcong Iron Works v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 76 Atl. 971, 972, 78 N. J. Law, 717, 20 Ann. Cas. 178 (citing *Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. "The important and primary ground of estoppel by matter in pais is that it would be fraud in a party to assert what his previous conduct had denied, when on the faith of that denial others have acted." Spence v. Renfro, 78 S. W. 597, 598, 179 Mo. 417 (citing Rice v. Bunce, 49 Mo. 231, 8 Am. Rep. 129; Campbell v. Johnson, 44 Mo. 247; Chouteau v. Goddin, 39 Mo. 229, 90 Am. Dec. 462; Taylor v. Zepp, 14 Mo. 482, 55 Am. Dec. 118; Newman v. Hook, 37 Mo. 207, 90 Am. Dec. 378); Dechenbach v. Rima, 78 Pac. 666, 667, 45 Or. 500; Tennent v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 112 S. W. 754, 762, 133 Mo. App. 845; State v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 93 N. E. 213, 222, 175 Ind. 59, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 256; Dreyfus v. W. A. Gage & Co., 36 South. 248, 250, 84 Miss. 219.

The indispensable elements of an "estoppel" are ignorance of the party who invokes the estoppel, a representation by the party estopped which misleads, and an innocent and deleterious change of position in reliance upon that representation. Williams v. Neely, 134 Fed. 1, 11, 67 C. C. A. 171, 69 L. R. A. 232.

"An 'estoppel' is where a man is concluded by his own act or acceptance to say the truth." Where a party by his statements as to matters of fact, or as to his intended abandonment of existing rights, designedly induces another to change his conduct or alter his condition in reliance upon them, he cannot be permitted to deny the truth of his statements or enforce his rights against his declared intention of abandonment. Richards v. Shepherd, 49 South. 251, 159 Ala. 663 (quoting and adopting definition given in Edmundson v. Montague, 14 Ala. 370).

An "estoppel in pais" is grounded on the principle that no man shall construct a right on his own wrong; and whatever a man has said or implied wrongfully to his own advantage, he is bound by when it may turn to his disadvantage, however false it may be in fact. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Eichel & Welkel, 130 S. W. 922, 940.

An "estoppel in pais" is conduct intended and calculated to induce, and in fact inducing, another person to alter his condition, so that it would be a fraud on him to allow the other person to take an inconsistent attitude to his detriment. Scharfenberg v. Town of New Decatur, 47 South. 95, 96, 155 Ala. 651.

"The doctrine of an 'estoppel in pais' is that where a party, by conduct or words, represents one state of facts, knowing or intending that the other party will or shall rely upon them as true, and shape his conduct by them, which representations are untrue, the party making them shall not thereafter be allowed to show their untruth or contradict the statement of fact by which he induced the action of the other party. It is essential to the application of the rule that the party to whom the statement is made shall rely upon it and shape his conduct thereby." Reisman v. Silver, 95 N. Y. Supp. 483, 484, 48 Misc. Rep. 399.

"Estoppel in pais" is applied to preclude a party from maintaining by evidence that which he has before expressly or tacitly denied, or disproving that which he has before expressly or tacitly admitted, when the other party has acted upon the faith of the admission or denial in such a manner that he will be injured unless the same is held conclusive. Shapley v. Abbott, 42 N. Y. 443, 447, 1 Am. Rep. 548.

To constitute "estoppel in pais" it is essential that the defendant should by word or act have represented the fact to be different from what he now attempts to show it to have been. Mere disappointment in expectation or breach of promise or covenant relating to the future cannot constitute an "estoppel in pais." Illinois Life Ins. Co. v. Tully, 174 Fed. 855, 365, 98 C. C. A. 259 (quoting and adopting Jackson v. Allen, 120 Mass. 64, 79).

"An 'estoppel in pais' is defined as a right arising from acts, admissions, or conduct, which have induced a change of possession in accordance with the real or apparent intention of the party against whom they are alleged." Wither v. Kansas City Sub. Belt R. Co. (Mo.) 128 S. W. 432, 439 (citing Gray v. Gray, 83 Mo. 106).

The principle of "estoppel in pais" is "that one person cannot assume a position in his business relations with another, in respect to a transaction of a pecuniary nature upon which such other, acting reasonably, has a right to rely, and, after such other has so acted, change his position to that other's prejudice, and obtain judicial aid to enable him to effectuate his fraudulent purpose." Welch v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 98 N. W. 227, 229, 120 Wis. 456.

An "estoppel" is a preclusion of a person to assert a fact which has been admitted or determined under circumstances of solemnity, or which he has by an act in pais induced another to believe and act upon to his prejudice. Robinson v. City of Vicksburg, 54 South. 858, 859, 99 Miss. 439.

To constitute "estoppel," the person sought to be estopped must do some act or make some admission with an intention of influencing the conduct of another, or that he had reason to believe would influence his conduct, and which act or admission is inconsistent with the claim he specifically proposes to make. The other party, too, must have acted upon the strength of such admission or conduct. Madson v. Spokane Valley Land & Water Co., 82 Pac. 718, 719, 40 Wash. 414, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 257 (citing New York Rubber Co. v. Rothery, 14 N. E. 269, 107 N. Y. 310, 1 Am. St. Rep. 822; Rigney v. Tacoma Light & Water Co., 88 Pac. 147, 9 Wash. 576, 26 L. R. A. 425).

"Lord Coke says: 'An "estoppel" is where a man is concluded by his own act or acceptance to say the truth.' The principle is that the acts and admissions of a party operate against him in the nature of an 'estoppel,' where in good conscience and honest dealing he ought not to be permitted to gainsay them. This is called an estoppel in pais. As a general rule a party will be concluded from denying his own acts or admissions which were expressly designed to influence the conduct of another, and did so influence, and when such denial will operate to the injury of the latter." Welland Canal Co. v. Hathaway (N. Y.) 8 Wend. 480, 483, 24 Am. Dec. 51; Dezell v. Odell (N. Y.) 3 Hill, 215, 38 Am. Dec. 628; Ray v. McMurtry, 20 Ind. 307, 83 Am. Dec. 322, * * * Memphis Consol. Gas & Electric Co. v. Simpson, 103 S. W. 788, 790, 118 Tenn. 532 (quoting and adopting the definition in Ridgway v. Morrison, 28 Ind. 201); Rogers v. Portland & B. St. Ry., 60 Atl. 713, 714, 100 Me. 86, 70 L. R. A. 574.

The doctrine of "equitable estoppel" or "estoppel in pais" is that a party may be precluded by his acts or conduct from asserting a right to the detriment or prejudice of another party who, entitled to rely on such conduct, has acted upon it. Draper v. Oswego County Fire Relief Ass'n, 82 N. E. 755, 756, 190 N. Y. 12.

The essential elements which must unite to create an equitable estoppel by conduct are that a party in good faith relied upon the representations or conduct of the other party, and thereby was led into such a course of conduct that he will be substantially prejudiced if the other be permitted to repudiate his former action or representation. O'Donnell v. McCann, 75 Atl. 999, 1005, 77 N. J. Eq. 188.

To constitute estoppel in pais, the party against whom it is sought to be enforced must have made some representation, the effect of which would be to influence the conduct of the one seeking to enforce the estoppel and inducing him to so change his position as to materially injure him, if the party making the representation is allowed to deny its truth. Pope v. Ferguson, 83 Atl. 353, 354, 82 N. J. Law, 566.

An "estoppel" "may consist of a waiver by which the plaintiff has foregone or abandoned a previously subsisting and valid cause of action." Webber v. Ingersoll, 104 N. W. 600, 601, 74 Neb. 393.

An estoppel involves the idea that a person has failed to speak when it was his duty to speak, so that he will not be allowed to speak when he desires so to do. Dudley v. Strain (Tex.) 130 S. W. 778, 784.

The doctrine of "equitable estoppel" is based upon the theory that the party to be estopped has made some misrepresentation which has misled the other party, and which it would be inequitable to permit him to deny.

Falls City Lumber Co. v. Watkins, 99 Pac. 884, 886, 53 Or. 212.

The doctrine of estoppel in pais has no application where everything is equally known to both parties or the party sought to be estopped was ignorant of the facts out of which his rights sprung, or where the other party was influenced by the acts pleaded as an estoppel. Miller v. Ahrens, 163 Fed. 870, 877 (quoting 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2500).

The doctrine of "estoppel in pais" is an equitable doctrine originally applied to prevent an advantage to be taken of strict legal rights, and the equities of the particular facts must control in applying it. Hilton v. Sloan, 108 Pac. 689, 694, 37 Utah, 359.

An "estoppel in pais" is not applicable to infants. Kirkham v. Wheeler-Osgood Co., 81 Pac. 869, 871, 39 Wash. 415, 4 Ann. Cas. 532.

Where one of two parties must lose, the loss should fall upon the one whose action or conduct has induced or made possible such loss. Pennypacker v. Latimer, 81 Pac. 55, 57, 10 Idaho, 625.

Where a party has once recognized the existence and validity of a contract, he cannot subsequently set up a technicality and seek to avoid its binding effect. Eau Claire Canning Co. v. Western Brokerage Co., 115 Ill. App. 71, 79.

The doctrine of equitable estoppel should not be implied, unless in any given case all the elements exist essential to create such estoppel. Rogers v. Portland & B. St. Ry., 60 Atl. 713-715, 100 Me. 86, 70 L. R. A. 574.

"Whether certain acts, misrepresentations, or silence on the part of a person will raise an 'equitable estoppel' against him from claiming title to real property depends largely upon the circumstances in each individual case, and such a plea is addressed to the conscience of the trial court, whether in equity and good conscience he should be allowed under the circumstances to set up and establish such a claim. True, such an estoppel may be raised in courts of law, but the principle is one of equity." Dye v. Crary, 85 Pac. 1038, 1040, 13 N. M. 439, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1136.

Equitable estoppel, so far as it relates to the trial of title to land, is a doctrine by which a party is prevented from setting up his legal title because he has through his acts, words, or silence led another to take a position in which the assertion of the legal title would be contrary to equity and good conscience. Coram v. Palmer, 58 South. 721, 722, 63 Fla. 116.

"The authorities establish the doctrine that the owners of land may by an act in pais preclude himself from asserting his legal title, but it is obvious that the doctrine should be carefully and sparingly applied, and only on the disclosure of clear and satisfactory grounds of justice and equity it is opposed to the letter of statute of frauds, and it would greatly tend to the insecurity of titles if they were allowed to be affected by parol evidence of light or doubtful character. To authorize the finding of an estoppel in pais against the legal owner of the land there must be shown, we think, either actual fraud or fault or negligence equivalent to fraud on his part in concealing his title, or that he was silent when the circumstances would impel an honest man to speak." No definition of an "equitable estoppel" can well be formulated that will include all cases that should properly come within its purview. Clark v. Hindman, 79 Pac. 56, 60, 46 Or. 67.

As a general rule, if a man knowingly suffers another to purchase and expend money on land under an erroneous opinion of title, though he does it passively by looking on, without making known his claim, he shall not afterwards be permitted to exercise his legal right against that person. This rule is especially applicable where the owner has encouraged the parties to deal with each other in such sale and purchase. "To constitute an 'estoppel' by misrepresentation or concealment of facts, certain prerequisite facts must be proved. As fraud is not presumed, but when charged must be strictly proved, the authorities uniformly hold that the evidence to establish the essential elements of an estoppel by conduct or misrepresentation must be clear, precise, and unequivocal. And it has been held that this rule should be strictly applied where the estoppel is invoked against a claim to real estate. The doctrine is opposed to the letter of the statute of frauds and would greatly tend to the insecurity of titles if they were allowed to be affected by parol evidence of light and doubtful character. It is held that the facts necessary to work an estoppel must appear affirmatively." Pollock v. Pegues, 51 S. E. 514, 521, 72 S. C. 47 (citing 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 803).

As available in law

"Estoppels by matter in pais, as distinguished from estoppels by record or deed, are sometimes called 'equitable estoppels,' because they originated in courts of equity. But it is not meant by this that they are not available in courts of law, or are cognizable only in courts of equity. Such estoppels were early recognized in courts of law, and came to be so readily and freely sustained as matter of defense at law that it is neither necessary nor permissible to resort to equity for the mere purpose of obtaining the benefit of such an estoppel, when there is not otherwise a ground of equitable jurisdiction." Anglo-American Land, Mortgage & Agency Co. v. Lombard, 182 Fed. 721, 733, 68 C. C. A. 89 (citing Barnard v. German-American Seminary, 13 N. W. 811, 49 Mich. 444; Vermont Copper Mining Co. v. Ormsby, 47 Vt. 709, 713; Martin v. Maine Cent. Ry. Co., 21 Atl. 740, 83 Me. 100; Drexel v. Berney, 7 Sup. Ct. 1200, 122 U. S. 241, 253, 30 L. Ed.

"Estoppels in pais are called equitable estoppels, not because their recognition is peculiar to equitable tribunals, but because they arise upon facts which render their application in the protection of rights equitable and just." The defense of equitable estoppel is as available at law as in equity. Hoge v. Fidelity Loan & Trust Co., 48 S. E. 494, 495, 103 Va. 1 (quoting Barnard v. German American Seminary, 13 N. W. 811, 49 Mich. 444); Ming v. Olster, 92 S. W. 808, 900, 195 Mo. 460 (quoting and adopting definition in 16 Cyc. p. 682).

An "estoppel in pais" establishes rights and determines remedies, and it is of equitable origin though applicable in courts of law, and its office is to show what equity and good conscience requires under the particular circumstances of a case, irrespective of what might be the legal rights of the parties. Holmes v. Brooks, 80 Atl. 773, 774, 84 Conn. 512.

"Estoppel in pais," like waiver, is recognized at law as well as in equity. "Estoppel in pais" and waiver are in insurance law employed as synonymous terms and used indiscriminately. German American Ins. Co. v. Hyman, 94 Pac. 27, 32, 42 Colo. 156, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 77.

"Estoppels in pais" are called 'equitable estoppels' because they arise upon facts which render their application, in the protection of rights, equitable and just, and they are just as readily and freely recognized in courts of law as in courts of equity." Murphy v. Dafoe, 99 N. W. 86, 89, 18 S. D. 42 (quoting headnote in Barnard v. Ger. Am. Sem. 13 N. W. 811, 49 Mich. 444).

"Estoppels in pais" originated in equity. They stand on principles of refined ethics and were always ahead of equity jurisdiction. The doctrine was merely borrowed by courts of law as a convenience. That the law has been enriched and enlarged by such borrowing principle ought not to oust courts of equity from enforcing the ancient principles of equity, for the jurisdiction of equity often runs concurrently with that of law. In proceedings to recover land, matter constituting an estoppel in pais may be relied on by defendants as an equitable counterclaim on which to base a prayer for affirmative relief, though it is also a sufficient defense at law to a suit in ejectment. Hubbard v. Slavens, 117 S. W. 1104, 1110, 218 Mo. 598.

"Estoppel in pais," a creation of equity, has come to be applied at law as well as those matters of estoppel by deed or record.

Wright v. Williams (Ky.) 77 S. W. 1128, 1129.

Intent

The essential and necessary elements of an "estoppel" are that it must have been made with the intention that the other party should act on it, and the other party must have been induced to act on it. Beaman v. Stewart, 74 Pac. 842, 844, 19 Colo. App. 222 (citing Patterson v. Hitchcock, 3 Colo. 533, 536).

"Estoppel" precludes a person from denying what he has said of the implication from his silence or conduct upon which another has acted. There must be some intended deception in the conduct or declarations, or such gross negligence as to amount to constructive fraud, and, in respect to the title of real property, the party claiming to have been influenced by the conduct or declarations must have not only been destitute of knowledge of the true state of the title, but also of any convenient and available means of acquiring knowledge. Crary v. Dye, 28 Sup. Ct. 360, 362, 208 U. S. 515, 52 L. Ed. 595.

Conduct creating an estoppel may be without an intention to deceive or mislead, if such as to induce a reasonable man to act on it. Globe Nav. Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co., 81 Pac. 826, 829, 39 Wash. 299.

In the absence of expressly proved fraud, "estoppel" cannot be based on acts or conduct of the party sought to be estopped, where such conduct is as consistent with honest purpose or with an absence of negligence as with their opposites. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. Arrott, 135 Fed. 750, 757, 68 C. C. A. 388 (affirming Arrott v. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co., 181 Fed. 457).

If a person by his words or conduct expressly or impliedly represents to another that a certain state of facts exists, and thereby induces the other to act in reliance on said representation, he will be "estopped" to deny the nature of the truth of the representation to the other's prejudice, and by the application of this doctrine an agency may be created of rights by estoppel, irrespective of the actual intention, and even though it may be conceded that there was no agency in fact. If a person knowingly permits another to act for him in a particular transaction, or otherwise clothes him, either intentionally or by negligence, with an apparent authority to act for him therein, he will be estopped to deny the agency as against third persons, who in good faith, and in the exercise of reasonable prudence, deal with the apparent agent, in the belief that his apparent authority is real. President, etc., of City Bank of New Haven v. Thorp, 64 Atl. 205, 209, 79 Conn. 194.

It is unnecessary to create an estoppel that the conduct of the parties should be characterized by intent to deceive. Rogers v. Portland & B. St. Ry., 60 Atl. 713-715, 100 Me. 86, 70 L. R. A. 574.

Knowledge by party claiming benefit

To the application of the principle of "equitable estoppel," it is essential that the party claiming to have been influenced by the conduct or declarations of another to his injury was himself not only destitute of knowledge of the state of facts, but also destitute of any available means of acquiring such knowledge, and a party setting up an estoppel must have acted in reliance on the conduct or representations of the party sought to be estopped, and one who was cognizant of the facts of a claim to the premises is charged with knowledge of the equities arising out of such facts. Gallagher v. Northrup, 74 N. E. 711, 712, 215 Ill. 563 (citing 16 Cyc. p. 738).

The truth concerning facts relied on to create an "estoppel" must be unknown to the party claiming the benefit of the estoppel at the time of the conduct creating the estoppel. Holt v. Holt, 102 Pac. 187, 195, 23 Okl. 639; Pond v. Pond's Estate, 65 Atl. 97, 98, 79 Vt. 352, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 212.

To constitute estoppel, there must be want of knowledge of the matter in issue on the part of the party relying on the estoppel. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Henby (Ind.) 97 N. E. 313, 317; Campbell v. Golden Cycle Min. Co., 141 Fed. 610, 616, 73 C. C. A. 260.

To create an estoppel the conduct, representations or silence of the person claimed to be estopped must be made in the presence of a person having no knowledge of the true state of the facts, and who did not have the same means of ascertaining the truth, as did the other party. Rogers v. Portland & B. St. Ry., 60 Atl. 713-716, 100 Me. 86, 70 L. R. A. 574.

Knowledge by party to be estopped

The facts relied on to create an "estoppel" must be known to the party estopped at the time of his conduct, or at least the circumstances must be such that knowledge of them is necessarily imputed to him. Holt v. Holt, 102 Pac. 187, 195, 23 Okl. 639.

To constitute equitable estoppel, the false representation or concealment must have been made or done knowingly by the party estopped, and his conduct relied upon and acted upon by the one claiming an estoppel to his injury. Freeland v. Williamson, 119 S. W. 560, 564, 220 Mo. 217.

An indispensable element of an "equitable estoppel" is knowledge and misrepresentation of facts by the parties to be estopped. Campbell v. Golden Cycle Min. Co., 141 Fed. 610, 616, 73 C. C. A. 260.

One of the essential elements of an "estoppel in pais" is knowledge of the facts on which the estoppel is sought to be predicated. An estoppel in pais is never presumed, but must be proved. Crosthwaite v. Lebus, 41 South. 853, 854, 146 Ala. 525.

"The ground upon which an estoppel proceeds is fraud, actual or constructive, on the part of the person sought to be estopped." "Estoppel" by acquiescence in silence is founded on knowledge and assent; and, unless the party against whom the estoppel invoked knew all the material facts, there is no estoppel. Tennent v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 112 S. W. 754, 761, 133 Mo. App. 345 (citing and adopting 2 Herm. Estop. § 944; Jones, Pledges [2d Ed.] §§ 647b-743; Hayward v. Elliot Nat. Bank, 96 U. S. 611, 24 L. Ed. 885; Hill v. Finigan, 19 Pac. 494, 77 Cal. 267, 11 Am. St. Rep. 279; Downer v. Whittier, 11 N. E. 585, 144 Mass. 448; Earle v. Grant, 14 R. I. 228).

Legal estoppel distinguished

While at common law estoppel was founded on deeds and records of courts, equitable estoppel arises out of the facts and circumstances. Carruthers v. Whitney, 105 Pac. 831, 833, 56 Wash. 327, 134 Am. St. Rep. 1114.

"Estoppels" by matter in pais, as distinguished from estoppels by record or deed, are sometimes called "equitable estoppels" because they originated in courts of equity, but they are also fully cognizable in courts of law. Anglo-American Land, Mortgage & Agency Co. v. Lombard, 132 Fed. 721, 733, 68 C. C. A. 89.

There is a distinction between estoppel by deed or record, commonly known as "technical estoppel," and estoppel in pais, or "equitable estoppel," arising from act or conduct. The latter estoppel may be given in evidence under a plea of the general issue. Dickson v. New York Biscuit Co., 71 N. E. 1058, 1068, 211 Ill. 468 (citing German Fire Ins. Co. of Peoria v. Grunert, 1 N. E. 113, 112 Ill. 68; Mann v. Oberne, 15 Ill. App. 85; Welland Canal Co. v. Hathaway [N. Y.] 8 Wend. 483, 24 Am. Dec. 51).

Prejudice to party claiming benefit

One to invoke the doctrine of estoppel in pais must show that he was misled to his prejudice by the conduct of which he complains. Yellowstone County v. First Trust & Savings Bank of Billings, 128 Pac. 596, 599, 46 Mont. 439.

"'Equitable estoppel' is defined as a right arising from acts, admissions, or conduct which have induced a change of position in accordance with a real or apparent intention of the party against whom they are alleged. Dye v. Crary, 85 Pac. 1038, 1040, 13 N. M. 439, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1136 (quoting and adopting definition in Bigelow, Estop. [4th Ed.] 445).

Estoppel is a rule of law which prevents a party from asserting his right when he has so conducted himself that it would be contrary to equity and good conscience for him to allege and prove the truth. His conduct need not be such as to deceive or mislead, but his acts, declarations, or silence must be of such a character as to have the natural effect of influencing the person to whom they are addressed to do or not to do, to his detriment, what he would not have otherwise done. Holt v. New England Telephone & Telegraph Co., 85 Atl. 159, 160, 110 Me. 10.

To create an "estoppel by conduct," the party sought to be estopped must have caused the other party to occupy a more disadvantageous position than that which he would have occupied, except for such conduct. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Robinett & Green, 72 S. E. 668, 672, 112 Va. 754.

To constitute an estoppel in pais, the party claiming such estoppel should have proceeded upon the admission, or declaration, or statement, or whatever it may be to his prejudice. Acklin v. Parker, 29 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 625, 626.

"Estoppel en pais" arises only where the other party has been led to change his position. Des Allemands Lumber Co. v. Morgan City Timber Co., 41 South. 382, 347, 117 La. 1; Campbell v. Golden Cycle Min. Co., 141 Fed. 610, 616, 73 C. C. A. 260; Powers v. Wells, 91 N. E. 717, 720, 244 Ill. 558; Cartun v. Myers, 82 Atl. 14, 78 N. J. Eq. 303; Dent v. Smith, 92 Pac. 307, 308, 78 Kan. 381.

An "estoppel in pais," on the ground of fraud, is personal to the particular creditor defrauded, and does not pass the property so as to inure to the benefit of creditors generally. "To constitute such an estoppel, a party must have designedly made an admission inconsistent with the defense or claim which he proposes to set up and another party have, with his knowledge and consent, so acted on that admission that he will be injured by allowing the admission to be disproved; and this injury must be coextensive with the estoppel." Ellison v. Ganiard, 79 N. E. 450, 457, 167 Ind. 471 (quoting and adopting definition in Audenried v. Betteley, 5 Allen [87 Mass.] 382, 81 Am. Dec. 755); Marion Trust Co. v. Bennett, 82 N. E. 782, 786, 169 Ind. 346, 124 Am. St. Rep. 228 (quoting and adopting the definition in Audenried v. Betteley, 5 Allen [87 Mass.] 382, 81 Am. Dec. 755).

Under Civ. Code 1895, § 5150, an essential element of every "estoppel in pais" is that the person invoking the estoppel has acted thereon to his injury and hurt, and one invoking the conduct of another as an estoppel in pais must show that he has acted thereon to his detriment, or has been hurt thereby, before he can successfully urge such conduct as an estoppel in pais. Hancock v. King, 66 S. E. 949, 950, 183 Ga. 734.

There can be no "estoppel" unless some one has been caused to act to his injury or hurt by the conduct of the party sought to be estopped. It must be based upon fraud, actual or constructive. Franklin v. Texas Savings, etc., Inv. Ass'n (Tex.) 119 S. W. 1166, 1168.

"To constitute an 'estoppel' it is not sufficient to show that the language, acts, or conduct of one might have misled a party to his prejudice; but it must affirmatively appear that such party was in fact misled or induced by such acts, conduct, or language to do something that he would not otherwise have done except for such acts, language, or conduct." McQueen v. Bank of Edgemont, 107 N. W. 208, 209, 20 S. D. 378 (quoting and adopting definition in Sutton v. Consolidated Apex Min. Co., 89 N. W. 1020, 15 S. D. 410).

The essence of "estoppel in pais," arising from misrepresentation or concealment of material facts, is that the party relying on the estoppel was misled to his prejudice, by reason of the silence of the other party, when in equity and good conscience he ought to have spoken, or by reason of the affirmative acts or conduct of such other party. Kennedy v. Grand Fraternity, 92 Pac. 971, 976, 36 Mont. 325, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 78.

"In order to create an 'estoppel in pais,' the party pleading it must have been misled to his injury; that is, he must have suffered a loss of a substantial character or have been induced to alter his position for the worse in some material respect." Schwab v. Edge, 64 Atl. 80, 81, 214 Pa. 602 (quoting and adopting definition in 16 Cyc. p. 744).

The substance of estoppel is the inducement of another to act to his prejudice. Steffens v. Nelson, 102 N. W. 871, 873, 94 Minn. 365.

Where one by his conduct induces another to act on the supposition that certain conditions exist, he will not be heard to deny their existence, where the other would be prejudiced by such denial. Anthes v. Schroeder, 103 N. W. 1072, 1073, 74 Neb. 172.

In order that a person may have a standing in equity to claim rights against another on the ground of estoppel, he must show that he changed his position reasonably relying on the conduct of such person so that if the latter were allowed to change his attitude he would thereby be prejudiced. McDougald v. New Richmond Roller Mills Co., 103 N. W. 244, 247, 125 Wis. 121.

Ratification distinguished

The distinction between "ratification" and "estoppel in pais" is that in the former case the party is bound because of his intention, assent, or ratification in fact, while in the latter he is bound, notwithstanding there was no such intention, because, unless the law treated him as legally bound, the other party would be prejudiced and defrauded by his conduct. Stiebel v. Haigney, 119 N. Y. Supp. 455, 458, 134 App. Div. 516.

The substance of "estoppel" is the inducement to another to act to his prejudice, and is distinguished from ratification in that the latter is confirmation after conduct. Steffens v. Nelson, 102 N. W. 871, 873, 94 Minn. 365 (quoting Bigelow, Estoppel [5th Ed.] pp. 456, 457).

Reliance on acts or representations

In order for one to be estopped by his conduct, the other party must have relied thereon. Scottish-American Mortgage Co. v. Bunkley, 41 South. 502, 503, 68 Miss. 641, 117 Am. St. Rep. 763 (citing Pom. Eq. Jur. § 805; Houston v. Witherspoon, 8 South. 515, 68 Miss. 188, 190; Hignite v. Hignite, 4 South. 345, 65 Miss. 417, 7 Am. St. Rep. 673; 7 Ballard, Real Prop. p. 40); Reisman v. Silver, 95 N. Y. Supp. 483, 484, 48 Misc. Rep. 399; Maryland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Ruth, 68 Atl. 358, 361, 106 Md. 644, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 427, 124 Am. St. Rep. 506, 14 Ann. Cas. 576; Cartun v. Myers, 82 Atl. 14, 19, 78 N. J. Eq. 303; Dent v. Smith, 92 Pac. 307, 308, 76 Kan. 381.

"There can be no 'estoppel' unless the party alleging it relied upon the representation, whether in words, acts, or silence, of the party to be estopped, was induced to act by it, and, thus relying and induced, did take some action." Royce v. Carpenter, 66 Atl. 888, 892, 80 Vt. 37.

One cannot be held to have reasonably relied on assurance by another of authority from a minor to bind him as regards a sale of his real estate, or rely on a mere verbal assurance of such authority as to one not a minor; where opportunity to know the truth of the matter is open, and there is no reasonable ground for not dealing with the owner himself. McDougald v. New Richmond Roller Mills Co., 103 N. W. 244, 247, 125 Wis. 121.

The doctrine of "equitable estoppel" or "estoppel in pais" is that a party may be precluded by his acts or conduct from asserting a right to the detriment or prejudice of another party who, entitled to rely on such conduct, has acted upon it. Draper v. Oswego County Fire Relief Ass'n, 82 N. E. 755, 756, 190 N. Y. 12.

To constitute an "equitable estoppel," there must have been not only a false representation or concealment of the facts, but they must have been made knowingly by the one to be estopped, and believed and acted upon by the one claiming the estoppel. Freeland v. Williamson, 119 S. W. 560, 564, 220 Mo. 217 (citing Blodgett v. Perry, 10 S. W. 891, 97 Mo. 272, 10 Am. St. Rep. 307; Scrutchfield v. Sauter, 24 S. W. 137, 119 Mo. 623).

Representations

The term "equitable estoppel in pais" signifies an estoppel by misrepresentation.

Simmons' Adm'r v. Simmons, 150 S. W. 59, 61, 150 Ky. 85.

The elements essential to "equitable estoppel," or estoppel by misrepresentation, are: A misrepresentation of a material fact respecting subject-matter in which the parties have an interest or are dealing; the existence of a legal duty by the party sought to be estopped to the person asserting the estoppel, whether under the law of negligence or of deceit; and a violation of the duty in such a manner that the estoppel asserter could maintain an action for damages. Conway Nat. Bank v. Pease, 82 Atl. 1068, 1070, 76 N. H. 319.

"Estoppel" cannot be predicated upon mere promises, expressions of intention, expectation, hope, or belief. "The only case in which a representation as to the future can be held to operate as an estoppel is where it relates to an intended abandonment of an existing right and is made to influence others, and by which they have been induced to act." Illinois Life Ins. Co. v. Tully, 174 Fed. 355, 365, 98 C. O. A. 259 (quoting and adopting Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mowry, 96 U. S. 547, 24 L. Ed. 674).

"The principle of 'equitable estoppel' or 'estoppel in pais' is that where one party has, by his representations, induced the other party to a transaction to give him an advantage, which it would be against equity and good conscience for him to assert, he would not, in a court of justice, be permitted to avail himself of that advantage. * * * Insurance contracts are within this principle, and equity will interpose, not only in cases of fraud, but also of mistakes, where a policy is drawn up in form different from the application, or anything is omitted which it is the duty of the company to insert or indorse on the instrument. * * * The doctrine of equitable estoppel has, especially in insurance cases, been extended and applied at law, as well as in equity, by adjudication of the courts of last resort in many other states, and the current and weight of judicial precedent and authority in this country have established the proposition that, in such cases, the estoppel is equally available in either tribunal." Continental Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 68 Atl. 277, 279, 107 Md. 96 (citing National Fire Ins. Co. of Baltimore v. Crane, 16 Md. 260, 77 Am. Dec. 289; Maryland Fire Ins. Co. v. Gusdorf, 43 Md. 506; Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, 80 U. S. [13 Wall.] 222, 20 L. Ed. 617).

Estoppel by misrepresentation, or equitable estoppel, is the effect of the voluntary conduct of a party whereby he is absolutely precluded, both at law and in equity, from asserting rights which might perhaps have otherwise existed, either of property, of contract, or of remedy, as against another person who in good faith relied upon such conduct and has been led thereby to change his position for the worse, and who on his part acquires some corresponding right either of control or remedy. Vallancey v. Hunt, 129 N. W. 455, 459, 20 N. D. 579, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 473.

The doctrine of "equitable estoppel" is based on the ground of promoting the equity and justice of the individual case, and it is not to be carried further than the end for which the estoppel is created. A person who intentionally or by culpable negligence induces another to act on his representations is estopped from denying the truth, and, under the circumstances creating the estoppel, representations made by words, acts, or silence, when duty requires the party to speak, are conclusively presumed to be true as against him and in favor of the person whom he misled. Cleveland, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moore, 82 N. E. 52, 61, 170 Ind. 328 (citing 2 Herman, Estoppel and Res Judicata, §§ 782, 749, 788).

The doctrine of "equitable estoppel" or estoppel in pais involves a question of legal ethics. It lies at the foundation of morals, and "applies whenever a party has made a representation by word or conduct which he cannot in equity and in conscience prove to be false." In most instances, whether the acts or admissions shall operate as an estoppel must depend upon the circumstances of the particular case. Where a mortgagee, who loaned money on the security of a mortgage of real property, the deed to which the mortgagor had forged, was, through her attorney, aware, the day before the loan was made, that the owner had not conveyed his land to the mortgagor, she and her attorney could not have relied on a previous statement of the owner that he had sold his land to the mortgagor, and the owner was not estopped by his statement from asserting his right to have the mortgage declared void as a cloud on his title. Williams v. Ketcham, 77 N. E. 285-288, 37 Ind. App. 506.

Conduct, declarations, or silence, relied on to create an equitable estoppel, must be made to or in the presence of a person known to have an interest in the subject-matter, and must be such as would influence the conduct of the person to whom it is addressed. Rogers v. Portland & B. St. Ry., 60 Atl. 713-715, 100 Me. 86, 70 L. R. A. 574.

Where false representations are made by a vendor, the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel may rest on the principle that one who by representing that a certain state of facts exists has misled another is precluded from denying the truth of such representations and from setting up a claim inconsistent with the facts as represented. Westerman v. Corder, 119 Pac. 868, 870, 86 Kan. 239, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 500, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 60.

"Estoppel by misrepresentation" generally involves some misrepresentation of a past or existing fact. Hence, generally representations de futuro do not form the basis of waiver or estoppel. It cannot be a basis for estoppel to assert conditions, in a fire policy against incumbering the property without consent written on the policy, that insured, when applying for the policy, told the agent he intended to put a small mortgage on the property, as he did after obtaining the policy, and that the agent told him this would make no difference; these matters not relating to a known or existing fact, but to something intended to be done in the future. McCarty v. Piedmont Mut. Ins. Co., 62 S. E. 1, 2, 81 S. C. 152, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 729

Silence

"Silence" is a species of conduct, and constitutes an implied representation of the existence of facts in question, and the estoppel therefrom is accordingly a species of estoppel by misrepresentation. When silence is of such character and under such circumstances that it would become a fraud on the other party to permit the silent party to deny what his silence has induced the other to believe and act upon, it will operate as an estoppel. Carmine v. Bowen, 64 Atl. 932, 984, 104 Md. 198, 9 Ann. Cas. 1135.

To accomplish an "estoppel" by silence or acquiescence it must appear: First, that the party against whom the "estoppel" is invoked has stood by and seen the other party committing an act infringing upon his rights; and, second, that his failure to speak has induced the person committing the act to believe that he assents to its being committed. Crisman v. Lanterman, 87 Pac. 89, 92, 149 Cal. 647, 117 Am. St. Rep. 167 (citing Carpy v. Dowdell, 47 Pac. 695, 115 Cal. 677).

Willfully permitting another to deal with property with the intention in the mind of the true owner to actually deceive and mislead is not an essential element of "estoppel." If one man knowingly, though he does it passively by looking on, suffers another to purchase and expend money on land under an erroneous opinion of title without making known his claim, he shall not afterwards be permitted to exercise his legal right against such person. An instruction on such estoppel was not erroneous for omitting the words "intent or design." Lydick v. Gill, 94 N. W. 109, 112, 68 Neb. 273.

For the silence of a party to constitute an estoppel against him, the party in whose favor it is invoked must have been misled into doing that which he would not have done otherwise. Bragdon v. McShea, 107 Pac. 916, 919, 26 Okl. 35.

There is a species of estoppel known as "estoppel by silence," which arises in a case where a person who, by force of circumstances, is under a duty to another to speak refrains from so doing, and thereby leads the other to believe in the existence of a state of facts, in reliance upon which he acts to his prejudice. Such silence constitutes acquiescence, and acquiescence of a principal in the unauthorized acts of his agent implies ratification. Technically, perhaps, there is this distinction between ratification by silence and estoppel arising therefrom. Ratification acts by conferring the necessary power on the agent, while estoppel acts by preventing the denial of the fact that the agent was originally clothed with the necessary power; but, by whatever name it may be called, its effect is the same. Where a physician employed by the local agent of a railroad company to treat an injured employé reported to the general superintendent that he had been so employed, it was a question for the jury whether the railroad was estopped to deny ratification. Hall v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 65 Atl. 278, 280, 27 R. I. 525.

An "equitable estoppel," bottomed on silence, arises where there is not only a duty to speak; but where silence amounts to a legal fraud in that it thereby misleads the other party ignorant of the truth, and so where both parties know the truth, there can be no estoppel by silence. Wingert v. Snouffer & Ford, 108 N. W. 1035, 1040, 134 Iowa, 97.

An "estoppel" does not require the element of designed fraud. It may arise from silence as well as words, where there is a duty to speak, and the party on whom the duty rests has an opportunity to speak and, knowing the circumstances requiring him to speak, keeps silent. Where a son, who was engaged in the mercantile pursuit, was indebted to his father, that the father remained silent at an interview between the son and one of the son's creditors, in which the creditor declared that he would extend further credit to the son if he would make a disclosure of his financial standing by producing his books, did not estop the father to assert his claim after the death of the son, in the absence of a showing that the son's books did not disclose an indebtedness due the father. In re Saunders, 113 N. Y. Supp. 251, 253, 129 App. Div. 406 (citing Thompson v. Simpson, 28 N. E. 632, 128 N. Y. 289).

When one party to a cause, by his silence when it was his duty to speak, has naturally induced conduct on the part of his adversary, he is estopped to take advantage of any act or omission so induced to the latter's disadvantage. Fair Haven & W. R. Co. v. City of New Haven, 60 Atl. 651, 654, 77 Conn. 667; Rogers v. Portland & B. St. Ry., 60 Atl. 713-716, 100 Me. 86, 70 L. R. A. 574.

Waiver distinguished

The defenses of laches, waiver, and estoppel are in a certain sense akin to each other, and run into each other; yet they are distinct defenses. "Laches," with some supporting circumstances, may run into waiver, and likewise into estoppel; but each has its own individuality. "Waiver" may run into "estoppel." Berwind-White Coal Min. Co. v. Metropolitan S. S. Co., 173 Fed. 806, 809.

"Waiver" is sometimes the express abandonment of a right. More frequently it is implied from acts that are inconsistent with its continued assertion. * * * 'Estoppel' is the shield of justice interposed for the protection of those who have not been wise or strong enough to protect themselves. It is the special grace of the court, authorized and permitted to preserve equities that would otherwise be sacrificed to cunning and fraud." Johnson v. Aetna Ins. Co., 51 S. E. 339, 341, 123 Ga. 404, 107 Am. St. Rep. 92 (quoting and adopting definition in Ostrander, Fire Ins. § 366).

Waiver and "estoppel," as applied to insurance law, are identical. Hopkins v. Northwestern Nat. Life. Ins. Co., 88 Pac. 1019, 1021, 41 Wash. 592.

While the terms "waiver" and "estoppel," as applied to the law of insurance contracts, are usually considered as synonymous, yet there are some essential differences between them, as a waiver involves the act or conduct of one of the parties to the contract only, and is the intentional relinquishment of a known right, and does not necessarily imply that one has been misled to his prejudice, while an estoppel involves the act or conduct of both parties, and may arise where there is no intent to mislead, and also involves the misleading of one party to his prejudice. Webster v. State Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 69 Atl. 319, 320, 81 Vt. 75.

That, in an action on an employer's liability policy, plaintiff alleged that defendant "waived" the right of objection that a claim was not covered by the policy, did not restrict it to a recovery in accordance with the doctrine of waiver, if the facts showed an estoppel; the terms "waiver" and "estoppel" being sometimes loosely used interchangeably, especially with reference to situations arising under insurance policies. Humes Const. Co. v. Philadelphia Casualty Co., 79 Atl. 1, 3, 32 R. I. 246, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 906.

"Waiver" of a right or benefit may be established by the actions, declarations, acquiescence, or silence of a party, as well as by his expressed consent and approval. It may be said to occur wherever one in possession of a right conferred by law or contract, and knowing the attendant facts, does or forbears to do something inconsistent with the right, or of his intention to rely upon it, in which he is said to have waived it; and he is "estopped" from claiming anything by reason of it afterward. While it is not in the proper sense of the term a species of "estoppel," yet, where a party to a transaction induces another to act upon the reasonable belief that he has waived or will waive certain rights, remedies, or objections which he is entitled to assert, he will be estopped to insist upon such rights, remedies, or objections to the prejudice of the one misled. In order to work an estoppel, it is not necessary that acts or declarations should be made to mislead, but it is sufficient if they were calculated to and did in fact mislead. Marine Iron Works v. Wiess, 148 Fed. 145, 153, 78 C. C. A. 279 (quoting and adopting statements in Biah. Cont. § 792; 16 Cyc. p. 805; Swain v. Seamens, 9 Wall. [76 U. S.] 274, 19 L. Ed. 554).

A "waiver" is a voluntary and intentional relinquishment of a known right, and may be shown by the express contract or other affirmative act of the party charged therewith, or it may be inferred from such conduct as warrants the conclusion that a waiver was intended. The term "waiver" generally implies an intention on the part of the person possessing some right under the contract or the law to relinquish it for the benefit of another. It is ordinarily personal, and, in the absence of some special agreement or consideration, its existence is to be determined solely from the conduct of the parties making it, independent of the acts of the other party affected. It is distinguished from "estoppel," in that this personal element is not an essential of estoppel. Nor in estoppel is the intention to relinquish a right necessarily present; estoppel in pais arising in a case where, by the fault of one person, another has been induced, ignorantly or innocently, to change his position for the worse, and it being essential to an estoppel that the representation or concealment relied on must be made with the intention that the other party shall act or rely on it, that the opposite party must have been induced to act, and must have acted to his injury thereon. Johnson v. Spencer, 96 N. E. 1041, 1042, 49 Ind. App. 166; Same v. Roberts, 96 N. E. 1043, 49 Ind. App. 697.

"This court has always recognized the distinction between waiver and 'estoppel,' and holds that a waiver need not be based either on a new agreement or an estoppel. In re Millers' & Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 106 N. W. 485, 488, 97 Minn. 98, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 231, 7 Ann. Cas. 1144.

"'Waiver' and 'estoppel' are not synonymous terms. Waiver belongs in a sense to the family of estoppel, and yet estoppel in pais has connections that are no kin to waiver. Waiver is voluntary and intentional; estoppel in pais may arise from an involuntary and unintentional act. 'Estoppel' results from an act which operates to the injury of the other party, and there may be a waiver, although the opposite party is beneficially affected. Estoppel may arise even as between consistent remedies, but it depends rather upon what a party caused his adversary to do, while waiver depends upon what one himself intends to do. Kennedy v. Man- ry, 66 S. E. 29, 31, 6 Ga. App. 816 (citing French v. Seamans, 48 N. Y. Supp. 9, 13, 21 Misc. Rep. 722, 726; Peabody v. Maguire, 12 Atl. 630, 79 Me. 572, 585; Austin v. Welch, 72 S. W. 881, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 526; Dailey v. Kennedy, 31 N. W. 125, 64 Mich. 208; Cowenhoven v. Ball, 23 N. E. 470, 118 N. Y. 234; Robb v. Vos, 15 Sup. Ct. 4, 155 U. S. 13, 39 L. Ed. 52).

While waivers and "estoppels" are theoretically very different things, and the distinction between them is one easy to preserve when express waivers are under consideration, it is nevertheless true that the dividing line between waivers implied from conduct and estoppels oftentimes become so shadowy that in the law of insurance the two terms have come to be quite commonly used interchangeably. When the term "waivers" is so used, however, the elements of an estoppel almost invariably appear, and it is quite apparent that it is employed to designate, not a pure waiver, but one which has come into existence of effectiveness through the application of the principles underlying estoppels. Where an insurer under a policy containing a provision that no representative of the company should have power to waive any power or condition thereof, sent a general agent to insured after a fire, who, after he was furnished by insured with certain information, told him that there were no further papers for him to make out, the company was estopped to deny waiver of proof of loss and the fact that plaintiff pleaded a waiver instead of an estoppel was of no consequence, since an estoppel in pais need not be pleaded. Bernhard v. Rochester German Ins. Co., 65 Atl. 134, 136, 79 Conn. 388, 8 Ann. Cas. 298.

ESTRAY

An "estray" is an animal, the owner of which cannot be found, or any animal which is away from its accustomed range (Laws 1908, p. 80, § 1). State v. Cunningham, 90 Pac. 755, 756, 35 Mont. 547.

The primary meaning of the word "traveling" is passing from place to place. Whether an animal which came out of a pasture and walked off a defective bridge on the highway was a "traveler" on the bridge, within the meaning of a statute, or an "estray" depends on whether the owner was guilty of contributory negligence. Howrigan v. Town of Bakersfield, 64 Atl. 1130, 1131, 79 Vt. 249, 9 Ann. Cas. 282.

ESTREPEMENT

See Writ of Estrepeement.

ESTUARY

An "estuary" is that part of the mouth or lower course of a river flowing into the sea which is subject to tides, and, specifically, an enlargement of a river channel towards its mouth, in which the movement of the tide is very prominent. Vail v. McGuire, 96 Pac. 1042, 1043, 50 Wash. 187.

ET AL.

Impleaded synonymous, see Impleaded.

"Et al.," in everyday use in writs, pleadings, styles of cases, and entries in minutes and dockets, means "and another" or "and others," as the case may be. Garrigan v. Huntimer, 111 N. W. 563, 564, 21 S. D. 269 (citing Anderson's Law Dict.).

The words "et al." are in common and everyday use in style of cases and entries on the minutes and dockets of courts, and are known to mean "and another" or "and others," as the case may be. While the words are incapable of standing in the place of the names of parties required by law to be stated in a subpoena or writ of error, they may be used in indorsing the title of the cause on the copy of subpoena, when there is no statute or rule requiring the names of the parties to be indorsed thereon. Saddler v. Smith, 45 South. 718, 54 Fla. 671, 14 Ann. Cas. 570.

The lien for paving a sidewalk cannot be enforced in favor of a borough unless there has been a previous demand on the owner to do the paving and a refusal, and an allegation in the lien that the paving was done on the failure of K. "et al." to do the same, and after due and regular notice so to do, K. being a life tenant, did not show notice to the remaindermen, since it was indeterminate whether "et al." meant "and another," or "and others," or in either case to what other persons it referred. Meanor v. Goldsmith, 65 Atl. 1084, 1087, 216 Pa. 489, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 342.

Lands assessed to "A. et al." are in legal effect assessed to A. and other parties unknown. When the sheriff receives a notice of expiration of redemption from a tax sale, in which the lands appear to be assessed to "A. et al.," he is not required to investigate the records and ascertain the name of the true owner of the lands. If the lands are vacant and unoccupied, he may serve the notice upon such unknown owners by publication. He has no duties to perform other than those prescribed by the statute. Berg v. Van Nest, 106 N. W. 255, 256, 97 Minn. 187.

The use of the Latin abbreviation "et al." in the entry of an appeal will not include any one as a party except those who are expressly and fully named as parties in such entry; and where the appeal is from a decree in partition, all the parties to such decree must expressly and by name be made parties, otherwise the appeal will be dismissed for want of necessary parties. Lowe v. Delaney, 44 South. 710, 711, 54 Fla. 480.

ET CETERA—ETC.

See "&c."

"Et cetera," abbreviated "etc.," means "and others," or "and other things." Doty v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 180 S. W. 1053, 1055, 128 Tenn. 329, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 167.

The term "etc." is defined in the Century Dictionary as: "And others; and so forth; and so on; generally used when a number of individuals of a class have been specified to indicate that more of the same sort might have been mentioned, but for shortness are omitted." As used in an act of sale of property, describing the property sold by enumerating various articles and concluding with the term "etc.," the vendor does not intend that the description shall be regarded as complete and exhaustive and as exclusive of everything not expressly mentioned, but, on the contrary, that other articles exist, which for brevity are not mentioned. Bagley v. Rose Hill Sugar Co., 35 South. 539, 548, 111 La. 249.

Where a decree of confirmation recites that the case came on to be heard on petition, proof of publication, deeds, etc., the abbreviation "etc.," which follows the word "deeds," tends to show that the case was heard, not only on the petition, proof of publication, and deeds, but that other papers besides the deeds were read in evidence. Ingram v. Sherwood's Heirs, 87 S. W. 435, 437, 75 Ark. 176.

In an action for the conversion of a piano by the seller thereof after it had been sold under a conditional sale, the court's instructions to the jury that, if they "should find that a copy of the lease was not furnished to the plaintiff, 'etc.," the rights of the defendants under the lease were suspended during such default" meant that, if the provisions of the statute relating to conditional sales had not been complied with, the defendants' rights were suspended. Lee v. Gorham, 42 N. E. 556, 557, 165 Mass. 130.

As indefinite term

"Etc." denotes "et cetera." When used in a proposition under an assignment of error stating that it is error to admit parol evidence of the contents of a written instrument without proof of the loss, etc., of the original, it is too indefinite in its specification to permit consideration. International Harvester Co. of America v. Campbell, 96 S. W. 93, 96, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 421.

As others of like character

The words "et cetera" mean "and others" or "and other things." In a statute authorizing incorporation "for the purpose of manufacturing electricity for telephoning purposes, etc.," the legislative intent was not "to confine the powers of telephone companies to the manufacture of electricity, but to confer on such companies the power to do other things of like character incidental to the business. These words of this provision 'et cetera' must have been used for some purpose. It should not be construed as meaningless, and it is our duty to give it its natural significance, giving to the meaning the conclusion that the intention of the act was to give the telephone companies the right to do other things beside the right to manufacture electricity. It empowered them, not to only manufacture electricity for telephone purposes, but to do other things for telephoning purposes." Doty v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 130 S. W. 1053, 1055, 123 Tenn. 329, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 167.

The term "et cetera," as used in a railroad rule providing that, when trackmen were making repairs in the nature of obstructions, such as laying new steel, making a heavy raise in the track, "etc.," a flagman should be sent in each direction and a torpedo placed on the rail, meant other repairs which should constitute obstructions similar in character to those specified and did not make the rule applicable to a hand car, being propelled by trackmen to their place of employment. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sewell, 134 S. W. 162, 164, 142 Ky. 171.

A set of scales and a quantity of rock salt is not covered by a pledge of "iron, junk, hides, etc.," the "etc." being held only to refer to property of the same general character as "iron, junk, and hides." Morganstein v. Commercial Nat. Bank of Chatsworth, 125 Ill. App. 397, 399.

A subscription to stock of a corporation to be formed for the purposes "of acquiring and carrying on a general produce and merchandising business, etc.," did not bind subscribers to take stock in a corporation formed, not only for such purposes, but also for dealing in real estate, bonds, mortgages, etc.; the abbreviation "etc." which, as commonly understood, stands for "et cetera," meaning "and others" or "other things," not covering such other purposes under the rule of ejusdem generis, and, conceding that by the abbreviation it was intended that other and independent lines of business might be carried on by the corporation, there being no evidence as to what lines of business were intended to be so included. Hanford Mercantile Store v. Sowlevere, 104 Pac. 708, 709, 11 Cal. App. 261.

A contract for the construction of a sewerage system, stipulating that the city may pay for the work in legally issued bonds or in cash out of the general fund as it may elect, but that the city shall pay for any re-advertising, "etc.," that the bonds are legally issued, requires the contractor to accept legally issued bonds and not to merely accept such bonds as his attorney shall advise him are legally issued, and, where such attorney assumes that it is impossible to issue any valid bonds in any way, the contractor cannot refuse to perform because of the failure of the city to pay the cost of advertising, etc., required to satisfy the attorney of the legality of the bonds; the term "etc." meaning other things of like character. Naylor v. McColloch, 103 Pac. 68, 70, 54 Or. 305.

"The commonly accepted definition of 'etc.' is 'and so forth,'" and, where an instruction authorized consideration of the nature and character of an injury, the mental and physical pain, the value of time lost, depreciated ability to earn money, "etc.," in assessing the damages, it gave the jury authority to consider, in connection with the matters enumerated by the court, other matters of a like character, leaving them to determine for themselves whether such matters were of a like character, and the use of the abbreviation was calculated to mislead and confuse the jury. Lodwick Lumber Co. v. Taylor, 87 S. W. 358, 360, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 302.

ET UXOR

A citation reciting that a person named "et uxor are plaintiffs" is not sufficient under the statute requiring the citation to give the names of the parties, and that, when a wife is a party plaintiff with her husband, her name must be stated, though the court may assume that the words "et uxor" mean "and wife." Higgins v. Shepard, 107 S. W. 79, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 365.

ETHICS

"It is the province of ethics to consider of actions in their relation to motives, but jurisprudence deals with actions in their relation to law, and for the most part independently of the motive." Adler v. Fenton, 24 How. 407, 410, 16 L. Ed. 693.

EUNUCH

The primary and general definition of the word "eunuch" given in all the dictionaries is "a castrated male of the human species." It must be given its usual and ordinary sense, as understood in the place where used. A newspaper publication that a man is a eunuch is actionable per se. Eckert v. Van Pelt, 76 Pac. 909, 910, 69 Kan. 357, 66 L. R. A. 266.

EUQUININE

"Euquinine" is, as its name implies, a preparation more or less directly from cinchona bark, for use in medicine. Its medicinal qualities are substantially the same as those of sulphate of quinia and other preparations from the same source. The physical qualities have been so modified that the bitter taste, usually characteristic of quinine preparations, has been eliminated, and the disagreeable sensation in the ears, which often accompanies the administration of quinine, is also avoided. Though alcohol is used in its preparation, it was wrongly classified under paragraph 67, as medicinal preparations containing alcohol, or in the preparation of which alcohol is used, and should have been admitted under the free list (paragraph 647) as "salts of cinchona bark." United States v. Merck & Co., 168 Fed. 244, 245, 94 C. C. A. 74.

EUROPEAN PLAN

Hotel as restaurant, see Restaurant.

As applied to hotels, the term "European plan" means that under it the guests patronize the hotel table or not, as they please, and, when they do so, pay for what they order. New Galt House Co. v. City of Louisville, 111 S. W. 351, 129 Ky. 341, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 566.

This phrase, as applied to the conducting of a hotel, means that the keeper does not provide meals for the guests. Steward v. Denechaud, 45 South. 561, 564, 120 La. 720.

EVANGELICAL

Under a will providing for the distribution of the residue of a fund created by a sale of certain of testator's real property and the rents and profits thereof among such Free Protestant and Evangelical Protestant Churches as his executors or a majority of them should in their discretion deem most deserving, it is to be doubted whether testator, by the expression "evangelical," intended any more definite designation than those churches which conform to the principles of the gospel of Christ, notwithstanding there is a religious body known as the Evangelical Church. Stewart v. Woolley, 106 N. Y. Supp. 99, 103, 121 App. Div. 531 (citing Cent. Dict.).

EVANGELIST

The term "evangelist" is defined as "a bringer of the glad tidings of Christ and his doctrines." Greer v. Synod, Southern Presbyterian Church in Kentucky, 150 S. W. 16, 17, 150 Ky. 155.

EVASION

The organization of a corporation under the laws of another state by citizens and residents of the state of Missouri is not an "evasion" of the laws of that state, within Laws 1903, p. 121, providing that licenses shall not be granted to foreign corporations, where they were organized by citizens of Missouri for the purpose of evading the Missouri laws, where the corporation so formed does not propose to transact business contravening the laws of Missouri, or for which corporations could not be formed under the Missouri laws. State ex rel. Brown Contracting & Building Co. v. Cook, 90 S. W. 929, 980, 181 Mo. 596 (citing Demarest v. Flack, 28 N. E. 645, 128 N. Y. 205, 13 L. R. A. 854).

In the statute providing that no one shall sell or "give in consideration of the purchase of any property, or of any services, or in evasion of the statute" any intoxicating liquor, the language quoted must be construed to mean that such gift shall be illegal only when its purpose is to evade the law by subterfuge or by dealing intended to conceal unlawful sales. The giving of a drink from samples of liquor by the agent of a foreign dealer, for the purpose of showing the grade and quality of liquors which were to be sold in another state, is not an "evasion of the statute." State v. Bernstein, 105 N. W. 1015, 1016, 129 Iowa, 520.

EVEN

Defendant's request to charge that, "Even should you find for the plaintiff, he can recover in this action only for actual damages," was properly refused, as "even" carried with it an intimation that the jury would not so find, and was an invasion of the province of the jury. Manistee Mill Co. v. Hobdy, 51 South. 871, 873, 165 Ala. 411, 138 Am. St. Rep. 73.

The purpose of the statutory provision that, in all cases of addition to or deduction from assessments by the board of equalization, the rate per cent. of addition or deduction shall be "even and not fractional" is to facilitate the labor of computing the decrease or increase, and hence an increase of 12½ per cent. is authorized. Clark v. Lawrence County, 111 N. W. 558, 21 S. D. 254.

In an action for the death of a person struck by a car, a requested charge that, even if the jury believed that the motorman saw plaintiff's intestate running towards the tracks, he could assume that intestate would stop and listen for the car before actually going on the track, and need not make any effort to stop the car until the circumstances indicated that intestate would not so stop and listen, was properly refused, as the word "even" carries an intimation against the supposition. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Saxon (Ala.) 59 South. 584, 593.

EVENING SCHOOLS

The words "evening school," as used in Const. art. 9, § 6, providing that the public school system shall include primary and grammar schools and such high schools, evening schools, commercial schools and technical schools as may be established by the Legislature or by municipal or district authority.

were merely intended to obviate doubt as to the power to provide for schools holding evening sessions, so that the section did not prevent the conduct of an evening high school as a part of the public school system. Board of Education of the City & County of San Francisco v. Hyatt, 93 Pac. 117, 118, 152 Cal. 515.

EVENT

See Contingent Event; Costs to Abide Event; In the Event.

Uncontrollable event, see Uncontrollable.

The word "event," as used in an order of the Appellate Term reversing the judgment of the lower court and granting a new trial with costs to abide the "event," means determination at the second trial that the successful party is by law entitled to costs. Lennon v. Charig, 105 N. Y. Supp. 1039, 1040, 54 Misc. Rep. 298 (citing People ex rel. Shiels v. Greene, 99 N. Y. Supp. 879, 114 App. Div. 169).

The phrase "event causing injury," in an accident policy against loss caused by bodily injury, provided notice thereof is given within 10 days of the "event causing injury," and binding the insurer to pay a specified amount in case of loss of life occurring within 90 days of the "event causing injury," etc., means the accident causing the injury, and the notice must be given within 10 days of the accident. Hatch v. United States Casualty Co., 83 N. E. 398, 399, 197 Mass. 101, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 503, 125 Am. St. Rep. 332, 14 Ann. Cas. 290.

A bet by parties, not aware of the fact, involving the question whether a third person has a lease on designated real estate, refers to an event unknown to the betters, and constitutes "gambling" within Const. art. 1, § 9, forbidding pool selling, book making, or any other kind of gambling, and within Betting and Gaming Law, declaring that bets depending on any chance, "or unknown or contingent event," shall be unlawful, etc.; the word "unknown" referring to that which was unknown to the parties to a wager, the word "contingent" showing that the event referred to applies equally to existing or nonexisting events, the word "event" meaning that in which an action, operation, or series of operations terminates and having reference to something that has taken place, the words "unknown event" meaning a past circumstance unknown to the parties, and the words "contingent event" referring to one that hereafter may or may not occur. Thomson v. Hayes, 111 N. Y. Supp. 495, 497, 59 Misc. Rep. 425.

A suit was brought to foreclose a mortgage on a leasehold and both to have the proceeds of a sale applied to plaintiff's claim and also to charge defendant with a deficiency, on the theory that he was personally liable for the debt. In order to obviate a receivership because the security was inadequate, it was stipulated that the rents and profits should be deposited to the joint credit of defendant and plaintiff's attorney to be applied to the payment of taxes, water rates, insurance premiums, and ground rent of the mortgaged premises, and that the balance, if any, remaining should be held to abide the "event of the action." Held, that since the inadequacy of the security and not the personal liability of defendant, the owner of the equity of redemption, was the ground on which the court would have been authorized to impound the rents, the "event of the action," in so far as such surplus rents were concerned, was a decision that plaintiff's mortgage was a valid lien against the property, and that it should be foreclosed, and, this issue having been determined in plaintiff's favor, he was entitled to such surplus for the satisfaction of the deficiency, though it was also determined that defendant was not personally liable therefor. Rutherford Realty Co. v. Cook, 90 N. E. 1112, 1113, 198 N. Y. 29.

EVENTUAL COSTS

The obligation in a bond to pay the "eventual costs" in said case is equivalent to the statutory words, "such further costs as may accrue by reason of such appeal." Smith v. Jackson, 50 S. E. 930, 931, 122 Ga. 856.

EVENTUAL ESTATE

A will created a trust for payment of annuities, all of the beneficiaries being now dead, excepting testator's widow, and directed expenditure of $35,000 in erecting a statue, on the widow's death, and that any remaining funds be divided between specified charitable societies. Under Personal Property Laws, § 11, and Real Property Law, § 63, undisposed of profits arising under a valid limitation of an expectant estate belong to the persons presumptively entitled to the next eventual estate. Held, that the "next eventual estate" under the will is the bequest for the statue, and not the gifts to the charitable societies. In re Harteau, 97 N. E. 726, 728, 204 N. Y. 292.

Under Real Property Law, providing that when, in consequence of a valid limitation of an expected estate, there is a suspension of alienation or ownership during the continuance of which the rents and profits are undisposed of and there is no valid direction for their accumulation, such rents and profits shall belong to the persons presumptively entitled to the next eventual estate, the one-third of the rents and profits of the trust estate accumulating from both realty and personalty after the death of nephew G., during the life of testator's daughter, and which would have belonged to G., would pass to his executor under his will, G. taking the "eventual estate," by which is meant the estate which is to take effect upon the happening of the event which terminates the accumulation, and the fact that the remainder estate given to the nephew might be defeated by the marriage of testator's daughter leaving lawful issue would not affect the disposition of the accumulated income. Young v. Barker, 127 N. Y. Supp. 211, 215, 141 App. Div. 801.

EVER

EVERGREEN

"'Evergreen,' used as an adjective, means 'always green; verdant throughout the year' (Century Dictionary); or 'retaining greenness or verdure throughout the year; not deciduous' (Standard Dictionary). As a noun the word is defined as 'a plant that retains its verdure through all seasons, as the pine and other coniferous trees, the holly, laurel, holm oak, ivy, rhododendron, and many others' (Century Dictionary). In the provision for 'evergreen seedlings,' the word is doubtless used by way of contrast with 'deciduous,' as indicated in the provision for 'fruit and ornamental trees, deciduous and evergreen.' A deciduous plant is one which loses its leaves, etc., every year, especially in the autumn." In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 252, 30 Stat. 170 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1650), the provision for "evergreen seedlings" is not restricted to such evergreen plants as the conifers and box, but extends to those that retain their verdure or greenness throughout the year; and seedlings of rhododendrons and laurels, that remain green constantly, are included in said provision. United States v. Ouwerkerk, 153 Fed. 916, 917.

EVERY

Any and every, see Any.

As all

In a tax deed reciting the sale of several tracts, the use in the granting clause of the words, "and each and every separate tract and parcel thereof," in addition to the statutory form designating the property conveyed as "the real property last hereinbefore described," indicates a purpose to convey all the land sold. Gibson v. Kueffer, 77 Pac. 282, 283, 69 Kan. 534.

The word "every," as used in General Corporation Act, requiring the directors of every stock corporation to keep, at its principal office in the state, correct books of account and giving every stockholder in such corporation the right to examine the books of account, means each and all; the statute not being confined to corporations organized under the General Corporation Act. Venner v. Chicago City Ry. Co., 92 N. E. 643, 648, 246 Ill. 170, 138 Am. St. Rep. 229, 20 Ann. Cas. 607.

The word "every" is a term of inclusion. The provision of the Ohio statute to the effect that every indorser undertakes to pay if the instrument is dishonored, and he has due notice, embraces every party who, by the provisions of the statute, is classed as an indorser, unless his indorsement has been qualified by appropriate words. Rockfield v. First Nat. Bank of Springfield, 83 N. E. 392, 394, 77 Ohio St. 311, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 842.

As each

The word "every" is not always synonymous with the word "each." Griffin v. Interurban St. R. Co., 72 N. E. 1142, 180 N. Y. 538.

The word "every," as used in General Corporation Act, requiring the directors of every stock corporation to keep at its principal office in the state correct books of account, and giving every stockholder in such corporation the right to examine the books of account, means each and all; the statute not being confined to corporations organized under the general corporation law. Venner v. Chicago City Ry. Co., 92 N. E. 643, 648, 246 Ill. 170, 138 Am. St. Rep. 229, 20 Ann. Cas. 607.

The phrase "every refusal," in Railroad Law, § 104, imposing a forfeiture for every refusal to comply with the requirements of the section providing for the giving of transfers to passengers for one continuous trip, permits the recovery of cumulative penalties, and is equivalent to each and every. Topham v. Interurban St. Ry. Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 298, 300, 96 App. Div. 323.

Every action

The words "every action," as used in Rev. St. 1895, art 3358, providing that "every action" other than for the recovery of real estate, for which no limitation is otherwise prescribed, shall be brought within four years next after the right to bring the same shall have accrued, and not afterward, does not include nor mean the demand by the probate court of a guardian for a final accounting of his transactions about the estate of his ward during the ward's minority. Such special proceeding by the probate court is not an action within the meaning of the article included. All the limitation statutes employ the words "action" and "suit." As was said in Webb v. Allen, 40 S. W. 342, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 605, "actions" and "suits," as generally used in these limitation statutes, are synonymous and interchangeable terms. Whitfield v. Burrell, 118 S. W. 153, 156, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 567.

Every case, matter or proceeding

Only judicial action is reviewable by the writ of certiorari under Code 1899, c. 110, §§ 2, 3, providing that the writ shall lie in "every case, matter, or proceeding" before a county court, council, city, town, village, justice, or other inferior tribunal in which there has been a judgment or final order, or a judgment or order abridging the freedom of a person, and the scope of the writ is not altered by the statute in respect to the nature of the proceedings for the review of which it may be had, but in this respect it remains as at common law. Wheeling & E. G. R. Co. v. Town of Triadelphia, 52 S. E. 499, 503, 58 W. Va. 487, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 321.

Every child

The words "every child," in a constitutional provision, empowering the General Assembly to enact that "every child" of sufficient ability shall attend the public schools, embraces Indians as well as whites and blacks. State v. Wolf, 59 S. E. 40, 41, 145 N. C. 440, 13 Ann. Cas. 189.

Every corporation

The phrase "every corporation in the state," as used in Laws 1908, p. 49, c. 240, § 62, providing that every corporation of this state may be sued in any county, or in the city of Baltimore, as the case may be, where its principal office is located, or where it regularly transacts business or exercises its franchises, was not intended to embrace municipal corporations, and the act did not change the common-law rule that a municipal corporation cannot be sued in courts other than those of its own territory upon a transitory cause of action. Phillips v. City of Baltimore, 72 Atl. 902, 905, 110 Md. 431, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 711.

The words "every corporation," as used in St. 1898, § 1772, as amended by Laws 1905, c. 507, p. 939, providing that every corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the state shall pay for filing and amendment increasing its capital stock, in addition to a fee of $10, $1 for each $1,000 of increase, include railway corporations, notwithstanding section 1826, as amended by Laws 1901, c. 461, p. 681, covering the subject of increasing the capital stock of railway corporations, in which nothing is said expressly about the corporate action being in the form of an amendment to the articles of incorporation, or about the notice of the change being filed in the office of the secretary of state, except that, upon increased stock being issued, a report showing the amount issued and the purposes to which it has been or is to be devoted shall be filed. State ex rel. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 117 N. W. 846, 850, 137 Wis. 80.

The phrase "every corporation operating a railway," in its broadest and most general sense, as used in the Employers' Liability Act, is sufficient to include a street railway corporation, but in ordinary parlance the word "railway" or "railroad," when not qualified by the word "street" or other expression of similar import, has special reference to what are sometimes denominated commercial railroads. McLeod v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 101 N. W. 77, 80, 125 Iowa, 270.

Under a statute, that "every railroad corporation," whose line is intersected by a new railroad, shall unite with the corporation owning the new railroad in forming intersections applies to a case where one of the roads is a street surface road, as the article provides for the formation of railroad corporations, including street railway companies, and, in certain sections of the article, street railway companies are excepted from the provisions of those sections. Buffalo, B. & L. Ry. Co. v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co., 25 N. Y. Supp. 265, 267, 72 Hun, 583.

Every day

The words "every day" in the act of March 19, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 180), requiring all persons or corporations operating railroads to run at least one regular passenger train over all lines each way "every day," includes Sunday, since it is not unlawful for travelers to ride on a railway train on Sunday, nor for a railroad company to carry them on Sunday, and hence a railroad company that fails to run any trains over a line on Sunday is liable for the penalty prescribed for violation of the act. State v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 143 S. W. 785, 793, 239 Mo. 196.

Every person

Section 5445, Rev. St., relating to "every person" who aids in effecting the illegal entry of imports, while ordinarily not intended to apply to those individuals—customs officers—covered by the preceding section of the law, does not exclude an officer of the service if the facts bring him within the definition of the "person" at whom this provision is aimed, and may therefore include a customs weigher who aids in the way prohibited. United States v. Mescall, 164 Fed. 587.

Since the state has no jurisdiction to tax local interest-bearing deposits in national banks where such deposits are the property of nonresidents, the words "every person," as used in P. S. 809, providing for the taxation of interest-bearing deposits in national banks, and declaring that every person having such a deposit shall semiannually, except as otherwise provided, pay a tax to the state assessed at the rate of $\frac{1}{20}$ of 1 per cent. semiannually on the amount of such deposit, etc., should be construed to mean "every resident of this state" having such a deposit, and as so construed the statute is valid. State v. Clement Nat. Bank, 78 Atl. 944, 958, 84 Vt. 167, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 22.

The term "every person," as used in Rem. & Bal. Code, § 1133, providing that "every person" furnishing material to be used in the construction of a building shall at the time the material is delivered, deliver or mail to the owner of the property on which the material is to be used a duplicate statement of all material to be delivered, etc., included a subcontractor. Helm v. Elliott, 119 Pac. 826, 827, 66 Wash. 361.

The words "every person," as used in Act Cong. Aug. 2, 1886, c. 840, § 6, declaring that all oleomargarine shall be packed by the manufacturer in packages not used before, and that all sales by manufacturers and wholesale dealers shall be in original stamped packages, that retail dealers must sell only from original stamped packages, and pack the oleomargarine sold by them in suitable wooden or paper packages, and "every person" who knowingly sells or offers for sale any oleomargarine in other form, or who packs in any package in any manner contrary to law, will be imprisoned, etc., should be construed to refer solely to manufacturers and dealers previously mentioned, so that an indictment for violating such section, failing to charge that accused was either a manufacturer or dealer in oleomargarine, and as such packed product in a manner violative of the act, stated no offense. Morris v. United States, 168 Fed. 682, 685, 94 C. C. A. 168.

Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 729, entitling every person, whose message is refused or postponed contrary thereto, to actual damages against the telegraph company and $50 in addition thereto, means by "every person whose message is refused" the person whose name is subscribed to the message. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Coyle, 104 Pac. 367, 24 Okl. 740.

Every place

The words "every place," as used in the Liquor Tax Law, providing that the excise tax in every place in this state shall remain the same as assessed for 1899, until changed by an enumeration authorized by the state commissioner of excise, mean every place subject to the provisions of the Liquor Tax Law. Ahlers v. Clement, 127 N. Y. Supp. 61, 63, 141 App. Div. 891; People ex rel. Brady v. Clement, 127 N. Y. Supp. 68, 142 App. Div. 908.

Every railroad company

The provision of the Constitution that "every railroad company" shall have the right with its road to intersect, connect with, or cross any other railroad, has reference to railroad companies incorporated for the purpose of constructing a railroad. Boca & T. R. Co. v. Sierra Valleys R. Co., 84 Pac. 298, 303, 2 Cal. App. 546.

Every such case

See In Every Such Case.

EVERY OTHER

In the statute providing that an action other than those brought for the recovery of real estate, etc., when brought against a domestic corporation, may be brought in the county in which it is situated or has its principal office, that "every other action" than those against carriers and nonresidents and foreign corporations must be brought in the county where defendant resides, and that, when an action is rightly brought in a county, a summons may be issued to any other county against other defendants, the words "every other action" are not intended to exclude actions where several defendants may be rightly joined. An action against an individual residing in one county and a domestic corporation having its principal office in another county, for their joint negligence in conducting log drives, is properly brought in the county of the residence of the individual. Harrison v. Carbon Timber Co. 83 Pac. 215, 216, 14 Wyo. 246.

EVICTION

See Constructive Eviction; Partial Eviction; Total Eviction.

In order that an ouster in pais should amount to an eviction, it is necessary that it shall be lawful, and, to be lawful, the adverse claim must be asserted by or in the interest of one having a better title. McKillop v. Burton's Adm'r, 74 Atl. 78, 80, 82 Vt. 403.

Civil Code imposes upon the seller the obligation of warranting the buyer against the latter's "eviction" of the thing sold, and defines "eviction," in article 2500, as the loss suffered by the buyer of the totality of the thing sold, or of a part thereof, occasioned by the right or claim of a third person. Abbott's Law Dictionary defines "eviction" as dispossession, ejection, ouster. Originally it seems confined to dispossession by judgment of law. In more modern use, it may embrace dispossession by paramount right or claim of such right. The Century Dictionary defines it as dispossession by judicial sentence; the recovery of lands and tenements from another's possession by due course of law; an involuntary loss of possession, or inability to get promised possession by reason of the hostile assertion of an irresistible title. Webster's Dictionary defines it as the act or process of evicting, or state of being evicted; the recovery of lands, tenements, etc., from another's possession by due course of law; dispossession by paramount title; ejection; ouster. The petition of a buyer alleged the purchase of real estate, the payment of the price, and actual possession of the property purchased, and further alleged a superior outstanding title, but did not allege dispossession by judicial proceedings or a pending suit to evict. Held, that it disclosed no cause of action, and was premature as to the demand for restitution of price. Bonvillain v. Bodenheimer, 42 South. 273, 274, 117 La. 793.

EVICTION (Of Tenant)

An "eviction," in its original and technical meaning, is the expulsion of a tenant by the assertion of a paramount title and by process of law; but the acts of a landlord, resulting in a substantial interference with the tenant's right of possession or enjoyment, amount to an eviction, where the acts of the landlord indicate an intention that the tenant shall no longer continue to occupy the premises. Nesson v. Adams, 99 N. E. 93, 94, 212 Mass. 429.

In order to constitute an "eviction," "the act complained of must proceed from the landlord himself or some other person acting under his authority or by or through him or from the exercise of some legal right by state or municipal authorities, and must be such as deprives the tenant of the beneficial enjoyment of the whole or a part of the premises." City of Baltimore v. Latrobe, 61 Atl. 203, 209, 101 Md. 621, 4 Ann. Cas. 1005 (citing Wood's Landlord & Tenant [2d Ed.] 1098).

"Eviction" is defined to be when there has been an obstruction to the beneficial enjoyment of the premises and a diminution of the consideration of the contract by the act of the landlord. Where an accidental fire occurred during the term which consumed the roof and fourth story of the building, and the landlord, being unable to restore it to a four-story building without rebuilding the walls, restored it to a three-story building, and the tenant did not abandon the premises after the fire, as it was authorized to do, but remained in possession after it ascertained that plaintiff would not restore the building to its original condition, there was no "eviction." Rogers v. S. E. Grote Paint Co., 94 S. W. 548, 549, 118 Mo. App. 300 (quoting and adopting definition in McAdam, Landl. & T. 478, 479).

An "eviction" may be actual or constructive, and any act of the lessor by which his agent is deprived of the enjoyment of the whole or a material part of the demised premises, or which shows an intent on the part of the lessor permanently to deprive or to obstruct or interfere with the tenant's quiet and peaceful enjoyment of the premises, amounts to an "eviction." A mere trespass, however, is not an eviction, though accompanied by such acts and committed in such circumstances as to be equivalent thereto. Isabella Gold Min. Co. v. Glenn, 86 Pac. 349, 350, 37 Colo. 165.

An "eviction of the tenant" exists when the landlord in any manner deprives the tenant of the whole or a substantial part of the leased premises. Jackson v. Paterno, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1073, 1076, 58 Misc. Rep. 201.

A landlord who makes an excavation adjacent to the leased building, and who can do the work with safety and without actual injury to the tenant's use of the building, does not thereby so interfere with the tenant's quiet enjoyment as to constitute an "eviction," which occurs when a tenant is forced to yield possession to one having a paramount title, or when the landlord dispossesses the tenant, either by actually taking possession, or by such interference with the tenant's enjoyment that he is justified in relinquishing possession, and does relinquish it. Fletcher v. Joseph Pfeiffer Clothing Co., 146 S. W. 864, 866, 103 Ark. 318.

Lessee's lease required him to give three months' notice of intended removal, and to allow lessors to enter and show prospective lessees the premises and at any time visit and examine them. Lessors, less than three months prior to the expiration of the lease, wrote lessee, requesting permission to show a prospective lessee the premises, and, receiving no reply, in two days broke in, put on a new lock, and retained the key. Lessee removed forthwith. Held, that while such breaking, being merely a trespass, for which lessee might have damages against lessor, would not justify a refusal to pay rent, yet that the changing of the lock and retaining the key operated as an "eviction," so that lessor could not recover for rent subsequently accrued. Lester v. Griffin, 108 N. Y. Supp. 580, 581, 57 Misc. Rep. 628 (citing Warren v. Wagner, 75 Ala. 188, 51 Am. Rep. 446).

"Any interference on the part of the landlord, which impairs the beneficial enjoyment of the premises, such as the creation of a nuisance in another portion of the same building, or the like, is a sufficient disturbance of possession to constitute an 'eviction.'" A landlord, by opening and maintaining a public bowling alley immediately under a leased flat, the alley being used all day and till late at night, creates a nuisance, making it impossible for the tenant to peaceably and quietly hold and enjoy his premises, constituting an "eviction," so that the tenant, leaving the premises in consequence thereof, is not liable for subsequent rent. Donovan v. Koehler, 103 N. Y. Supp. 935, 936, 119 App. Div. 51 (quoting and adopting definition in Home Life Ins. Co. of Brooklyn v. Sherman, 46 N. Y. 370).

To constitute an "eviction," there must be either an actual expulsion of the tenant, or some act of a permanent character done by the landlord with the intention and effect of depriving the tenant of the enjoyment of the premises, or some part of them, to which he yields, abandoning the possession within a reasonable time, and the intent may be an actual intent, accompanying and characterizing the act, or it may be inferred from the act itself; but mere neglect to repair, where the landlord is under no obligation to repair, will not constitute eviction. Voss v. Sylvester, 89 N. E. 241, 243, 203 Mass. 233.

Physical expulsion unnecessary

While actual ouster of a tenant is not required to constitute an "eviction," which results from any act of the lessor in depriving the tenant of the beneficial enjoyment of the premises, there must be a substantial interference with the tenant's enjoyment. Kelley v. Long, 122 P. 832, 834, 18 Cal. App. 159.

Voluntary abandonment

Any violation of the terms of a lease by a landlord, which deprives the tenant of the beneficial use and enjoyment of all or part of the lease and premises, amounts to an "eviction" and will warrant the tenant in abandoning the premises, whereupon he will stand exonerated from liability for rent. Delmar Inv. Co. v. Blumenfeld, 94 S. W. 823, 826, 118 Mo. App. 308.

Some authorities hold that where a tenant leaves the premises vacant or unoccupied, and the landlord enters without his consent and relets the premises, such action constitutes an "eviction" of the tenant and terminates the lease, and, in the absence of any other circumstance, such is the law; but, after an unauthorized abandonment by a tenant, the landlord may, by taking proper precautions, relet to another without creating a surrender by operation of law. Higgins v. Street, 92 Pac. 153, 154, 19 Okl. 45, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 398, 14 Ann. Cas. 1086.

"Evidence" is the means by which facts are proved. Taylor v. McClintock, 112 S. W. 405, 414, 87 Ark. 243; Board of Education of City and County of San Francisco v. Alliance Assur. Co., 159 Fed. 994, 998; Neeld v. State, 58 N. E. 734, 735, 25 Ind. App. 603 (quoting and adopting definition in Greenl. Ev. [15th Ed.] § 1).

"Evidence," in the sense of that which induces belief or actuates conduct, is a widely different thing from evidence as it is administered in courts of law. "Evidence" as a term of logical reasoning is much more inclusive than evidence as a term of judicial procedure, the relation between the two being that the initial assumption that all that is logically probative is legally admissible has been as a result of judicial experience subjected to a large number of exclusions based not upon logical but upon forensic considerations, which have taken the form of rules of evidence to which in turn there are exceptions, the two together making up the law of evidence. State v. McFarland, 83 Atl. 993, 996, 83 N. J. Law, 474.

"Evidence," as defined by Blackstone, "signifies that which demonstrates, makes clear, or ascertains the truth of the very point in issue, either on the one side or on the other." Evidence is relevant when it bears on the issues so as to tend to prove or disprove them; but testimony may be relevant when it is only a link in the chain of evidence tending to prove the issues by reasonable inference though not directly bearing upon them. San Antonio Traction Co. v. Higdon (Tex.) 123 S. W. 732, 734.

"Evidence" signifies those rules of law whereby we determine what testimony is to be admitted and what to be rejected in each case, and what weight is to be given the testimony admitted." State ex rel. Sims v. Caruthers, 98 Pac. 474, 478, 1 Okl. Cr. 428 (quoting from Bish. Cr. Proc.).

That which no sane man would believe is not "evidence." Taylor v. McClintock, 112 S. W. 405, 414, 87 Ark. 243.

"The term 'evidence' includes not only that offered on the part of the government, but that also offered for the defense. * * * " United States v. Greene, 146 Fed. 803, 824.

"Evidence" is any matter of fact, the effect, tendency, or design of which is to produce in the mind a persuasion, affirmative or disaffirmative, of the existence of some of the matter of fact." State v. Danforth, 60 Atl. 839, 840, 73 N. H. 215, 111 Am. St. Rep. 600, 6 Ann. Cas. 557 (quoting and adopting definition in Cook v. New Durham, 13 Atl. 650, 64 N. H. 419, 420).

The term "evidence," as used in an instruction that the jury were not to consider anything "but the evidence introduced before them and the law as laid down in the instructions of this court," is broad enough to include documentary as well as oral evidence. Fitzgerald v. Benner, 76 N. E. 709, 716, 219 Ill. 485.

A statement in a trustee disclosure is "evidence," and not an allegation under Rev. St. c. 88, §§ 80, 81. The allegation which must be made to let in evidence other than the disclosure must be additional to, outside of, the disclosure proper. Thompson v. Dyer, 62 Atl. 76, 78, 100 Me. 421.

"Evidence of innocence" consists in the proof of facts from which the inference of innocence is drawn. State v. Reilly, 116 Pac. 481, 482, 85 Kan. 175 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, 2522, 2523).

Affidavit as evidence

See Affidavit.

As competent or legal evidence

The word "evidence," as used in Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 555, providing that where defendant in a felony case persists in pleading guilty, if the punishment of the offense is not absolutely fixed and beyond the discretion of the jury to graduate, a jury shall assess the punishment, and evidence shall be submitted to enable them to decide thereupon, means legal evidence such as would be authorized to go before a jury. Woodall v. State, 126 S. W. 591, 593, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 513.

"Evidence," within the meaning of the rule requiring questions of fact to be submitted to the jury, if supported by a scintilla of evidence, is something of substance, and not mere vague, uncertain, or irrelevant matter, not carrying the quality of proof. Clark v. Young's Ex'x, 142 S. W. 1032, 1035, 146 Ky. 377; Minahan v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co., 138 Fed. 37, 46, 70 C. C. A. 463.

The term "evidence of negligence," as used in conjunction with negligence per se, means competent but not conclusive evidence to be submitted to the jury on the question of negligence or no negligence. Ashley v. Kanawha Valley Traction Co., 55 S. E. 1016, 1020, 60 W. Va. 306, 9 Ann. Cas. 836.

Proof distinguished

Proof is the legal effect of "evidence." United States v. Lee Huen, 118 Fed. 442, 456.

Proof is the effect of "evidence," rather than the medium by which a fact is established. Lone Star Brewing Co. v. Willie, 114 S. W. 186, 192, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 550.

"Technically there is a difference between evidence and proof. Evidence tends to establish or disprove an alleged matter of fact in issue. Proof is an effect of evidence, while evidence is merely the means of making proof. A fact is not proved unless it is established." Ollveros v. State, 47 S. E. 627, 629, 120 Ga. 237, 1 Ann. Cas. 114.

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2816, provides that no order of dismissal on the grounds of variance between the information and the proof shall bar another prosecution for the same offense. Held, that while the words "proof" and "evidence" were not synonymous, evidence being the medium through which proof is established and proof the effect of evidence rather than the evidence itself, the word "proof" as used in the statute was loosely used in the sense of evidence; and hence it was not essential to the application of the section that evidence should have been actually introduced at the trial and a variance so established in order that a dismissal because of variance should be relieved of its effect as former jeopardy. State v. Poole, 116 Pac. 468, 470, 64 Wash. 47.

Statement of accused

When the defendant made his statement, his counsel offered to swear him and allow him to be cross-examined, waiving his constitutional right. The solicitor general declined to cross-examine the defendant, and thereupon the court refused to allow the counsel for the accused to interrogate the defendant as a witness. Held, that this was not error. The statement of a defendant in a criminal case is not, in a technical sense, "evidence." There is no provision of law by which he may become a witness. He may be cross-examined, if he consents to be so cross-examined; but his agreement or offer to be cross-examined does not impose any obligation upon the prosecution, and unless the solicitor general accepts and acts upon the offer of the accused to be cross-examined, his counsel has no absolute right to submit him to a direct re-examination as he would a witness. The privilege of directing the attention of a defendant to a particular point, by question or suggestion, is a matter addressed to the discretion of the trial judge. Roberson v. State, 76 S. E. 752, 12 Ga. App. 102.

Testimony distinguished

It is incontestably true that testimony and "evidence" are not synonymous terms; that testimony is but a kind of species of evidence; that the former is in a trial the portion of the latter which may be given orally by witnesses; that the latter is inclusive of the testimony of witnesses, documents, etc.; that "evidence" is the generic term. Columbia Nat. Bank of Lincoln v. German Nat. Bank, 77 N. W. 846, 347, 56 Neb. 803 (citing Gazette Printing Co. v. Morss, 60 Ind. 153).

"Testimony" and "evidence" are not synonymous terms; the latter is the generic and the former applicable to a species or kind of "evidence." Where from an inspection of the entire bill of exceptions it is obvious that the word "testimony" was used with reference to the evidence and as synonymous with "evidence," it may be accorded such extended signification. Woolworth v. Parker, 77 N. W. 1090, 1092, 57 Neb. 417 (citing Columbia Nat. Bank of Lincoln v. German Nat. Bank, 77 N. W. 346, 56 Neb. 803).

The statement in the printed record of appeal that "this was all the 'testimony' introduced on the trial of this cause" is not the equivalent of the statement that "this was all the evidence introduced on the trial of this cause." An assignment of error in relation to the "evidence" will not be considered unless the record shows affirmatively that all of the evidence is made a part of the record by a bill of exceptions. The word "testimony" is not synonymous with the word "evidence." Guarantee Gold Bond, Loan & Savings Co. v. Edwards, 104 S. W. 624, 629, 7 Ind. T. 297.

While strictly "testimony" and "evidence" are not synonymous terms, the former, as used in a statute which provides that, after the testimony on both sides, the state's counsel shall open and conclude the argument to the jury, except that if the defendant introduces no "testimony" his counsel shall open and conclude after the testimony on the part of the state is closed, means either oral or documentary evidence. Hargrove v. State, 45 S. E. 58, 117 Ga. 706.

What witnesses say under oath is "testimony," but only so much of it as impresses the mind of the court trying the facts is "evidence," and it is by evidence and not by testimony that the court must be governed in passing upon questions of fact. Mick v. Mart (N. J.) 65 Atl. 851.

There is a difference between the terms "evidence" and "testimony." The former is the more comprehensive term and includes all the means by which any alleged matter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to investigation, is established or disproved. The latter in common acceptation embraces only the statements of witnesses upon oath, and does not include proof by writings or from other sources. A statement that the record contains all the "testimony" will, however, ordinarily be taken to amount to a statement that it contains all the "evidence." Dibble v. Dimick, 38 N. E. 724, 725, 143 N. Y. 549.

A charge that if any witness has willfully testified falsely, the jury are at liberty to wholly disregard his testimony "except so far as the same is corroborated by other creditable testimony in the case" is not erroneous, because using the word "testimony" instead of "evidence"; the two words being synonymous as commonly understood. State v. Winney, 128 N. W. 680, 681, 21 N. D. 72.

A certificate of the official stenographer "that the above and foregoing . . . contains a full and correct transcript of my stenographic notes of the testimony taken and oral proceedings had on the trial," and an order of the judge settling the bill of exceptions reciting that the foregoing is "a correct transcript of the proceedings herein," do not show that the bill of exceptions contains all the evidence; the word "testimony" including only the oral statements of the witnesses while testifying, and not being synonymous with the word "evidence," including any species of proof submitted to a court or jury. Carter v. Cummings-Neilson Co., 97 Pac. 334, 335, 34 Utah, 315 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2523).

While some authorities define the words "testimony" and "evidence" as technically different, making "evidence" the more comprehensive term, in common expression, even in courts, they are used synonymously, and charges are not faulty because "testimony" is referred to, where technically "evidence" might be the more proper term. Jones v. City of Seattle, 98 Pac. 743, 745, 51 Wash. 245.

The word "evidence" includes all the means by which any alleged matter of fact under investigation is established or disproved, and testimony is not synonymous with "evidence." The word "evidence," in a case-made reciting that it contains all of the "evidence" introduced at the trial, covers all the testimony, records, documents, papers, and proofs submitted for the consideration of the court or jury. Southern Pine Lumber Co. v. Ward, 85 Pac. 459, 463, 16 Okl. 131.

"The words 'testimony' and 'evidence' are not synonymous terms. Testimony is evidence, but evidence may or may not be testimony, or may consist of more than testimony. The word 'testimony' is a restricted limited term, consisting only of the statements of witnesses, while the word 'evidence' is a comprehensive term, embracing not only testimony or the statements of witnesses, but also documents, written instruments, admissions of parties, and whatever may be submitted to a court or jury to elucidate an issue or prove a case. Bouvier defines 'testimony': 'The statement made by a witness under oath or affirmation.' Black defines 'testimony': 'Any species of proof or probative matter legally presented at the trial of an issue by the act of the parties, and through the medium of witnesses, records, documents, concrete objects, etc., for the purpose of inducing belief in the minds of the court or jury as to their contention.'" Crooks v. Harmon, 81 Pac. 95, 96, 29 Utah, 304.

The term "testimony" is not as comprehensive as "evidence" and in fact is but a species or kind of evidence, but in a certificate to the stenographer's transcript certifying that the foregoing was a true, full, and correct transcript of the testimony and other proceedings had on the trial, the term "testimony," when coupled with the expression "other proceedings," may be treated as synonymous with "evidence," making the certificate equivalent to a statement that it contained all the evidence. Mitchell v. Jensen, 81 Pac. 165, 167, 29 Utah, 346.

As witnesses

The term "whose evidence," in an instruction that there was testimony in the case from which the jury might find that the defendant was guilty of negligence, "but that depends upon 'whose evidence' you believe," is not equivalent to "whose witnesses" so as to render the charge objectionable as directing the jury to find for the plaintiff if they believe his witnesses, and for the defendant if they do not. Harker v. Detroit United Ry., 114 N. W. 657, 658, 150 Mich. 697.

EVIDENCE OF INDEBTEDNESS

Other evidence of indebtedness, see Other.

"Evidence of indebtedness," as used in Const. art. 10, § 29, providing that no bond or evidence of indebtedness of the state shall be valid unless the same shall have indorsed thereon a certificate signed by the Auditor and the Attorney General, showing that the bond or evidence of indebtedness is issued pursuant to law and is within the debt limit, means such indebtedness as is usually evidenced by a bond. Bryan v. Menefee, 95 Pac. 471, 475, 21 Okl. 1.

As used in 69 Ohio Laws, pp. 173, 174, the term "evidence of indebtedness" is synonymous with "securities." Cincinnati, H. & D. Ry. Co. v. Kleybolte, 88 N. E. 879, 880, 80 Ohio St. 311.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 3356, requiring actions for debt where the indebtedness is evidenced by or founded on any contract in writing to be commenced within four years after the cause of action accrues, applies to an action on a liquor dealer's bond for selling liquor to a minor, the cause of action being both "evidenced by and founded on a contract in writing." Hillman v. Gallagher, 128 S. W. 899, 900, 103 Tex. 427.

Judgment

"A judgment is not only an evidence of indebtedness, but it is of the highest and most conclusive nature. A judgment against a city is within the designation 'other evidences of indebtedness issued for money,' as used in Act Feb. 13, 1865, as amended (Hurd's Rev. St. 1899, c. 113), in describing the debts for which it authorizes the issuance of funding bonds. Stone v. City of Chicago, 69 N. E. 970, 975, 207 Ill. 492.

Mortgage

A mortgage is an evidence of indebtedness within B. & C. Comp. § 25, providing that payment of principal or interest on any bill of exchange, promissory note, bond, or "other evidence of indebtedness," shall make limitations run from the time of such payment, and a part payment on a note, or on the mortgage securing it, tolls the statute as to the mortgage. Kaiser v. Idleman, 108 Pac. 193, 194, 57 Or. 224.

EVIDENCE OF PROPERTY

EVIDENCING FEATURE

The "evidencing feature" is usually a group of circumstances which as a whole constitute a feature capable of being associated with a single object. Rarely can one circumstance alone be so inherently peculiar to a single object. It is by adding circumstance to circumstance that a composite feature or mark is obtained which as a whole cannot be supposed to be associated with more than a single object. The process of constructive inference of identification thus consists usually in adding together a number of circumstances, each of which by itself might be a feature of many objects but all of which together can conceivably coexist in a single object only. Each additional circumstance reduces the chances of there being more than one object so associated. Webb v. Ritter, 54 S. E. 484, 493, 60 W. Va. 193.

EVIDENT

The word "evident" means "clear to the vision, especially clear to the understanding, and satisfactory to the judgment." Its synonyms are: Manifest; plain; clear; obvious; visible; apparent; conclusive; indubitable; palpable; notorious. Under Const. Neb. art. 6, § 8, providing that all persons shall be liable except for capital offenses when proof is evident or presumption great, Rev. Code Cr. Proc. §§ 585, 586, containing substantially the same provisions, and section 356, providing that defendant in a criminal case is presumed to be innocent, the burden is on the state, in an application for bail, to show that the proof is evident or the presumption great. State v. Kauffman, 108 N. W. 246, 20 S. D. 620 (quoting with approval from Webst. Dict.).

EVIDENTIARY FACT

An "evidentiary fact" is relevant to the principal fact when the former tends to show that the latter probably did or did not occur; and mere remoteness usually goes to the weight, and not the admissibility, of such evidence. Brunger v. Pioneer Roll Paper Co., 92 Pac. 1043, 1044, 6 Cal. App. 691.

EX DOLO

The maxim "ex dolo," meaning out of fraud, deceitful or tortious conduct, does not apply where the right of a third person is to be affected, as, where A. obtains property from B. by fraud, he may nevertheless recover the purchase money from C. to whom he has sold the property. Doyle v. Burns, 99 N. W. 185, 204, 123 Iowa, 488.

EX MALEFICIO

EX-OFFICER

The terms "retired officer" and "ex-officer," and "ci-devant" officer are synonymous, implying that he is no longer an "officer" in the proper sense of the term. Reed v. Schon, 83 Pac. 77, 79, 2 Cal. App. 55.

EX OFFICIO

The term "ex officio," as used in Act Feb. 25, 1898, providing that in counties of less than 125,000 the county treasurer shall be "ex officio" supervisor of assessments; that he shall have an office furnished by the county board, which he shall keep open during specified hours; and that he may appoint deputies and clerks, whose compensation shall be fixed by the county board and paid by the county—implies that the county treasurer shall be supervisor of assessments by virtue of his office as county treasurer, and as appurtenant thereto. Footo v. Lake County, 69 N. E. 47, 48, 206 Ill. 185.

A finding in an action against an official and the surety on his bond for a default as assessor that the official collected money "as assessor" or as "ex officio assessor" is of the same legal import, the charter of the city under which the officer acted declaring that the auditor shall be "ex officio assessor," and whether he styles himself "auditor and assessor" or "auditor and ex officio assessor" is immaterial. He is none the less assessor because he is only "ex officio assessor," and being styled in the bond both "auditor and ex officio assessor" is the same in legal effect as styled both "auditor and assessor." City of Oakland v. Snow, 78 Pac. 1060, 1064, 145 Cal. 419.

Ky. St. 1903, § 4424, referring to the board of county examiners and providing for the taking of a county school publishers' bond before the "ex officio members" of the state board of education, does not require that the ex officio members in approving and accepting the bond should act as a body, and a bond executed before such member when not so acting is sufficient. Reid v. Commonwealth, 94 S. W. 641, 642, 123 Ky. 240.

Every service a circuit court clerk is required by law to perform, for which no fee or charge is specified, or that cannot be legally charged to either party in any cause, is an ex officio service, for which the clerk is entitled to reasonable compensation from the county. Calhoun County v. Watson, 44 South. 702, 703, 152 Ala. 554.

EX PARTE

Under Gen. St. 1902, § 305, relating to probate of foreign wills after public notice, and section 208, authorizing probate courts to make any proper order for notice to non-residents, a decree on notice by publication is not an "ex parte decree," within section 203, authorizing a probate court to modify or revoke an ex parte decree, before an appeal therefrom. Murdoch v. Murdoch, 72 Atl. 290, 293, 81 Conn. 661, 129 Am. St. Rep. 231.

A surrogate's order of exemption of an estate from transfer tax is in the nature of an "ex parte order," and an appeal does not lie therefrom, and, where the surrogate entered an order of exemption of an estate from transfer tax, the comptroller's method of reviewing the order is by appeal to the surrogate and from his order of affirmance to the Appellate Division. In re Costello's Estate, 103 N. Y. Supp. 6, 7, 117 App. Div. 807.

EX POST FACTO

"An 'ex post facto' law is one which renders an act punishable in a manner in which it was not punishable when it was committed." State of Iowa v. Jones, 128 Fed. 626, 628 (citing Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch [10 U. S.] 87, 3 L. Ed. 162); Meffert v. State Board of Medical Registration and Examination, 72 Pac. 247, 251, 66 Kan. 710, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 811; Hopkins v. State, 108 Pac. 420, 4 Okl. Cr. 194; State v. McCoy, 127 N. W. 137, 139, 87 Neb. 385, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 563.

Within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States, any law is "ex post facto" which is enacted after the commission of the offense, and which, in relation to it or its consequences, in any way affects the material situation of the accused to his prejudice or disadvantage. State ex rel. Sims v. Caruthers, 98 Pac. 474, 477, 1 Okl. Cr. 428. This definition is subject to the qualification that, where the new law mitigates the character or punishment of a crime already committed, it does not fall within the prohibition of the Constitution, for it then is in favor of the citizen. In re Petty, 22 Kan. 477, 482.

"An 'ex post facto law' is a law which makes an action done before its passage, which was innocent when done, criminal, and punishes such action, or that aggravates a crime or makes it greater than when it was committed, or which, in relation to that offense or its consequences, alters the situation of the party to his disadvantage, or that changes the punishment and inflicts a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime when committed." State v. Hoon, 111 N. W. 462, 463, 78 Neb. 618 (quoting and adopting definition in Marion v. State, 20 N. W. 289, 16 Neb. 349).

A statute which deprives the accused of any substantial right which he possessed when the offense was committed, or which after that time changes the punishment of his offense, is as to him ex post facto. People ex rel. Adams v. Johnson, 90 N. Y. Supp. 134, 136, 44 Misc. Rep. 550.

"Every retrospective penal or criminal statute is not necessarily 'ex post facto.' If the law under which the appellant was sentenced mitigates the punishment prescribed in the statute in existence when the offense was committed, it would not be ex post facto, although retrospective. A retrospective criminal or penal law that does not deprive the party of some constitutional right to which he was entitled under the law at the time the offense was committed, or does not alter his situation to his disadvantage, is not 'ex post facto.' On page 390 of 3 Dall., page 650 of 1 L. Ed., Mr. Justice Chase defined 'ex post facto laws' to be: '(1) Every law that makes an action done before the passing of the law, and which was innocent when done, criminal, and punishes such action. (2) Every law that aggravates a crime, or makes it greater than when committed. Every law that changes the punishment, and inflicts a greater punishment, than the law annexed to the crime when committed. (4) Every law that alters the legal rules of evidence, and receives less, or different, testimony than the law required at the time of the commission of the offense, in order to convict the offender.'" Where the law punishing a felony, when it was committed, provided for a scale of credits to be given for good behavior, Laws 1903, c. 375, p. 571, commonly called the "indeterminate sentence law," containing no such provisions, was, as to one convicted of a felony before its passage, "ex post facto." State v. Tyree (Kan.) 77 Pac. 290, 291 (quoting and adopting Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. [3 U. S.] 386, 390, 1 L. Ed. 648, 650, and citing Commonwealth v. Wyman, 12 Cush. [66 Mass.] 237; Commonwealth v. Gardner, 11 Gray [77 Mass.] 438; Doland v. Thomas, 12 Allen [94 Mass.] 421; In re Petty, 22 Kan. 477; Turner v. State, 40 Ala. 21).

"An 'ex post facto law' is one which imposes a punishment for an act which was not punishable at the time it was committed or an additional punishment to that then prescribed; or changes the rules of evidence, by which less or different testimony is sufficient to convict than was then required; or, in short, in relation to the offense or its consequences, alters the situation of a party to his disadvantage." Changing the mode of procedure, whereby an accused is entitled to the judgment of 15 men composing the grand jury, to an examination before a magistrate, and the filing of an information by a prosecuting officer, changes the situation to the disadvantage of accused, and a law making such a change is an ex post facto law. State v. Rock, 57 Pac. 532, 533, 20 Utah, 38 (quoting Duncan v. Missouri, 14 Sup. Ct. 570, 152 U. S. 377, 38 L. Ed. 485).

An "ex post facto law" is one which either makes that a crime which was not a crime when the offense was committed, or which imposes a heavier sentence than that which was prescribed by law at that time. State v. Broadway, 72 S. E. 987, 157 N. C. 598.

An "ex post facto law" is one which imposes a punishment on an act not punishable at the time of its commission, or which imposes an additional punishment to that then prescribed, or which changes the rules of evidence, so that less or different testimony is sufficient to convict than was then required. Commonwealth v. Phelps, 96 N. E. 349, 350, 210 Mass. 78, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 567, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1119.

An "ex post facto law" is one which makes criminal and punishable that which was lawful and innocent when done, or a law which aggravates a crime and makes it a greater offense than it was when committed, or a law which changes the punishment, and makes it greater than was imposed by the law as it stood when the crime was committed. Ware v. Sanders, 124 N. W. 1081, 1086, 146 Iowa, 233.

An "ex post facto law" is one which retrospectively makes a crime of an act which at the time of its doing was not a crime. State ex rel. Labauve v. Michel, 46 South. 430, 434, 121 La. 374.

Justice Chase, in enumerating what laws he considered "ex post facto" within the rules and intent of the prohibition, specified "every law that changes the punishment and inflicts a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime when committed," but added that he did not consider any law ex post facto, within the prohibition, that mollifies the rigor of the criminal law, but only those that create or aggravate the crime, or increase the punishment, or change the rules of evidence for the purpose of conviction. Justice Washington declared ex post facto any law "which, in its operation, makes that criminal or penal which was not so at the time the act was performed, or which increases the punishment, or, in short, which, in relation to the offense or its consequences, alters the situation of a party to his disadvantage." Chief Justice Marshall defined an ex post facto law to be one which makes an act punishable in a manner in which it was not punishable when committed. But this definition is subject to the qualification that, where the new law mitigates the character or punishment of a crime already committed, it does not fall within the prohibition of the Constitution, for it then is in favor of the citizen. Chapter 99, Laws 1903, substituting the penitentiary for the county jail as the place of confinement pending execution and directing that executions should therefore take place within the penitentiary walls, was not "ex post facto" as applied to one who was convicted before its passage. State v. Rooney, 95 N. W. 513, 515, 12 N. D. 144.

Application to civil actions

The term "ex post facto," as used in the Constitution, relates to criminal punishment, and has no relation to other retrospective laws. Ex parte Clark, 121 Pac. 492, 493, 86 Kan. 539, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 680, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 317; State v. Tyree (Kan.) 77 Pac. 290, 291; Arbuckle v. Kelley, 144 Fed. 276, 278; Kentucky Union Co. v. Kentucky, 31 Sup. Ct. 171, 177, 219 U. S. 140, 55 L. Ed. 137; State v. Schaeffer, 109 N. W. 522, 524, 129 Wis. 459.

The phrase "ex post facto laws" is not applicable to civil laws, but to penal and criminal laws which punish no party for acts antecedently done which were not punishable at all, or not punishable to the extent or in the manner prescribed. In short, "ex post facto laws" relate to penal and criminal proceedings which impose punishments or forfeitures, and not to civil proceedings which affect private rights retrospectively. Diamond State Iron Co. v. Husbands, 68 Atl. 240, 246, 8 Del. Ch. 205 (quoting Wilson v. Mercer, 8 Pet. 109, 8 L. Ed. 876).

Chapter 73 of the Revised Statutes, entitled "of the suppression of certain nuisances," is not, because it prohibits manufacturers and others from selling or keeping for sale within the state liquors, which may have been manufactured or bought by them previous to its passage, an "ex post facto" law; since, so far as it punishes such selling and keeping, it is prospective; and, if it lessens the value of liquors owned in the state previous to and held at the time of its passage, such civil consequence does not make it retroact criminally in such sense, as to bring it within the definition of an "ex post facto" law. State v. Paul, 5 R. I. 185, 190.

Act Ky. March 15, 1906, art. 3, providing for the forfeiting of land titles for failure to list and pay taxes, though retroactive, is not invalid having no criminal features. Kentucky Union Co. v. Kentucky, 31 Sup. Ct. 171, 177, 219 U. S. 140, 55 L. Ed. 137.

Laws 1905, p. 726, c. 422, providing for the revocation in a civil action of a physician's license for fraud in its procurement occurring prior to the adoption of the act, is not an ex post facto law. State v. Schaeffer, 109 N. W. 522, 524, 129 Wis. 459.

Act Feb. 21, 1907, § 6, relating to the criminal insane, and providing for proceedings for their discharge, is not unconstitutional as applied to one committed before its enactment for imposing burdens on him which did not exist at the time of his commitment, such as the requirement that he must obtain a certificate from the physician in charge of the penitentiary and a permit from the warden to institute proceedings for his discharge; the term "ex post facto law," as used in the Constitution, being confined to laws respecting criminal punishment, and having no relation to retrospective legislation of any other description. State ex rel. Thompson v. Snell, 94 Pac. 926, 928, 49 Wash. 177.

The phrase "ex post facto laws" is only applicable to criminal and penal laws and does not apply to the employers' liability act. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Lighthouse, 78 N. E. 1033, 1036, 168 Ind. 438.

Imposition or change of penalty

A city ordinance providing for the assessment and taxation of omitted property and providing a penalty is, to the extent of the penalty, void as an "ex post facto law"; but, since the taxpayer was originally bound to pay taxes on omitted property, the ordinance did not create any liability and was not void as an "ex post facto law" in so far as it provided for the assessment of the property. Muir's Adm'rs v. City of Bardstown, 87 S. W. 1096, 1098, 120 Ky. 739.

Nature and extent of punishment

Where the statute prescribes the qualifications of a physician, and proscribes the grossly immoral, and authorizes the cancellation of any certificate issued to such persons, the application of this law to one whose habits were grossly immoral before the passage of the law is not in the nature of a punishment, and therefore not ex post facto, but has in view only the qualifications of the physician and the protection of public morals. Meffert v. State Board of Medical Registration & Examination, 72 Pac. 247, 251, 66 Kan. 710, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 811.

An "ex post facto law" is one making that a punishable offense which was innocent at the time it was done, so that an ordinance requiring a license for certain occupations, but which does not impose a punishment for doing business prior to the time it went into effect, is not retrospective or ex post facto. City of Louisville v. Roberts & Krieger (Ky.) 105 S. W. 431, 432.

Acts 31st Leg. c. 50, § 1, defining the offense of abandonment after seduction and marriage, is not an "ex post facto law" within Const. art. 1, § 16. Thacker v. State, 136 S. W. 1096, 1096, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 294.

Procedure

Statutes merely affecting the modes of procedure are not invalid as ex post facto laws, where they do not dispense with any of the substantial protections which the existing law gave. Commonwealth v. Phelps, 96 N. E. 349, 350, 210 Mass. 78, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 567, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1119.

Laws 1909, c. 73, prescribing the method of selecting jurors, is not an ex post facto law, since it applies only to the remedy or method of procedure. State v. Newcomb, 109 Pac. 355, 357, 58 Wash. 414.

Same—Jurisdiction and venue

Laws 1910, c. 588, passed June 21, 1910, to take effect September 1, 1910, amending Code Cr. Proc. § 39, so as to give the county court of Albany county jurisdiction of crimes punishable with death, merely giving new jurisdiction to an existing court to try past offenses, and not making any changes in rules of evidence or in the punishment prescribed for murder in the first degree, was not an ex post facto law within the inhibition of the United States Constitution as to such an offense committed after enactment of the statute, but before it took effect, so as to deprive such county court of jurisdiction after the statute took effect. People v. Green, 94 N. E. 658, 661, 201 N. Y. 172, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 884.

Same—Rules of evidence

A law changing the rules of criminal procedure is "ex post facto" when it alters the rules of evidence or other rules of procedure so as to allow a conviction to be had on less testimony than was required by the law in force at the time of the commission of the offense. State ex rel. Sims v. Caruthers, 98 Pac. 474, 478, 1 Okl. Cr. 428.

Term "ex post facto law" includes "every law that alters the legal rules of evidence and receives less or different testimony than the law required at the time of the commission of the offense in order to convict the offender." Goode v. State, 39 South. 461, 462, 50 Fla. 45 (citing Hopt v. Utah, 4 Sup. Ct. 202, 110 U. S. 574, 28 L. Ed. 262; Hart v. State, 40 Ala. 32, 88 Am. Dec. 752; 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2528).

EX SHIP

The term "ex ship," as used in a contract for the purchase of a commodity setting the price at so much "ex ship," does not contemplate a shipment by any particular ship, and simply denotes that the property in the goods shall pass to the buyer upon their leaving the ship's tackle, and that he shall be liable for all subsequent charges of landing them, and does not constitute a condition of the contract, but is inserted for the benefit of the seller. Harrison v. Fortlage, 16 Sup. Ct. 488, 490, 161 U. S. 57, 40 L. Ed. 616.

able interpretation, and a slight deviation from the precise weight, not willfully or knowingly made, would not be a violation of the statute. Ex parte Dietrich, 84 Pac. 770, 771, 149 Cal. 104, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 873 (dissenting opinion).

EXAMINE—EXAMINATION

The word "examination," used in connection with legal proceedings, is commonly understood to mean an "examination" under oath or affirmation. Edelstein v. United States, 149 Fed. 636, 640, 79 C. C. A. 328, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 236.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 3246, allowing the sheriff $1.25 per day for keeping a prisoner "while undergoing an examination preparatory to his commitment," the sheriff is not entitled to that allowance for keeping a prisoner who has been arrested under a capias issued on an information and is in jail awaiting trial. State ex rel. Co. v. Colvard, 68 S. E. 1097, 1100, 135 Ga. 188.

Code Civ. Proc. § 872, subd. 4, requires the affidavit for an order for the examination of a party before trial to set forth "that the testimony of such person is material and necessary," etc. Rule 82 of the general rules of practice requires the affidavit to specify the acts and circumstances "which show that the examination of the person is material and necessary." Held, the change of terminology from "testimony" in the section to "examination" in the rule does not change the meaning. Cherbuliez v. Parsons, 108 N. Y. Supp. 321, 322, 123 App. Div. 814.

A motion in a divorce action for an order to examine defendant as to his property is for an "examination," and not for a "discovery," under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 803-809, relating to discovery of books and papers. Bradley v. Bradley, 122 N. Y. Supp. 626, 627, 137 App. Div. 751.

EXAMINING COURT

Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 62, defines an "examining court" thus: "When a magistrate sits for the purpose of inquiring into a criminal accusation against any person, this is called an 'examining court.'" Wherever a justice of the peace sits as an examining court, it has been held his jurisdiction is coextensive with the limits of his county. Brown v. State, 118 S. W. 139, 144, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 572.

The phrase "except as herein provided," as used in Bankr. Act, § 64, subsec. "a," providing that the court shall order the trustee to pay all taxes due and owing by the bankrupt, and subsection "b," providing that the debts to have priority, except as herein provided, shall be first payment of the actual cost of preserving the estate, the filing fees by creditors, and other specified claims, does not necessarily mean that the taxes are to be paid in preference to anything else, for it may be understood as meaning no more than that the order of priority in subsection "b" is to be the rule. In re Halsey Electric Generator Co., 175 Fed. 825, 833.

Under Laws 1898, c. 182, providing that the common council of the city of Troy shall determine the rules of its own proceedings, and that except as herein provided the majority of all its members shall be a quorum for the transaction of business and that the passage of an ordinance, unless otherwise provided, shall require the affirmative vote of at least a majority of all its members, and under the rules of the council providing that on the appearance of ten members the council shall be called to order by the president, and, if he be absent, by the president pro tempore, nine members of the council composed of seventeen is a quorum, and a majority of such quorum may elect a clerk of the council and of the city; the words "except as herein provided" referring to the whole act. Testator left with the custodian of his will an envelope addressed to his wife, which contained a note which had been given by the testator to his wife for money advanced by the wife before her marriage. The envelope also contained a paper reading "Phoebe, according to agreement, you are to burn this note, as I am dead, if you except under my will." Held, that "except" should be considered as "accept," considering the evident illiteracy of testator and common confusion among his class of the words "except" and "accept." In re Haskell's Estate, 61 Atl. 1018, 212 Pa. 469.

EXCEPTION

The office of an "exception" in a statute, in general, is to take or exclude from the operation of the statute certain matters which would otherwise be included. Campbell v. Jackman Bros., 118 N. W. 755, 757, 140 Iowa, 475, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 288.

Lands granted by Congress to a state and by the state to a railroad company on condition, and which were afterwards resumed by the state for the failure of the company to comply with such condition and reverted to the United States, are not lands "excepted from the operation of the grant," within the meaning of section 5 of the adjustment act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. 557, c. 376); and a purchaser from the company acquires no right under said section to purchase the lands from the United States. Ostrom v. Wood, 140 Fed. 294, 299.

Proviso distinguished

"Provisos" and "exceptions" are similar, being intended to restrain the enacting clause, to except something which would otherwise be in it, or in some manner to modify it; but this is not always necessarily so. The word may, if such be the sense gathered from the act or instrument, simply explain what had previously been stated in general terms, or direct the manner of doing what was allowed by the context to be done generally. Under Ky. St. 1903, § 3457, authorizing a common council of third-class cities to cause streets to be graded, paved, etc., and providing for the payment of the cost out of the city treasury, providing the ordinances and contracts for such work shall specify how the work shall be paid for, the proviso or exception is directory and not mandatory, and hence it is not necessary, to render the city liable, that the ordinances shall specify how payment shall be made. Terrell v. City of Paducah, 92 S. W. 310, 312, 122 Ky. 331, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 289 (quoting Suth. St. Const. § 222).

"Exception" is defined in Anderson's Dict. as: 'Something withheld, not granted or parted with, the exclusion of the thing, or the thing or matter itself as excluded.' By the Century Dictionary as: 'The act of excepting or leaving out of account; exclusion of the act or excluding from number designated or from a statement or description.' An exception is a proviso that excludes something from a statement or description." Cassidy v. Royal Exchange Assur. of London, 59 Atl. 549, 551, 99 Me. 399.

There is some distinction between a "proviso" and an "exception." A "proviso" is properly the statement of something extrinsic of the subject-matter of the covenant, which shall go in discharge of that covenant by way of defeasance; an "exception" is the taking out of a covenant some part of the subject-matter of it. A clause in a lease to furnish a lessee a certain water power, subject "to the interruptions provided for in a certain lease by the Milwaukee & Rock River Canal Company to J. T. Perkins," but which were not set forth in the lease or in the declaration, was a proviso, so that it was not necessary for the lessor to set out either the clause or the lease to which it referred. La Point v. Cady (Wis.) 2 Chand. 202, 210 (quoting and adopting 1 Saunde's Prac. & Ev. 393, and cases in the Supreme Court).

"Provisos" and "exceptions" in statutes are similar, being intended to restrain the enacting clause to except something which would otherwise be within it, something ingrafted upon a preceding enactment, intended to take special cases out of a general class, and the general intent and purpose of an enacting clause will be controlled by the particular intent subsequently expressed. State v. Barrett, 87 N. E. 7, 9, 172 Ind. 169.

An "exception" exempts something absolutely from the operation of a statute by express words in the enacting clause, while a "proviso" defeats its operation conditionally. Pabst Brewing Co. v. City of Milwaukee, 133 N. W. 1112, 1114, 148 Wis. 582.

In the construction of statutes a "proviso" often constitutes an "exception" to the enacting words of the section. Provisos and exceptions are similar and are intended to restrain the enacting clause, to except something which would otherwise be within it or in some manner modified. "The office of a proviso is not to enlarge or extend the act of the section of which it is a part, but rather to put a limitation and a restraint upon the language which the lawmaker has employed." Laidlaw v. Portland V. & Y. Ry. Co., 84 Pac. 855, 857, 42 Wash. 292 (quoting In re Webb [N. Y.] 24 How. Prac. 247).

EXCEPTION (In Deed)

"Exception," as used in the law of conveyances, is defined by Washburn as "the taking of something out of the thing granted which otherwise passes by a deed." It is also defined as a "clause in a deed whereby the feoffer, donor, lessor, etc., doth except something out of that which he had granted before by his deed." The office of an "exception" is to take something out of the thing granted that otherwise would pass. It is thus distinguished from a "reservation," which is a clause whereby the grantor reserves some new thing to himself out of that which he had granted before. An exception must be a portion of the thing granted or described as granted and can be of nothing else and must always be of something which can be enjoyed separately from the thing granted. A provision in a deed that the party of the first part "hereby reserves the coal and other minerals underlying said land" constituted an exception and not a reservation. The title to the coal remained in the grantor and not a mere easement to go upon the land to mine it. Barrett v. Kansas & T. Coal Co., 79 Pac. 150, 151, 70 Kan. 649.

An "exception" is a withdrawal from the operation of the grant of some part of a thing itself. Dyson v. Bux, 114 Pac. 1092, 1093, 84 Kan. 596 (quoting and adopting the definition in Devlin, Deeds, § 979; Read v. Loftus, 108 Pac. 850, 852, 82 Kan. 492, 495, 31 L. R. A. [N. S.] 457; Edwards v. Brusha, 90 Pac. 727, 728, 18 Okl. 234; Preston v. White, 50 S. E. 236, 237, 57 W. Va. 278; Hall v. Hall, 76 Atl. 705, 706, 106 Me. 389.

"The phrase 'excepting and reserving' is commonly used in deeds and is sometimes held to amount to an exception of part of the property which is the subject of conveyance, and sometimes to a reservation out of the estate conveyed, depending largely upon the intention of the parties, the subject-matter of the grant, whether the thing excepted or reserved is a thing newly created out of the lands and tenements granted, or part of the property in existence and excepted therefrom." Bardon v. O'Brien, 120 N. W. 827, 828, 140 Wis. 191, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1066.

If A. owns ten acres of land and conveys it all to B. except one acre, upon which his mansion stands, that is an "exception." Dozier v. Toalson, 79 S. W. 420, 422, 180 Mo. 546, 103 Am. St. Rep. 586.

A deed of "lot number sixty-one * * * and the improvements thereon, which consists of one-half (1/2) each of the north and south walls of building designated as street number two hundred and twenty-five (225)" shows an intention to reserve one-half of the wall. Dyson v. Bux, 114 Pac. 1092, 1093, 84 Kan. 596.

A clause in a deed of a small part of a farm "reserving the privilege of a way from the highway past the house to the railroad in my usual place of crossing," the grantor having for many years passed over the granted land in going to and from other parts of the farm, is an "exception" of an existing way which became an easement appurtenant to the other land, and with the other land would pass by descent or assignment. Dee v. King, 59 Atl. 839, 842, 77 Vt. 230, 68 L. R. A. 860.

An administrator's deed conveying by metes and bounds all the real estate of which the husband died seised, "except the widow's dower," conveys the reversion of dower. Starr v. Brewer, 3 Atl. 479, 53 Vt. 24.

Reservation distinguished

A "reservation" is a clause in a deed, whereby the grantor reserves some new thing to himself issuing out of the thing granted and not in esse before; but an "exception" is always a part of the thing granted, or out of the general words or description of the grant. Hicks v. Phillips, 142 S. W. 394, 395, 146 Ky. 305; Hall v. Hall, 76 Atl. 705, 706, 106 Me. 389; City Club of Auburn v. McGeer, 92 N. E. 105, 198 N. Y. 609; Pitcairn v. Harkness, 101 Pac. 809, 810, 10 Cal. App. 295 (quoting Sears v. Ackerman, 72 Pac. 172, 138 Cal. 586); Williams v. Jones, 111 N. W. 505, 506, 507, 131 Wis. 361 (quoting and adopting definition in Rich v. Zellsdorff, 22 Wis. 544, 99 Am. Dec. 81); Brown v. Anderson, 11 S. W. 607, 608, 88 Ky. 577; Pritchard v. Lewis, 104 N. W. 989, 992, 125 Wis. 604, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 565, 110 Am. St. Rep. 873 (quoting and approving definition in Wellman v. Churchill, 42 Atl. 352, 353, 92 Me. 193); Washington Mills Emery Mfg. Co. v. Commercial Fire Ins. Co., 13 Fed. 646, 649 (citing Rich v. Zellsdorff, 22 Wis. 544, 99 Am. Dec. 81); Carlson v. Minnesota Land & Colonization Co., 129 N. W. 768, 769, 113 Minn. 361; Sheffield Water Co. v. Elk Tanning Co., 74 Atl. 742, 744, 225 Pa. 614; York Haven Paper Co. v. York Haven Water & Power Co., 194 Fed. 255, 267; Stone v. Stone, 119 N. W. 712, 714, 141 Iowa, 438, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 221, 18 Ann. Cas. 797; Bardon v. O'Brien, 120 N. W. 827, 829, 140 Wis. 191, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1066; Riefler & Sons v. Wayne Storage Water Power Co., 81 Atl. 300, 302, 232 Pa. 282; Preston v. White, 50 S. E. 236, 238, 57 W. Va. 278 (citing Tiedman, R. Prop. § 843).

The word "excepting," as used in deeds, would, in exact legal phraseology, be construed as retaining in the grantor the fee to the real estate described, instead of merely reserving from the operation of his warranty deed the mere incorporeal hereditament of a right of way; but the term is subject to explanation. It is sometimes used in its strict legal sense of retaining something from the grant, and at others in the sense of the word "reservation," which is the taking back from a grant a right conveyed by it amounting to a mere incorporeal hereditament. Kansas City, M. & O. Ry. Co. v. Litterer, 79 Pac. 114, 115, 70 Kan. 556.

There is a distinction between an "exception" which is ever a part of the thing granted, and of a thing in esse for which "exceptis," "salvo," "præter," and the like, are apt words, and a "reservation," which is always of a thing not in esse, but newly created or reserved out of the land or tenement demised. In Sheppard's Touchstone it is said of the reservation "It must be to the grantor and not to a stranger to the deed." When a covenant operated by way of reservation, and not by way of exception, words of inheritance were necessary to convey a fee-simple title to an easement, if made prior to the statute which changed the common law. Dawson v. Western M. R. Co., 68 Atl. 301, 305, 107 Md. 70, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 809, 126 Am. St. Rep. 337, 15 Ann. Cas. 678.

The rule that an "exception" withholds some part of the premises conveyed by the general description, while a "reservation" applies to some right or easement reserved by the grantor, is not arbitrary, and cannot override the real intent of the parties to be gathered from the whole instrument. Zimmerman v. Kirchner, 181 N. W. 756, 757, 151 Iowa, 483.

"A marked distinction exists between the terms 'exception' and 'reservation' as used in deeds, the distinction being that a 'reservation' is something taken back from the thing granted, while an 'exception' is some part of the estate not granted at all." The terms are often used indiscriminately, and sometimes in a deed what purports to be a reservation has the force of an exception when such appears to be the clear intention of the parties. A deed from J. to L. of a tract of land, "excepting and reserving" therefrom a strip two rods wide off a certain side of it, "to be used as a right of way," the grantee, however, to have the privilege of fencing said right of way into his inclosure and being required only to maintain a gate at each end for use of the grantor, his heirs and assigns, excepts the fee of the strip, in view of the facts that on the same day J. deeded to P. said strip, describing it as the premises described as right of way two rods wide reserved by the grantor in his deed to L., excepting and reserving all the timber thereon, with the right to the grantor to go on the land and remove it, and the facts that immediately thereafter J., without objection from L., removed from the strip the valuable timber thereon, and that P. thereafter paid the taxes on the strip. Pritchard v. Lewis, 104 N. W. 989, 991, 125 Wis. 604, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 565, 110 Am. St. Rep. 873.

By the common law the word "heirs" is essential to convey a fee, no matter how plainly the intent to do so may be expressed in other words of perpetuity. But this rule is not applicable to an "exception" of an easement appurtenant to other land of the grantor, which operates to retain in the grantor some portion of his former estate, and whatever is thus excepted or taken out of the grant remains in him as of his former title. An "exception" is of a part of the thing granted and of a thing in being at the time of the grant. A "reservation," however, vests in the grantor some new right or interest that did not exist in him before. It operates by way of an implied grant, and, in the absence of words of inheritance, only an estate for the life of the grantor is created. Whether a given clause creates a "reservation" or an "exception" is not so much a question of words as of intention to be gathered from all the circumstances of the case, so that the term "except" has been construed to create a reservation and the term "reserve" an exception. "Whether a particular provision is intended to operate as an exception or reservation is to be determined by its character, rather than by the particular words used." The following reservations were held to create exceptions: "Reserving forever a right of way over a street which the grantee is to make, from the northwest corner of said granted lot to the road." "Reserving the passway at grade over said railroad where now made." "Reserving the right to cross the track of said railroad on grade near the westerly line of our said lands at such place as said company can most conveniently provide." "We reserve to ourselves the privilege of crossing and recrossing the said piece of land above described, or any part thereof within said bounds." "Reserving forever for myself the privilege of passing with teams, etc., across the same in suitable places to land I own to the south of the premises." "I do reserve a driveway from the county road on to the east end of said lot, etc., and another driveway on to the west end of said lot." "Reserving a passway from the road" etc. "With the reservation of a road two rods wide over the northerly side of said lot." Hall v. Hall, 76 Atl. 705, 706, 707, 106 Me. 389 (citing Perkins v. Stockwell, 131 Mass. 529; Ring v. Walker, 87 Me. 550, 33 Atl. 174; Bowen v. Conner, 6 Cush. (60 Mass.) 132; White v. New York & N. E. R. Co., 30 N. E. 612, 156 Mass. 181; Hamlin v. New York & N. E. R. Co., 36 N. E. 200, 160 Mass. 459; Chappell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 24 Atl. 997, 62 Conn. 195, 17 L. R. A. 420; Inhabitants of Winthrop v. Fairbanks, 41 Me. 307; Smith v. Ladd, 41 Me. 314; Bangs v. Parker, 71 Me. 458; Wellman v. Churchill, 42 Atl. 352, 92 Me. 193).

The clause in a deed conveying an entire tract of land that "I, the said grantor, reserve a road through said land," was a mere reservation, giving the grantor a way over the lands granted, but not the fee of the way, as in case of an exception; for a "reservation" creates a new right issuing out of the thing granted, and reserving it to the grantor, while an "exception" merely withdraws from the operation of the grant something which would have otherwise passed. Parker v. Parker, 138 S. W. 462, 463, 99 Ark. 244.

A recital in a deed: "This conveyance reserves to the parties of the first part and their assigns free access or right of way to or from any lots adjoining either line of said Virginia street, to and over any wharf, which may at any time be upon said street"—in the technical sense of the term, is a "reservation," as distinguished from an "exception," and is therefore in the nature of a grant to the grantor. Aden v. Vallejo, 72 Pac. 905, 906, 139 Cal. 165 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

A clause in a deed reserving to the grantor the timber, with the right to enter and cut it, is an "exception" of the timber, with sufficient interest in the soil to sustain it. Bardon v. O'Brien, 120 N. W. 827, 829, 140 Wis. 191, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1066 (approving definition in Rich v. Zellsdorff, 22 Wis. 544, 99 Am. Dec. 81).

Where a deed conveyed the entire estate in lands in trust "excepting a certain lot of timber," such timber reserve being made for the express use and benefit of a certain party, there was an "exception" and not a reservation, and such exception was for the benefit of the party named personally, and terminated at his death. Stone v. Stone, 119 N. W. 712, 714, 141 Iowa, 438, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 221, 18 Ann. Cas. 797.

Reservation synonymous

Technically the words "exception" and "reservation" are different in meaning, but have often been used as synonymous. Chapman v. Mill Creek Coal & Coke Co., 46 S. E. 262, 263, 54 W. Va. 193; Preston v. White, 50 S. E. 236, 238, 57 W. Va. 278; Seligman v. Carr, 97 Pac. 324, 325, 8 Cal. App. 572.

The terms "reservation" and "exception" in deeds are often used as synonymous, when the thing to be secured to the grantor is a part of the granted premises, and, when so used, they are to be construed accordingly, though an "exception" in its technical meaning is something withheld from a grant which otherwise would pass as a part of it, while a "reservation" is some newly created right which the grantee impliedly conveys to the grantor, but the natural meaning of the word "reservation" is inconsistent with the technical meaning, and means to keep in reserve, to retain, to keep back. Smith's Ex'r v. Jones, 84 Atl. 866, 86 Vt. 258.

The technical meaning of the terms "reservation" and "exception" will give way to their ardent intent, though the wrong technical term be used, since they are frequently used interchangeably. Riefler & Sons v. Wayne Storage Water Power Co., 81 Atl. 300, 302, 232 Pa. 282.

Strictly speaking, "reservation" is something created or reserved out of a thing granted that was not in existence before, while an "exception" must be a part of the thing granted, and, while the distinction between the terms is well established, the words are frequently used synonymously. A provision of the deed reserving to the grantors all the rights, etc., secured under an oil and gas lease executed by them with right to renew or modify the lease to the same extent as though the conveyance had not been executed, and reciting that it was intended to reserve all oil and gas privileges in the premises, constitutes an "exception" and not a "reservation."

Moore v. Griffin, 83 Pac. 395, 396, 72 Kan. 164, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477, 7 Ann. Cas. 570.

"Reserving" and "excepting," though strictly distinguishable, are often used interchangeably or indiscriminately, and the use of either is not conclusive, as to the nature of the provision, as constituting a reservation or exception. Hicks v. Phillips, 142 S. W. 894, 395, 146 Ky. 305.

An "exception" is a part excepted from the general terms of that which is granted. The words "exception" and "reservation" are often used interchangeably, and the mere fact that what is excepted is mentioned as being reserved will not defeat its operation as an "exception." Elsea v. Adkins, 74 N. E. 242, 243, 164 Ind. 580, 108 Am. St. Rep. 320 (citing 13 Cyc. pp. 674, 675; 3 Washb. Real Prop. *640; Jones, Law of Real Prop. in Conveyancing, § 518).

EXCEPTION (In Practice)

See Bill of Exceptions; Broadside Exceptions; Peremptory Exception; Saving Exception; Special Exceptions.

"Exceptions" to a guardian's account within Code Civ. Proc. § 1635, providing that, on the hearing of an account, any person interested may appear and file exceptions in writing to the account and contest the same, are not limited to a mere written statement of the points or matters wherein the credits or charges in the account are claimed to be objectionable, but may also include a statement of any affirmative matters of fact not appearing on the face of the account, which it may be claimed require additional charges in favor of the estate or the rejection of credits; the word being properly used with reference to the equity practice of filing exceptions to the report of a master in chancery. In re Boye's Estate, 90 Pac. 454, 456, 151 Cal. 143.

An "exception" is an objection taken at the trial to a decision upon a matter of law. Hayes v. Clifford, 42 Or. 568, 72 Pac. 1 (citing B. & C. Comp. § 169).

Under Comp. Laws 1907, §§ 3282, 3283, 3304, defining an "exception" as an objection on a matter of law, etc., and providing that on appeal all rulings to which exceptions have been taken are reviewable, misconduct of counsel in making improper remarks to the jury in his argument, to which no objection was made, is not reviewable. Johnson v. Union Pac. R. Co., 100 Pac. 390, 397, 35 Utah, 285.

An "exception" is an objection taken at the trial to a decision upon a matter of law, whether such trial be by jury or court, and whether the decision be made during the formation of the jury, or in the admission or rejection of evidence, or in the charge to the jury, or at any other time from the calling of the action for trial to the rendering of the verdict or decision. Owens v. United States, 130 Fed. 279, 284, 286, 64 C. C. A. 525 (quoting and adopting definition in Code Alaska, c. 17, § 164).

The mere uttering of the word "exception" during the examination of a witness calls for no ruling by the court, and where the court makes none there is no ground for complaint. If counsel want evidence excluded, it must be objected to, and, if the objection is overruled, an exception taken. The occasional ejaculation of the word "exception" is in the nature of a running and unfavorable comment on the proceeding and nothing more. Sheldon v. Wright, 67 Atl. 807, 809, 80 Vt. 298.

Under B. & C. Comp. § 169, defining an exception as an objection taken at the trial to a decision upon matter of law, an exception must be taken at the trial, in order to obtain appellate review of a ruling on testimony, and the subsequent allowance of such an exception by the trial judge does not cure the omission to take the exception at the proper time. Annans v. Sewell, 84 Pac. 395, 47 Or. 372.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 637, defining an "exception" as "an objection taken to the decision of the court on a matter of law," no exception can be reserved to the argument of counsel, objection to which can be preserved only by an exception to the ruling of the court refusing to sustain a proper motion to instruct the jury not to consider such argument. Southern Indiana Ry. Co. v. Fine, 72 N. E. 589, 591, 163 Ind. 617.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 655, providing that an exception is an objection taken to a decision of a court upon a matter of law, a party desiring to object to language of counsel in argument must present the matter to the court by specific motion and reserve an exception to the ruling thereon, and a mere objection and exception is insufficient to present any question for review. Hohenstein-Harmetz Furniture Co. v. Matthews, 92 N. E. 196, 198, 46 Ind. App. 616.

Where defendant's exceptions stated that there was no testimony on a particular point "except as above stated," that should be construed to mean except as before stated in the exceptions. Jewett v. Buck, 63 Atl. 136, 138, 78 Vt. 353.

The office of an exception is to challenge the correctness of the rulings or decisions of the trial court promptly when made, to the end that the rulings may be corrected by the court itself, if deemed erroneous, and to lay the foundation for their review, if necessary, by the proper appellate tribunal. In the federal courts the taking of an exception immediately on the making of the ruling is indispensable to a review by the appellate court. Board of Com'rs of City and County of Denver v. Home Sav. Bank, 200 Fed. 28, 35, 118 C. C. A. 256.

The purpose of an exception is to advise counsel and the court that the ruling to which it is addressed is objected to, and that the objector will rely on error in the ruling; and under Code, §§ 3750, 3751, providing that no stated form of exception is required, and, when the decision objected to is entered, and the grounds of the exception appear in the entry, or when any error appears of record, the exception may be taken by the party causing to be noted, at the end of the decision or in connection therewith, that he excepts, an exception addressed to a decree need not state the grounds thereof, and when the decision to which the exception relates is entered of record, it is sufficient if the exception is noted at the end thereof. Warner v. Trustees of Norwegian Cemetery Ass'n, 117 N. W. 39, 41, 139 Iowa, 115.

Objection synonymous

The word "except," as used in Code 1906, § 50, c. 50, subsec. 6, providing that, in an action before a justice, either party may "except" to a pleading of his adversary when it is not sufficiently explicit to be understood, etc., is synonymous with the word "object," and as a demurrer is an objection to a pleading, though not expressly provided for by the statute, it may be interposed to a complaint in an action before a justice, and will be treated as an "exception." Grant v. Wyatt, 56 S. E. 187, 61 W. Va. 133.

In pleading

As pleading, see Pleading.

An "exception" to all that part of an answer which pleads as damages that the defendant's workmen were delayed, etc., because such damages do not arise out of the contract sued on and are too remote, is, in effect, a general exception. Gorham v. Dallas, C. & S. W. R. Co., 95 S. W. 551, 557, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 615.

An "exception" is broadly defined to be a "means of defense used by the defendant to retard or defeat the demand brought against him." Code Prac. art. 320. A motion to dissolve a preliminary injunction on the ground that the signature of the surety on the bond was affixed by an unauthorized person is in the nature of a peremptory exception relating to form, and should be filed before joinder of issue. Union Sawmill Co. v. Lake Lumber Co., 42 South. 429, 430, 117 La. 930.

EXCEPTIONAL CASE

Petitioner having been arrested for violating the Wisconsin Usury Law (St. Wis. 1898, § 1691, as amended by Laws 1905, c. 278, and Laws 1907, c. 412), making the collection of rates of interest in excess of those specified a misdemeanor, applied to a federal court for a writ of habeas corpus on the ground that the statute was unconstitutional, and alleged that he had no adequate remedy in the state courts because, if, when tried, he was found guilty, the court would immediately impose the penalty of imprisonment, and not a fine, having previously inflicted imprisonment as a penalty in other recent cases, and would not stay execution of the sentence pending appeal, that the appeal would be ineffective because the Wisconsin Supreme Court had already decided the statute constitutional and would adhere to its ruling, and that petitioner could not obtain a decision on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from the decision of the state court before the sentence that would be imposed had expired. Held, that such petitioner improperly assumed that his trial in the state court would result in a conviction, and that such court would sentence to imprisonment when it had authority to impose a fine as a penalty and also to order his enlargement pending appeal, and that such allegations were, therefore, insufficient to show that the case was an exceptional one of peculiar urgency sufficient to require the granting of the writ by the federal court. Ex parte Bartlett, 197 Fed. 98, 101.

EXCEPTIONAL OCCURRENCE

Where a painter was painting the walls of an elevator shaft, the elevators remaining in use, the turning of one of the large wheels was not an "exceptional occurrence" of which he should have been given notice, although it would have been had the elevators been shut down. Lauter v. Hedden Const. Co., 83 Atl. 878, 879, 83 N. J. Law, 617.

EXCESS

See To Excess.

Estimated excess of revenue, see Estimated Revenue.

The meaning of the word "excess," in an application for life insurance declaring that the applicant does not use intoxicating liquor to excess but takes a glass of beer occasionally, is largely a matter of opinion and varies between a drink and a drunk, since an occasional glass of beer may mean anything from a glass once a month to one every 15 minutes according to the capacity of the individual, or to the liberality of his views, but where an insurer obtains disclosures suggesting further inquiry on deeming the subject of vital importance, insurer is chargeable with knowledge of its soliciting agent as to the habits of the applicant. Biermann v. Guaranty Mut. Life Ins. Co., 120 N. W. 963, 965, 142 Iowa, 341.

There is no "excess" within the local improvement act requiring the city to return to the property owners the "excess," where a larger sum has been collected from them than is necessary for the construction of the improvements, where the provision for interest on assessments is illegal, but such interest is voluntarily paid, and the amount paid by the property owners, including interest, does not exceed what the city agreed to pay the contractor, which was the amount of the assessments with interest thereon. City of Chicago v. McGovern, 80 N. E. 895, 897, 228 Ill. 403.

The term "excess," as used in Acts 80th Leg. 1st Called Sess. c. 23, providing for a domestic corporation franchise tax of 50 cents on each $1,000 of authorized capital stock, providing that if the outstanding stock, plus surplus and undivided profits, exceeds the amount of authorized capital stock, the rate shall be computed on the amount of outstanding stock, plus surplus, etc., but that where the authorized capital exceeds $1,000,000 the rate shall be 50 cents on each $1,000 up to $1,000,000, and 25 cents on each $1,000 in "excess" of $1,000,000, is intended to embrace capital, surplus, and undivided profits. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. McDonald, 148 S. W. 287, 288, 105 Tex. 334.

EXCESS OF JURISDICTION

"Excess of jurisdiction," as distinguished from absence of jurisdiction, means that an act, though within the general power of the judge, is not authorized and is void, with respect to the particular case, because the conditions which alone authorize the exercise of his general power in the case are wanting. Broom v. Douglass, 57 South. 860, 864, 175 Ala. 268, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 164.

EXCESSIVE

An instruction, in an action for injuries to a passenger by the derailment of the train, that the carrier must exercise the utmost caution characteristic of very careful and prudent men, is erroneous as imposing on the carrier too high a degree of care; the word "very" meaning exceedingly, excessively, and the word "excessive" meaning exceeding what is usual or proper. Parker v. Boston & M. R. R., 79 Atl. 865, 872, 84 Vt. 329.

A substantially excessive distress being necessarily an unreasonable one, within Civ. Code 1902, § 2434, providing that a distress for rent shall be reasonable and not too great, and that a landlord who makes unreasonable and excessive distress shall be liable for damages sustained by the tenant by reason of such excessive distress, a charge submitting to the jury the question whether the distress was unreasonable—that is, whether the amount of property seized to pay $80 was excessive—was not erroneous in not submitting the question whether it was unreasonable and excessive; the word "excessive" being undoubtedly used in the charge in the sense of substantially excessive. Alexander v. Hill, 70 S. E. 1009, 1010, 88 S. C. 368.

EXCESSIVE FINE

A fine of $576,853.74 for larceny or conversion of money from the state, and imprisonment in the county jail one day for each $2 of the fine, which the defendant was unable to pay at the time or during a lifetime of effort, although within the maximum of the statute, was an "excessive fine" within the prohibition of the Constitution. State v. Ross, 106 Pac. 1022, 1024, 55 Or. 450, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 601, 613.

EXCESSIVE PUNISHMENT

See Cruel and Unusual Punishment.

EXCESSIVE SPEED

Six knots an hour is an "excess of speed" for a steamship moving in a thick fog in a frequented part of the ocean. In re Clyde S. S. Co., 134 Fed. 95, 98.

EXCESSIVE TAX

To entitle a party to an abatement of a part of his tax, it is necessary to show that the tax was "excessive"; that it subjected him to more than his fair share of the public expense. He should show that the tax was "excessive" by proof that the whole or a part of his property was exempt; that he did not own any property in the taxing district, or a less quantity than was taxed; that a greater valuation than that assessed or too large a rate was made use of in computing the tax, or that some mathematical error occurred in the computation, or that the ratio between the true and assessed value of his property was greater than the ratio between the true and the assessed value, of all the other property in the taxing district. Winnipeg Lake Cotton & Woolen Mfg. Co. v. City of Laconia, 65 Atl. 378, 880, 74 N. H. 82.

EXCESSIVELY BURDENED

A town is "excessively burdened" within "An act in addition to chapter 140 of the Revised Laws" (Acts 1882, No. 16) section 1, when it is required to build a bridge or keep in repair a highway, used by other towns, and it is not able to build such bridge or keep in repair such highway on account of its limited population or other disability and where the other towns are disproportionately benefited. Town of Sharon v. Town of Stratford, 56 Vt. 421, 422.

Where a town has voluntarily run into debt by investment in a railroad so that the building of a bridge would be a heavy burden on the town, it cannot be said "to be excessively burdened" within the meaning of Acts 1884, No. 11, relating to maintaining of highways and bridges. Sheldon v. State, 7 Atl. 901, 59 Vt. 36.

The term "excessively burdened," within Acts 1882, No. 16, is a relative one, covering a consideration of the complainant town's burdens in connection with the burdens of the other towns benefited by such highway.

A town is not excessively burdened by being required to build and maintain a highway within its limits, unless its municipal burdens would be increased thereby beyond its due measure and proportion in comparison with the municipal burdens and taxation for necessary purposes of such other towns as are deemed to be especially benefited by such highway. Weybridge v. Town of Addison, 57 Vt. 569, 572.

EXCHANGE

See Turf Exchange; With Exchange.

Sale distinguished, see Sale.

See, also, Trade.

A "trade" is synonymous with an "exchange," which signifies a transfer of one or more pieces of property for other property. Colgan v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank, 114 Pac. 460, 464, 59 Or. 469 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2546).

"Exchange" is a contract by which the parties mutually give, or agree to give, one thing for another; neither thing, or both things, being money only. Steere & Ballah v. Gingery, 110 N. W. 774, 776, 21 S. D. 183.

An "exchange of goods" is a commutation, transmutation, or transfer of goods for other goods. Proof that accused furnished prosecutor a quart of whisky under an agreement that he was to return other whisky, shows a barter, or exchange within the statute prohibiting the sale, barter, or exchange of intoxicating liquor, though prosecutor testified that accused loaned him the whisky. Clark v. State, 52 South. 893, 894, 167 Ala. 101, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 517 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 715; 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2546; 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4196; 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6291).

Real estate

Where a guardian of infants released their interest in the homestead of their deceased father to the surviving widow for life, in consideration of the release by her of the 40 acres assigned to her as dower during the minority of the infants or either of them, there was a conveyance of interests for interests amounting to an exchange of property, and the transaction was void under the Constitution protecting the homestead of a decedent for the benefit of his widow and minor children. Gatlin v. Lafon, 129 S. W. 284, 286, 95 Ark. 256.

EXCHANGE (In Commercial Law)

See Bill of Exchange; Foreign Bill of Exchange; Inland Bill of Exchange.

The meaning of "exchange and re-exchange" is best indicated by illustration: A purchases a bill of exchange in S. drawn on a house in N. and pays therefor a premium; in event of dishonor of the bill in N., it is obvious that if the holder can only recover of the drawer in S. the amount of the bill he will lose the premium which he paid for the exchange and suffer without remedy the loss and inconvenience of returning the bill to S. for recourse against the drawer; and, even if no premium has been paid, the holder, who is entitled under the drawer's contract to receive the amount of the bill in N., will not be indemnified if he can only sue for and obtain that amount in S. From these circumstances grew the customary right of the holder of the bill by the law merchant to draw a bill of exchange upon the drawer for the principal amount which should have been received, increased by the cost of protest to the sum which it will cost to replace that principal amount at the place where it should have been paid. This right to recover for re-exchange is therefore based upon the obligation to pay at the place where the bill is payable, and, if the holder of the bill ultimately receives what he is entitled to at the place where the bill is payable with interest and the cost of protest, he is not entitled to receive anything more. Where the payee of a draft payable in New York, but drawn in a foreign country, negotiated it to a broker there, receiving the irredeemable paper currency of that country, and the draft was dishonored, whereby the payee on reimbursing the broker suffered a loss owing to the depreciation of the local currency, the fluctuation was not to be considered in computing re-exchange. Laws 1897, p. 743, c. 612, § 200, provides that a negotiable instrument is discharged by payment in due course by or on behalf of the principal debtor, or by any other act which will discharge a simple contract for the payment of money. A New York corporation gave in a foreign country a draft on itself payable in New York. The payee negotiated it to a local broker, and it was dishonored, whereupon the payee, who had reimbursed the broker, sued on the draft in New York, and was paid the face of the draft, interest, and protest fees. Held, that he was not entitled to recover re-exchange. Pavenstedt v. New York Life Ins. Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 614, 617, 618, 113 App. Div. 866.

"Exchange bought and paid for" contemplates bills drawn against shipments and purchases by advances made to shippers upon the strength of documents to be furnished by them with the bills to repay the advances so made. Reynes v. Dumont, 9 Sup. Ct. 486, 493, 130 U. S. 354, 32 L. Ed. 934.

EXCISE

An "excise tax" is a tax upon a pursuit, trade, or occupation, generally taking the form of an exaction for a license fee to pursue the particular occupation. Spokane & Eastern Trust Co. v. Spokane County, 128 Pac. 54, 55, 70 Wash. 48 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2548).

The word "excise" is a term of very general signification, and means tribute, custom tax, tollage, or assessment. Booth's Ex'r v. Commonwealth ex rel. Jefferson County Attorney, 113 S. W. 61, 65, 180 Ky. 88, 83 L. R. A. (N. S.) 592; Allen's Ex'rs v. McElroy, 113 S. W. 66, 180 Ky. 111; Barret v. Continental Realty Co., 113 S. W. 66, 180 Ky. 109; Opinion of the Justices, 85 N. E. 545, 550, 196 Mass. 603 (quoting and adopting definition in President, etc., Portland Bank v. Apthorp, 12 Mass. 252, 256).

Under Const. pt. 2, c. 1, § 1, art. 4, authorizing the Legislature to impose reasonable excises on any produce, goods, commodities, and merchandise brought into the state, the Legislature may impose an excise tax on sales of certificates of stock of domestic and foreign corporations. Opinion of the Justices, 85 N. E. 545, 550, 196 Mass. 603.

"Excises" are taxes laid upon the manufacture, sale, or consumption of commodities, within the country, upon licenses to pursue occupations, and upon corporate privileges. The tax measured by net annual income, imposed by Act Aug. 5, 1909, § 38, upon the carrying on or doing of business in a corporate or quasi corporate capacity, being an "excise," and not a direct tax, is not invalid because not apportioned among the several states according to population. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 342, 349, 220 U. S. 107, 55 L. Ed. 889, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1812 (quoting and adopting definition in Cooley, Const. Lim. [7th Ed.] p. 68).

"The designation 'excise tax' does not always indicate merely an inland imposition or duty on the consumption of commodities, but often denotes an impost for a license to pursue certain callings, or to deal in special commodities, or to exercise particular franchises. It is used more frequently, in this country, in the latter sense than in any other." State of Maine v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 12 Sup. Ct. 121, 142 U. S. 217, 35 L. Ed. 994.

EXCITEMENT

"Excitement" is defined to mean impulsion; agitation; the act of exciting, or the state of having increased action; that which moves, stirs, or induces action; a motive. Webster's Dictionary. Morris v. Territory, 99 Pac. 760, 768, 1 Okl. Cr. 617.

EXCLAMATION

Spontaneous exclamation, see Spontaneous.

EXCLUDE

The word "excluded," as used in the statute providing that neither the husband nor the wife shall be "excluded" as witnesses, was used because the common-law rule used that term, and it includes both privilege and disqualification of the witness, and hence the statute changes the common-law rule by making one spouse a competent witness against the other; but this change does not affect the rule against disclosure of marital communications. Ex parte Beville, 50 South. 685, 688, 58 Fla. 170, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 273, 19 Ann. Cas. 48.

The customary meaning of the word "excluding," in marine insurance, does not differ greatly from the word "prohibiting." Where a policy of marine insurance containing a printed clause which prohibited the vessel from certain waters including the Gulf of Campeachy had written into it the amount of insurance, the name of the vessel, and the terms of the policy, after which was written the words, "excluding the Gulf of Campeachy," it was held that the written words were not for the purpose of qualifying the printed clause, but for calling particular attention to the Gulf of Campeachy, near which the vessel was when insured. Parker v. China Mut. Ins. Co., 41 N. E. 267, 164 Mass. 237.

EXCLUSION

An agreement by defendant to use plaintiff's electric lights in certain premises "to the 'exclusion' of other electrical illumination" is not an absolute requirement that defendant shall use the electric lights, but only that he shall not use any electric light other than plaintiff's, and defendant is not liable for breach of contract where he removes from premises specified and refuses to use plaintiff's electric light therein. United States Illuminating Co. v. Flak, 29 N. Y. Supp. 154, 155, 78 Hun. 828.

EXCLUSIVE

See Sole and Exclusive.

The word "exclusive" in a contract between a city and a certain person purporting to grant the exclusive privilege of laying and maintaining water pipes in its streets, and by which it agreed to pay certain rentals for hydrants, such contract to continue in force for 20 years, was insufficient to raise the implication that the city by the use of the word thereby agreed to renounce its power to construct the waterworks itself, because such is not the ordinary meaning of the word, and because the word "exclusive," if given its usual interpretation, would render the exclusive feature of the contract void. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. City of Sioux Falls, 181 Fed. 890, 899.

"Exclusive" means pertaining to the subject alone, not including, admitting, or pertaining to another or others; undivided; sole; as an exclusive right or privilege; exclusive jurisdiction. "The word 'exclusive' is derived from 'ex' out, and 'claudere' to shut." Hence an ordinance granting a waterworks company the "exclusive" right to construct and maintain waterworks in and near a certain city for the purpose of supplying streets, squares, and public places does not grant the waterworks company the exclusive right to use the streets in constructing a system for the purpose of supplying the residents of the city. Mitchell v. Tulsa Water, Light, Heat & Power Co., 95 Pac. 961, 969, 21 Okl. 243 (quoting and adopting the definitions in Cent. Dict. and In re Union Ferry Co., 98 N. Y. 139).

The words, "exclusive of costs," as used in Gen. St. 1901, § 5019, subd. 3, providing for an appeal to the Supreme Court where the amount in controversy exclusive of costs exceeds $100, mean such costs as are provided for by statute, and which may be computed and taxed by the clerk of court, and do not include an allowance as attorney's fees to the prevailing party, the amount of which cannot be computed but which as to amount must be determined judicially by the court. Phenix Ins. Co. v. Stahl, 96 Pac. 854, 78 Kan. 528.

Under a statute prohibiting an appeal from a judgment for the recovery of money, if the value in controversy be less than $200 exclusive of interest and cost, an appeal will not lie from a judgment involving a balance of the principal, not exceeding $175, though with accumulated interest the debt exceeded $200; the expression "exclusive of interest" meaning interest accumulated prior to the judgment. Cooper v. Patton's Adm'r (Ky.), 104 S. W. 1026.

EXCLUSIVE AGENCY

The words "exclusive agency," as used in an agreement between an owner of land and a broker that the broker should have the "exclusive agency" for the sale of the land for a fixed period at a fixed price, and that the broker should give attention to the sale of the land, have the same examined and advertised, and should report promptly all sales, etc., deprived the owner of the right of selling the premises, and a sale by him of the timber before the expiration of the fixed period was a breach of contract. Hunter v. Wenatchee Land Co., 97 Pac. 494, 496, 50 Wash. 438.

An "exclusive agency" to sell property is not equivalent to an "exclusive right to sell"; and where an exclusive agency only is granted, the owner retains the right to sell the property himself, without being liable to the agent for a commission. Smith v. Preiss, 136 N. W. 7, 117 Minn. 392, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 820 (citing Dole v. Sherwood, 43 N. W. 569, 41 Minn. 535, 5 L. R. A. 720, 16 Am. St. Rep. 731).

EXCLUSIVE CONTROL

See, also, Exclusive Management and Control.

The phrase "exclusive control" in Kansas City charter and enabling act, giving the city exclusive control over its public highways, when considered in connection with the fact that the Constitution only authorized the people of the city to adopt a charter subordinate to the state law, and there being a state law as to the use of the streets, necessarily meant exclusive as to matters of mere municipal concern, which did not conflict with the state law. State v. Kessella, 96 S. W. 494, 496, 120 Mo. App. 233 (quoting and adopting definition in State ex rel. Garner v. Missouri & K. Tel. Co., 88 S. W. 41, 189 Mo. 83).

The word "exclusive," as used in Acts 1887, p. 42, § 50, providing that "such city shall have exclusive control over its public highways, streets, avenues, alleys and public places, and shall have 'exclusive' power by ordinance, to vacate or abandon any public highway, street, avenue, alley or public place, or part thereof, any law of this state to the contrary, notwithstanding," is not to be given its unlimited meaning, but must be understood as subject to the control of the state whenever the state chooses to assume control. The constitutional grant of power under which the charter is formed says that it must always be subject to the Constitution and laws of the state, which we interpret to mean that in all matters not appertaining to city government the charter is subordinate to the will of the Legislature. The Legislature, in conferring on the city the exclusive control of its streets, meant exclusive control for the purpose of the city government, not to the exclusion of the state in other matters. State ex rel. Garner v. Missouri & K. Tel. Co., 88 S. W. 41, 43, 189 Mo. 83.

EXCLUSIVE ENJOYMENT

The phrase "exclusive enjoyment," as used in Rev. St. § 2322, providing that locators of all mining claims, having complied with the laws of the United States and local regulations, shall acquire a possessory title and shall have the "exclusive right of possession and enjoyment" of all the surface included within the lines of their location, means enjoyment of the surface for mining purposes alone, and hence the location of a mining claim within a forest reserve did not operate to withdraw the land embraced therein from the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture, nor give to locators having acquired a possessory interest only any authority to use the surface for the erection and maintenance of a saloon without a permit from the Secretary of Agriculture. United States v. Riazinelli, 182 Fed. 675, 681.

EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION

See, also, Sole and Exclusive.

Where a proceeding in respect to a certain subject-matter can only be brought in one court, that court is said to have exclusive jurisdiction. "Exclusive jurisdiction" is that which gives sole power to try the cause. Ex parte Wade, 100 Pac. 35, 38, 2 Okl. Cr. 100 (quoting and adopting definitions in 1 Rap. & L. Law Dict. p. 702, and 2 Bouv. Law Dict. p. 26).

The word "exclusive," as used in Act April 16, 1873, p. 120, giving the circuit court exclusive original jurisdiction of everything properly pertaining to matters cognizable in courts of probate, means possessed to the exclusion of others. Watson v. Henderson, 135 S. W. 461, 462, 98 Ark. 63.

Under Code Cr. Proc. § 39, subd. 1, §§ 56, 57, defining the jurisdiction of courts, and section 252, empowering the grand jury to inquire into all crimes, and Laws 1910, c. 659, § 31, declaring that the Court of Special Sessions shall have in the first instance exclusive jurisdiction to hear misdemeanors, but shall be divested of jurisdiction, if, before the trial the grand jury shall indict the same person for the same offense, the commencement of a prosecution for a misdemeanor in the Special Sessions is not a prerequisite to the right to indict for the same offense, since the word "exclusive" merely defines the jurisdiction of inferior criminal courts, and prevents the subjecting of accused to be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense, in violation of Const. art. 1, § 6. People v. Wenk, 127 N. Y. Supp. 702, 703, 71 Misc. Rep. 368.

Kalamazoo Amended Charter provides for the election of but one justice of the municipal court. Chapter 29, § 18, provides that he shall, as against all other justices of the peace of Kalamazoo county, have exclusive jurisdiction of all proceedings within his jurisdiction when both parties thereto shall at the commencement of the proceedings be residents of the city. Section 3 provides that the justice shall be considered the successor in office of all the justices of the peace now in the city as their respective terms of office shall expire. Prior to the amended charter, the city charter provided for four justices of the peace. Held, that "exclusive" jurisdiction of the justice of the municipal court in the specified cases was not suspended until the expiration of the other justices' terms, and his jurisdiction before that time was not concurrent with that of the justices of the peace. Striffin v. Baden, 118 N. W. 740, 741, 155 Mich. 49.

In Civ. Code 1895, § 4193, providing that the jurisdiction of the county court extends "into the county, town, district or districts, to all civil cases of contract or tort (save where exclusive jurisdiction is vested in the superior court), the words, "save where exclusive jurisdiction is vested in the superior court," refer to the cases enumerated in the Constitution over which that instrument declares the superior court shall have exclusive jurisdiction. Chamblyss v. Hawkins, 51 S. E. 337, 338, 123 Ga. 361.

EXCLUSIVE LEGISLATION

The obvious meaning of the words "exclusive legislation," as used in Const. art. 1, § 8, providing that Congress shall have power to exercise exclusive legislation over all places purchased by consent of the Legislature, in which the same shall be for the erection of forts, magazines, are equivalent to "exclusive jurisdiction." United States v. Tully, 140 Fed. 899, 900 (citing United States v. Cornell, 25 Fed. Cas. 646).

Under the provision of the federal Constitution declaring that Congress shall have power to exercise "exclusive legislation" in all cases whatsoever over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the state in which the same shall be for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock yards, and other needful buildings, where a purchase of land for any of these purposes is made by the national government and the state Legislature has given its consent to the purchase, the land so purchased by the very terms of the Constitution ipso facto falls within the exclusive legislation of Congress, and the state jurisdiction is completely ousted, as this is the necessary result, for exclusive jurisdiction is the attendant upon exclusive legislation. State v. Tully, 78 Pac. 760, 762, 31 Mont. 365, 3 Ann. Cas. 824.

EXCLUSIVE LICENSE

An "exclusive license" by a patentee is one which does not amount to an assignment by reason of something reserved to the patentee, as, where the patentee excepted out of his grant the right to make machines within a certain part of the territory granted. Bowers v. Atlantic, Gulf & Pacific Co., 162 Fed. 895, 899, 901 (quoting and adopting definition in Hammond v. Hunt, 11 Fed. Cas. 391).

EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT AND CONTROL

See, also, Exclusive Control.

By St. 1897, p. 447, c. 274, an appropriation was made for the support and maintenance of certain classes of inmates of the home at Evergreen under the auspices of the Woman's Relief Corps Home Association, which was then a private corporation. The act further provided that the home should be managed by a board of directors, to be appointed by the Governor, who was empowered to fill all vacancies therein and remove any director for cause; that the board should keep accounts of all receipts and expenditures and report annually to the Governor; and that all claims under the appropriation made should be presented and audited as other claims against the state. Held, that such act made the home a state institution under the exclusive management and control of the state, within the provision of article 4, § 22, Const. Cal., that with certain exceptions no money shall be appropriated or drawn from the state treasury "for the use or benefit of any corporation * * * or any other institution not under the exclusive management and control of the state as a state institution." Board of Directors of Woman's Relief Corps Home Ass'n of California v. Nye, 97 Pac. 208, 209, 8 Cal. App. 527.

EXCLUSIVE OWNERSHIP

"Exclusive ownership" is necessarily ownership free from any kind of legal or equitable interest in any one else. A philanthropist made a bequest to the various asylums that may have been formed, or may be formed within a year, for the orphans of the late war for the restoration of the Union, providing that for a time the interest only should be used, and that the bequest be so managed as to give the orphans as they become of age a sum of money to fit them out in life and gradually extinguish the fund. The Soldiers' Orphans' Home having been established in Wisconsin, it received over $25,000 from this bequest. Thereafter another left $2,000 to the trustees of the home for the benefit of the children. Held, that the state in the administration of the fund occupied the position of a trustee only, the orphans being the beneficiaries, and hence property purchased by the state from the fund for the use of one of such orphans was not exclusively owned by the state so as to be exempt from taxation. Comstock v. Boyle, 128 N. W. 870, 871, 144 Wis. 180.

EXCLUSIVE POSSESSION

"Exclusive possession" merely means the exclusion of all others from the possession of land and does not require the possessor to exclude all persons from entering on the land. Point Mountain Coal & Lumber Co. v. Holly Lumber Co., 75 S. E. 197, 201, 71 W. Va. 21.

On an issue as to whether defendant had maintained absolute possession of certain coal land under a gift from his father, plaintiff was not prejudiced by the court's failure to use the term "exclusive possession" in a particular part of its charge, where there was nothing in the language used, or in any of the instructions, excluding the idea of the necessity for exclusive possession, and there was no doubt under the charge as a whole that the jury must have understood the necessity for defendant to have maintained an absolute possession in order to have established his claim. Greenwich Coal & Coke Co. v. Learn, 83 Atl. 74, 76, 234 Pa. 180.

In order that an inference of guilt may be drawn from the unexplained possession of goods recently stolen, it must be an "exclusive personal possession" on the part of the accused. But this does not mean that the goods must be actually in the hands of the accused or on his person; but possession of the requisite character may be established by the fact that the goods were found on premises or in a place of which he was in exclusive occupancy and control. If the place was accessible to others capable of stealing the inference cannot be drawn, although the fact is entitled to consideration in connection with other facts in the case. If stolen goods were found on premises of which accused was the tenant and it was proven that he was on the premises on the morning next after the alleged offense was committed, the jury might infer that they were on the premises with his knowledge and that they were in fact in his possession. If they were found in the joint possession of accused and another indicted with him, the jury might draw from such possession the same inference of guilt as if found in his sole possession. State v. Wright (Del.) 66 Atl. 364, 365, 6 Pennewill, 251.

EXCLUSIVE POWER

The term "exclusive power," used in a grant to municipalities of "exclusive power" over a subject of police regulation such as the sale of intoxicating liquors necessarily implies full legislative authority. City of Baton Rouge v. Butler, 42 South. 650, 651, 118 La. 73.

The word "exclusive," as used in Const. art. 11, § 2, as amended November 8, 1910, providing that the legislative assembly shall not enact, amend, or repeal any city charter, but granting such power to the legal voters of every city or town, subject to constitutional and criminal law of the state, together with the exclusive power to license, regulate, control, suppress, or prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors therein, but such municipality shall within its limits be subject to the provisions of the local option law of the state, had not the force usually given to that adjective, and that, as the restriction contained no exception, an employment of the power so conferred was subject to all the consequences that may have resulted from the adoption of the local option law, so that a prohibition order made in the county as a whole could not be modified or vacated, except by subsequent vote of the qualified voters of an incorporated city or town therein cast against prohibition at an election regularly held for that purpose in the municipality. State v. Schluer, 115 Pac. 1057, 1062, 59 Or. 18.

The word "exclusive," as used in an amendment to Const. art. 11, § 2, providing that the exclusive power to license or prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors within a municipality, is vested in such municipality, subject to the provisions of the local option law of the state, means that a municipality shall, until otherwise ordered, be the sole agent of the state in exercising the police power, and construed in that way the amendment is valid, as the right of the state to recall the power delegated remains intact, and the amendment does not trench on a republican form of government guaranteed by Const. U. S. art. 4, § 4, nor encroach upon the limitations imposed by the federal Constitution upon the powers of the state, under article 1, § 9. State v. Hearn, 117 Pac. 412, 413, 50 Or. 227.

EXCLUSIVE PRIVILEGE

See, also, Privileges and Immunities; Special Privilege or Immunity.

A contract by a city, granting the "exclusive privilege" of laying water pipes for public use in the highways of the city to K., and containing a provision that it was agreed that the contract should remain in full force for 20 years from a specified date, with the privilege to the city of purchasing the waterworks from K., his successors or assigns, after the expiration of 10 years, etc., did not constitute an implied renunciation of the city's power to construct and maintain waterworks itself, after the expiration of the 20-year period. City of Sioux Falls v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 136 Fed. 721, 728, 69 C. C. A. 373 (citing Long Island Water Supply Co. v. City of Brooklyn, 17 Sup. Ct. 718, 166 U. S. 685, 41 L. Ed. 1165; City of Joplin v. Southwest Missouri Light Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 43, 191 U. S. 150, 48 L. Ed. 127; Helena Waterworks Co. v. Helena, 25 Sup. Ct. 40, 195 U. S. 383, 49 L. Ed. 245; Blenville Water Supply Co. v. City of Mobile, 20 Sup. Ct. 40, 175 U. S. 109, 44 L. Ed. 92; Id., 22 Sup. Ct. 820, 186 U. S. 212, 46 L. Ed. 1132; Skaneateles Waterworks Co. v. Skaneateles, 22 Sup. Ct. 400, 184 U. S. 354, 46 L. Ed. 585).

Under old Const. art. 13, § 1, forbidding exclusive and separate privileges except in consideration of public services, an exemption from taxation not in consideration of public services is an "exclusive and separate privilege," and hence invalid. City of Winchester v. Winchester Waterworks Co., 148 S. W. 1, 3, 149 Ky. 177.

EXCLUSIVE RIGHT

A municipality excludes itself from competition during the period named with the grantee in an ordinance of the "exclusive" right to erect, maintain, and operate waterworks for a definite term, to supply water for public and private use. City of Vicksburg v. Vicksburg Waterworks Co., 26 Sup. Ct. 680, 686, 202 U. S. 453, 60 L. Ed. 1102, 6 Ann. Cas. 253.

Plaintiff contracted to furnish its "ad service," consisting of one Buster Brown cut for each week, to defendant dry goods company, which agreed to pay therefor at the rate of $3 per week, defendant to have the "exclusive right" to use the same in the city where defendant was located only, and to hold the cuts, etc., subject to plaintiff's order when the contract expired. Held, that the words "exclusive right," as so used, had reference only to the use of the cuts furnished defendant under the contract, and that plaintiff did not thereby contract away its entire service for the city. Buster Brown Co. v. Valley Dry Goods Co., 47 South. 549, 94 Miss. 856.

The "exclusive rights" secured by a patent are the right to make, the right to use, and the right to vend the invention it protects. A grant, transfer, or conveyance of these exclusive rights throughout the United States, or a grant of an undivided part of these exclusive rights, or a grant of these exclusive rights throughout a specified part of the United States, is an assignment of an interest in the patent, by whatever name it may be called. A grant, transfer, or conveyance of any right or interest less than these is a license. Paulus v. M. M. Buck Mfg. Co., 129 Fed. 594, 596, 64 C. C. A. 162 (citing Waterman v. Mackenzie, 11 Sup. Ct. 334, 138 U. S. 252, 255, 258, 34 L. Ed. 923; Union Switch & Signal Co. v. Johnson Railroad Signal Co., 61 Fed. 940, 943, 10 C. C. A. 176, 179; Pickhardt v. Packard, 22 Fed. 530, 532, 23 Blatchf. 23).

The "exclusive right of a patent," or the franchise which the patent grants, consists altogether in the right to exclude every one from making or using or vending the thing patented, without the permission of the patentee. This is all he obtains by his patent. In other words, the right is the right to prevent every one from making, or using, or selling the thing patented without his consent. Or, to put it differently, it is the right to sue any one who so makes, uses, or sells the thing patented. It is not the right to make, or to use, or sell the thing patented. That he has the right to do irrespective of the statute by virtue of the common law. Hartman v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 145 Fed. 358, 363.

The "exclusive right of possession and enjoyment" given by Rev. St. U. S. § 2322, to the owner of a valid lode location, is not limited to the surface, nor even to the single vein whose discovery antedates and is the basis of the location, but extends to all veins, lodes, and ledges throughout their entire depth, the top or apex of which lies inside of the surface lines extended downward vertically. Nash v. McNamara, 93 Pac. 405, 408, 30 Nev. 114, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 168, 133 Am. St. Rep. 694.

EXCLUSIVE SALE

The term "exclusive sale," as used in Rev. Laws, c. 58, § 1, relating to the appointment of agents for the exclusive sale of goods, wares, or merchandise, means selling within a prescribed territory to the exclusion of all others, so that in the designated place the purchaser who makes such a contract with the original seller will have the control of the market for resale. Commonwealth v. Strauss, 78 N. E. 136, 191 Mass. 545, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 968, 6 Ann. Cas. 842.

EXCLUSIVE USE

That other persons besides the claimant of a right of way used the way does not prevent the claimant's user from being exclusive, since "exclusive use" means that his right does not depend on a like right in others. Schmidt v. Brown, 80 N. E. 1071, 1074, 226 Ill. 590, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 457, 117 Am. St. Rep. 261.

The word "exclusive," in an ordinance of a city relating to the exclusive use of streets, is limited in meaning so as not to infringe on the Constitution, where the Constitution provided that no ordinance of the city should be inconsistent with the state law, as a general prohibitory provision coming from an independent superior authority will overcome or control a special provision coming from an inferior authority, for the reason that the inferior has not power and will not be presumed to have intended to put an exception on what is prescribed by the superior. State v. Kessella, 96 S. W. 494, 497, 120 Mo. App. 233.

EXCLUSIVELY

See Occupied Exclusively as a Dwelling.

EXCLUSIVELY USED

The phrase, "exclusively used," in constitutional and statutory tax exempting provisions, has reference to the primary and inherent use as against a mere secondary and incidental use. State ex rel. Spillers v. Johnston, 113 S. W. 1083, 1086, 214 Mo. 656, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 171.

Church

A building originally built as a dwelling house, which was purchased by a church which used the parlor floor, without any change in the structure of the building, for the services of the church and Sunday school, the pastor or minister in charge living with his family on the second floor, and a woman with her children, who looked after work done on the premises, living on the third floor, was not used "exclusively" as a church within the meaning of the provision of the liquor tax law prohibiting traffic in liquor on the same street and within 200 feet of a building used exclusively as a church. In re Finley, 110 N. Y. Supp. 71, 73, 58 Misc. Rep. 639.

Educational purposes

"Exclusive educational purposes," when applied to an academy, is broad enough to cover the buildings and grounds which form a part of the foundation, and which are exclusively used for the school life, whether the lads are at study or at recitations, or are eating, reading, sleeping, drilling, or at play. The criterion of whether property is used exclusively for educational purposes, within Laws 1896, p. 797, c. 908, § 4, subd. 7, exempting such property from taxation, is whether it is exclusively devoted to the use of the institution in the mental, moral, and physical training and proper maintenance of those attendant upon it. Sleeping rooms, drill rooms, armories, stables, library buildings, buildings occupied by principals as a residence, recreation halls and dining halls, which constitute a part of the foundation of an academy, and are used in its administration exclusively, are used exclusively for educational purposes, within Laws 1896, p. 797, c. 908, § 4, subd. 7, exempting from taxation property used exclusively for educational purposes. People ex rel. Board of Trustees of Mt. Pleasant Academy v. Metzger, 90 N. Y. Supp. 488, 489, 98 App. Div. 237.

Const. 1869, art. 10, § 3, provides that the Legislature may exempt all property used exclusively for state, county, municipal, benevolent, charitable, educational, or religious purposes from taxation. Held, that land rented to a national soldiers' home and to an electric railway company for a right of way by an educational institution, together with houses and lots rented out for a profit, were not exclusively used for educational purposes, and were subject to taxation, though the rentals derived therefrom were devoted to the educational purposes of the institution. Commonwealth v. Trustees of Hampton Normal & Agricultural Institute, 56 S. E. 594, 597, 106 Va. 614.

Where a turner society owned a building a portion of which it rented for a saloon and another portion as a barber shop, and on special occasions leased the hall for dances, political meetings, etc., applying the profits to the purposes of the society, the building was not "exclusively used for educational purposes" within the meaning of the statute as to exemptions from taxation, and, being indivisible, was wholly subject to taxation. Gymnastic Ass'n of the South Side of Milwaukee v. City of Milwaukee, 109 N. W. 109, 110, 129 Wis. 429.

Religious purposes

Property owned by a church, but used primarily for a family residence by the pastor, cannot be held to be used "exclusively for religious purposes," and therefore capable of exemption from taxation within the meaning of the Constitution, even though it brings no pecuniary profit, and the lot is of the ordinary size used for residence purposes, and the pastor devotes his entire time to the work of the church. People ex rel. Thompson v. First Congregational Church of Oak Park, 83 N. E. 536, 537, 232 Ill. 158.

Parish houses or priests' houses or residences are not "houses used exclusively for public worship," within Rev. St. 1906, § 2732, exempting such houses from taxation. Wat- terson v. Halliday, 82 N. E. 962, 966, 77 Ohio St. 150, 11 Ann. Cas. 1096.

School purposes

A lot leased at an annual rental by the owner of the fee to a school board, to be used for school purposes is, not within Const. art. 10, § 6, and Rev. St. 1899, § 9119, providing that lots in incorporated cities, "used exclusively for school purposes," shall be exempt from taxation. State ex rel. Hammer v. Macgurn, 86 S. W. 138, 139, 187 Mo 238, 2 Ann. Cas. 808.

A house which was built for and had been used as a dwelling house was purchased by a church, but its structure was not changed. The parlor floor was used for services of the church and Sunday school, while the pastor in charge lived with his family on the second floor, keeping house with the usual accommodations and conveniences for that purpose. The third floor was occupied by a woman with her children, who superintended work done on the premises to some extent. Held, that the house was not used exclusively for church purposes within Liquor Tax Law, Laws 1896, p. 66, c. 112, § 24, subd. 2, as amended by Laws 1897, p. 225, c. 312, § 16, forbidding traffic in liquor in any place on the same street and within 200 feet of a building used exclusively as a church or schoolhouse. In re Finley, 110 N. Y. Supp. 71, 73, 58 Misc. Rep. 639.

EXCLUSIVENESS OF POSSESSION

See Openness, Notoriety, and Exclusiveness of Possession.

EXCUSE

See Lawful Excuse; Without Excuse or Justification; Without Lawful Excuse.

As used in an instruction that malice means the doing of a wrongful act intentionally, without justification or excuse, the language, "without any justification or excuse," not only excludes justifiable and excusable homicide, but homicide extenuated to manslaughter, because done in sudden heat and passion upon sufficient legal provocation. It must not be supposed that the word "excuse" is only applicable to excusable homicide, as homicide in self-defense. It would therefore be wrong to hold that the word "excuse" was intended by the court to be used in the absence of something which renders one wholly excusable or justifiable, but, on the contrary, it should be held to include also any legal extenuation of the offense charged. State v. McDaniel, 47 S. E. 384, 387, 68 S. C. 304, 102 Am. St. Rep. 661.

Matters in "excuse, justification, and avoidance," required by the forcible entry statute to be pleaded, are such as constitute new matter under the general practice act.

Sodini v. Gaber, 111 N. W. 962, 101 Minn. 155.

EXCUSABLE HOMICIDE

Homicide is "excusable" when committed by accident and misfortune in lawfully correcting a servant or in doing any other lawful act by lawful means with usual and ordinary caution and without any unlawful intent. Kent v. State, 126 Pac. 1040, 1042, 8 Okl. Cr. 188.

"Excusable homicide" is that committed by misadventure or in self-defense. State v. Watson (Del.) 82 Atl. 1086, 1087.

To constitute "excusable homicide," under Pen. Code, § 286, declaring that a homicide is excusable when committed by accident and misfortune, in the heat of passion, on any sudden and sufficient provocation, or on a sudden combat, provided no undue advantage is taken, nor any dangerous weapon used, the killing must not only be committed by accident and misfortune, but no undue advantage must be taken, nor any dangerous weapon used. State v. Stumbaugh, 132 N. W. 666, 671, 28 S. D. 50.

The taking of human life is excusable when committed by misadventure. "Homicide by misadventure," constituting excusable homicide, is the accidental killing of another where the slayer is doing a lawful act, unaccompanied by any criminally careless or reckless conduct. State v. Blackburn (Del.) 75 Atl. 536, 540, 7 Pennewill, 479.

EXCUSABLE NEGLECT

See Inadvertence, Surprise, and Excusable Neglect.

The failure of the wife to examine papers served on her husband while he was sick and incapable of attending to business, and thereby learn that they were a summons and complaint in commencement of an action in which she was a party, is "excusable neglect" within Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 195, entitling her to have a default therein set aside. Turner v. Bolton, 64 S. E. 412, 413, 82 S. C. 502.

That defendant would have lost his position as an employé of a corporation, had he attended the trial of an action against him which he knew was pending for trial, and which he took no steps to prevent being tried in his absence, was not ground for vacating a judgment entered against him by default on the ground of "inadvertence" and "excusable neglect." Peterson v. Crowler, 81 Pac. 860, 862, 29 Utah, 235.

The term "excusable neglect," as used in Burns' Ann. St. 1903, § 405, providing that the court may relieve against a judgment taken against a party through his excusable neglect, is of very general application, and each case must depend on its own particular facts and circumstances; it not being possible to fix any general rule by which to determine what neglect is excusable. First Nat. Bank of Winslow v. Stilwell, 98 N. E. 151, 152, 50 Ind. App. 228.

The application to open a default judgment foreclosing a tax lien showed that at the time petitioner was served with the summons she was an infant under 15 years of age; that she was unaware of the meaning or effect of a summons, and that it was not explained to her; that she was also ignorant of her rights in the property affected by the suit. It also showed that petitioner was defaulted on the return day; that a guardian ad litem was appointed, who answered for her; and that judgment of foreclosure was rendered, and that petitioner was declared to be barred of any interest in the premises. Held, that a showing was made of excusable neglect for failing to appear and defend within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 405, authorizing relief from a judgment taken against a party through excusable neglect, and also not only a good, but an absolute, defense, so that the default was properly opened and petitioner allowed to redeem. Macy v. Lindley (Ind.) 99 N. E. 790, 792.
